A spirited three-hour discussion produced unanimous agreement that the task of informing CIO members of the great need for building its PAC to fight back against anti-labor laws was a prime responsibility for the labor publicists. The assembled editors pledged their full support to initiate and promote the drive in the labor organs.

ADDRESSING the editors, PAC Director Jack Kroll stated PAC is out to build its organization on a permanent basis, dispelling all doubts that PAC folded up after election contests.

In urging the editors to support PAC's drive, Kroll pointed out that this was the first time a dollar campaign was being conducted in an off-election year and that legislation now pending in the Congress may bar all contributions from union treasuries.

David J. McDonald, secretary-treasurer of the CIO Steelworks and secretary-treasurer of PAC, made a plea for the assistance of the editorial chiefs. McDonald told the editors that since their papers reach the six million members of CIO directly, their role in the campaign could not be underestimated. "We need your help to sell the idea to the membership" he said.

In appealing to the editors to utilize their advertising talents to make the PAC dollar push a success, McDonald said, "You know what is happening to us on the Hill and throughout the states. It makes you shudder and wonder whether we'll be able to continue to operate our international unions. But I'm not willing to wait and find out. Let's be in a position to change that whole situation in 1948. I think we can do it."

IN a letter to all CIO regional directors, Haywood said, "We have our eyes on 1948. If we are to be successful in that election, we must build the political organization on which such success is based. Funds are an essential to develop that organization. I know you will do your utmost to make the PAC 1947 dollar voluntary contribution drive an overwhelming success."

Warning that the "crisis now confronting American workers is a political crisis," Cowan said that the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers is spending millions to finance high-pressure lobbyists on Capitol Hill.

"After witnessing the hysterical drive against labor in Washington, I know that to continue its proponents in office would be a disaster. These men must be defeated in 1948. I urge all members of CIO to build a bigger, stronger PAC through supporting PAC's dollar drive."

Brophy pointed out that the gains won by American workers are now threatened by a "political coalition representing the viewpoint of America's growing monopolies." This means American workers must fight back with political action, he said.

"A dollar for PAC is a wise investment. I know that the industrial union councils will cooperate wholeheartedly with this campaign," he declared.

African Unions Grow

A PROGRAM of building trade unions in the Gold Coast area of West Africa, which was adopted by the British Labor Party, is meeting with marked success. This message was relayed to a Chicago CIO audience last week by I. G. Jones, assistant labor commissioner for the area, who was sent to Africa to help develop the program.

ONCE again over the facilities of the American Broadcasting Co., the CIO is on the air to bring you its views on the issues of the day. The American Broadcasting Co. and its affiliated stations makes available the next 15 minutes to the CIO for Labor-USA, for the regular program during the first six months of the year. And now, here is Walter Vaughn, speaking for CIO-USA.

VAUGHN: Last week, as you know, the House of Representatives passed the Heartless— uh, I mean the Hartley Bill which, they say, is supposed to promote equality in collective bargaining and to promote industrial peace. Representative Hartley, the sponsor of the bill, had this to say about it last week during the debate in the House:

HARTLEY: Why, this bill is the workingman's Bill of Rights.

VAUGHN: That's what Hartley says. If he's right—then that's good. But let's examine it. Let's see if this is the workingman's Bill of Rights—or if—as Phil Murray says:

MURRAY: The enactment of this contemplated legislation is the first real step toward the development of fascism in the United States of America. There can be no dispute about that.

VAUGHN: Let's talk about the "Heartless" Bill. Hearings were held on this bill, and in the words of one of the Committee members, Congressman Schwabe from Missouri . . .

SCHWABE: We have had perhaps one hundred and fifty witnesses appear before our committee. There were over two million words of testimony. More than one-third of our witnesses were labor leaders . . .

VAUGHN: Well that's nice! one-third of the witnesses on a bill involving labor's life and labor's representatives . . . very, very decent. Perhaps it is impolite to inquire about the other two-thirds. Perhaps it is impertinent to point out that when the Congress—the elected representatives of all of the people—are discussing the fate of the workingman, it is inappropriate to invite—as two thirds of the witnesses, those representatives of big business, big business whose love for labor is so well-known.

Perhaps the working man or woman who was allowed to testify before the House Committee on Labor got the same treatment such as that given to a young woman, a working woman from the South who came to testify before the Senate Labor Committee about how she felt about the proposed legislation. She was brusquely told by the Chairman, the Honorable Robert A. Taft . . .

TAFT: You have exactly two minutes . . .

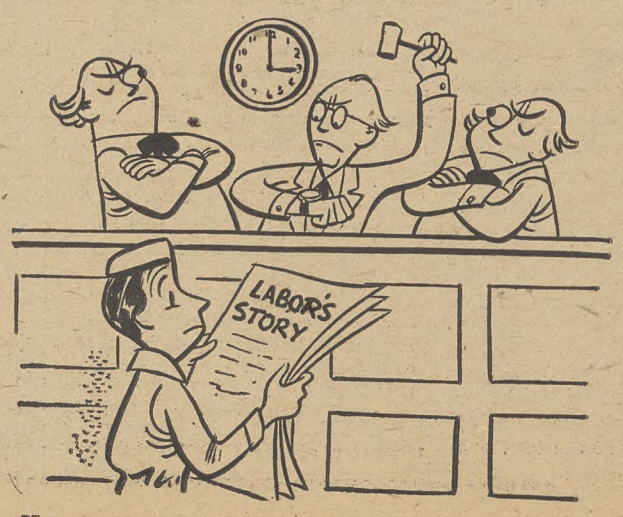
VAUGHN: Two minutes to tell why she thought there should be no such legislation as that contained in the Hartless Bill in the House and in the Taft Bill in the Senate.

Her name was Moranda Smith, a tobacco worker from Winston-Salem. I'd like you to hear some of the things she would have told the Committee had she been given the opportunity.

SMITH: Mr. Taft and members of this Senate Committee: Every human being longs for a life made happy with freedom and security. Through our union, my fellow workers and I have made the first step toward that kind of life that we have never known.

It has opened our eyes, and put gladness in our hearts. It has given us strength and hope. We love our union.

There are bills before this committee designed to weaken our organization, to make it helpless, to keep it from continuing to build and carry us onward. You know what the Four Freedoms mean to people of the whole world. Freedom of Speech, Freedom from Fear, Freedom from Want, Freedom of Religion. For the workers of Winston-Salem and for millions of others, their union organizations are making these freedoms something more than just words.



I'd like to ask you what is it that can give a worker Freedom from Fear, except the comfortable knowledge that his fellow workers are joined with him and all are working together with a common pledge to help each other? By himself a worker is alone and afraid . . . afraid of unemployment, afraid of sickness that will wreck his efforts to build a home and security. That's why union security is so important to us.

To tamper with that democratic right robs us of our security, leaves us wide open to attack and pushes us backward toward the fear that comes with insecurity.

VAUGHN: Moranda Smith was speaking as a working woman, a member of a union, telling how she felt about her union, and yet she wasn't allowed to say this . . . wasn't allowed more than two minutes of protest against the legislation for "so-called" workingmen's rights.

Well, if labor itself had little to say about these bills, who did? Who drafted them? Who was interested enough in the working man to see that his interests were legislated for? I'd like you to listen to Representative Lesinski, a Democrat and a member of the Democratic minority on the Labor Committee.

LESINSKI: The minority had no hand in shaping or writing this bill. This bill was presented to us on Thursday morning and we had only until Saturday night to file our minority report.

VAUGHN: And Representative Klein of New York took the floor . . .

KLEIN: The new House labor bill was not written with the help of the democratic members of the Committee. In fact, they were not consulted and no full committee meetings were held to discuss it.

The bill was actually written with the help of several industry representatives and some lawyers from the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers and the U. S. Chamber of Commerce.

Some of the most valuable assistance came from

HARMS LABOR
N TO AMERICA'

—Particularly Relevant Today. And CIO to Tell the People that the Taft and Hartley to Crucify American Labor.

William Ingles, who reports a $24,000 annual salary as a lobbyist. Ingles represents Allis Chalmers Co. Fruehauf Trailer Co., J. I. Case Co., the Falk Corp. and Inland Steel Co. These are not the only anti-union companies that are helping out the Labor Committee. "Patrioteer" Theodore R. Iserman, put aside his rich Chrysler law practice for two full weeks to help out the House Committee.

VAUGHN: A bill to protect the union man himself . . . written by some of the biggest corporation lawyers in the country, without the benefit of the Democratic members of the Committee, and under the Chairmanship of a man who for ten years has practically ignored the plight of the working man . . . No wonder two-thirds of the witnesses had nothing to do with labor . . .

Just exactly what do the Hartley and Taft Bills do while purporting to give to the working man and woman their bill of rights? Well, it's a little difficult to define in the length of time at our disposal precisely what these bills do. The Hartley bill is 66 pages long and the Taft bill is 62 pages long.

It would not be an adequate description of these bills to say that they destroy the rights and protections given to labor under all of the legislation of the past fifty years. Both bills do at least that; but they also do much more.

Both bills deliberately and carefully take the very laws intended for protection of working men and women and turn those laws around and aim them at destroying unions. But let's take up a few of the things that these bills do.

First, the Hartley bill would destroy national unions. Under it no union may represent the employes of more than one employer. Thus, national unions which now deal with all of the major employers in their industry would, by law, be smashed.

Second, the bills would destroy industrial unionism. Under the Taft Bill there would have to be separate balloting for representation purposes in every craft, among so-called professional employes and in every plant. The Hartley bill goes even further and requires that, whenever anyone asks for it, there must be a separate ballot "for any craft, department, plant, trade, calling, profession or other distinguished group."

Thus, both bills aim at breaking up collective bargaining into as small and scattered groups and units as possible so that the union and the collective bargaining process may be carved up into meaningless segments.

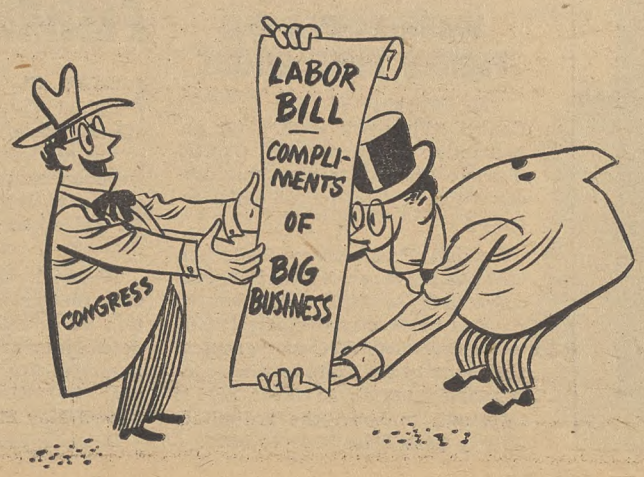
Both bills pretend to preserve the union shop and maintenance of membership but they tie these clauses up into so many knots and tangles that for all practical purposes any form of union security is marked for destruction.

Under the Taft Bill, no union can be granted a union security clause of any type unless it has first won an election to be certified as representative. After being certified as representative, there would have to be a new and separate election as to whether the employes authorized it to negotiate.

In this second balloting winning by a mere majority is not enough. The union must have a majority of all employes, whether they vote or not, authorizing a union security clause. But even such a majority would not be enough, however, since the affirmative votes must also be two thirds of those employes who turn out to vote.

These are but a few examples of what these bills would do to organized labor. Here is what Congressman Blatnik of Minnesota had to say of the Hartley Bill.

BLATNIK: Mr. Chairman, shortly after I arrived in Washington as a freshman Congressman and witnessed the dozens of anti-labor bills dropped in the hopper I began to suspect that there were plans afoot to destroy the American labor movement. Later I read the vicious anti-labor propaganda which was circulated by irresponsible sections of the press and noted the lynch-labor attitude of some of my colleagues. Now, after reading this bill, I know that my fears were far from groundless.



The Hartley Bill is not aimed to correct abuses in the field of labor relations but is designed to cripple and destroy the organizations of working men and women of America. It is impossible to discuss this bill on its merits because it has no merits.

VAUGHN: And Philip Murray spoke up last week . . .

MURRAY: The enemies of organized labor are bent upon the ultimate destruction of the labor movement in the United States of America.

The Hartley and Taft bills are designed to completely cripple labor. One must not regard either the Hartley or the Taft bills as bills to slightly amend the Wagner Act. They must be looked upon as bills brought into being for the purpose of absolutely crucifying American labor.

For the first time in the history of the United States of America a bill has been presented in Congress to ban industry-wide bargaining. The enactment of that provision will create more confusion and cause more industrial disturbance than any other type of bill that has been presented during my lifetime.

The enactment of this contemplated legislation is the first real step toward the development of fascism in the United States of America. There can be no dispute about that.

VAUGHN: Well, the warning is sounded. I urge all of you listening to this program to write a letter to your Representative and to your Senators. Tell them to vote against this anti-labor legislation. For remember what Abraham Lincoln said, many years ago . . . "All that serves labor, serves the Nation. All that harms labor is treason to America. No line can be drawn between the two. If any man tells you he loves America, yet hates labor, he is a liar. If any man tells you he trusts America, yet fears labor, he is a fool. There is no America without labor, and to fleece the one is to rob the other."

VAUGHN: Write to your Congressman and write NOW!

Wages paid by the Kroydon Golf Club Co., Maplewood, N. J., were below par. When management refused to raise them, members of the CIO Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers set up this picket line.

NEW GAINS RANGE FROM 7½c TO 17c

THE International Harvester Co. this week came to terms with the CIO Farm Equipment Workers by providing an overall increase of 17c an hour. The Auto Workers who represent some of the Harvester workers and the employes of John Derre Corp., also farm machinery makers, had signed agreements earlier.

Front the Northwest comes news that the Woodworkers signed an agreement boosting wages another 7½c an hour for a total of 42½c an hour since V-J Day.

Ratification of wage increases totalling 17c per hour and a new one-year contract with the International Harvester Co. was announced by FE's Harvester Council.

The agreement covers ten plants employing 30,000 workers, 15,000 of them in Chicago, Gerald Fielde, director of the union's council, said.

Included in the 17-cent wage agreement is an 11½ cent general increase, six paid holidays, special increases for skilled worker, improved vacations, and elimination of wage differentials.

The main change in the contract, Fielde said, was a provision for the appointment of a permanent arbitrator to be mutually agreed upon by the union and management. The arbitrator will handle all unsettled grievances arising in all plants.

LUMBER: The Northwest Regional Negotiating Committee of the CIO Woodworkers this week recommended to its membership to acceptance of a 7½-cent per hour wage increase. "This makes the third round of general wage increases since V-J Day for a total of 42½ cents per hour," said IWA Pres. J. E. Fadling.

Immediately after V-J Day the union negotiated a 15c an hour wage increase, effective Nov., 1945. This was before the 18½ cents wage pattern set in many other industries.

In April, 1946, a 5-cent-per-hour increase was negotiated. In December a settlement was made for 15 cents per hour, making a total of 35 cents per hour and a minimum rate ranging from $1.17 per hour in white pine to a $1.25 minimum in fir.

CIO Brings Town

½ Million More Pay

NOT one of 10,000 residents of Cedartown, Ga., was working under a CIO contract 11 months ago.

Today there are more than 2,000.

This rapid growth of unionism has made Cedartown one of the most highly organized towns in the South and has caused many persons to jokingly suggest that its name be changed to "Uniontown."

A local union of the Packinghouse Workers signed a contract last June 13 with National Oil Products Co.

Since then CIO unions have been established at Clearwater Mill No. 1 of Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., with 1,500 workers; Cedartown Textiles, Inc., with 400; Noble Manufacturing Co., with 25; Textile Paper Products Co., with 25.

And on May 21 approximately 300 members of the Cedartown Yarn Mill will vote on whether they want to be represented by the CIO Textile Workers.

CIO contracts have added more than a half million dollars to the annual industrial payroll of Cedartown—and the contracts were negotiated without a single incident that could be interpreted as management-labor strife.

Need for higher wages and improved working conditions caused Cedartown workers to join the CIO, according to union members.

"Our first union contract, negotiated with the company last August, raised our average wage from 55 to 85 cents an hour," said James Smith, member of the National Cotton Oil local. "Most people wanted the union because they felt they were being 'way underpaid.'"

J. W. DOLLAR, a shop steward at Cedartown Textiles, who inspects cloth and calls for machine adjustments, started in his job in 1941 at $18 a week. Doing the same work, he now makes about $45.

He says, "Before we had a union contract we had no paid vacations and no company-paid insurance program. In the company's policy concerning the individual there was too much partiality toward some workers and there was absolutely no regard to seniority in making promotions or moves to better jobs."

Jim Archer, vice president of the Goodyear local, said the employes there organized as much because of the lack of a seniority system and the heavy work loads as for wage increases.

WASHINGTON CIO FIGHTS FARE BOOST

The Washington, D. C., CIO Council this week applied for an injunction against the Capital Transit Co. increasing fares under a Public Utilities Commission ruling Council Pres. Henry Beitscher said the law provides that anyone affected by a PUC ruling has 30 days to request reconsideration of the order. The CTC was granted the right to discontinue three-for-a-quarter tokens in favor of 10c fare, and to boost the unlimited weekly pass from $1.25 to $1.50.

Mike Livoda, CIO Reg. Dir., Denver, Colo., reports: National Foods industry plant in Denver, Colo., where we had bargaining rights before on maintenance and production workers in meat slaughtering dept. The Teamsters had truck drivers, dock loading, also boning dept.

For the past two years there have been several arguments—whether the Packinghouse Workers or the Teamsters were the bargaining agent. Amalgamated Butcher Workmen intervened before the contract expiration and tried to take the plant away from CIO. Packinghouse Workers finally agreed to a consent election, provided Teamsters would sign their rights over to the Butcher Workmen to put the employes into a single industrial unit, irrespective of who won.

Packinghouse Workers CIO received 32 votes in election. Amalgamated Butcher Workmen 11. This will give UPWA complete jurisdiction over everybody in the plant. Much credit is due to Oscar Pearson, Exec. Secy., Sub-Dist. Joint Council, UPWA.

Will our Congressmen and Senators have the courage and fortitude to vote against the anti-labor bill proposed by the Joint Conference committee? Will President Truman veto such a vicious punitive anti-labor measure? Thirdly, will a sufficient number of Congressmen and Senators once again show courage and fortitude to support a Presidential veto and therefore preserve the people's liberties against such cruel and brutal aggression as the LaFollette committee found flourishing in American industry before the Supreme Court declared the Wagner Act constitutional a decade ago.

FISHERMEN TO CONTINUE FIGHT

LOCAL 36, CIO Fishermen & Allied Workers, and 14 union officials were convicted in federal court at Los Angeles late last week on charges of violating the anti-trust laws by conspiring to fix prices of fresh fish sold to dealers.

The trial, which lasted 11 weeks, was the first anti-trust prosecution of a union since 1941. The defendants are liable to a maximum penalty of $5,000 fine and a year in jail. Sentence will be passed May 21.

Defense counsel said the case would be fought up to the U. S. supreme court if necessary to obtain a reversal.

The government contended the fishermen were business men who had tried to force fish dealers in nearby San Pedro, Santa Monica and other shore communities to sign price contracts last June and had struck against those who refused to sign.

Defense attorneys presented evidence showing that the prices dealers got for fish were not affected by the prices paid to fishermen.

Beauty, Jobs at Stake

HOSIERY WORKERS SCORE BARE LEGS

QUESTIONS of bare legs and wage increases occupied the 200 delegates to the 35th annual convention of the Federation of Hosiery Workers, held last week at Durham, N. C.

The delegates overwhelmingly approved contract gains of a 13c hourly increase, five paid holidays and an improvement in the present employer-financed insurance policy won by their negotiating committee in industrywide talks with full-fashioned hosiery manufacturers. The proposals now go to a referendum of the 11,000 members covered by the contract all over the country.

The bare legs issue popped up on the convention floor when delegates deplored the tendency developed during the war for women to go without stockings. Some delegates mourned that the glamour given by hosiery was lost.

Others pointed out that the consumption of ladies' full-fashioned hose had been cut and that their jobs were being affected. Result was adoption of a resolution authorizing the union to cooperate with manufacturers in overcoming the bare leg fad.

Political action is a must for the hosiery workers and all organized labor, AFHW Pres. Alexander McKeown reported to the convention. The 1946 election was not a mandate to "scuttle labor unionism and successful bargaining relationships," he asserted. The convention voted to intensify its political activities.

From Pres. Emil Rieve of the Textile Workers Union, parent body of the AFHW, delegates heard that for the first time there is a real possibility of unity between the AFL and CIO.

A member of the CIO committee which met with the AFL re- days but added that real progress was made. The AFL made a definite conce[illegible]n, he said, when it offered to c[illegible]ter CIO unions "as it."

BLAMES AUTO LAYOFFS ON INDUSTRY SCHEME

VICE Pres. Richard T. Leonard of the CIO Auto Workers blamed the layoff of 40,000 auto workers on management's "economic dirty work."

The layoffs occurred as Briggs', Packard, Nash and Chrysler, and General Motors announced that it would go on a 4-day week. Ford was the only major producer which did not announce a production cut.

Workers laid off at Briggs and Chrysler were scheduled to be recalled May 20, and the Packard layoff was for 2 days.

Leonard charged that auto executives had pushed production schedules ahead of steel supplies in anticipation of strikes and that they had intended to blame the shutdown on UAW.

Apparently aware that industry's bluff would be called, the auto manufacturers' spokesmen were simply blaming the lay-offs on steel shortage.

ANGER OVER LABOR'S ENEMIES SPARKS UNITED RALLIES

RESENTMENT against reactionary Congressmen boiled over at a number of Defend Labor rallies last week.

Thirteen thousand workers at Mansfield, Ohio, centered their wrath on their own Senator, Robert A. Taft, for his leading role in obtaining more drastic amendments to his anti-labor bill.

James J. Matles, director of organization of the CIO Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, declared that Taft "would go down in infamy as the man who stabbed labor in the back" and if the anti-labor bill is enacted "this will be the last year of collective bargaining."

Sec.-Treas. Charles Lanning of the Rubber Workers declared that the pending measure would hurt not only labor, but the farmer and the business man, because the amount of money that labor can spend will be curtailed.

The meeting was sponsored by the Tri-County Joint Labor Council consisting of AFL and CIO unions and the independent machinists.

The Railroad Brotherhood joined with CIO and AFL unions and the Machinists in a rally at York, Pa., where George Craig, CIO Regional Director, declared that if the anti-labor bill is enacted "they had better start building concentration camps."

The meeting which filled the city's largest ballroom resolved that each local union would set up a registration chairman and would take steps to see that all members are registered to vote before June 1.

More than 2,500 unionists turned out for a joint AFL-CIO rally at White Plains, N. Y. to protest the Hartley-Taft slave labor bills.

Calling on Pres. Truman to veto the legislation, the workers adopted a resolution which warned that if the bills became law, American labor would return to a period "when the strikebreaker, the lockout, the labor spy, the company union, the injunction and the sweatshop plagued our economy."

State CIO Meetings

VIRGINIA GROWS

THE Virginia CIO Council has stepped up its political offensive against reaction.

The council convention meeting last week at Norfolk increased the per capita to be paid by affiliates from 3 to 4 cents with the entire increase earmarked for political action.

CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey and Executive Vice-Pres. George Baldanzi of the CIO Textile Workers warned that labor must use all of its resources to fight anti-labor legislation.

Council Pres. Charles Webber reported that during the last year 7,462 new members and 19 new locals were added to the council. Ernest Pugh, CIO Regional director, reporting on the progress of the CIO Organizing Campaign, said that the CIO had won 40 elections in the state, lost 5 and was tied in one, that 10 petitions for elections were pending and that 25 organizing campaigns were under way.

The convention passed a constitutional amendment barring Communists, Nazis and Fascists from holding office in the state council, but opposing denial of civil liberty to communists and the outlawing of the Communist Party.

MONTANA ACTS

THE Montana CIO Council convention at Butte last week heard CIO Director of Councils John Brophy urge greater support for the bill to set up a Missouri Valley Authority, introduced by Sen. Murray, Montana Democrat. Brophy is chairman of the CIO Committee for MVA.

In response to Brophy's plea, the council passed resolutions urging wider support in Congress of the MVA bill, greater participation of affiliated locals in publicizing the project and in supporting the Regional Committee for the MVA, with which the CIO is affiliated.

The convention also urged greater PAC activity by the locals, pledged continuance of the fight against anti-labor legislation and went on record for support of the Farm Labor Institute, which is conducted by the Farmers Union and organized labor at Missoula.

UTAH SEES AHEAD

THE Utah CIO Council coupled immediate with future action on the political front, at its convention at Salt Lake City last week.

The convention condemned the anti-labor bills now before the Congressional conference committee, and asked Gov. Maw to call a special session of the legislature to increase appropriations for public welfare. The council found that the present appropriation would not permit the recipient to "live in health and decency."

Looking to the future, the council also called for increased political activity in municipal elections.

Clarence L. Palmer, incumbent, and Sydney L. Lester, were nominated for president-secretary, a post formerly held by Lester. Election will be by referendum.

I wouldn't budge an inch for a CAMEL!

The wise worker in this poster issued by the CIO Food & Tobacco Workers shows his proper scorn for Camel cigarettes. Employes at R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. plant at Winston-Salem, N. C., are beginning the third week of their strike, precipitated when management made a final offer of a 5½c an hour increase during negotiations. CIO MOBILIZES TO BACK CAMEL CIGARETTE STRIKE

By C. W. FOWLER

FULL CIO support for the strike of 10,000 workers at the R. J. Reynolds plant in Winston-Salem, N. C. — where Camel cigarettes are made— was voiced by CIO Pres. Philip Murray in a special message to the strikers this week.

The message was read to a mass meeting of strikers held in the largest park in Winston-Salem, where it provoked cheers from the thousands of Negro and white workers assembled to hear reports on their struggle. The strike is being conducted by Local 22, CIO Food & Tobacco Workers.

"The 6,000,000 members of CIO stand solidly behind the striking FTA members at the R. J. Reynolds Company," Murray's wire said.

"We wish you every success in bringing this rich and powerful corporation into line with other employers who have granted substantial wage increases in recent weeks."

The mass meeting also made the first formal announcement of a nation-wide boycott on R. J. Reynolds products—directed mainly against Camel cigarettes and Prince Albert smoking tobacco.

Meantime, the striking workers, poorly paid at best, are in urgent need of financial support from CIO unions and members. Working at an average of 72 cents an hour does not leave any margin for emergencies. Eviction notices have already started flowing into workers' homes, and food is short as well.

The strike was forced on the union by the company's refusal to offer more than 5½ cents on a 15-cent wage raise demand, and by the company's further demand that all union security clauses enjoyed in the contract for the past five years be torn up.

Contributions for strike relief can be sent to: Willie Grier, strike treasurer, Local 22 FTA-CIO, 247½ N. Main St., Winston-Salem, N. C.

THE JONES HOUSE, BILL SPEAKING

What is more annoying to most adults than to have the phone answered by a child who "ohs" and "ahs" and seems not to understand. Toy phones satisfy two, three and even five-year-olds. But around five, children can, to their own great satisfaction, learn to answer phones and take calls intelligently and accurately. Answering the phone and relaying messages is a very real household help which children can learn to perform—to every one's satisfaction.

WOMEN AT WORK

NUMBER OF WOMEN in the country's labor force has remained stable at about the 16-million level for the past three months, according to the U. S. Dept. of Labor.

The total number of women workers in March made up 27.6% of the total labor force, about 300,000 less than in March 1946. The difference in large part was due to unfavorable weather in March this year, which prevented women from doing farm work.

AVERAGE WEEKLY EARNINGS for women in 25 selected manufacturing industries in December 1946 was $36.94, compared with $31.49 in December 1945.

Women's average hourly earnings for the same month were 93.9c in 1946, and 79.7c in 1945. Average weekly hours for women in the same months were 39.4 in 1946 and 39.6 in 1945.

MORE WOMEN IN FACTORIES: The number of women in manufacturing industries increased in January 1947 over the end of 1946.

NEW BATHING SUIT?

By HANNA SHERMAN

ARE you buying a new bathing suit this year? You'll be delighted to find a beguiling post-war variety back on the market.

That wonderful satin lastex is with us again along with the swimmer's pet, the pure wool bathing suit. And new this year is the bathing suit with a built-in bra, right there on the racks. It used to be that you could own one of these only if you could afford custom made prices.

A bathing suit, since it reveals so much of you, should be selected with great care. Give as much consideration to figure flattery as to comfort. It's sad but true that women who are otherwise very careful to conceal any figure difficulties sometimes select bathing costumes that actually reveal them. Consider the bare midriff style. It's so attractive on the slim-waisted girl, but is so very bad on her stout sister.

You should apply the same rules when choosing a bathing suit that you apply in choosing a dress. The stout girl will look best in a solid colored suit or a suit with a small all-over print on a dark background. If you're slim enough and young enough, you will look very attractive in bare midriff styles, in the new bloomer type shorts and the new strapless tops.

THE tall slim girl, unless she has a superb figure, should avoid a too straight up-and-down look. She will find that crisp fabrics are as becoming to her in bathing suits as they are in most of the other clothes she wears.

The older woman should choose her suit from the choice of dressmaker styles. She'll find that it's good figuring to make certain that the skirt of her suit is full enough and that it falls to a becoming length.

The most revealing and tight-fitting beachwear should be worn only by the girl with a very good figure and beautiful legs. If you intend to spend much time at the beach this summer, start exercising now and present your best figure to your waterside public. You can reduce your waistline an inch and a half by exercising regularly for the next few weeks.

FOR lounging on the beach, there are wonderful robes, coats and jackets that add glamour. Why not use them? There's a lesson to be learned here. One of our favorite movie actresses is never seen in a bathing suit, except in one shot where she is beautifully poised on the diving board. As soon as she steps out of the water, she envelopes herself in a full-skirted, long terry cloth coat—immensely flattering to her too thin figure.

Take the time to choose your new bathing suit carefully. Check with your full-length mirror to be sure its lines are right for you. You'll have more fun on the beach if you KNOW you're looking as attractive as you can.

It's Spring

AND A YOUNG MOTH'S FANCY . . .

WHOEVER started that propaganda about the moth and the flame must have been trying to pull the wool over your eyes! Any moth we ever encountered went for our best suit and settled down right there.

Moth damage is always annoying but this spring, with the food budget nosing out the clothes budget, preventive storing of all your woolens is a must.

First step in storage is to get the fabric clean, either by dry-cleaning, washing, sunning and airing. Then, without so much as a few hours delay, store in a container so tight that not a single moth can crawl in.

As an extra precaution, use paradichlorobenzene or some other fumigant. It's unimportant whether you use it in crystal, nugget or flake form, applying a pound for every 75 cubic feet or so of space in your container.

Fluorine solutions for home use give good service over a limited period for fabrics that are not washed. The only catch is that the insecticide must be sprayed exactly according to directions. Every inch of the fabric must be moistened, not forgetting folds, seams, pockets and under the lapels.

The DDT mothproofing solutions appearing on the market for the first time seem to be the best all-around sprays yet developed, but the US Dept. of Agriculture reports that scientists are continuing to test them. They not only kill moths on contact but seem to leave an effective residue for future protection.

Why Bosses Want The Open Shop

Here's why employers are so anxious to abolish the closed shop and protect the "freedom to work."

In the classified section of Sunday's Knoxville (Tenn.) Journal appeared the following ad, inserted by B. H. Spangle, big local real estate owner.

WANTED — Two carpenters with tools. Will pay 65c an hour. Come early and bring some tools. 422 Union Ave. and see B. H. Sprankle.

The union scale for carpenters at Knoxville is $1.75 an hour.

WORLD LABOR

"THE BEARABLE LIMIT has has been reached," a mass demonstration of 100,000 German workers in the seaport city of Hamburg told British occupation officials last week in a union-led protest against falling food rations.

Rations have dropped to starvation levels of a thousand calories or less per day, workers reported. Average American rations are well over three thousand calories.

Practically every union in the city joined the protest, with the exception of longshoremen who stayed on the job to unload two ships bringing in food supplies.

SUPPORT OF U. S. LABOR for a free Palestine where the Hebrew people can "build their own organization to achieve their own ends" was voiced last week by CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey.

In a statement to the American League for a Free Palestine, Carey urged support for the Palestine Freedom Drive of $7,500,000. He said that the present phase of unrest in Palestine can be "effectively solved if it is approached by all concerned with good faith and in a spirit of good will."

GENERAL CHECK-UPS on the enforcement of collective bargaining contracts with Soviet industrial groups must be undertaken "not less than once every two or three months," according to a new ruling of the executive committee of the All-Union Central Council of Trade Unions.

The executive group also voted for annual elections to fill local union positions, with two-year terms for officers in regional and national union organizations.

GREEK TRADE UNIONS have received a new set of government-appointed officials, this time by decree of an Athens district court. The appointments are not expected to be any more satisfactory to the bona fide unions of the country than earlier officials named by the Ministry of Labor —an action which the courts eventually overruled.

The World Federation of Trade Unions, to which the Greek Confederation of Labor is affiliated, has endeavored during recent months to secure a status of freedom for the labor groups—as yet, unsuccessfully.

That many of the appointed officials are Nazi-tainted was charged in a report by the Greek labor federation to the UN inquiry commission which appeared in a recent WFTU bulletin. It produced in evidence the text of a letter by George Volotas, who was recently named as secretary of the Thessaly Railroad Workers, to show that he had tried to circulate copies of Hitler's speeches among Greek workers in September 1941.

The statement also protested that one Manolis Markoulakis, who had been condemned to five years' imprisonment for traitorous activities, had received a King's pardon and been appointed head of the labor federation on the island of Crete.

Appointment of Markoulakis, the report said, had been rescinded as a "mistake" when he was confronted by a general protest from the people of Crete. The unions charge that during the Nazi invasion Markoulakis sought to force workers to labor for the German occupying forces, extorted money and goods from shopkeepers, asked for the arrest and handing over to the Germans of various Greeks, and demanded a pay raise for himself since "we try to serve the forces of occupation."

CIO Pledge
TO WORK FOR UNITED LABOR MOVEMENT

THE CIO stands "prepared to continue to work sincerely and tirelessly for a united labor movement," despite the inability of recent unity meetings to reach an agreement with the AFL, Pres. Murray reported last week to all CIO affiliates.

While voicing keen interest in unity of the American labor movement, Murray made clear that CIO was not prepared to throw away its principles and achievements, since such a step would bring no benefit to workers or the nation.

"A labor movement wedded to antiquated concepts and values, no matter how snugly it might fill its shell of organic unity, will not meet the needs of American labor in 1947," he pointed out.

"We believe that a united labor movement with strength, courage and vision can be fashioned in America, and we believe that the proposal of the CIO represents a practical approach to this problem."

IN THE lengthy statement containing all recent documents on the subject, Murray said that the AFL proposal for CIO unions to enter the federation without commitments or guarantees of any sort was unacceptable. He indicated that unity at the cost of CIO's great gains for American workers would not be worth the price.

"This proposal of the AFL was offered on a basis that would not permit of any discussion," Murray said, and CIO was "pointedly" informed that no modifications in the AFL's briefly worded invitation would be acceptable.

Such a proposal, Pres. Murray reported, "reflected an unawareness" of the need for joint action against critical anti-labor legislation. It was based "on the apparent belief that the CIO unions are prepared to abandon the fundamental principles and policies of the CIO," Murray added. "The CIO rejected the AFL proposal."

THE REPORT on the unity negotiations traced correspondence with the AFL and Railroad Brotherhoods since Pres. Murray's first suggestion of a joint conference last December, through the meetings in Washington on May 1 and 2

He said the CIO's four point program—for joint action on legislation, for elimination of jurisdictional disputes, for recognition of the status and democratic rights of industrial unions, and for joint conferences by CIO and AFL unions operating in the same field—was sound and effective.

He noted that in accepting the AFL proposals, CIO would have endangered the status of its industrial unions, its aggressive political action work, and its friendly ties and commitments to foreign labor movements through the World Federation of Trade Unions.

Despite failure to agree, Murray said that "our conviction that a united labor movement is desirous and obtainable remains unchanged." Noting the united front of labor's enemies and the fact that the "forest fires of reaction are spreading," he added:

"We believe in all sincerity that joint and united action on the legislative front is the answer to the impelling challenge. Joint struggle and joint sacrifice in quenching the fires of reaction will give birth to the solidarity on which sound and workable unity can be built."

The CIO proposal set forth "specific and practical steps for building and earning labor unity on a lasting basis," he added. Labor unity, the report asserted, cannot be built on the "sands of jurisdictional strife or on confusion and indecision" with respect to basic trade union matters, nor would such a unity meet the great needs of the times.

CIO MINE - MILL DECISION

THE CIO Executive Board, by a 27-8 vote, accepted this week the report of a committee which had investigated internal dissension and secession moves in the Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers.

The four-point report, as explained by Pres. Murray to the press, made the following recommendations:

1. That John Driscoll, head of the so-called Progressive Metal Workers Council—comprising an estimated 24,000 workers who had left the Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers and later gone into the CIO Shipyard Union—be suspended from office as secretary of the Connecticut Industrial Union Council.

2. That the Shipyard Union be requested to refrain from interference with the Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers Union, and that it rescind all charters issued in recent weeks to the seceding members of that union.

3. That Pres. Maurice Travis of the Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers —who succeeded to the presidency in March following the resignation of Pres. Reid Robinson—be requested by the Mine, Mill board to resign; and that if he refuses to resign, that he be removed from office by the board of that union.

4. That an administrative committee be named by the national CIO to administer the Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers until its affairs are settled and unity restored, at which time an election under the supervision of the national CIO would name new officers.

AFTER an afternoon of discussion, the 27-8 vote was taken. The Shipyard Union, through Pres. John Green, registered as "not voting," while the Mine Mill vote, cast by Reid Robinson, was against acceptance of the report.

Murray announced that "in the absence of agreement, particularly by the Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers, the CIO has no power to invoke its decision."

"It was therefore agreed," he added, "that the dispute be referred in accordance with the CIO constitution, to the next convention of the CIO, in the month of October."

Murray also revealed that following the vote, the Shipyard Union president announced he will recommend to the next meeting of his union's executive board that it accept the committee's report and rescind the charters issued to the secessionists from the Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers.

50,000 STRIKERS WIN IN SPAIN

SPAIN'S biggest strike in the ten years since Gen. Franco seized power, ended with 50,000 workers winning a major economic demand and demonstrating to the world that Spanish labor opposes the country's dictatorship.

Reporting from Paris, Allied Labor News said that the workers, who risked their lives by striking, demanded an end to tyranny and formation of a democratic government.

According to the strikers, who walked out in Bilboa when the government sought to penalize them for participating in a May Day demonstration, they won the right to return to their jobs without penalties or loss of seniority. The strike held firm despite police terror which resulted in the arrest of some 2,000 persons.

Genaro Riestra, fascist governor of Bilboa, tried to spread belief that the workers would be penalized. Riestra also claimed that only 5,000 workers had struck, although a New York Times reporter noted that factories employing at least seven times that number had been closed by the workers. Bilboa is Spain's second largest industrial center.

IN PARIS, the World Federation of Trade Unions, through Secretary-General Louis Saillant, sent its greetings to the "gallant Basque workers" who conducted the strike.

"The sublime courage, the relentless will with which they demand better living conditions, the return to freedom and the restoration of the Republic, are additional proofs to the world of the determination of the Spanish people to put an end to the Franco regime," the WFTU stated.

Saillant called for international support from unions and other democratic groups to back up the strikers' fight for freedom, and urged that "petitions and proclamations of solidarity" be addressed to governments throughout the world in support of the Spanish republicans.

CIO NAMES JOB GROUP

Creation of a full employment committee of the CIO, to work in close cooperation with the organization's Research Department, was announced by the Executive Board.

The committee will conduct studies and make reports to the Board, and will maintain contact with the Council of Economic Advisors, the government's top economic agency. The Council was created by Congress when it passed the watered-down full employment bill more than a year ago.

Members of the committee are Pres. Murray, serving as chairman; Emil Rieve, textile union, vice-chairman; and Walter Reuther, auto union; Albert Fitzgerald, electrical union; and Jacob Potofsky, clothing workers.

EDUCATION NOTES

LABOR EXTENSION SERVICE: Now drafted and ready for introduction in Congress is the new bill to establish a Labor Extension Service in the U. S. Dept. of Labor for the Nation's 42 million wage and salary earners similar to the Agricultural Extension Service now carried on for six million farm families.

The bill, which has the support of the CIO, AFL and the Railroad Brotherhoods, would set up a cooperative program between the Dept. of Labor, colleges and universities in the states and local workers' groups requesting this service. The sum of $10 to $30 millions of Federal funds is proposed to be supplemented in each instance by at least 25% from sources within the state.

The Committee for the Extension of Labor Education, 2117 Pennsylvania Ave., N. W., Washington 7, D. C., is raising a budget of $50,000 to carry through the campaign for passage of the bill. Printed material and further information will be sent upon request.

Unions and their members are urged to write their Senators and Representatives asking them to become co-sponsors of the bill.

THE GEORGIA Workers Education Service announces that it has just received a grant of $500 from the CIO Auto Workers for educational work being carried on by GWES among labor unions throughout the State. Other CIO unions which have previously contributed to the operating funds include the Amalgamated Clothing Workers and the Textile Workers.

A LEADERSHIP TRAINING Institute, jointly sponsored again this year by the Auto Workers and the Michigan CIO Council, will be held at the FDR-CIO Labor Center, on the shore near Port Huron, Mich. A six weeks' schedule opening July 20 and closing Aug. 20 has been planned for this summer, with attendance limited to 200 students a week.

Subjects on the program include labor's economic problems, publicity work, training for stewards, committeemen and union counsellors; union administration, cooperatives, educational and recreational leadership, health and safety, political action and other studies.

The Center will also serve all summer long as a vacation and recreation site for Michigan CIO members.

UAW AND COOPERATIVES: A new turn-over talk on cooperatives has just been issued by the UAW Education Dept. to aid an intensive union-co-op organizing drive authorized by the UAW intl. executive board.

The turn-over talk consists of 14 illustrated charts in colors, giving information on how cooperatives are organized, how they operate, what principles govern them, where they are organized and what they do.

Price of the charts has been reduced to $5. Earlier ones were $10. For further information write to UAW Education Dept., 28 West Warren Ave., Detroit 1, Mich.

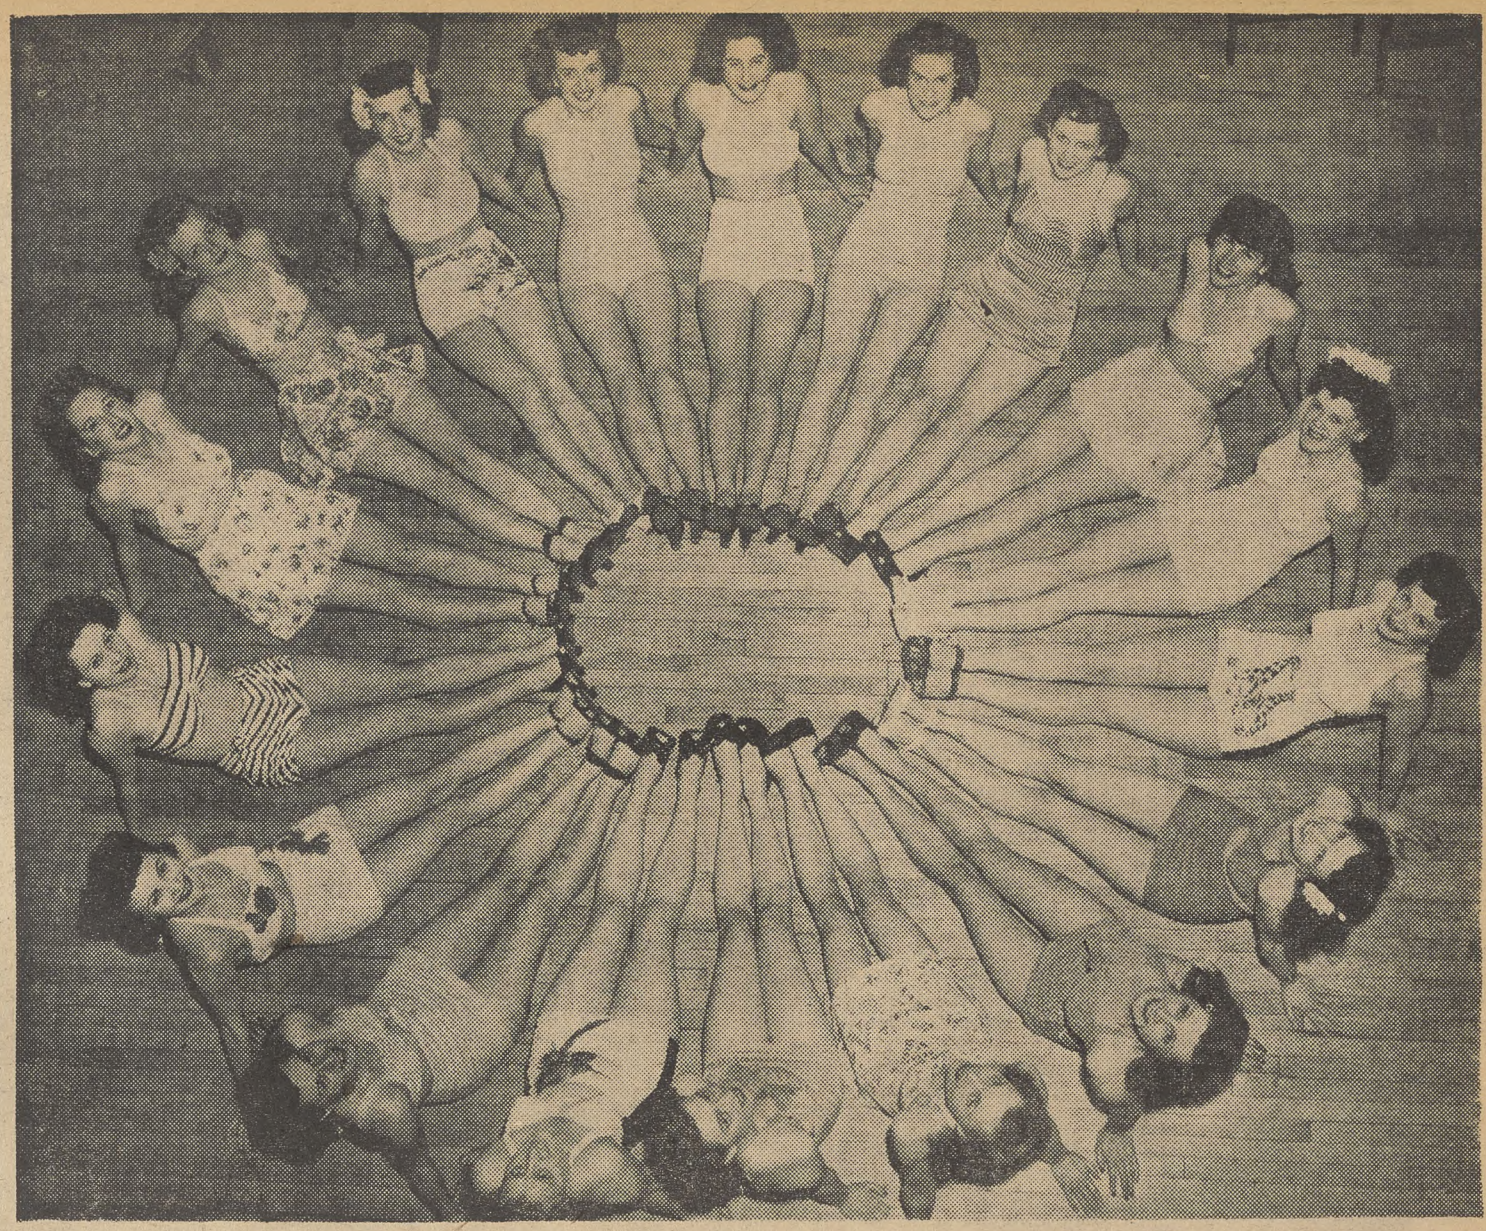
A CIO CHORUS of 55 voices, representing membership in 22 CIO unions in the New York area, is scheduled for its first network performance, Saturday, May 17, over the Columbia Broadcasting System.

The chorus is directed by Gertrude Rady, composer and pianist, and graduate of the Juilliard School of Music. It was organized in 1945 by Simon Rady, brother of the present director.

The CBS performance is to constitute a preview of the Town Hall concert to be given Saturday, May 24, in New York.

THE INDIANA CIO Anti-Discrimination Committee will hold a city-wide conference on fighting discrimination June 1 in Fort Wayne, in cooperation with the Fort Wayne CIO Council.

In announcing the conference, the Indiana Committee expressed the belief that "there has been far too much emphasis on good policies and programs against discrimination, and far too little attention to the bedrock realities—what discrimination actually is and why it is toughly imbedded in our society."



Quite a timepiece! Turn it either way and you've got an eyefull. The girls in the clock entered the Spring Frolic beauty contest run by Local 1145, CIO Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers and gave the judges a hard time picking a winner. We don't have their telephone numbers.

EDUCATION FOUNDATION PROPOSED

A MILLION dollar labor-management education foundation, to promote better understanding on both sides of the collective bargaining table, was suggested last week by Charles Luckman, head of Lever Bros. Soap Co. and a frequent critic of old-fashioned management attitudes.

Luckman backed up his suggestion for the foundation, which would give a year of college study to 1,000 men and women from industry and labor, with a pledge of $100,000. He urged that students be chosen by a commission including the American Council on Education, the NAM, the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, CIO and AFL.

Commented CIO Pres. Philip Murray: "I agree with Mr. Luckman's thesis. Better labor-management relations will only come about by the development of more responsible men in both labor and management . . . We welcome such suggestions as Mr. Luckman's to make such educational advance possible."

CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey congratulated Luckman for his "forward-looking plan for the development of leaders in the field of labor-management relations" and added "we will be glad to cooperate."

Dates Changed For CIO Term At Highlander Folk School

New Dates: June 15-July 12, 1947

Dates for the CIO Term at Highland Folk School have had to be changed. The term will begin Sunday, June 15, and close Saturday, July 12. Plans haven't yet been completed for the big Fourth of July rally, but it will be a big day at Highlander. Come and see!

Tuition is $75 for the full four weeks term, $40 for two weeks. Applications with a $10 deposit enclosed should be sent before June 1, to George T. Guernsey, Asst. Director of Education, CIO, 718 Jackson Place, N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

Scholarships covering half tuition ($37.50) are being offered to 15 students, so that unions having financial difficulties can take advantage of the CIO Term. The union must pay the balance of the fee. Applications for these half scholarships should be sent to George Guernsey by May 23.

HIS PLOT TO SMASH THE UNION EXPOSED, HIS THUGS DISARMED, CARRUTHERS — OWNER OF THE WARRENTOWN MILLS — STAGGERS HOME WHERE HIS DAUGHER RUBY LIES DEAD...

TOO LATE TO EXPLAIN... TOO LATE TO ASK YOU TO FORGIVE ME! I KILLED YOU... MY LITTLE GIRL... BUT I DIDN'T MEAN IT, RUBY! I DIDN'T! I DIDN'T!

IT WAS AN ACCIDENT, RUBY... AN ACCIDENT! I ONLY WANTED ONE OF THE DAMN UNION GIRLS TO DIE — NOT YOU! NOT YOU!

I'M A LONELY OLD MAN... WITHOUT A FRIEND IN THE WORLD... THAT DAMN JIM BARRY HAS TURNED THE WHOLE TOWN AGAINST ME! WHAT DID I EVER DO TO THEM THAT THE FOLKS SHOULD HATE ME SO...

THE WHOLE TOWN'S FOR THE UNION NOW... I WON'T EVEN HAVE NO RIGHTS TO KEEP WAGES DOWN... THE MILLS ARE NO LONGER — NO! I'VE GOT TO STOP THEM!

IF I CAN'T RUN THE MILLS THE WAY I ALWAYS DID — NOBODY'S GOIN' TO RUN THEM!

HA! HA! HA! I'LL SHOW THEM! THERE IS A WAY TO STOP 'EM!

HA! HA! THEY HAVEN'T GOT ME LICKED — NOT BY A LONG SHOT! I'M GOING DOWN... BUT I'M TAKING THEM WITH ME.

THEY'LL KNOW IN A FEW MINUTES THEY CAN'T BEAT OLD MAN CARRUTHERS!

Portal Bill Signed

TO CHISELERS, AN INVITATION

THE Portal-to-Portal Act of 1947 became law May 14 with signature by Pres. Truman of a bill which CIO Pres. Murray and other union leaders had predicted would cripple effective enforcement of the Wage-Hour Act.

The President's statement on his approval of the bill was filled with assertions that he did not think the law would be as disastrous as the union officials had indicated.

Signing of the bill, which was introduced in Congress under the cloak of a newspaper-sponsored hysteria over portal-to-portal damage suits, occurred on the last day possible under the law.

PRES. MURRAY, in a letter to the White House, had called for veto of the portal act on the basis that it would be a "very serious threat" to enforcement of the Wage-Hour law, the Walsh-Healy law covering pay standards of employes of government contractors, and the Bacon-Davis act, affecting building construction workers on government projects.

Pres. Murray criticized the two-year limit on filing suit for wage-hour damages as unfair to workers, since in most business, lawsuits are permissible for a period of five to seven years after the alleged damage.

He pointed out that workers must rely upon the Wage-Hour Division for facts, and that lack of funds has cut down factory inspection routines by the government agency.

IN approving the measure, Pres. Truman recommended that the minimum wage rate under the Wage-Hour Act be lifted from 40 to 65c an hour, and that the law be broadened to include groups of workers not now covered. Among these are seamen, communications workers, employees in many types of food processing plants, and others.

A bill lifting the minimum rate to a 65c-75c level was killed in the 79th Congress by addition of clauses which would have provoked inflationary increases in almost all food prices.

Immediate effect of the Portal-to-Portal act was to cut the base out from under a total of 1913 suits for back travel-time and make-ready pay, amounting to about six billion dollars in claims. It is probable that the act will be tested on constitutional grounds, and the fate of the suits will eventually rest upon the court's decision on the new law.

Pres. Truman said he would ask for increased funds for the Wage-Hour Division, although the recent House-passed Appropriations bill had made serious cuts in the agency's operating funds.

OBJECTIONS to the Portal bill included its "good faith" clause. President Murray in his request for a veto, suggested that employers would be able to fall back on hazy administrative rulings by any government agency to back up a defense against wage-claim suits. Pres. Truman's statement suggested that safeguards in the bill will prevent such defenses.

The CIO head also had complained that the bill will encourage "deception and sharp practices" by employers, and penalize liberal employers at the expense of chiselers—the exact opposite of the original intentions of the Wage-Hour Act.

Pres. Truman's message indicated recognition that the law introduces "possibly ambiguous language," which he said the courts will have to interpret. The Secretary of Labor has been requested to keep a close eye on the effects of this new law on wage-hour standards, the President said, and if these effects prove "detrimental" he will ask Congress for corrective action.

There was no indication, however, that Congress would necessarily play ball.

CIO Councils Urged To Aid DP's

Support for the Citizens Committee on Displaced Persons in its campaign to permit the immigration of 400,000 refugees during the next four years, was urged on CIO Councils last week by Councils Director John Brophy.

In a message to the councils, Brophy forwarded letters of endorsement of the campaign written by Pres. Murray and Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey.

The Citizens Committee is seeking support for the Stratton Bill (HR 2910), which it is hoped will undergo hearings before a House Judiciary subcommittee on immigration within the next few weeks.

The bill would permit up to 400,000 of the more than a million refugees now stranded in UNRRA camps throughout Germany, Austria and Italy to enter this country.

House Aide Guilty; $143,000 Shortage

A jury in Washington, D. C., this week convicted Kenneth Romney, former sergeant-at-arms of the House of Representatives, of concealing for over 20 years a $143,000 shortage in his office account.

Evidence showed that Romney allowed bad checks to accumulate, charging them as "cash on hand." About $65,000 worth of the checks were signed by former Rep. John H. Smithwick (D. Fla.), defeated for re-election in 1928.

Keep Your Eye On Congress

BILL	WHAT IT DOES	WHERE IT IS	ACTION
Hartley "Kill Union" Bill HR 3020	Contains almost every anti-union proposal in the book; would strangle union activity.	Passed by House. Senate-House conference committee will work out 'compromise' with Taft bill.	Write, wire Pres. Truman to veto; wire Congressmen to vote against conference bill and uphold veto.
Taft Anti-Union Bill S. 1126	Almost as bad as Hartley Bill. Major differences: "nicer language", no ban on industry-wide bargaining.	Passed by Senate. Senate-House conference committee will work out 'compromise' with House's Hartley Bill.	Write, wire Pres. Truman to veto. Wire Senators to vote against conference bill and uphold veto.
Wage-Hour Amendments HR 2157	Weakens enforcement of Wage-Hour law, under guise of banning 'portal suits'. Limits workers rights to collect back wages due.	Became law on May 14.	Remember in '48—and give a buck to PAC.
HR 1 Knutson "soak poor" tax bill	Offers 20%-30% tax cut—little savings for low income families, big windfalls for wealthy.	Passed by House. Senate Finance Comm. winding up hearings.	Ask Senators and Chmn. Millikin to pass only a tax bill placing heavier burden on big incomes.
S 866 and HR 2523 Taft-Ellender-Wagner Housing Bill	Long-range housing program, with govt. aid to spur building of low-rent & slum clearance projects.	Approved by Senate Banking Comm. House Banking Comm. refuses to order hearings.	Ask Senators to force early vote and pass. Ask Congressmen to seek Banking Comm. hearings soon.
Labor & NLRB Appropriation Bill HR 2700	Makes severe cuts in funds of NLRB & Labor Dept. Will cripple many vital govt. services for workers. Senate version a trifle better, restores some operating funds.	Passed by Senate & House. Now in conference committee for compromise.	Wire Senators & Representatives to restore full funds asked by Pres. Truman.
"Swiss Cheese" Rent Control Bills HR 3203 S 1017	Extend rent control but with serious loopholes that will make a joke of real control. House bill also cripples vet housing program.	HR 3203 passed by House; S 1017 due for vote soon in Senate. Warning to Millions

RENT LAW EXPIRES JUNE 30!

TIME is beginning to run out on the nation's rent control law, which will expire June 30 unless Congress quickly gets a move on.

The Senate has not yet acted on the weak-kneed Buck bill, which keeps present rent ceilings intact for the books, but permits state and regional action to crumple the controls.

The House-passed Wolcott bill goes through the motions of preserving controls but actually includes the real estate lobby's pet proposal of "voluntary" 15% increases for new leases. In addition the Wolcott bill wipes out the last remaining program of allocation of materials for veterans housing by repealing the Patman Act of 1946.

Liberal groups in Congress are pressing hard for ditching of the two bills and substitution of real rent control proposals, as contained in the Murray-Wagner bill in the Senate and the Douglas bill in the House.

THE outlook for action on the Taft-Wagner-Ellender long-range housing bill (S. 866), aimed at providing government assistance in building homes for low income families, is far from bright.

The bill has been approved by a 7-6 vote of the Senate Banking & Currency Committee, but the powerful GOP steering committee omitted it from a list of "must" legislation. However, the Natl. Public Housing Conference, a leading supporter of the bill, was told by Sen. Taft that he is going to do "all that I can" to bring the measure up for debate and vote.

Many Senators have reported receiving little mail in favor of the T-W-E bill, however, and it will be necessary to show them that the housing program has wide popular support.

THE Natl. Public Housing Conference, in its current news letter, reports that the "entire home construction industry is falling apart rapidly—home builders have priced themselves out of the market so quickly, and the inevitable tragedy of not doing the obvious is becoming so easy to see, that very soon the modest housing program that millions of Americans have been calling for will be considered the minimum of what we might seek."

Meanwhile, the rent control program now in existence is being badly hurt by cuts in operating funds, which have forced the Office of Housing Expediter—heir to OPA's rent control program — to curtail many activities.

In a letter to OHE, Elizabeth Sasuly, legislative representative of the CIO Food, Tobacco & Agricultural Workers, reported critical housing problems in the big Imperial Valley of California.

The FTA official said that seasonal agricultural workers, moving into the valley to work on curent crops, have found rents in rooming houses lifted by from 25% to 50%. This has caused intense hardship on the low-wage agricultural workers, whose income has risen only about 6%.

The union called upon the government agency to restore controls immediately in the area.

Bill Would Aid Wartime Seamen

Hearings on the seamen's bill of rights (HR. 476) were resumed May 14 and 15 before a subcommittee of the House merchant marine committee headed by Rep. Willis W. Bradley (R. Cal.).

Seth Levine of the CIO Maritime Committee testified in favor of the measure, along with several wartime members of the American merchant marine.

The bill is a somewhat watered-down version of a seaman's bill introduced in the 79th Congress but not adopted. The measure provides educational and medical care benefits to men who sailed for the U. S. in wartime, and benefits for the survivors of some 8,000 seamen who lost their lives at sea during the war.

Pres. Roosevelt, on signing the GI Bill of Right in 1944, asked Congress to pass a bill giving recognition to the civilian crews who carried the men and goods to victory.

WEEKLY PUBLICATION OF THE CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

This is the funeral border for all trade unions drawn by the Taft anti-labor bill. The Taft bill would drastically weaken your union's power to win higher wages. The Taft bill would sap your union's strength by hog-tying its organizing activities. The Taft bill would turn the Natl. Labor Relations Board and the U. S. Courts into stooges for employers. Your union is really in danger. Right now—this moment—take time to wire or write President Truman, urging him to veto the Taft bill. And write both your Senators, and your Representative, asking them to uphold such a veto. Do it today—tomorrow may be too late!

MOST PUNITIVE BILL IN ALL U. S. HISTORY!

A warning that the Taft-Hartley bill is the most punitive anti-labor legislation in all U. S. history was sounded last week by the CIO Executive Board. This is the full text of the statement.

WE are addressing this message to the American people on behalf of the membership of the CIO. We do so in the hope that in the next few weeks common sense can prevail in America against manufactured hysteria.

Today, the middle of May, while all the leading corporations in the mass-production industries have signed contracts for one and two years with CIO unions, the United States Senate and House of Representatives have passed the most punitive labor legislation in all of our nation's history.

They have been able to pass such bills because the American people have been given none of the facts as to what these bills will do if they become law.

A CONCERTED effort is now being made to persuade the public that the Senate has passed a mild bill and the House a harsh one. In fact, the Taft bill is fundamentally as destructive of collective bargaining as is the Hartley bill. The chief difference lies in subtlety of language. The supporters of these bills pretend that they will "equalize the power of labor and management and guarantee the right to work." By misrepresenting what these bills will actually do, it is proposed to pass through both Houses a conference bill based upon the Taft bill and to urge the President to sign it.

Every American interested in prosperity, industrial harmony, and civil liberties should learn for himself exactly how vicious both these bills are. Having learned, he should write to President Truman pledging his support for a veto and, to make his letter or wire additionally effective, should send copies to his Senators and Congressman.

THE President needs to know how many Americans understand that these bills will destroy the orderly processes of collective bargaining which have been developed in this country during the last fifty years and that under these bills:

1. The entire collective bargaining process is so restricted and limited as to be practically unworkable.

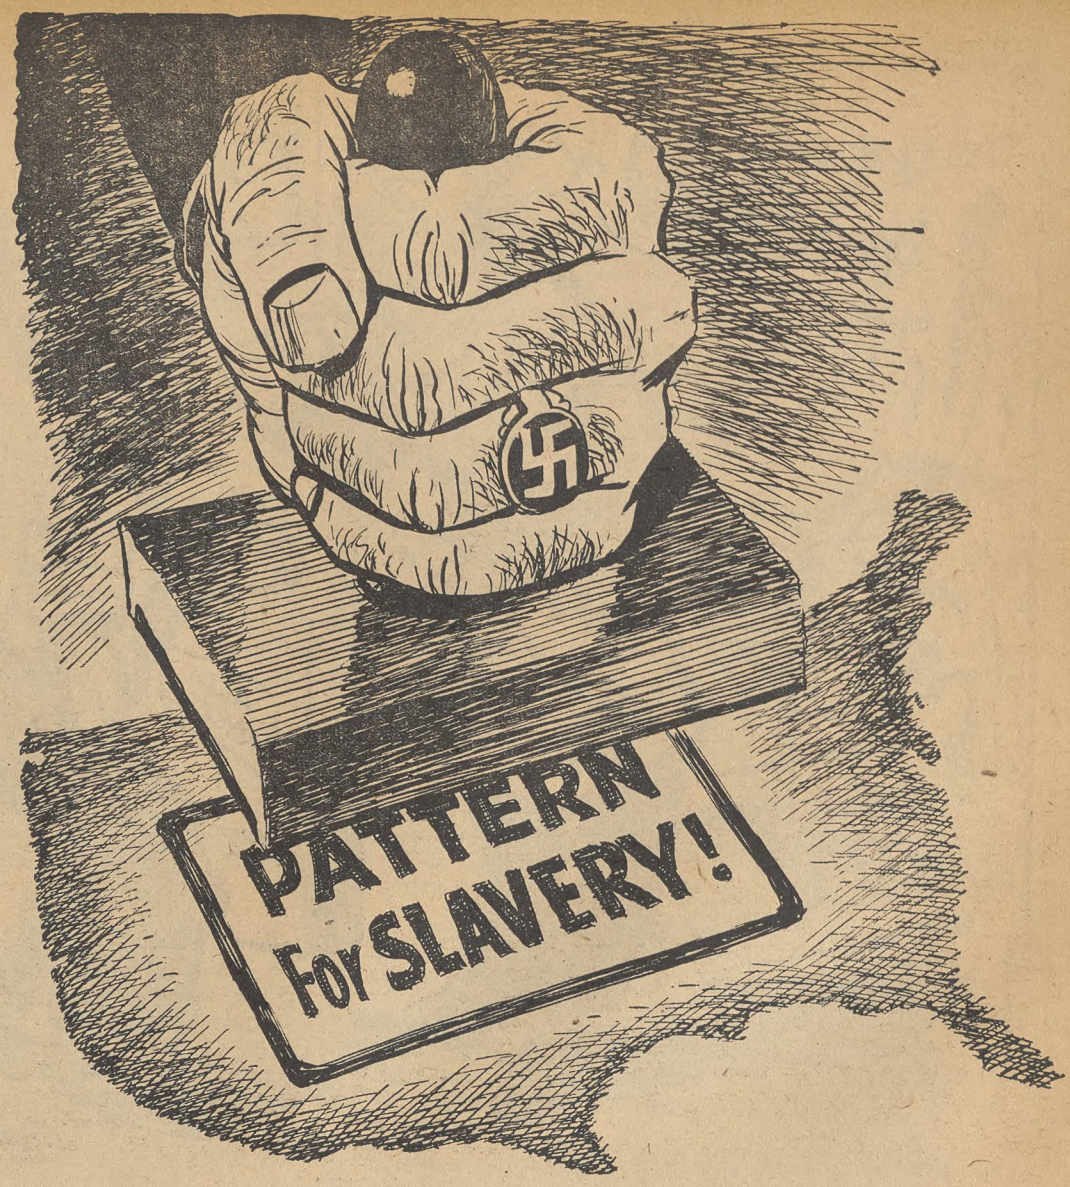
2. The efforts of workers to organize into unions of their own choice are stripped of the protection from employer coercion granted them under the Wagner Act, and are subjected to threats of crippling government restraint and coercion.

3. The effective exercise of the right to strike is subjected to the will of management and of government acting in the interests of management.

4. The use of the Federal injunction as an instrument to prevent and to break strikes is revived; this instrument is made sharper and more effective than at any time in history through the novel device of constituting the government itself as the agent of employers, to procure such anti-labor injunctions.

A small number of gigantic corporations dominate American industry today. Under the restrictions imposed by these bills labor would be unable to maintain the balance necessary in our economic life, and America would be far down the road toward a deep depression and serious economic crisis. And the destruction of the organizations through which the workers of this country can achieve effective and free collective bargaining with these corporations would concentrate control of our entire way of life in the hands of monopoly and threaten all our democratic institutions.

WHICH WAY AMERICA?



Break the unions! Build dictatorship! Ready the Nation for aggressive war! Those were the Nazis' answers for the problems of employers. The German pattern makes grim reading when reviewed in the light of legislation before the U. S. Congress today.

By FRED d'AVILA

IT WAS the most gigantic mass meeting on record. Tens of thousands of trade unionists, their wives and children flocked to vast Tempelhofer Field. From all over Berlin and the surrounding towns, the workers raised their banners to march in cheering, singing columns to celebrate their May Day.

The pageantry, the roaring airplanes, the music and the speeches eclipsed anything that P. T. Barnum had ever billed as the "greatest show on earth."

It was Adolf Hitler's Day. Flushed with victory in the March elections, the worst scourge of the 20th Century had the easy self-assurance of a man whose rise to power was as certain as death.

Honor—And Death

Hitler was the main speaker. "Honor work and respect the worker!" That, he said, was the Nazi slogan for May Day.

"The first of May," he continued, "must be the proof that we do not wish to destroy anything, but are concerned only with reconstruction. One cannot choose the loveliest spring day in the year as a symbol of strife, but only as one of constructive work. This day shall not stand for disintegration and collapse, but only for national unity . . ."

One day later, on May 2, 1933, Nazi Party members, under the leadership of the hated Robert Ley, seized control of all the unions throughout the Reich, arrested their leaders, grabbed their treasuries and suppressed their newspapers.

Two leaders of the General Trade-Union Federation, Theodore Leipart and Peter Grassmann, pledged cooperation with the Nazis. But to Nazi labor boss Ley, their promises were unbelievable. They were imprisoned in the name of a "Committee for the Protection of German Labor."

WHAT does this mean now to the United States of America? The Nazis are crushed, Hitler is reportedly dead. No one in Germany—or America—is publicly advanced as Hitler's successor in the world cause of smashing unions and establishing an employer dictatorship.

Reporting the Nazi pattern 14 years after Hitler's rise to power would be almost wasted effort except for the fact that there is a startling similarity between trends and events in Germany then and developments in the United States today.

Comprehensive histories of the Nazis' rise to power and digests of the Nazi laws published by the Intl. Labor Office report the following facts.

THE GERMAN economy in 1932 was gripped by a deep economic depression. The dominant employer class—represented by giant cartels like IG Farben—frankly admitted that "the only possible means" of maintaining its power was "to effect the splitting of the working class and its tying to the state apparatus by other and more direct means." "Herein," said one of the big business letters to leaders, "lie the positive possibilities and the tasks of Natl. Socialism."

(Today, in America, our employers too fear another big depression. Trade unionists and the working farmers are questioning the fact that 200 large non-financial corporations have extended their monopoly control over more than half of the assets of all non-financial corporations in the nation. And the big employers—represented by the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers and the U. S. Chamber of Commerce—are supporting the Taft Bill to wreck unions, as a "solution" for their difficulties.)

THE NAZIS used tons of newsprint to tell of their true love for the workers. Even when they seized the unions and arrested their leaders on May 2, 1933, they performed the task "in the interests of the German workers, and in order to preserve the institutions from bankruptcy."

Just 17 days later the Nazi government published an act relating to "Protectors of Labor" whose duties "will be to maintain industrial peace and to collaborate in the reform of social legislation." The act ironically added: "Until such legislation is passed they will determine wages and other conditions of work."

(Today, in America, employers and heir congressional henchmen are just as loudly beating their breasts and protesting their love for the workers. Senator Taft said that his bill to wreck unions is "not a punitive bill." And Pres. Earl C. Bunting of the NAM, in a plea for passage and signature of the bill, declared that "if it subtracts one legitimate gain of labor, it should be vetoed." He hastened, of course, to accuse labor leaders of opposing all reforms for "the increasing abuse of union power.")

THE NAZIS, like their American counterparts, attacked labor unions as "monopolies." In early 1933 the German Minister of Labor decreed that Nazi Work Units and the Steel Helmet mutual-aid associations will have exclusive rights to represent workers, thereby putting "an end to the legal monopoly of the General Confederation of German Trade Unions, the Federation of Christian Trade Unions and the Federation of Democratic Trade Unions as representatives of the workers . . ."

(Today, in America, the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers, in hundreds of newspaper ads throughout the nation, cries for a curb on "labor monopoly"—conveniently ignoring a report by the House Committee on Small Business that the enforcement of anti-trust laws against big business has been "largely a matter of a policeman looking the other way.")

THE NAZIS were specialists in witch-hunting. Their aim was to split the unions into factional groups, to encourage workers to fight workers, and to ride to power on the backs of an opposition that was hamstrung by dissension. They started on Communists and Jews, but they quickly added to their purge lists Socialists, Social Democrats, trade unionists without political affiliation, Catholics and Protestants. Anyone was fair game who opposed the Nazi regime.

Witch-Hunt Prize

In a May 1933 order, the Nazis established a clearance procedure for civil servants that takes first place in any witch hunt competition. "Membership by a civil servant of any political party (other than the Communist Party) is not in itself enough to cause his loyalty to be called in question," a digest of the order read.

"On the other hand, officials shall be regarded as suspect from the national point of view if they have expressed hatred against the national movement either by word of mouth or writing or by their general attitude, or if they have abused their positions in the service to persecute officials belonging to the movement."

BUTCHER-SHOP OPERATION

THE operation which quack doctors Taft and Hartley are performing on American unions will not be a complete success, from their viewpoint, unless the patient dies or, at least, is permanently crippled.

During the Conference Committee sessions, held to reconcile differences between the Senate and House anti-union bills, labor has been stretched out on an operating table while its worst enemies, armed with butcher-knives, have been arguing about how best to carve out its entrails.

It has not helped in the least that Senator Taft, Rep. Hartley and the rest try to look like doctors and profess to be operating in the patient's interests.

Their transparent malice, their gloating eagerness to drive in their knives, their winks and side-remarks to their NAM bosses, give all-too-obvious evidence of their murderous intent.

Nor can labor feel much interest or partisanship in the occasional wrangles between "Doc" Taft and "Doc" Hartley as to where, how and to what depth its living flesh should be carved up.

★ ★ ★

IT IS evident that the conference report will more closely resemble the Senate bill than the House bill.

This pleases labor's enemies, who regard the Taft bill as easier to pass over a veto than its House counterpart.

It pleases nearly all the big-business newspapers which have been campaigning for union-crippling legislation. They are trying to sell it to the public as the course of "moderation."

But such an outcome brings no cheers from labor. For the Taft bill is quite sufficient in itself to do a murderous job on the unions.

★ ★ ★

HERE ARE some of the things the Taft bill would do to unions and the workers' rights:

It prohibits the closed shop and so restricts all other forms of union security as in effect to impose the open shop.

It places countless new obstacles in the way of union organization and collective bargaining, and gives employers many new devices to evade their obligations.

It denies workers the right to elect union officers of their own choosing, by providing that any union with any officer against whom employers can direct the "red smear" shall be denied certification for bargaining purposes.

It promotes company unionism, by giving the employers' stooge outfits a place on the ballot and protecting them against disestablishment by the NLRB.

It breaks up industrial unions by separating "professional" from manual workers and carving up bargaining units along craft and other splinter lines.

It denies supervisors and agricultural workers their bargaining rights, and makes unions subject to all sorts of court suits and raids on their treasuries.

It restricts the right to strike in many ways, revives the anti-labor injunction, facilitates strikebreaking and creates many "unfair labor practices" on the part of unions as ready weapons for the union-busting employer.

★ ★ ★

THE TAFT BILL, as CIO Counsel Pressman points out, would "make the government of the United States a ready and willing instrument of employers in resisting legitimate demands and needs of workers, in thwarting legitimate strike action by employers and in subjecting the labor movement to a process of decimation, subjugation, frustration and stagnation under government control."

Write or wire to President Truman at once urging a veto of this vicious legislation, and to your Senators and Representatives asking them to uphold such a veto.

LOOKING AHEAD

BY LEN DE CAUX

WHEN Mussolini and Hitler set out to destroy the labor unions, as a first step toward ending all forms of democracy, they didn't say they wanted to enslave the workers and take away their rights.

No, they talked very much like Sen. Robt. Taft, Rep. Fred Hartley and the NAM are talking today.

●

HERMANN GOERING, when on trial, was asked to explain the Nazi attacks on German trade unions.

He replied that the unions were under Social Democratic and increasing Communist influence.

He said it was the leaders of the unions, not their members, that the Nazis were after.

The aim was not to destroy liberty, he insisted, but to give the German worker "real freedom."

He stressed the "right to work" as one of the reasons for attacking the unions.

Nearly everything Goering said sounded just like an NAM ad, or a speech by one of the American sponsors of anti-union legislation.

●

FROM ITALY also comes warning that American anti-union bills resemble the first steps taken by Mussolini.

Giulio Pastore, Catholic member of Parliament and a secretary of the Italian General Confederation of Labor, commenting on the Taft-Hartley bills, pointed out that fascism in Italy "began with the pretext of a fight against communism, but it was really aimed at the destruction of all bulwarks built by workers.

"Besides political organizations, fascism destroyed unions, including those that were Catholic-led," he said.

Oreste Lizzadri, another secretary of the Italian labor body, noted that many provisions of the American anti-union bills are just like those in Mussolini's laws, which ended in banning all union rights.

●

WHILE THE countries liberated from fascist rule are now intent on broadening union rights, bitterly remembering where union-crippling legislation led them before, the U. S. Congress is moving in the opposite, fascist direction.

In Italy the right to strike is written into the constitution, employers are not allowed to sue unions, and other labor-protective measures are being enacted.

●

IN BRITAIN one of the first acts of the Labor government was to repeal the Trades Disputes Act, which restricted the right to strike and had other provisions similar to those of the Taft-Hartley bills.

Many Americans will say amen to this comment of Pres. Will Lawther of the British Natl. Union of Mineworkers:

"Now, when workers everywhere are moving toward greater freedom, we consider it a tragedy that the land where thousands have gone to escape oppression should introduce the most oppressive labor legislation."

●

ONE OF the phoniest claims made by the sponsors of anti-union legislation is that they are fulfilling a "mandate from the people."

Senator Taft was elected by a majority of one-half of 1% of some three million votes cast. And 92 other Republicans were elected by majorities of less than 5% of the voters.

While some of the voters who helped them get these slim majorities may have fallen for the propaganda that Taft & Co. simply wanted to "remedy labor abuses," most of them voted as they did for many other reasons.

Certainly, there is no evidence that anywhere near a majority of the voters, even in the constituencies where reactionaries were elected, wanted legislation to cripple unions.

●

AS A MATTER of fact, since Taft and his clique have revealed their real anti-union purpose, such election evidence as there has been points in the opposite direction.

In the Chicago, Minneapolis, Baltimore, Oakland, Hoboken, Passaic and other municipal elections, union-supported candidates have been uniformly elected, including several CIO leaders.

Most noteworthy also is the sweeping primary victory in Washington of Charles R. Savage, who was one of the leading pro-labor progressives in the last Congress.

In the recent Democratic primary he received more votes than the total cast for all candidates in the Republican primary.

TRUMAN MAY GET TAFT BILL IN WEEK

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

A joint Senate-House conference committee moves this week towards a deadline for action on the Taft-Hartley anti-labor bills.

While the 10-man committee meets behind closed doors on Capitol Hill, an unprecedented propaganda campaign is under way throughout the nation to tell the public—and labor union members—that the "bust-union" provisions of the bill are in reality a "moderate cure for abuses."

Moving into this last minute propaganda barrage, the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers and other agencies not distinguished for their love of labor have rushed in to "protect" union members from their own democratically-elected leaders.

THROUGHOUT the nation, however, workers and liberal-minded organizations acted with increasing zeal to demonstrate the public's distaste for the bill—most severe ever given serious consideration by a U. S. Congress.

Mass meetings, advertisements, radio time, petitions and memorial resolutions from public and civic groups indicated growing demand that the bill be vetoed by Pres. Truman, and that his veto be upheld by Congress.

Joint protest meetings arranged by CIO, AFL and Railway unions were scheduled in scores of cities. Federated Press reported the first united labor demonstration in Pennsylvania's capital city of Harrisburg was held May 22. In York, Pa., a protest meeting filled the city's largest ballroom.

Muncie, Ind., CIO unions invited the AFL to join in a protest torchlight parade, following an earlier meeting on the courthouse lawn. Some 8,000 workers marched up San Francisco's Market Street in one of the biggest labor demonstrations in city history.

Material for radio speeches, spot announcements and newspaper advertising to show the danger of the Taft-Hartley bill has been prepared for local use by the CIO Publicity Dept. Write or wire to Len De Caux, CIO publicity director, 718 Jackson Place N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

New York City's CIO Council planned meetings in each of the city's 24 Congressional districts, with church and civic groups, pitching in, while the Gotham AFL scheduled a night meeting at the Polo Grounds. CIO and AFL together in New Orleans planned a meeting and parade, while in Flint, Mich., unions mapped a whirlwind campaign against the bills.

PAC Director Jack Kroll called on all political action groups to contact local Democratic party officials to urge that they ask Pres. Truman to veto the bill.

Groups of union spokesmen from a number of states visited Washington during the week, with a particular goal of building support for upholding Pres. Truman if he vetoes the bill.

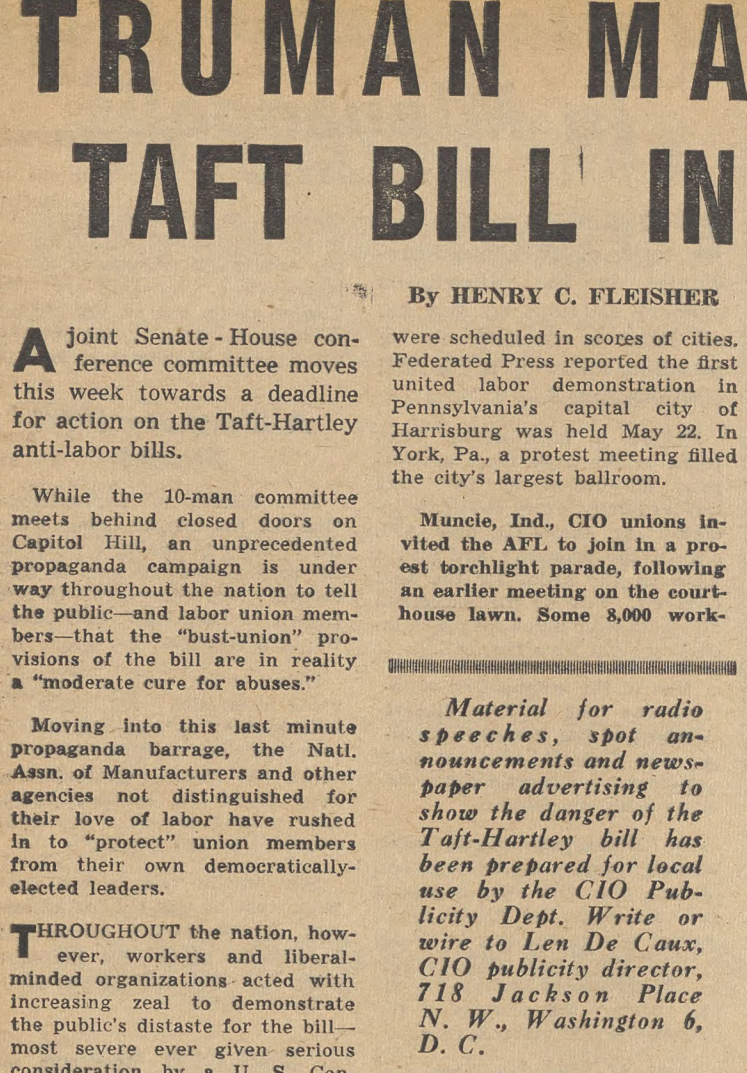
IT appeared that the Senate-House committee might report out its compromise bill on May 27, with the probability that the bill would be at the White House 24 hours later. The President has a 10-day period in which to sign or veto the law; if he does neither, it becomes law without his signature.

The Taft bill okayed by the Senate is far more severe than the Case bill, which the President vetoed a year ago.

It bans the closed shop; curbs all forms of union shop and maintenance of membership; gives employers an excuse not to bargain if they can pin a "communist" tag on any leader of any union; permits costly law suits against unions in federal district courts; allows the Attorney-General to get anti-strike injunctions in any case where he feels the national public welfare is concerned.

A major feature of the bill gives a premium to employers who can replace striking workers with scabs and strikebreakers, for it removes all rights as an employe from workers so replaced. Strikers are prohibited from voting in Labor board elections once they have had their jobs filled by scabs.

The bill also permits company unions to appear on Labor Board election ballots. It allows unions to be de-certified after one year as bargaining representative in a plant. It opens the door to breaking up industrial union bargaining groups by forcing the NLRB to stage separate elections for any craft splinter group that may file a request.



"Come back, Mr. Nam, President Truman hasn't vetoed the Taft Bill yet!"

Taft Bill Danger Seen Abroad

WORKERS in other countries are watching Congressional action on the Taft-Hartley bill with serious concern, Allied Labor News reports from a number of European capitals.

Statements from officials in several countries reflect anxiety that the cause of world democracy will be weakened if serious restrictions on U. S. labor are enacted into law.

In London, Pres. Arthur Deakin of the World Federation of Trade Unions likened the Taft-Hartley bill to Britain's infamous 1927 Trades Disputes Act, which he said "undermined workers' confidence in constitutional action." With its repeal after the Labor government came into power, "British workers consider they have regained a liberty of the greatest importance," Deakin said.

The WFTU head, who is secretary of Britain's most powerful union—the Transport and General Workers Union—said that "the whole world now stands for free trade union organization without any legislative restrictions to limit workers' rights."

He suggested that passage of the Taft bill might stir up so much discord in the U. S. as to "react detrimentally on the country's interests and its industrial relationships."

Vincent Tewson, secretary of the British Trades Union Congress, also noted that the Taft-Hartley bills "bear an ominous resemblance to the vicious, vengeful Trades Disputes Act passed by the reactionary Tory administration 20 years ago."

Other expressions of hope that the bills would be defeated were voiced by officers of the Italian, French and Latin-American labor federations.

TAFT BRAND 'DEMOCRACY' SUSPECT IN EUROPE

PASSAGE of the Taft-Hartley bill would endanger our efforts to keep the friendship and support "of the hard-pressed common people of Europe" for the American democratic system, CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey warned the nation in a CBS radio talk last week.

The Taft-Hartley drive to sow lack of confidence in union leaders among workers has a "familiar ring" in Europe, he said. He quoted three statements to the radio audience:

"We have not destroyed free workers; but we have liberated the worker and have relieved him of his unemployment.

"There is no destruction of the liberty of the worker taking place. To the contrary, I am convinced that we are giving the worker real freedom, which consists in the first place of his right to work, which we are securing for him.

"I am not talking about the masses of the people. I am talking about the group who were leading these trade unions."

Referring to the statements, Carey said: "They sound like those of Sen. Taft or Rep. Hartley, but the quotations I have just read to you came from that eminent lover of human liberties, Mr. Herman Goering; they were made on the witness stand at the Nuremberg war crimes trials. The close resemblance in text and spirit is no accident.

"For the provisions of the Taft-Hartley bill inevitably take us down the road to restriction of the people's rights, to economic slavery, to fascism.

"Can we expect high regard for our ideals and institutions from a mass of people in other lands who are now, amidst the ruins and devastation of two continents, slowly working their way back from the ravages of fascism? Not if we show that America, out of step with the world, is marching rapidly backwards."

Religious Group Hits Taft Bill

"Legislation based upon fear and hatred will not right wrongs or correct abuses," the National Religion & Labor Foundation warned last week in a statement voicing strong criticism of the Taft-Hartley bill.

"To us, as religious leaders, the moral implications are clear," the statement said. It was signed by the Foundation's 30-man executive board.

"More sinister than any specific provisions in the bill," the Foundation noted, "is the claim that these laws are intended to protect workers and increase industrial peace, when the ulterior intent must be to strangle the unions and weaken the means whereby workers strive for better standards of living."

Savage's Victory

BLOW AGAINST REACTION

THE Democratic primary election victory of Charles R. Savage in Washington's 3rd Congressional District was another indictment of the legislative course being chartered by the 80th Congress, especially in regard to labor legislation. That comment came this week from PAC Director Jack Kroll in Washington.

Savage is a member of the CIO Woodworkers Union. He was supported by united labor—CIO, AFL and Railroad Brotherhoods.

Savage was high man in a three-cornered race, far out-distancing his nearest opponent, State Attorney General Smith Troy. Savage will face Russell V. Mack, Republican, in the run-off June 7th. The race is for the seat left open by the recent death of Rep. Fred Norman.

KNOLL cited Savage's victory statement that the American people will not tolerate attacks upon labor and that the people voted to repudiate reaction. "The election returns evidenced the real sentiments of the American people on the record of the Congress," the PAC head said. "The Washington victory is only a forerunner of things to come. 1948 will bring similar results.

"Savage's ..victory, ..following triumphs in Hoboken, Passaic, Minneapolis and Oakland, California, where labor-supported candidates announced their opposition to Congressional labor legislation, is clear-cut proof of the American people's belief that American unions must be kept strong and healthy.

"The victories demonstrate that the beliefs of Franklin D. Roosevelt are still alive, that the people will rally around those candidates who make his ideals the cornerstone of their political platform."

You Can't Beat Danville! Workers Pay $5 To Vote

THE voting strength of organized workers will be pitted against the old-line reactionary machine of Sen. Harry Byrd when citizens of Danville, Va., go to the polls in municipal elections next July 3.

Thanks to the patient efforts of a Labor Legislative League, some 3,000 new voters have been added to the rolls since the 1946 elections, when only 7,100 persons out of the city's 40,000 were qualified to vote. This despite back poll taxes averaging as high as $5.

In the past the Byrd machine has had an easy time of it, since only 4,000 voters, on the average, showed up at the polls. This year, it is expected that most of the 10,000 registered citizens will cast their ballots.

Backbone of the quiet organizing drive has been the Labor Legislative League, whose support comes from CIO and AFL unions in the city, with the CIO Textile Workers Union a major factor. The TWUA has 8,000 members in the area.

The League's candidate for mayor is Pat Furguson, head of the AFL Typographical Union. Nomination in Virginia Democratic primaries assures election.

Difficulties in registering the 3,000 new voters can be understood by the fact that average poll tax payments amounted to $4.99, and back taxes must be paid up. With average textile wages up from a pre-war average of about 40-50c an hour to about a dollar at present, many workers have been able to afford payment of the tax for the first time.

Another fatcor which makes Danville liberals expect a victory over the Byrd machine is the registration of some 700 additional Negroes, through cooperation with C. K. Coleman, Danville Negro leader and head of the Independent Voters League.

United Labor Won In Minneapolis

By Federated Press

ENCOURAGED by the victories of its endorsed candidates in the Minneapolis primary elections on May 12, all labor is working for a smashing follow-up in the final elections June 9.

Despite a labor-baiting campaign by the city's three newspapers, all owned by the Iowa Cowles family, every candidate indorsed by the CIO and AFL cleared the primaries and won a place on the ballot for the final elections. Ten of the successful nominees were union members, including eight from the AFL.

One of the outstanding victories was that of Pres. Robert Wishart of the Hennepin County CIO Council, who led five candidates seeking the 8th ward aldermanic nomination.

The Minneapolis papers made Wishart their special target, blasting him with daily editorials and charging the city's union leaders with attempting to set up a "labor boss" rule in Minneapolis. Labor fought back on the air and through the columns of the CIO Minnesota Labor Review.

Proof of labor's strength was the fact that not only was Wishart nominated but Jens Christensen, incumbent 8th ward alderman whom labor had singled out for defeat, failed to win a place on the final ballot.

The Minneapolis voters also gave labor-indorsed incumbent Mayor Hubert Humphrey a 2 to 1 victory over his nearest rival. Although the primaries are nominally non-partisan, the GOP machine threw its support behind Frank J. Collins, who trailed far behind Humphrey in the voting.

The victory of the labor-backed candidates practically assured the continuation of a liberal majority in the city council. However, labor anticipates a renewal of the labor-baiting campaign in the Cowles papers and is putting on an intensive drive to get out the votes for its candidates on June 9.

A Blankety !!! Blank!

Sen. Martin of Pennsylvania "has let the mighty dollar cause his memory to become a blank so far as the working man is concerned," according to George Brown of Local 2657, CIO Steelworkers, Rexmont, Pa.

Brown went with a Pennsylvania delegation that came to Washington to see legislators about pending anti-labor bills. He said that "our representatives were given the brush-off when they wanted to ask a few civil questions of Mr. Martin."

Sen. Martin said in his campaign that he was out to "kill labor," Brown charged, adding: "It is time the public was given at least a decent representative in national affairs."

750,000 Negro Unionists

There are 750,000 organized Negro workers in the U. S., the majority of them in CIO unions, according to the new 1946-47 edition of the Negro Handbook edited by Florence Murray and published by Current Books, Inc., 23 West 47 St., New York City.

The two CIO unions with the largest number of Negro members are the Auto Workers with 100,000, and the Steelworkers with 85,000.

Negroes outnumber whites in 180 counties, Georgia leading with 46.

HOOK HIM!

It's a fact. You can do it. You can hit back hard. You—every member of the CIO—can hit back hard by taking from the political scene those Congressmen and state legislators who seek to crush our unions and lower our wages. You can do it by fighting back with political action, by fighting back with PAC. CIO's political arm—PAC—can answer labor's foes at the ballot box. A bigger, stronger PAC is the solution.

This means organization, political organization. It means money to build such an organization. It means a dollar for PAC, dollars to build PAC everywhere in America. CIO President Philip Murray says "It is absolutely and positively essential. It is a definite responsibility."

Yes, it is essential. It is a responsibility. Within a few weeks, PAC's 1947 $1 voluntary contribution drive begins. Give it your support. You want your union kept strong! You want it to be free to work for your greater security! Strengthen and develop the political structure which can assure this. Back PAC. Give your dollar to PAC.

'48 Is Coming!

Anti-labor legislators must face the voters in 1948. The voters must be informed and organized. PAC must build its organization for these crucial elections now! It's motto is "Build in '47 to win in '48." Support your PAC. Give your dollar to PAC.

Even in Good Times

UNEMPLOYMENT TOLL 7 TIMES MORE THAN LOSS DUE TO STRIKES!

TIME lost last year through unemployment was seven times greater than the time lost through strikes.

The time lost in one depression year—with 12 million people out of work in 1932—was 32 times greater than the time lost last year through strikes.

These are the figures:

- Time lost through unemployment in 1932 was 12 million man years, according to the figures put out by the employer-dominated Natl. Industrial Conference Board.
- Time lost through unemployment in 1946 was 2½ million man years. This is considered an irreducible minimum, due to job changes, etc.
- Time lost through strikes in 1946 was 376,666 man years, according to the NICB. This is about as much time as would be lost if the steel industry laid off one-third of its workers during a depression year.

Yet the same forces in Congress that support the Taft Bill "to stop strikes" helped to sabotage a bill to guarantee full employment.

Applicants for unemployment insurance jam the Washington, D. C. office of the U. S. Employment Service. Unemployment has increased in the apparel trades and light manufacturing industries, particularly in N. Y. City, New England, some of the South Atlantic states and California.

LABOR DEPT. WARNS OF 'SOFT SPOTS' IN EMPLOYMENT

SOFT spots in the economy, with 140,000 manufacturing workers laid off during April, hold a warning for the future and need to be watched. That was the advice this week from Ewan Clague, commissioner of Labor Statistics.

"A tendency toward rising unemployment in some industrial areas was most noticeable in New York with its concentration of apparel trades and other light manufacturing industries," the U. S. Dept. of Labor official said.

Initial claims for unemployment insurance in N.Y. City were double those of a year ago, he declared. They resulted from layoffs in women's apparel, leather goods and several luxury fields.

New England, several South Atlantic states and California reported a rise in unemployment insurance claims.

An expected rise in construction activity did not materialize, Clague said. About 62,000 new permanent dwelling units were started in April, 4,000 below the level of April 1946.

Clague blamed high prices. These were caused by removal of price ceilings, a move forced by Republican Congressmen in their successful drive to wreck nearly all price controls.

Total unemployment is about 2½ million, which Clague said "is near the minimum general considered unavoidable . . ." This is about half a million higher than the low point last fall, and about the same as in April 1946.

CLAGUE warned that 1¾ million veterans now in school on a full-time basis may soon be seeking their first post-war jobs. Hiring this year, he said, is on a much smaller scale than during last year, primarily for replacements and seasonal work.

Meanwhile, the Veterans Administration reported that during March 40,000 ex-GIs who claimed benefits under the unemployment program exhausted their allowances. This brought to 227,000 the total number who have left the unemployment rolls by exhausting benefits.

OFFICIALS of the Social Security Administration said that national and state unemployment claims reflected little in the way of trends, because of the fact that new benefit periods recently started in many states. It is uncertain whether unemployment increases in some states were due to layoffs or to the fact that additional workers are eligible due to the new benefit periods.

However, a first rate crisis was reported in Rhode Island, with unemployment of 28,000—5,000 higher than the last week in March. U. S. Employment Service officials said:

"The current labor market situation is the most depressing one witnessed in this state since the end of the war. It is marked by lowered activity, labor reductions, increasing unemployment, and doubtful prospects in most segments of business and industry.

"Since March the over-all situation has been growing rapidly worse. The number of workers laid off and those who are to be laid off in the next few weeks may well run into thousands, involving workers of both sexes and in all occupations.

"How much longer the present decline in industry will continue cannot be ascertained; the employers themselves don't know."

Main layoffs occurred in woolen mills, finishing and clothing printing establishments, shoelace and worsted mills.

Jobless Aid—From $10.90 to $23.05 a Week!

SUPPOSE you lose your job—just how much will you be entitled to in unemployment compensation?

The answer, according to the U. S. Social Security Administration figures, is shockingly little.

Actual payments made in March to unemployed workers were $17.72 a week. This is the average for the whole nation.

In two-thirds of the states, payments are lower than the average. The lowest is Kentucky, which paid an average of $10.90 a week.

The highest average payment was in Utah, with $23.05 a week. Even this sum is entirely inadequate to support the average family of four.

'WE'LL SUPPORT VETO,' STEEL UNION TO TRUMAN

By VINCENT SWEENEY

THE Steelworkers' executive board this week took action to assure President Truman that he would be supported in a veto of the Taft-Hartley bill.

The board, which met in Atlantic City this week, also took steps to follow through on the national CIO program to fight anti-labor legislation. Pres. Philip Murray of the CIO and the Steelworkers said:

"The most important activity during the next several weeks is the demonstration by our individual members of their vital concern about the effect of these bills.

"They should demonstrate their concern by sending to Pres. Truman and their senators and congressmen wires or letters and signed petitions. Anything that can be done with non-members of the union to enlist their activity on the same program should be done."

In addition to a full day's discussion of the legislation, the Steelworkers installed officers and board members for the ensuing two-year term.

THE board, in a final statement, affirmed its position that collective bargaining contracts must be observed. Pointing to the many gains won in the steel industry, the statement said in part:

"This victory was one of the most notable achievements in the annals of our nation's collective bargaining history. The wage agreement provides opportunity for stabilizing our country's internal economic affairs; it guarantees stability in the steel industry for a period of two years."

The statement to be sent to 3,000 locals, asserted "it is imperative that we understand thoroughly that:

"We must meticulously respect the provisions of the collective bargaining contract.

"That under no circumstances must there be work stoppages during the life of the agreement;

"We must resort to the orderly method of adjudicating our differences by taking recourse to the grievance procedures of the wage agreement up to and including arbitration."

The statement emphasized the respect and the admiration won by the union among its members and the public and declared that "to retain the confidence of the public, the union and management must display that spirit of labor-management cooperation so essential to the welfare of this great nation."

IT WAS announced that contracts have been negotiated with companies covering 500,000 workers, including 11,000 in iron ore mines operated by the Oliver Mining Co. and Pickands-Mather. Oliver is a U. S. Steel subsidiary and the two firms usually set the pattern for the entire iron ore range which employs around 28,000.

International officers elected at the biennial referendum last December, to take office June 1, include President Murray; David J. McDonald, secretary-treasurer; Van A. Bittner, vice-president, and James G. Thimmes, elected vice-president for the first time. Thimmes succeeds Clinton S. Golden who resigned last summer. Thimmes has served since then by appointment of the board.

Three new district officers also were elected: James Griffin, Youngstown, Ohio; James Dickerson, Houston, Texas, and James Nicholson, Nova Scotia.

The board consist of 36 district directors, the others of whom were re-elected, Charles Millard, national director for Canada, also re-elected, and the four international officers.

1,000 VOLUNTEERS SPUR DIXIE DRIVE

APPROXIMATELY 1,000 volunteer organizations are now working in close cooperation with field representatives of the CIO Organizing Committee, Director Van A. Bittner of the Committee announced this week.

"We now have a volunteer organizer set-up in every Southern state except Texas, where a 'volunteer' program will be launched at a statewide meeting May 31," Bittner said.

"About 200 representatives of the Organizing Committee and the various CIO international unions are now devoting full time to the Southern membership drive. The volunteers work part time with these field representatives."

The volunteers, Bittner said, are members of established CIO unions. Each pledges he or she will devote about 10 hours a month to active organizing work.

"During the first part of our membership drive we devoted much time to the building of a staff of field representatives and the establishment of offices and operating bases throughout the South," Bittner said.

"Then, early this year, we launched our volunteer organizer program in those states which were ready for it. The setting up of volunteer committees throughout the South should be near completion by the end of June.

"WE put the volunteer plan into operation because we wanted to give local union members throughout the South a greater opportunity to participate in the membership campaign and because we wanted additional manpower.

"The volunteers have done unusually good work in a number of local organizing drives. They have made good contacts for our field representatives, have distributed leaflets, appeared on radio programs and have signed up many members."

Bittner said that "the 1,000 figure represents only those volunteers who work with our field staff on any membership drive in their own localities" and does not take into account the volunteers who are employed at plants and mills where membership drives are in progress.

"I lost my job today. They want a man with SIX hands!"

SEND PACKERS PACT REOPENING NOTICES

The CIO Packinghouse Workers this week notified six of the nation's leading meat packers that contracts would be opened for a 15c an hour wage increase. Some 80,000 workers are covered by the contracts.

Reopening notices were served on the Big Four packers—Swift, Armour, Wilson, Cudahy—and Morrell and Hygrade Food Products Corp.

The telephone strikes are finally settled. It is to be hoped and expected that the telephone workers now will see clearly that they need—a well-knit organization along industrial lines—attached to a movement that understands industrial organization and how to operate it to the best advantage.

The CIO, both its officers and members, local unions and councils throughout the nation rendered invaluable support both in the matter of raising money for local purposes and in supporting picket lines. Our national organizations also contributed to these strikers, as well as the national CIO and rendered many other services, too.

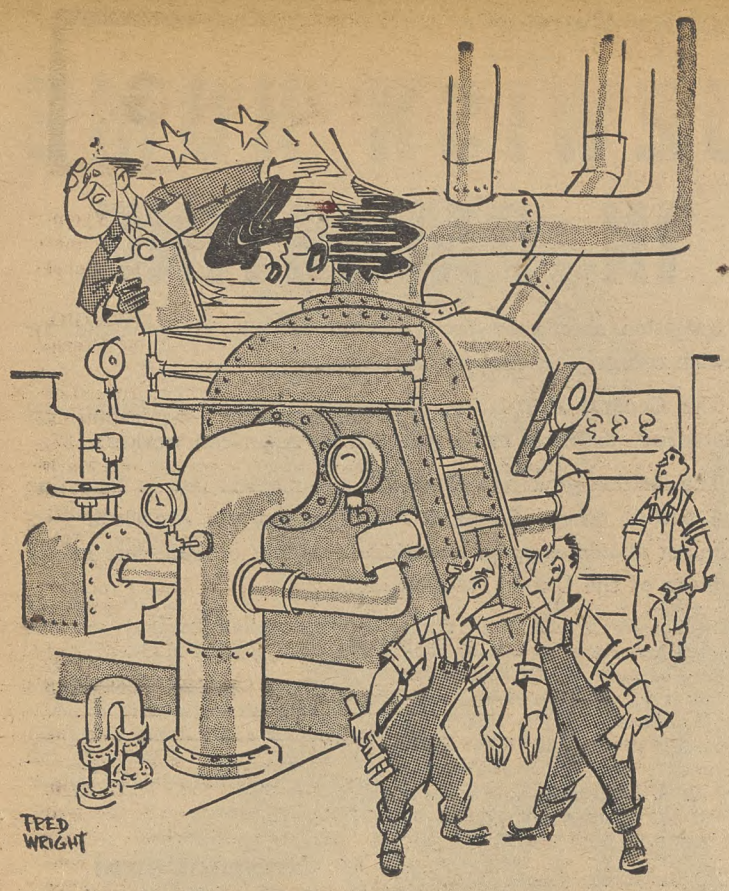
The spirt of the strikers was excellent. Many of the representatives and members have expressed their belief in our movement and the hope that they, too, can enjoy the pattern of the organization that CIO has built in mass production organizations. With a well-knit organization the results might have been greater and their contribution to the labor movement and the country would have been far more effective.

The Senate and the House committees on the anti-labor legislation are meeting to iron out their differences. Labor can expect nothing from them. The bill, sponsored by the National Assn. of Manufacturers, will soon be placed on the desk of the President of the United States. The President should waste no time in vetoing this unsound, unwarranted and unfair measure. Contact your Senator and Congressman, urging support of a veto now!

FINE CIO FISHERMEN $12,100

Local 36 of the CIO Fishermen's Union was fined $3,000 and 14 union members including Intl. Sec.-Treas. Kibre were fined from $10 to $2,000 in Federal Court in San Francisco this week following their conviction on anti-trust law violations. Fines totaled $12,100.

Intl. Pres. J. F. Jurich and Kibre asked for "the same protection for their union as is given other unions under the Clayton Act and the Norris-LaGuardia Act which exempt unions from the Sherman Anti-Trust Law."



Look at that time-study guy.... I told him he was speeding up too much....

SEA UNIONS UNITE TO SAVE CONTRACTS

THE CIO Maritime Committee this week concluded its five-day meeting at San Francisco with the adoption of a national program to meet the ship owners cancellation of maritime contracts.

A hard-hitting program was set up, uniting all of the CIO maritime unions in a common front behind any union faced with a lockout June 15, as well as behind those seeking to improve their contracts. Each union pledged unanimous support.

Another CIO maritime conference is set for June 14 in N. Y. City, 24 hours before the deadline of June 15. All maritime unions, regardless of their affiliation, will be invited to attend the sessions of this enlarged and delegated meeting of the CIO Maritime Committee.

The CIO Maritime Committee will meet with CIO Pres. Philip Murray prior to the June 14 meeting to ask his advice and support and to get through him the official backing of the World Federation of Trade Unions.

'CAMEL' STRIKE APPEAL

AS the strike of 10,000 employes of the R. J. Reynolds Co., Winston - Salem, N. C., makers of Camel cigarettes, entered its fourth week, John Brophy CIO director of industrial union councils appealed for support of the strike to all state and city councils.

The ranks of the strikers held solid, and the CIO Food & Tobacco Workers announced that production of Camel had been cut to 20% of normal.

Brophy's letter included a statement by FTA Pres. Donald Henderson who said that the strike was called "after the company made a final offer of 5½ cents an hour, cancelled all union security clauses in the contract and proposed wage cuts for seasonal workers.

Henderson pointed out the need of immediate assistance as 500 strikers and their families have been evicted from their homes.

He called on CIO Councils to send strike contributions to Willie Grier, treasurer, Committee for the Relief of Reynolds' strikers, Local 2, FTA-CIO, 247½ North Main Street, Winston-Salem, N. C.

UPHOLD GUARDS' LABOR RIGHTS

THE U. S. Supreme Court this week upheld the right of the CIO Steelworkers to bargain for plant guards, a right which the Jones & Laughlin Steel Corp. had refused to recognize for 4 years.

The steel firm has been fighting the union on the issue ever since March 15, 1943, when the Steelworkers asked the NLRB for certification as collective bargaining representative of the guards. The company maintained that the guards "perform certain assigned work that is strictly representative of management."

The Supreme Court agreed with NLRB, asserting:

"When the employer retains unfettered power to fix the wages, hours and other working conditions of militarized guards, the guards stand in the same relation to the employers regarding these matters as do production and maintenance employes."

LABOR BOARD KNIFE STILL CARVING CIO

By LEE PRESSMAN
CIO General Counsel

THE administration of the National Labor Relations Act by the Board shows an increasingly reckless disregard of employes' rights and of the Board's own precedents.

In connection with craft petitions the Board has abandoned all pretense of objectivity and fairness. Since last November the Board has issued a long series of decisions in which it has carved up industrial units into petty crafts.

In every single case involving the issue of a craft against an industrial unit the Board has ordered a craft election. As each case arises the Board invents new "principles" to justify its prejudice against industrial units.

Three cases recently decided by the Board are particularly striking, one case involving the iron ore mines of the Kaiser Co.

In this case, the Board itself had ordered an industrial unit among the production and maintenance employes of the mines in 1943. After a bargaining history of 4 years the Board reversed itself and directed an election among the employes in the machine and repair shops of the mines.

NLRB's 3 Reasons

Three of the grounds which the Board assigned for permitting the employes in the machine and repair shops a separate election demonstrate how tortured is the Board's groping for some pretext to break up an industrial unit:

1 The Board said that the employes involved constitute a "traditional craft group." The group which the Board separated is a hodge-podge consisting of machinists, truck mechanics, heavy duty mechanics, welders and apprentices, and is obviously not a "traditional craft group" but a miscellaneous collection of occupations.

2 The Board further disregarded the prior collective bargaining history on an industrial basis by arguing that in some cases in open pit mining in the copper industry there had been collective bargaining on a craft basis.

What the Board completely suppressed is the fact that in the iron ore mining industry, the very industry involved in the case, collective bargaining on an industrial basis is universal.

The Board was so desperate to find a justification for destroying an industrial bargaining pattern that it avoided using an example which would require a finding that an industrial bargaining unit was the appropriate one.

3 A third ground which the Board used to disregard its own prior finding that a production and maintenance unit was appropriate is the fact that it had never before considered whether a craft unit was appropriate. Accordingly, the Board ignored four years of industrial bargaining and ordered an election among an artificially segregated group of employes.

Tortured Reasoning

The same kind of tortured reasoning forms the basis of the Board's decision in a recent case involving the Neoprene Plant of the DuPont Company at Louisville, Kentucky. The Board here disregarded 4 years of bargaining on an industrial basis and ordered an election among a group of 85 employes from among 1300 in a plant-wide unit.

The group excluded, as in the Kaiser case, was not along craft lines but embraced such employes as pump operators, boiler firemen, refrigeration men, coal handling operators, bull dozer operators, filter plant operators, oilers and maintenance men assigned to the power and refrigeration department of a large integrated plant.

Here we again see that the Board's anxiety to carve up an industrial unit has led it to order separate elections for employes who obviously belong to no particular craft group. In addition it has lumped together in one unit various types of these miscellaneous employes.

Such a decision would be illogical and troublesome at all times since it could only promote industrial disputes in a large mass production plant. It is particularly fantastic for the Board to carve out these employes in this case for two special reasons:

1 The unit had been established as a result of a Board election conducted on a plant-wide basis.

2 There was four years of successful bargaining history on an industrial basis subsequent to the Board election.

Arbitrary Decision

In a third case, the Board again demonstrated its determination arbitrarily to carve out small groups from an industrial unit. In this case involving the Tivoli Union Co. of Denver, there had been an industrial bargaining history of at least 10 years. The Board nevertheless ordered an election among a small group of boiler room employes and disregarded the prior bargaining history.

The Board's strange decisions on the craft issue are matched by its decisions in other fields.

The Board has increasingly shown its willingness to depart from a vigorous enforcement of the Act on all fronts. A recent case involving the Hercules Motors Corp. and the UAW-CIO shows how far the Board is willing to go in denying protection to employes' rights under the Act.

The UAW was defeated in an election and thereafter presented objections to the employer's pre-election conduct which were based upon the following activities:

1 Six anti-union statements made by supervisory employes to rank and file workers. These remarks included interrogation about the election, the warning that the Company did not need a union and the threat that a strike would occur within 30 days in the event that the UAW won the election.

The Board tossed off all of these remarks with the comment that they were not "reasonably likely to have restrained the employes' choice of bargaining representative."

2 A long series of notices and letters sent out by the employer to the employes during the month before the election vigorously opposing the union, listing the various benefits which the employer claimed the employes enjoyed, and indicating that the benefits would be withdrawn if the organizing campaign were successful.

In a letter sent to the employes only four days before the election the employer told the employes in effect that the choice of the union would mean a loss of their benefits. The Board again found nothing in these remarks to justify setting aside the election.

A Changed Board

When the Act was enforced more whole-heartedly than it is today, the Board would never tolerate an employer threat that the choice of the union would mean the loss of benefits. Such a threat is an obvious violation of the Act and the Board in the past has consistently regarded it as such.

3 In addition to the above conduct, the Company also sought to intimidate the employes through the action of supervisors in lining up the employes in separate departments and checking their names against a prepared list before they voted. This stunt, which is one of the most familiar devices used by employers to intimidate employes, drew no criticism from the Board.

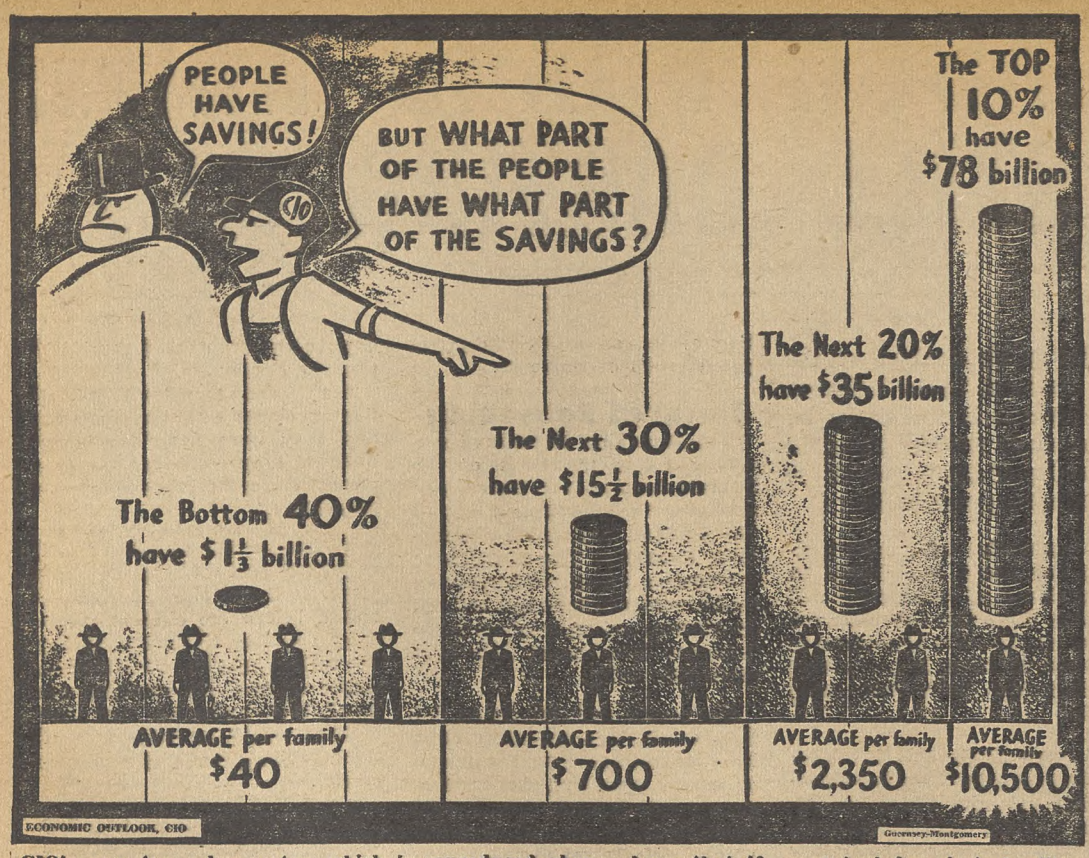
4 The Union protested the fact that the employer supplied transportation to the polls. The Board likewise found in this no attempt by the employer to influence the employes.

The Board found that an additional charge concerning a 10% wage increase granted 5 months before the election was not within the scope of its order granting a hearing on the Union's objections. A motion to enlarge the scope of the order was denied.

This decision is disturbing because the Board appears to disregard the fact that the Act is supposed to guarantee to employes the absolute right to choose a bargaining representative free from employer interference, coercion, restraint.

The Board's approach is remarkably naive for an administrative agency which is supposed to be an expert in its field. The Board did not realize that the totality of the employer's conduct, its cumulative impact, was such as inevitably to impress upon the employes the dangers to their livelihood if they disregarded his preference. The Board artificially treated each act by the employer as if it were completely unrelated to the act which preceded and followed it.

By approaching the Union's charges with blinders on, the Board succeeded in whitewashing the employer.



CIO's new two-color poster, which is reproduced above, shows that 40 percent of America's families have only $40 per family in savings, while 10 percent have $10,500 per family. The poster, which is 17 by 22 inches, can be ordered from the CIO, 718 Jackson Place, N. W., Washington 6, D. C., at the following prices: 10¢ a copy; $7.50 for 100 copies.

CIO UNION SHOWS HOW TO CUT PRICES AS NEWBURYPORT PLAN FLOPS

THE hullaboo was terrific. The story was page one in almost every newspaper. Prices were going to drop—"plunk"—and the woes of consumers would be lifted.

But this week the awful truth was told—the Newburyport (Mass.) 10% price reduction plan just hadn't worked.

Merchants who experimented with the widely heralded plan decided to abandon it. The reason, they said, was that wholesalers did not cooperate.

"Some manufacturers cut prices" the Associated Press reported—but the majority did not.

MEANWHILE, at Canton, Ill., the CIO Farm Equipment Workers (without benefit of ballyhoo) did somewhat better.

The union figured that recently-won wage gains from Intl. Harvester might be wiped out by higher prices.

Intl. Rep. Tom Kelley and FE Local 233 Pres. George Weir approached 40 leading merchants, who took a full-page ad in the Canton Daily Ledger to publicly promise that they wouldn't boost prices as a result of the Harvester wage hike.

Congratulating the merchants on their cooperative spirit, the union said:

"The CIO Farm Equipment Workers, while fighting to increase wages, also recognizes its responsibility to fight against higher prices, in order to protect any wage increase that we win.

"The wage increase granted to our union by the Intl. Harvester Co. was given with assurances from the company that prices of farm amchinery would not be raised as a result of the wage boost. The CIO feels that this is the sane and sensible approach toward a higher standard of living for the American workers.

AND in Detroit, Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers proposed that the federal government name industries whose profits are too high.

"The public," he said, "should be informed that the greed of such industries is pushing us toward disaster, and other industries in like position should be warned that their turn for public exposure will come next unless they act first to reduce their prices.

"A government which did not hesitate to act vigorously against rail and coal strikers should be courageous enough to publicly castigate dangerous profiteering."

CIO Says:

Vets Need More Aid

NATHAN E. COWAN, CIO Legislative director, this week warned that greater subsistence payments are needed to keep the GI education and on-the-job training program in operation and to prevent throwing close to two million veterans into the ranks of the unemployed.

Cowan wrote Sen. Wayne Morse (R. Ore.), chairman of the subcommittee on labor and welfare of the Senate Labor Committee, that the present grants do not allow the GI Bill of Rights to "do its job of giving our ex-servicemen and women the education and training to which they are entitled."

He said that one million had already dropped out of the program without completing their courses. There were 1.1 million studying and 700,000 taking on-the-job training as of April.

Cowan urged favorable action on S 407, which would eliminate the $200 ceiling on combined wages and subsistence and the two-year limit on on-the-job training, and on S 326, which would boost subsistence to $100 a month for a single veteran, $125 for a veteran with one dependent and $150 for a veteran with two or more dependents.

'FORUM FOR LABOR-HATERS'

THE House unAmerican Activities Committee has "provided a forum for every labor hater in America," it is charged in a statement signed by more than 500 CIO and AFL union officials.

Issued by the Civil Rights Congress, the statement said that Chairman J. Parnell Thomas (R. N. J.) of the committee "has announced to the nation that his intended victim is the American trade union movement.

"In the name of hun'ing Communists, the committee is seeking to rob all America and especially members of labor unions of their basic freedoms," the statement said, "freedom of speech and religion, freedom of political opinion, freedom to organize for collective bargaining, freedom from involuntary servitude through abrogation of the right to strike."

The statement said the committee "aims to create fear" and to shatter the unity of trade unions and progressives. Signing the statement were presidents of 10 CIO national unions and numerous other national and local union officers.

JEWISH HOME IN PALESTINE

- Palestine should be preserved as a national homeland for Jewish refugees throughout the world.
- The General Federation of Jewish Labor of Palestine—the Histadrut—deserves full support from American workers.
- The British government should end martial law in Palestine and permit entry of Jewish refugees, and the American government should support traditional backing of Palestine in the councils of the United Nations.

These were principal decisions reached last week at a 3-day conference of some 300 CIO and AFL members at an emergency meeting sponsored by the American Trade Union Council of the Natl. Committee for Labor Palestine. CIO Pres. Murray and AFL Pres. Green are honorary chairmen of the group.

CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey praised the working unity of members of the two labor organizations at the meeting. "At the very least," he told the delegates, "the surviving Jews of Europe, who were the greatest sufferers from the war, should be allowed to enter Palestine, where the Histadrut is ready to welcome them and make a place for them in the economy of Palestine."

AFL Pres. Green described the Palestine issue as a "major test" for the United Nations.

Throughout the speeches ran a thread of praise for the Palestinian Jewish labor organization, described as the "most important factor in building Palestine."

They cited its economic achievements in organizing wholesale and retail cooperatives, labor-owned transport lines, and labor banks to finance the federation's projects. Histadrut also has a big-scale welfare program, carried out through schools, hospitals and sick and death benefit funds.

Speakers praised Histadrut's help to Arab workers in organizing unions and helping them win the best wage standards and working conditions in the Middle East.

International Labor Parleys

Five CIO officials left New York May 24 for a two-week visit in Prague, Czechoslovakia, where four important international labor meetings are scheduled during the first half of June.

In the group were Sec.-Treas. James Carey; Vice-Pres. Frank Rosenblum; Intl. Affairs Director Michael Ross; and John Abt, general counsel of the clothing workers—all headed for meetings of the World Federation of Trade Unions.

At the same time, Pres. Milton Murray of the American Newspaper Guild departed to attend a convention of the Intl. Organization of Journalists, to which the Guild is affiliated. Murray is an officer of IOJ.

The WFTU meetings include sessions of the nine-man executive bureau; the 26-man executive committee; and the 70-man general council.

Lesson from Europe

Protect U. S. Timber, CIO Woodworker Warns

BACK from an international timber conference in Czechoslovakia, Al F. Hartung of the CIO Woodworkers has a message for Americans: "Protect our lumber reserves from waste and loss."

Hartung was a member of the World Federation of Trade Unions delegation at the meeting, which was sponsored in the early part of the month by the United Nations Food & Agriculture Organization. The confab was staged at Marianske Lazne, a resort town about 100 miles from Prague, capital of the Czech Republic.

The wood union official, together with several labor spokesmen from other nations, served on the manpower sub-committee of the conference. Suggestions of the committee were contained in the final, formal report of the conference, which is now submitted to the UN for action by the various nations.

Principal suggestions adopted on the manpower issue called for plans to make lumber employment more stable and secure; payment of wages comparable to other occupations and consideration for the seasonal nature of the work; a program to seek methods of providing off-season work for lumber workers; establishment of technical training centers and apprenticeship courses; improved safety, food, health and housing; and education opportunities for children of lumber workers.

Hartung said that reports to the conference and his own observations in other European countries during his month abroad convinced him that the U. S. must move quickly to preserve its forest resources.

"Without adequate timber supplies, the economy of many European countries is depressed," Hartung commented during a two-day stop-over in Washington before leaving for the northwest.

"It seems to me there is a vital lesson here for the U. S., which we must learn while we have the time. We must learn to stop the terrible waste that has marked forest cutting in the past. We must learn to replant, systemmatically and scientifically.

WHY am I sounding off about our membership meetings? Brother, I'll tell you...

Here's Why the attendance has DOUBLED in the last few months...

My idea is that maybe you should have a little notice in the paper every week, asking the locals to subscribe to The CIO NEWS, as we did.

It informs members who never come to meetings, and I'm sure helps attendance at meetings, as OUR MEETINGS HAVE DOUBLED SINCE WE HAVE BEEN GETTING THE CIO NEWS.

From a letter written by an officer of a CIO United Steelworkers local which recently subscribed to The CIO NEWS for all its members.

YOUR LOCAL too can have The CIO NEWS mailed each week to all its members at their home addresses—or to a more limited list of committeemen and other leading members, if you prefer—for any desired period, at these SPECIALLY REDUCED RATES: If a group subscription is placed by a CIO Local Union for 100 or more members, the rate is ONLY 1¼ CENTS PER MEMBER PER WEEK —plus a charge, payable once only, of 4 cents per member for the initial cost of cutting the mailing list stencils.

Remember ... A GOOD UNION MAN AND GOOD CITIZEN IS A WELL-INFORMED MAN!

the CIO NEWS

HEAR UE ON THE AIR

THE first union-sponsored series of news commentaries ever to be broadcast on a national scale in this country is the weekly program presented by the CIO Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers over the Mutual network on Wednesdays. The program is now in its fifth week.

Leland Stowe, author and war correspondent, is the news commentator of the UE program sponsored by the 600,000 members of the union under the slogan, "An Informed America is a Free America."

During his work as a war correspondent in World War II, Stowe served with the armies of seven different nations, reporting the war from 44 different nations and colonies. He was overseas for three and one-half years and was bombed five times by different air forces. He also has been a featured radio commentator and has lectured from coast to coast.

A member of the CIO American Newspaper Guild, Stowe is a Pulitzer prize winner and has received other outstanding journalistic awards. He lives in Bronxville, N. Y., is married and has two young sons.

IN HIS broadcasts to date, Leland Stowe has discussed a number of challenging questions facing the American people today. The prevention of another war, he said in his first broadcast, is "the biggest job any of us has today. Another war would imperil the lives, the jobs and the homes of every one of us."

Talk about another war being inevitable, Stowe said, "merely poisons our minds. It paralyzes our efforts. That's why this kind of talk needs watching and reporting . . . I shall try to do my small part in reporting it—quietly, I hope, but frankly."

LELAND STOWE

In all his broadcasts Stowe not only comments on outstanding current events of interest to Americans as a whole, but, unlike the great part of the news commentators, who consciously or unconsciously reflect the interests of big business, he is not afraid to dig down to fundamental questions affecting the vital welfare of the people.

"CAN free enterprise discipline itself for the nation's general welfare? In other words, will big business act to prevent our threatened recession by reducing prices in time?" Stowe asked in his second broadcast. Reviewing what has happened since OPA was thrown out last summer, he reported, "So far—almost no action."

"I can't help wondering what a serious recession would do to the political thinking of the American voters," Stowe remarked. "The industrialists who made far greater profits last year than they made in '45 don't seem to be thinking about that. . . . Do they think it's impossible for the American people to vote for a Re-Deal? I wouldn't be so sure.

"For one thing, the American voters have not yet repudiated the New Deal in a presidential election. But we do know one thing very definitely by now. We do know—or should know — that a depression releases an awful lot of social and political dynamite in this country. To play with that dynamite is to invite more governmental controls in business. The champions of free enterprise can't have it both ways. Now it's their turn to act—to take the lead in cutting prices. . . ."

STOWE is taking full opportunity of his union-sponsored program to bring information and explanation of events of vital importance to all Americans — events neglected or inadequately mentioned by most of the daily press and radio. This was shown particularly in his May 7 broadcast devoted to the trial of the big industrialists in Germany, which he described as "probably the biggest long-range event that's yet happened this year.

"For the first time in history," he said in explaining significance of this trial, "powerful industrialists were charged with preparing and waging aggressive wars . . . with helping enslave, torture and murder millions of persons."

Stowe pointed out the lesson America should learn from what grew out of the IG Farben trust in Germany. "In our own country the tendency toward bigger and bigger corporations persists," he said. ". . . the colossal power and ramifications of the Farben monopoly should be a warning to all who believe in the American way, and especially to those of us who champion free enterprise."

THESE excerpts from Stowe's comments may give some indication of the general quality and tone of the program sponsored by the UE. All CIO members, as well as the public in general, should find them well worth listening to each week.

The program is now broadcast over some 55 or more Mutual stations, at 7:30 P. M. Eastern Daylight Time in most cases, and later during the evening in others. Consult your newspaper's radio schedule.

Methodist Conference Backs Labor's Fight

STRONG support for labor's fight against the "punitive and crippling labor legislation" passed by the Senate and the House was voiced at the New York East Annual Conference of the Methodist Church, held in Brooklyn, N. Y., May 15-19.

The Rev. Charles C. Webber, recently re-elected as president of the Virginia CIO Council, who attended the conference as a member, was instrumental in explaining labor's viewpoint.

CHARLES C. WEBBER

The conference, representing 600 ministers and laymen from parts of New York and half of Connecticut, called upon Pres. Truman to use his veto power against this legislation "which strikes a severe blow to a free labor movement."

Referring to the Social Creed of the Methodist Church, under which free collective bargaining has been repeatedly championed, the report of the Social Security Committee, approved by the conference, declared that Methodism "is now in duty-bound to cry out against punitive and crippling labor legislation."

Maintaining that "the welfare of persons is higher than the claim of profits," the report stated that "the greater labor organizations of America have given ample evidence of increasing maturity and responsibility. If not crippled and repressed by vengeful political adversaries, we feel that they will continue to advance the economic welfare of the nation's millions, thus preparing the soil for Christian advance."

The report reaffirmed endorsement of the cooperative movement "as more Christian in its ethics than capitalism," and urged the Conference "to carry its convictions into action by investing some of its funds in cooperative enterprises as well as capitalistic ones."

HOTEL SUED BY CIO MEN

Latest development in the discrimination case which had its origin at the National CIO education conference, held last March in Columbus, Ohio, is a report by CIO legal counsel that petitions have been filed on behalf of the four plaintiffs in the Court of Common pleas, Franklin County, Ohio.

The four Negro CIO members concerned are asking $1,000 each because they were refused service in the Neal House coffee shop. They were Boyd Wilson, Phil Weightman, Mary Davis and Dollie Lowther.

CIO Girl Leads Chorus

Miss Cleomine B. Lewis, a secretary in the National CIO office in Washington, is director and organizer of the Booker T. Washington Memorial Chorus of 15 voices broadcast over the local Mutual station WOL every Saturday at 5:30 p. m. Eastern Daylight Time. The program will go on the network in the very near future.

Sponsor of the weekly broadcast is the Booker T. Washington Memorial Institute, now under construction in Franklin County, Va., birthplace of the famous Negro educator who rose from slavery to the Hall of Fame. A national program of trade and industrial training for Negroes below high school level will be conducted at the institute.

To finance the program, the 79th Congress authorized coinage of five million Booker T. Washington Memorial half dollars which sell for $1 each, half the money being returned to the U. S. Treasury, and half going to the Institute.

IMPROVING YOUR FIGURE

By HANNA SHERMAN

IS figure improvement one of your pre-vacation plans? You still have time, you know, before the vacation season is seriously under way to achieve a figure you'll be proud of.

Bathing suits are briefer than ever this year, some of the new play and date dresses have bare shoulders. So you need to be as well proportioned as possible.

That goes, of course, even for the girl who does not wear extreme styles. Summer time calls for casual clothes and casual clothes have a way of revealing our figures whether we like it or not.

You can start a program of exercising today and work magic changes in your figure—provided you keep at it and pass up those chocolate nut sundaes, soft drinks and other fattening foods. Take your measurements today and then every week for the next four weeks.

You'll end up with that svelte look—usually the result only of high priced massages and an expensive course of exercise in a beauty salon. All this will cost you is a little will power and fifteen minutes of actual work every day.

HERE'S a fine exercise for trimming the hips. This is done lying down and is one of the best you can do. Lie on one side on the floor, legs straight down, one on top of the other. Raise the upper leg 12 or so inches from the floor, and swing it away out in front, then back and up. Hold for a second and swing forward again. Ten counts will be enough for a starter but later on you can do 20. Rest, then roll over on the other side and repeat.

Want to put your girdle in moth balls for the summer, trim your waist? Just do this. Stand with the feet wide apart, toes pointing straight ahead, arms hanging at the sides.

Twist to the left, so that the shoulders are facing left, and stretch both arms over the head. Stretch through the waist too. Bend and touch the floor on the outside of the left foot with both hands. You may bend the left knee.

LIFT both arms over the head again with the shoulders still facing left. Stretch again through the waist. Come back to position and relax. Repeat in four counts to the right in the same manner. Do this ten to 20 times, alternating first to the left then to the right.

Just one more, a good slimmer for the thighs. Lie flat on the floor. Flex your knees to the chest. Extend the legs vertically and lower them slowly to the floor, ten times.

GRANDPARENTS—ASSESTS OR LIABILITIES?

Whether grandparents add to family happiness or cause difficulties will depend on parents as well as grandparents. Grandparents can be more indulgent and less strict than parents because as a rule they can keep out of the day to day situations which demand discipline. Wise are those parents who encourage happy relationships and give their parents the fun of indulging their children. To the elders, with so much of life spun out, grandchildren offer needed emotional outlet. To the children it is enriching to know they can turn to their grandparents for devotion, understanding companionship and occasional indulgence.

WOMEN AT WORK

HOUSEHOLD WORKERS will no longer count Thanksgiving or Christmas as just another work day, if planned household employment projects surveyed by the U. S. Women's Bureau come to pass.

Such occasions will mean holidays, provided programs initiated in Cincinnati, Syracuse, Chicago, St. Louis, St. Paul and Minneapolis are accepted by the local citizens, particularly housewives.

Already many housewives are serving on the household employment committees, and in some cases, were active in the formation of the committees in their own towns.

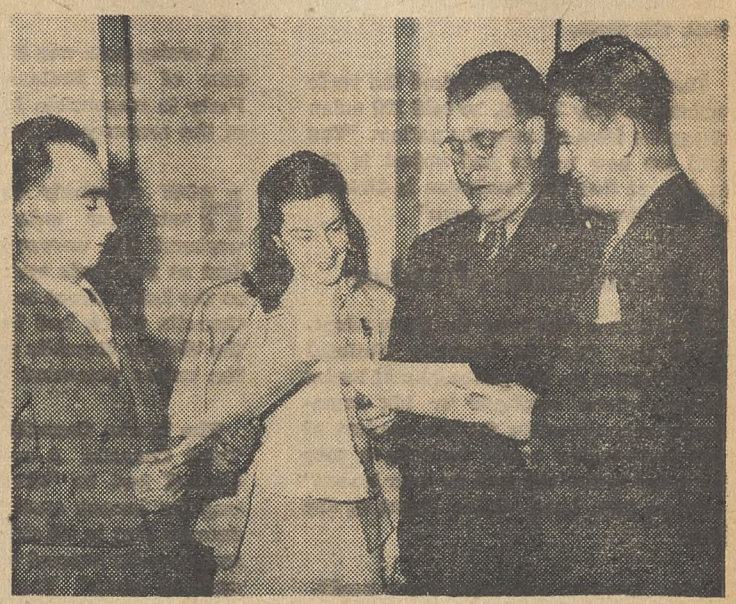
Paid vacations and sick leaves are also being taken up by some of the committees.

The Bureau's full report on the survey, to be published soon, will discuss the household employment standards proposed by agencies in 19 cities.

DAR Keeps Racial Ban

The policy of the Daughters of the American Revolution of permitting "white artists only" to perform on the stage of the DAR's Constitution Hall, principal auditorium in Washington, was reaffirmed at the DAR convention meeting this week in the Nation's capital. Negro patrons, however, will be permitted to buy tickets to performances without segregation.

Reason given for the policy was local custom. This is the same reason the National, Washington's only theater for stage productions, gave for an exactly reverse policy under which Negro performers may appear, but Negroes attending are segregated.



"My heroes," says Bertha Pataky, pretty college senior, as she inspects the TWU Public Service Honor Awards of Joseph Evangelista (left) trackwalker, and Patrick Connolly, motorman, who saved her life. Miss Pataky was pushed in front of an incoming train at New York City's Canal Street station, and was saved by the quick-thinking subway workers. Austin Hogan (right) president of Local 100, CIO Transport Workers Union, gave the awards.

WHICH WAY AMERICA?

The order called for "special favor" to be shown "to unattached civil servants who are qualified for service and animated by a national spirit."

What this order meant to the legitimate government unions is told in a "brief account of the new system":

"The Executive Committee of the German General Federation of Civil Servants decided that the organization should be dissolved, on account of political events. Several affiliated bodies had already left the Federation. The Chancellor of the Republic then instructed Mr. Sprenger, member of the Reichstag and chief of the Public Servants' Section of the Natl. Socialist Party, to reorganize the public servants' unions."

Denial of Liberties

(Today, in America, President Truman has issued Executive Order 9835, which, according to the CIO Public Workers Union, "throws open the door to the most widespread and flagrant denial of civil liberties . . ." The Union points out that the order is supposed to provide for the elimination of "disloyal" persons from government. "Under this order," the union declares, "one individual, the Attorney General, is given the power to designate any organization or person as 'subversive.' The accused employe is not guaranteed a statement of specific charges, is not permitted to confront his anonymous accusers, is refused the right to cross-examine witnesses. He is presumed to be guilty until proven innocent, which is the exact reverse of the American way.")

IN THE light of these patterns—with their startling similarities—it is well to examine further the pretensions of the Nazi system and to compare them with the facts.

One day before Hitler seized the trade unions on May 2, 1933, he told 100 union delegates from all over the nation: "You will see how untrue and unjust is the statement that the revolution is directed against the German workers."

Regulation of Labor

Less than a year later the Nazis adopted a new "Act to Regulate National Labor" based on the philosophy of leader loyalty. "The employer or his representative responsible for the conduct of the undertaking would henceforth take his place before the staff as their leader," said an Intl. Labor Office digest of the law.

The program proceeded (very profitably for employers) under direction of the Labor Front, the "substitute" for the broken unions. Hitler himself was quoted as saying that "the Labor Front should not be the place where the material questions of the daily life of labor are decided." Wages, hours and working conditions are what Hitler meant by "material questions."

A clarification of the situation by Labor Front leader Robert Ley said that new orders concerning the organization "must not be taken to mean that organizations affiliated to the Labor Front, such as the former trade unions, etc., are now to be dissolved. They will continue to administer their funds and the institutions dependent on them, but will no longer be required to concern themselves with the representation of the economic interests of their members in such matters as the conclusion of collective agreements, etc., but solely with education and the organizations of the workers' spare time."

UNDER this "education and spare time" program, the position of German employers was clear. A Mr. Stiehler, labor trustee for Saxony, in April of 1934 declared that as a result of the new labor act, Saxony, "which formerly suffered from numerous industrial disputes, at present enjoys social peace." The ILO report of Stiehler's remarks said that "he emphasizes, however, that employers have not been asked to make impossible sacrifices."

How any employer had to make "sacrifices" (pay higher wages) under the Labor Front setup is difficult for a trade unionist to understand. The Labor Front took in everyone—wage and salary workers and employers "on a footing of complete equality."

Nazi Supervision

An ILO digest of the law establishing the Labor Front said that it "must ensure industrial peace by seeing that heads of undertakings understand the just claims of their staff, and that the staff understand the situation and possibilities of the undertakings in which they are employed."

A crafty note was added: "The Treasurer of the National-Socialist (Nazi) Party is responsible for the supervision of the treasury of the Labor Front."

HOW effectively could this "substitute" for unions represent the workers? The answer lies in the record. Just as the Nazis took over the unions, so the Labor Front took over the Works Councils which had been set up under the Weimar Republic and through which the unions presented their demands.

The Works Councils became the Nazi Trust Councils. A member of a Trust Council had to "offer evidence of exemplary human qualities and every assurance that in all circumstances he will unreservedly support the interests of the national state." The employer worked with a Nazi official in choosing the Council members. And, according to the ILO digest of the law, the Nazi-appointed Labor Trustees might "cancel the appointment of any member of the Council on account of his practical or personal unsuitability." The Labor Trustee, as might be expected, was appointed "to promote the maintenance of industrial peace."

This, of course, was a valid objective, leading to higher production, regular wages and fatter profits. That it led also to industrial slavery was, to the Nazis, an unimportant by-product.

Ruthless Treatment

Workers who had the courage to object to some of the Nazi speedup methods got ruthless treatment. "Any person who deliberately and persistently disregards general regulations issued in writing by the Labor Trustee in the execution of his duties is liable to a fine, which in especially serious cases may be replaced or supplemented by imprisonment."

The Labor Trustees were empowered to set minimum working standards. These standards demanded that a worker "must be constantly mindful of his duty to devote his energies wholeheartedly to the services of the undertaking and to subordinate himself to the general good."

Among persons who were regarded as violating this regulation were those who were "maliciously fostering discontent among their fellow employes" and those who "repeatedly address frivolous and baseless complaints and appeals to the Labor Trustee . . ." Penalties for these acts ranged up to 10,000 marks fine and removal to a different place of employment.

THE LABOR FRONT thoughtfully continued the Labor Courts established under the Republic, but the ILO reported that under Hitler's regime "there was marked decline in the number of disputes brought before all classes of these courts." Most of the cases concerned employer-employe relations. In 1932 (before Hitler seized power) there were 371,592 cases brought before local Labor Courts. In 1933 there were only 261,530 cases. In 1932 there were 17,220 cases brought before district Labor Courts. In 1933 there were only 10,774 cases.

No Pay Increases

One might conclude either that employers had recognized their "duty" to the workers or that workers had found it inadvisable under the Nazi system to militantly press their claims.

However, Mr. Stiehler, the Labor Trustee for Saxony, serves as a significant witness for both propositions. As reported by the ILO, "Mr. Stiehler concludes that the masses feel that they are being treated with justice, even though under the new system wages have not been increased, and consumption has been restricted by sacrifices which are acknowledged to be necessary."

But Mr. Stiehler gave the show away completely by adding: "Thanks to this conviction, no request has been made for increase of wages, and this is evidence of the genuineness of the state of social peace."

There, as naked as it probably has been stated, is the true purpose behind the Nazi employer dictatorship: NO REQUEST HAS BEEN MADE FOR INCREASES IN WAGES. That was the "spirit of the National-Socialist (Nazi) State." And Hitler destroyed the unions and set up his Labor Front with this main object: "The education of all laboring Germans" in that spirit.

Secret Promises

HITLER came into power on March 5, 1933. He was a product of employer support for the ruthless dictatorship which he had secretly promised the monopolists, as well as a product of working class dissension. His new regime was greeted by a statement from the German Federation of Trade Unions, which maintained its independence "of the employers and also of political parties." In the light of history, the statement was a heart-breaking admission of isolation. It said:

"Enjoying the confidence of workers—both men and women—the trade unions will, as in the past, stand in future for the improvement of working conditions, for social justice and for rational economics. They are, however, as a result of the fateful decision of March 5, more than ever thrown back on their own resources.

Political Losses

"What the German workers have lost in the sphere of politics, so far as influence in the shaping of social life is concerned, must now be made good by the strengthening of the trade unions."

A few weeks later Hitler took over.

TODAY, in America, there is division within the labor movement. Political action by labor is in its infancy. A Republican-polltax Democrat gang in Congress is passing laws that in their subtle way write an eventual death sentence for the labor movement.

This legislation, in Philip Murray's words, "is the first real step toward the development of fascism in the United States of America."

It is with this warning, and with the destruciton of the German labor movement staring us in the face, that CIO, AFL and Railroad Brotherhoods face the sternest years of their existence. Whether they prosper and grow depends on the fateful battle over the Taft Bill, on their organizing gains, and on their political action in the next 17 months. '48 is coming—and it may well decide the future of democracy in these United States.

NEW HEALTH BILL URGED

A NEW effort to improve the country's welfare through adoption of a nation-wide health insurance program was launched in Congress last week. It was the fifth try in eight years to make the program law.

Introduced by six liberal Senators and one Representative, the health insurance bill (S. 1320) would set up a national program of payroll contributions to protect the population against sudden, whopping medical expenses that upset the best-laid budgets of many families.

A message from Pres. Truman, made public just before the bills were introduced in Senate and House, called for speedy action on the program. It has wide support from liberal, labor and civic organizations, as well as from large numbers of physicians' groups.

Hearings on health legislation—both the insurance bill and a much more limited charity measure (S. 545) introduced by Senators Taft, Ball, Smith and Donnelly—are already in progress. A CIO witness will testify in support of the health insurance program, probably in mid-June.

Supporters of the bill complain that the committee has allotted some 10 days of the hearing to foes of the Wagner-Murray-Dingell proposals, while allowing labor and other groups favoring the measure a mere two days to present their views

THE liberal bill was introduced by six Democratic Senators: Murray (Mont.), Wagner (N. Y.), Pepper (Fla.), Chavez (N. M.), Taylor (D. Ida.) and McGrath (R. I.). Sponsor of the companion bill in the House (HR 3588) is Rep. Dingell (D. Mich.), who took similar action during the 79th Congress last year.

All usual medical services would be performed by a physician chosen individually by persons insured under the government health plan. The payments would also cover payments for specialists' services, hospital care, unusually expensive medicines, special appliances and eyeglasses.

DESCRIBING the bill, the Committee for the Nation's Health—a strong supporter of the measure—said that under its provisions "everyone has free choice of his doctor, hospital, group clinic, dentist or nurse" from among all doctors and organizations in the community that wish to participate in the insurance program.

All doctors, nurses, dentists, hospitals and clinics meeting minimum standards would be guaranteed the right to participate if they choose, although none is required to do so.

Financing of the program would be done through a 3% tax on incomes up to $3,600, with employer and employe each bearing one-half the cost.

Also included in the program are provisions for giving federal aid to the states to pay for health services of needy persons; for improving federal grants for public health services; for helping finance hospitals and health facilities, and funds to aid non-profit professional and research groups.

Hike Minimum Pay, CIO Asks Congress

CIO Pres. Philip Murray this week made public a letter sent to six Congressional leaders—Senators Taft, Vandenberg and Barkley; and Representatives Martin, Hartley and Rayburn—calling for an increase in minimum wage standards to 65c and 75c an hour.

Noting that provisions of the new portal-to-portal law (HR 2157) contain serious dangers for the general enforcement of all of the provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act, Murray wrote:

"This is particularly unfortunate at the present time. The present minimum wage of 40 cents an hour is clearly obsolete and grossly inadequate under economic conditions. Even the inadequate protection of the present law is denied to many millions of workers in excluded occupations in which they labor for long hours at indefensibly low wage rates.

"I have been and am extremely fearful that under these circumstances the weakening of the enforcement of the law resulting from enactment of HR 2157 will undermine the minimum protections now provided.

"THIS situation puts upon Congress a special responsibility to the nation. Congress can prove to the people its support for sound and meaningful minimum wage and maximum hour legislation if it will act to raise the minimum wage to an immediate level of at least 65c, with full provision for expeditious adjustment to the entirely justified level of 75c an hour.

"Congress can prove its support of a sound Fair Labor Standards Act by extending the coverage of the Act to the many under-privileged groups now denied its protection.

"Congress can minimize the dangers of the inadequate two-year statute of limitations contained in HR 2157 by providing for the enforcement of the Act sufficient funds to assure more frequent inspection and permit earlier discovery of violation of the law."

WASHINGTON ROUNDUP

RENT CONTROL: Fears are growing that friends of the powerful real estate lobby are moving for a squeeze play on extension of rent control that will leave the country armed with little protection against living costs.

Belief is being expressed that Republican strategy on the bills (S. 1017 and HR 3203) will be to wait until the latter part of June, then to rush through the swiss-cheese proposals endorsed by the realtors' lobby. Republican leaders would claim they were forced to act the last moment in order to save any vestige of controls before the present June 30 expiration date.

Democratic leaders predict the GOP will send the weasle bill to Pres. Truman on June 30, the day controls expire, so that he must either sign it or leave the country without controls of any sort.

The Wolcott bill, passed by the House, not only knocks the props out from under rent control enforcement, but also kills remaining sections of the old Wyatt homes-for-vets program. The Buck bill, approved in Senate committee, is less vicious, but it leaves the door open for widescale lifting of ceilings and removal of controls on an area basis.

Supporters of rent control will try to substitute the Wagner-Murray bill in the Senate, and the Douglas bill in the House, which extend the government lid on rents on an "as is" basis. Failing that, they will try to tack strengthening amendments on the bills now under consideration.

ANTI-BIAS BILL: Hearings on the anti-discrimination bill, introduced by a group of liberal Senators a couple of month ago, will open before a Senate Labor subcommittee starting June 11. The hearing group includes three Republicans—Donnell (Mo.), Smith (N. J.), Ives (N. Y.)—and two Democrats, Pepper (Fla.), and Ellender (La.).

ANTI-LYNCHING BILL: HR 3488, to make lynching a federal crime, has been introduced in the House, and a companion bill will shortly be thrown into the Senate hopper.

No hearings have yet been ordered. Letters to Rep. Michener (R. Mich.), chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, and to your own Congressmen should help speed action on this long-overdue measure.

SEAMEN'S RIGHTS: A better break for the men who manned our wartime merchant marine despite great personal danger, was asked by the CIO Maritime Committee at House Merchant Marine Committee hearings on HR 476.

The bill extends U. S. Employes Compensation benefits to protect disabled war service seamen and dependents of war dead; gives U. S. Marine Hospital medical care to cover seamen disabled by accidents suffered in the course of wartime work; and extends education benefits to veterans of the wartime shipping service.

CIO's brief showed that, contrary to widespread propaganda, members of merchant crews received little more than navy men, considering benefits, tax exemptions, mustering out pay, etc., given to members of the armed forces.

EDUCATION: CIO's belief that the federal government must act quickly and forthrightly to assist the nation's school system was emphasized last week to the House Labor Committee by Kermit Eby, CIO Research and Education director.

"Equalization of educational standards, at as high a level as possible, would benefit the whole country," Eby testified. "It seems absolutely imperative that a program be legislated which will eliminate educational inequalities and insufficiencies."

Eby noted that the federal government has a military budget of 10 billion dollars, but less than 85 million for education.

TO ALL CIO MEMBERS:

CONGRESS THIS WEEK WILL SEND TO PRESIDENT TRUMAN AN ANTI-LABOR BILL DESIGNED TO CRIPPLE AND EVENTUALLY DESTROY THE ORGANIZED LABOR MOVEMENT IN THE UNITED STATES.

ALL OUR EFFORTS MUST NOW BE DIRECTED TOWARD SECURING A VETO BY THE PRESIDENT AND SUSTAINING THAT VETO IN THE HOUSE OR SENATE. PRESIDENT TRUMAN MUST REALIZE FROM THE FLOOD OF LETTERS, WIRES AND PETITIONS POURING INTO THE WHITE HOUSE THAT THE WORKERS OF THE COUNTRY ARE RALLYING TO DEFEND THEIR UNIONS AND THAT THE PEOPLE OF THE COUNTRY ARE WITH LABOR IN THIS FIGHT.

THE JOB OF ALL CIO MEMBERS IN THE NEXT TEN DAYS IS TO MAKE SURE THAT THEY HAVE DONE EVERYTHING THEY CAN, FIRST AS INDIVIDUALS TO WRITE OR WIRE THE PRESIDENT AND THEIR CONGRESSMEN AND SENATORS ON BEHALF OF A VETO; SECOND AS UNION MEMBERS, TO MOBILIZE THE ENTIRE LOCAL MEMBERSHIP; AND FINALLY AS AMERICAN CITIZENS TO GET THEIR NEIGHBORS AND FRIENDS INTO THE FIGHT FOR OUR DEMOCRATIC LIBERTIES. VICTORY NOW WILL SAVE THE COUNTRY GREAT SUFFERING AND HARDSHIP IN FIGHTING ITS WAY BACK FROM THE CHAOS WHICH WOULD BE DELIBERATELY CREATED BY THIS LEGISLATION.

Ask Court Review

"A MAN'S HOME is his castle." That principle should continue as a basic factor in American civil rights, the CIO suggested last week to the U. S. Supreme Court.

A brief prepared by General Counsel Lee Pressman and signed by counsel for 19 other unions, urged the Court to rehear a case involving the right of police officers to search private dwellings without a search warrant.

The Court gave its okay to such a procedure in a 5-4 decision handed down May 5 in a case involving one George Harris. Police, in entering Harris's home in connection with one alleged law violation, searched his home and discovered a batch of blank draft board registration cards.

These cards, which were seized by the police, served as state's evidence in a new case against the man. The Court upheld the police search and seizure.

CIO's brief charged that results of this decision are "far-reaching." It said the decision gives police officers "an almost unlimited means of search and seizure unhampered by the cherished safeguards of the Fourth Amendment to the Constitution.

"Aware that the destruction of any of the guarantees of the Bill of Rights constitutes a threat to the existence of that climate of democratic liberty which is essential to the functioning of free trade unions, the CIO believes that the decision in this case is of vital importance to it," the brief stated.

GRASS ROOTS UNITY FIGHTS TAFT BILL

IT'S grass roots unity that will defeat the Taft anti-labor bill—and in three big industrial areas this week CIO, AFL and independent unions achieved that unity.

In central Pennsylvania, delegates from CIO, AFL and independent unions held a mass protest meeting against anti-labor bills at Harrisburg, under the auspices of the United Labor Committee, headed by George Medrick of CIO and John Schelhas of AFL.

Wires from both Presidents Murray of CIO and Green of AFL congratulated the delegates for the service to their unions and their country.

The meeting wired President Truman to veto the Taft Bill to preserve a "free, strong and healthy" America. It was signed by every person attending what was said to be the largest united labor rally ever held in central Pennsylvania.

From St. Paul, Federated Press reported that the local AFL Trades and Labor Assembly was so impressed with the Taft bill's danger to all unions that it agreed to depart from policy and cooperate with the St. Paul CIO Council in fighting anti-labor legislation.

The AFL action was in response to a request by the CIO that committees of the two groups meet and plan joint action.

"Witherspoon, you've been with the firm 42 years. That's long enough—you're fired!"

IN LOS ANGELES, CIO this week opened up a gigantic community campaign as the second phase of "Operations Veto" in a battle to stop the Taft bill.

Thousands of CIO members, organized and assigned to their tasks by their local unions, mobilized this weekend to ring 400,000 doorbells in Los Angeles and adjacent communities, to distribute literature and to ask for signatures addressed to President Truman urging him to veto the Taft bill.

Marching orders issued by the PAC office outlined the quickest, most persuasive methods in getting signatures.

Canvassers carried copies of a 400,000-run special CIO tabloid explaining the nature of the Taft bill, identifying those who are for it and those against it and telling what it will do to labor and the entire American public. They were also equipped with petitions, pencils, call-back sheets—and a solid determination to get the job done.

BEFORE the community blitz was launched, the first step in "Operations Veto" was completed with the signing of 1,500 petitions by thousands of CIO members and their fellow workers. These petitions then were loaded aboard a Constellation airliner in the care of Southern California Regional Director Irwin DeShetler who carried them to Washington. (See picture, page 3).

In Kentucky

CIO, AFL PUSHING POLITICAL ACTION

OUT to prove to the Republicans that there is no public mandate to destroy unions, both the CIO and AFL at Louisville, Ky., have opened a full-scale political drive to put the state back on the map of progress.

A conference in Louisville between CIO leaders and Chairman Jack Kroll of the CIO Political Action Committee launched a grass-roots movement to "swing the key state of Kentucky into the right corner in 1947 and 1948."

Normally a Democratic state, Kentucky increased its Republican congressmen from one to three and elected a Republican senator last November. The state administration is also Republican.

Elated over recent election victories in Oakland, Hoboken, Minneapolis and the state of Washington, Kroll said: "There is a terrific undercurrent, a sentiment among the people generally that the action of this Congress is going contrary to the best interests of the country."

IN A LETTER to all AFL unions in the state, Sec.-Treas. Edward H. Weyler of the Kentucky Federation of Labor asked them to check which members had not registered, and to get them and members of their families "to register immediately and to register Democrat."

"This may be hard," Weyler added, "but it is certainly justified—try to get every member who is now registered Republican to change his registration to Democrat. THIS MUST BE DONE QUICKLY, as the last day of registration is June 2. We are dealing with politicians. They understand only one thing—that is, the loss of votes."

Guildsman To Run For Congress

A member of the CIO Newspaper Guild will run on the Democratic ticket in a special election Sept. 9 to choose a Congressman for Pennsylvania's eighth district. He is Phil H. Storch, president of the Allentown local of the Guild.

Storch, a Marine Corps combat correspondent in World War II, will seek the vacancy caused by the death of Rep. Charles L. Gerlach, a Republican.

'Give Us More, Give Us More, Give Us More'

A COOL third of a million dollars dropped into the NAM's publicity kitty during the first half of May—but it's not nearly enough for the manufacturers' needs!

Goal of the NAM's publicity arm—the Natl. Industrial Information Committee—is a $3 million dollar war chest to finance advertisements, radio programs, pamphlets and other propaganda weapons during the coming year.

Out of the kitty has come the money to pay for a whole series of newspaper ads designed to whip up public support for the Taft-Hartley anti-labor bills. Manufacturers who complain about taxes, labor costs, social welfare programs, etc., have found the wherewithal to contribute liberally.

THE NIIC campaign was opened formally by Lammot duPont, board chairman of the big chemical company and an NAM director. Chief of the fund-raising committee is Frederick C. Crawford, an acid-tongued open-shopper from Cleveland who wants to give business the "freedom to live dangerously again . . . and freedom from labor leaders."

Walter Geist of Allis-Chalmers, who fought the Auto Workers for months, has directed fund-raising meetings in Minneapolis and Milwaukee. Other regional conferences throughout the nation are being used to put the bee on the big business moguls to push the campaign.

The NAM's anti-labor ads appeared in hundreds of daily and weekly papers across the country, and their cost is estimated to have run into hundreds of thousands, if not millions, of dollars.

WRECK-LABOR BILL GOES TO TRUMAN

THE WHITE HOUSE will receive this week the sharpest piece of anti-labor legislation passed by Congress in the country's history.

A bill whose provisions to curb free union activity were far more severe than the earlier Senate version of the Taft bill, was reported out by a joint Senate-House conference committee just before Memorial Day.

On the basis of earlier votes in House and Senate, passage of the bill is assured. President Truman has yet to indicate whether he will veto the bill or sign it. Nor was there any sign whether a veto message would be strong and militant—in which case it would probably be upheld in the Senate; or whether the President would veto it in language so mild that many Democratic Senators would have no fear of voting to over-ride the President.

A FLOOD of letters, postcards and wires has been pouring into Washington during recent weeks, government leaders acknowledged, and the overwhelming majority have called for a vigorous veto. Huge stacks of petitions, bearing thousands upon thousands of signatures of citizens, are due to be presented at the White House during the week.

Some 60,000 postcards and letters urging a veto have been delivered at the White House during May, according to Federated Press, labor news service. The agency quoted a White House official as reporting that the mail on the Taft-Hartley proposal is arriving at the rate of about 3,000 a day at the present time.

ONE effect of the stiff bill brought out by the House-Senate conference committee was to kill for all time the notion that the finished product would be a "moderate" bill aimed only at correcting a few "abuses."

Rep. Fred Hartley (R., N. J.), who pushed the House bill through Congress, admitted last week that "entirely too much emphasis has been laid on the differences between the two bills, and on what the House is conceding . . .

"We got more into the House bill than anybody expected. This forced the Senate's hand and they passed a stronger bill than expected," Hartley announced with some pleasure.

HERE is the way the bill shapes up:

INJUNCTIONS: Can be obtained by the Attorney-General, through recommendation of employers, in case of any threatened strike which he considers would "imperil the national health or safety." This would apply presumably to almost any major walkout in the country's big mass production industries.

Strikes to enforce demands for pay for "call-in" time or other periods when no actual work is done become an unfair labor practice and can be prosecuted. Similar prohibitions govern strikes to enforce demands for extra workers, who may not actually work but are present as a safety factor.

SUITS AGAINST UNIONS: Unions can be sued for contract violations committed by any of their members, in any federal district court. Suits can also be filed against unions for damages if members refuse to handle unfair or scab-made goods. In both cases the union may become liable for the acts of any of its members—even if they are company agents or paid spies.

UNION SECURITY: Closed shop contracts, providing that the employer must hire union members only, are outlawed. Union shop contracts, providing that employes must join the union, are permitted only if approved by a majority of all employes covered by the agreement. A separate, special election is required for this purpose.

Any state law restricting union security is given protection and priority by the bill.

POLITICAL CONTRIBUTIONS: No union may spend any of its funds for political activity in primaries or elections. This applies both to contributions to candidates, contributions to labor political groups such as PAC, or even for the union's own leaflets, advertising or meetings on political matters.

Individual contributions to such organizations as PAC are of course still permitted.

RESTRICTION ON BARGAINING: No union can file a petition for certification, for a union security election or for unfair employer practices unless it has filed a record of its finances, etc., with the Labor Board. It must show that these records have been furnished to all members of the international union. In addition, a company need not bargain if the union fails to file affidavits from all its officers swearing that they are neither Communists nor supporters of communist principles.

No employer may be charged with unfair labor practices solely on the words or actions of supervisory personnel, unless in the unlikely situation that he has specifically authorized them to speak for him on such policy matters. Thus, while broadening the legal liability of unions, the act narrows the liability of corporations.

The historic NLRB practice of setting up a bargaining unit in one section or department of a company—in cases where the union has not yet succeeded in organizing the whole plant—is over-ruled by the law. At the same time, the bill gives the NLRB a clear mandate to disrupt industrial unions by forcing the establishment of craft splinter bargaining units.

Welfare funds are outlawed unless they are jointly controlled by union and management. Earlier versions of the bill were softened a mite to permit continuance of union-controlled funds established before Jan. 1, 1946.

LABOR BOARD CHANGED: The NLRB will be enlarged from three to five men—at a time when the reactionary-controlled Congress will be unlikely to approve appointment of anybody suspected of the least liberalism. The General Counsel of the Board becomes a Presidential, rather than an NLRB appointment, and must be confirmed by the Senate. Formal rules of court evidence become mandatory for all NLRB hearings.

CONCILIATION SERVICE: The functions and personnel of the Conciliation Service, now lodged in the Dept. of Labor, are pulled into a new, independent organization.

UNFAIR LABOR CHARGES: For the first time, unions become liable to charges for failure to bargain; for coercing or restraining workers during the course of organizing campaigns; or for seeking to force an employer to bargain through a regional or national employers association.

In any situation where a union security clause is in effect, the NLRB can determine that "excessive" union initiation fees are an unfair labor practice, and the union can be prosecuted. This gives the government virtual power in many types of cases to regulate the finances of labor organization.

Bad Legislation Made Worse

The joint House-Senate conference committee which handled the Taft-Hartley bill, "made a bad piece of legislation worse," two committee members charged.

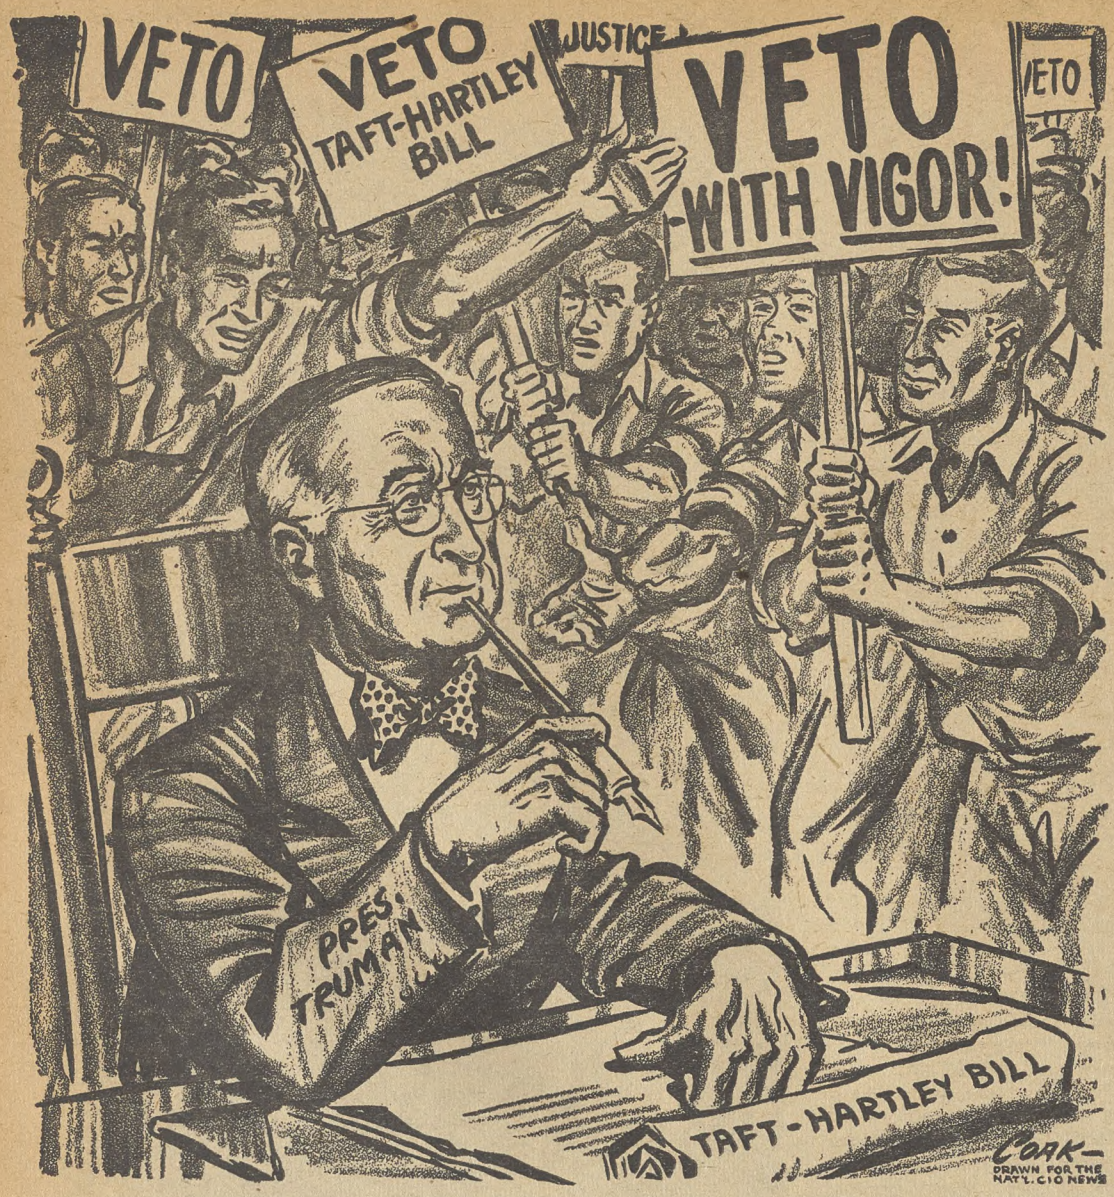
Sen. Murray (D. Mont.) and Rep. John Lesinski (D. Mich.), who voted against the conference bill, declared:

"The conference report, because it is self-defeating, unfair and undemocratic, is bad legislation. Because it strengthens every tendency in American life toward industrial concentration and profiteering, while it weakens the chief agency that protects the purchasing power of American consumers, it is bad economics.

"We fervently hope that the President will exercise his constitutional power to veto this legislation and that an informed and aroused public will make its power felt to defeat finally this reactionary measure."

Handcuffed veterans protest the Taft anti-labor bill on N. Y. City streets, to demonstrate the fate of the labor movement if the bill becomes a law. The vets are members of the CIO Office & Professional Workers employed by motion picture firms.

Sen. Knowland (R., Calif.) listened to a two-hour demonstration of CIO-AFL unity against the Taft bill this week. And he got 40,000 signatures against the legislation on petitions circulated by the Los Angeles CIO Council and Regional Office. The Senator (second from right) spent most of the time listening to Charles Smith (left), district director, CIO Steelworkers; Irwin De Shetler, Southern California Regional CIO director (with petitions), and Robert Gilbert, AFL attorney. The three came to Washington with instructions to tell the Senator what his labor constituents think. While he voted for the Taft bill, he says he now has "an open mind," according to his visitors.



FOR A VETO THAT WILL STICK

AS WAS anticipated, the Senate and House conferees have agreed on an anti-union measure which includes all the worst features of the Taft bill, adding some additional wrinkles to make it even more poisonous, though some of the more obvious crudities of the Hartley bill have been eliminated.

The bill is designed to do the maximum of damage to labor unions and the workers' rights without alienating too many of the Senate votes needed to over-ride a veto.

So far from being "moderate," it is the most vicious possible union-crippling legislation believed to have any hope of passage.

★ ★ ★

THIS BILL would so restrict collective bargaining as to make it practically unworkable.

It strips workers' efforts to organize of the protection from employer coercion granted by the Wagner Act, and subjects them to crippling government restraint and coercion.

It subjects effective exercise of the right to strike to the will of management and of government acting on behalf of the employers.

It revives the federal strikebreaking injunction, making this weapon even sharper than ever before, by constituting the government itself as the employers' agent to procure such injunctions.

It virtually outlaws union security, promotes company unionism, breaks up industrial unions, and weakens the workers' bargaining power in a hundred other ways.

★ ★ ★

ONCE THIS bill is finally approved by Congress, the American people will have no recourse, no protection from its tyrannies, except through a Presidential veto.

President Truman must veto this shameful measure.

But a simple veto may not be enough to prevent its enactment into law. The anti-labor forces are confident of a two-thirds majority in the House to override a veto and are putting on tremendous pressure to get similar action in the Senate.

The President can be sure of having a veto upheld only if he makes his veto message so sharp and vigorous, and his demand for support so clear to every member of the party he heads, that enough Congressional support will be forthcoming.

ACCORDING to Asst. Press Secretary Eben Ayres, the White House received some 40,000 postcards and 20,000 letters on anti-labor legislation in the first three weeks of May, and the volume is steadily increasing.

While he would not say what proportion called for a veto, Ayres admitted such requests were in a majority.

As the deadline draws nearer, the people's demand for a vigorous veto of the Taft-Hartley bill must increase still more in volume and insistence.

BUT TO get a veto that will stick, more is needed than a flood of letters, petitions, etc., to President Truman.

The same Federated Press item that reports the increasing flow of veto requests to the White House, notes that "at the same time, the heat on the Senate and House is slowing down."

Herein lies a great danger. A Presidential veto is without effect unless it is upheld by Congress.

Besides asking the President for a vigorous veto, do not fail also to write your members of Congress, urging them to vote against the Taft-Hartley bill and to uphold a veto.

It is especially urgent that you write your Senators, particularly the doubtful middle-of-the-roaders who may have voted for the Taft bill but may be persuaded to uphold a veto.

LOOKING AHEAD

BY LEN DE CAUX

LET'S NOT underestimate the demand for anti-labor legislation.

Take a suite in the Waldorf-Astoria and poll your fellow-suite-holders. You'll find they long for it.

Mingle with the flossy yacht-club crowd. Even their chance remarks will leave you in no doubt.

Go to the grass roots of any country club, and listen to the grass-uprooters. Unions get cussed more than even errant golf balls.

From Bar Harbor, Maine, to Palm Beach, Fla., and Palm Springs, Calif., and similar resort spots in between, a great cry goes up, "Hurrah for Taft and Hartley!"

★ ★ ★

OR VISIT the workaday haunts where the fortunes of the fortunate are made.

Look into the upper offices of Wall Street or LaSalle Street, where financiers finagle with our industrial future.

Call your stockholders together (the big ones, of course—the small fry won't show up) and ask them where they stand.

Go slumming among the suckers even, in brokers' offices where eyes are glued on an illuminated moving tape and ears are tuned to funny little buzzing sounds, as each rise and fall in stock prices is registered.

Put it to a vote in any such assembly: "All those in favor of the Taft bill say Aye." Then listen to the answering roar. All those opposed (if any) will be blackballed by the financial fraternity.

★ ★ ★

A GREAT loss was felt in all these circles when Franklin Roosevelt died. "That Man" was their greatest and most personal hate.

With all the fury of a drowning man who struggles against his rescuer, the financial overlords hated him for his salvage operations, after the stock-market had tumbled like a house of cards and banks were closing right and left.

Having fallen from their pedestal through their own folly, they blamed FDR for the damage to their self-esteem.

★ ★ ★

THEY HATED nearly everything FDR did—though his program led to better business and greater profit for themselves.

They resented his New Deal legislation and his alleged "coddling of labor."

They hated the growing labor movement, especially the CIO, which won the greatest gains for the workers in better wages and conditions.

So now that FDR is gone and his New Deal program is being abandoned, the financial fraternity is concentrating all its accumulated hatred on the unions.

★ ★ ★

FRONTING the drive against labor are the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers and the Chamber of Commerce.

But the ordinary run of manufacturers and businessmen are not directing the fight. Many of them (particularly those directly concerned with production and labor relations) have grave misgivings about the disruptive results of union-busting laws.

The NAM is run by a minority clique of Wall Street big businessmen. These financial monopolists also lord it over most of American industry, by the granting or withholding of credit.

They set the tone of thinking in the financial and business world. Their Little Sir Echoes are tory politicians, publishers, columnists and commentators, who aspire to their favors and their social set—but who also influence the opinions of much of the public.

Senator Aiken estimates as much as $100,000,000 has been spent on the recent propaganda campaign to put over anti-union legislation.

★ ★ ★

RIGHT NOW, there's a lot of emotion mixed with the Wall Streeters' calculations on expanding profits at the expense of wages, if unions are weakened, on the stock-market effects of passage of the Taft bill, etc.

They thirst for revenge on FDR and the New Deal. They passionately desire to "put labor in its place," regardless of consequences.

But most of the American people are not stock manipulators and don't give a hoot for their emotions or their social set. What they want is a prosperous economy, with a square deal for all who work for a living.

These are the folks, the great majority, who can be mobilized to fight anti-labor legislation, and to vote out the rascals who would sell our democratic birthright for a mess of Wall Street pottage.

450,000 JOBLESS IN N. Y. CITY

By Federated Press

UNEMPLOYMENT in the New York City area has hit 450,000, a 50% increase over two months ago, according to a survey released this week by the Greater New York CIO Council.

The council, which announced a special conference on layoffs and unemployment for June 12, said the main reason "for the increasing number of layoffs and halted production of consumer goods is the ridiculously inflated level of prices being asked for such goods . . . The profit margin still has a wartime bonanza tone which is driving the employment barometer down to prewar depression depth."

First survey taken by the council March 21 showed 300,000 out of work. Its second survey May 21 showed an "even more aggravating picture," with all signs pointing to "a serious economic crackup."

THE spreading joblessness is hitting CIO and AFL unions alike, the survey showed. Layoffs for the most part have occurred in consumer goods shops and plants, although a slight beginning of layoffs in industrial manufacture was evident in the May survey.

"Many small consumer goods manufacturers have closed down without any hopes of reopening," it found. "Many small manufacturing plants are being gobbled up by larger corporations . . . Hundreds of neighborhood retail shops are shutting their doors."

A dangerous feature of the rising unemployment is the rapid increase in the number of people "disqualified" for insurance benefits, the CIO said. Unions report that workers are being denied continued unemployment insurance for refusal to accept jobs at their own trades, in open shops, at salaries far below the established union scales.

50,000 Unemployed

UE ASKS GOVERNMENT TO GUARANTEE WORK

FIFTY thousand workers in the electrical manufacturing industry are out of work, it was reported this week by the CIO Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers Executive Board, meeting in N. Y. City.

The Board placed the major responsibility on American monopoly, "which hopes in this way to depress wages through the job-hungry men and women who will be standing outside factory gates when there are millions of unemployed."

UNDER "what to do about it," the Board proposed a three-point practical program for guidance of UE locals and called on the federal government to take steps to guarantee full employment.

The UE criticized Congress and the Administration for "failure to act effectively to establish the right to work" and called for government planning for full employment.

"Whenever private enterprise fails to provide jobs for all those able and willing to work, the government must take whatever steps necessary to provide full employment," the UE declared.

The UE also proposed that locals include the following provisions in their contracts to ease the strain of unemployment:

1. A ban on overtime when there is unemployment in a shop.

2. A ban on hiring of new employes so long as a recall list of laid-off employes exists.

3. A proposal that laid-off workers get severance pay.

U. S. ON 'BRINK OF DEPRESSION,' CIO LEGAL COUNSEL WARNS

A WARNING that the U. S. is "now on the brink of a depression" was sounded by CIO General Counsel Lee Pressman, speaking this week in N. Y. City before a meeting of the Natl. Assn. of Public Employment Services.

"While we pretend to be realistic we are actually as unprepared and as helpless in the face of the disaster which confronts us as we were in that other tragic depression which so badly scarred our economic system and the human resources of our country," Pressman declared.

He said that there is grave doubt about the accuracy of reports that only 2,500,000 people are unemployed (considered a minimum number due to job changes, etc.). Noting a reported increase in the number of people "voluntarily" unemployed, Pressman pointed out that a "spot check" by the Census Bureau recently showed that almost one fourth of them either had got jobs temporarily or were looking for work. Addition of this "voluntarily" unemployed group would raise the unemployment figure by 50%.

THE CIO Counsel said that uncontrolled free enterprise is a "tremendous threat to economic security."

"Every practical citizen is aware that unless the government develops a positive and far-sighted economic program, business operating as it has in the past can never maintain continuous employment opportunities for everyone in this country.

"Even before Roosevelt's death and the end of the war in Europe in 1945, we saw unfolding the steps leading to a recurrence of the disaster of 1929.

"The tremendous war profits of the corporations were protected by special tax legislation. The vast productive machinery built and used for war was rapidly taken over by giant corporations.

"Unbelievably generous financial arrangements for corporations were made for the reconversion period. However, nothing was done to meet the human problem of reconversion. On the contrary, every measure designed to forestall a depression and to cushion its shock was gutted by reactionaries in Congress.

"The Full Employment Bill was reduced to a virtually meaningless declaration of hope. No program was projected to transform our wartime economy to the peacetime job of providing economic security for our people and maintaining living standards.

"Wages were depressed while prices soared as a result of a reactionary coalition in Congress which destroyed price control. The resulting inflation has eaten away the wartime savings of the people, put millions in debt and already has pressed millions of families to below health and decency standards of living."

Profits Up 34%, Yet Prices Still Rising!

FAT from one of its greatest profit years in history, big business is soaking consumers with even higher prices. That was the picture drawn this week by a report in the N. Y. Times and by comment from the CIO Auto Workers.

The Times announced that a survey of 79 industries showed that only 13 had smaller incomes in 1946 than 1945. For all the 79 industries—including 942 companies—net income totaled $3,656,933,912 last year as compared with $2,738,686,374 in 1945, 34% greater.

The Times attributed the remarkable gain chiefly to two factors: repeal of the excess profits tax, and credit allowed under the federal carry-back, carry-forward tax program, which allowed tax adjustments during a two-year period following the end of the war.

THE UAW report came from Consumer Counsel Donald Montgomery, who said that "prayers for price reductions are falling on deaf ears." He pointed to a Bureau of Labor Statistics report showing that three groups of manufactured commodities—metals, house furnishings and "miscellaneous"—hit new wholesale price highs during the week ending May 17.

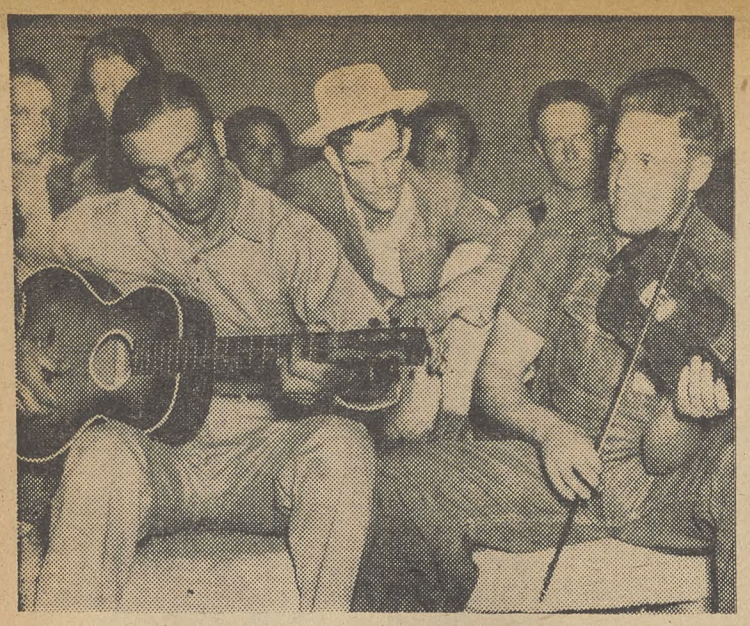
"In the whole price list only commodities with an agricultural origin have shown any response to the President's repeated pleas for lower prices," Montgomery said. "Manufacturers' spokesmen answered the President's price pleas by saying that high farm prices are to blame. The expected drop in farm prices has begun, but important groups of manufactured products are still on the way up."

Congressmen's Blind Spot

It seems that Congressmen don't think there is any danger of Fascism in America.

After weeks of prodding by Rep. Patman (D. Texas), the House Administration Committee will meet June 3 to hear the Congressman tell why it should authorize publication of the report on Fascism prepared by the Library of Congress at Patman's request.

After sitting on this report for several weeks a subcommittee had reported out the document without any recommendation. Rep. John McDowell (R. Pa.) and Rep. Richard Vail (R. Ill.) of the subcommittee on Fascism of the House un-American Activities Committee this week said that athough they had given little study to Fascism, they saw no danger of it in the U. S.



These musician-workers who helped maintain morale during the 26-day strike of the CIO Packinghouse Workers at the Harp Food Mfg. Co., Shawnee, Okla., had another reason to sing this week—a contract providing a 30% wage increase. The strike was marked by violence when

Panama—No Land Of Milk and Honey

WHEN we think of Panama, we may accept the movie version of a land of happy and perpetually smiling people showered by nature with the necessities of life.

But take it from Vice-Pres. Thomas Richardson of the CIO Public Workers who has just returned from the Canal Zone where the union has 17,000 members, Panama is not a land of milk and honey. The economic life of the adjacent Republic of Panama depends on the Canal Zone.

The CIO Public Workers went to the Zone about a year ago after Pres. Philip Murray referred to the union a number of requests for organizers. These came from clergymen and other public-spirited residents of Panama.

THE Canal Zone has two kinds of workers. The "gold workers" are the U. S. citizens who are the supervisors, foremen and highly skilled employes whose pay is in the neighborhood of $400 a month.

The zone's hard, gruelling work is done by the "silver workers" who earn about $60 a month. They are the Panamanians, other natives of South and Central America and of the Indies, the Chinese, the Indians and the Hindus—a veritable United Nations.

THE union has made a number of improvements in the lot of the silver workers, and is planning to do more. At the Public Workers' request, Jim Crow signs have been removed from most commissaries, clubhouses and public toilet facilities. Discrimination remains, for there are separate colonies and buildings for the gold and silver workers.

Both categories of workers—with the exception of some of the gold workers who have detached dwellings—live in apartments in army-like barracks. But there is a great difference between the quarters of the gold and silver workers.

The latter live in flats, about 22 by 10 feet, divided into two rooms—living quarters for as many as 10 members of a family. The silver workers must supply their own furniture, but the gold workers' apartments are furnished and have baths, stoves and ice boxes—all lacking in the silver workers' flats.

THE Public Workers have a two-fold program for improving the conditions of the silver workers—legislative action and cooperation with Major Gen. J. C. Mehaffey, U. S. Governor of the Canal Zone, and his staff, and the Administration of the Republic.

Through cooperation with the U. S. authorities in the Zone the Public Workers have obtained maternity leave, time and a half for more than 40 hours of work, a sick and rest policy—similar to annual leave granted U. S. government workers in this country—and grievance machinery.

On the legislative front, the Public Workers have persuaded Senators and Congressmen to introduce bills providing for equality of job opportunity irrespective of citizenship, for retirement, for a study of housing conditions and for minimum wages of 40c an hour.

'I'll Be Judge, I'll Be Jury'

CIO and Textile Workers representatives this week charged that H. Edward Gipson, Jr., a county judge, ordered police to raid a picket line during the TWUA strike at the Guerney Mfg. Co., Prattville, Ala.

Gipson, it is alleged, took part in the raid during which the peaceful pickets were beaten with clubs and blackjacks. Then Gipson levied heavy fines and jail sentences on the strikers. It is also charged that the local sheriff took part in the attack.

Chief of Police Taylor of Prattville this week is alleged to have ordered TWUA Organizer Lloyd David, a war veteran with many citations, and the local union president to leave town.

This order was said to have been accompanied by threats, according to sworn statements obtained by TWUA.

At the request of John Edelman, Washington representative of TWUA, the U. S. Dept. of Justice has ordered the U. S. Attorney at Montgomery, Ala., to conduct an investigation of these alleged violations of civil rights.

SHIP UNION ASKS 25c PAY HIKE

A 25c hourly increase heads the list of demands announced this week by the CIO Shipbuilding Workers.

The union will resort to direct wage negotiations. This policy was decided on at a conference at Philadelphia, where Shipbuilding Workers national officials reported that the employers are failing to attend meetings of the Shipbuilding Stabilization Committee through which negotiations were previously handled.

The union's general executive board and representatives of 31 locals attended the conference.

The union is demanding 25c retroactive to Jan. 1, to make up partially for the cost of living rise since Dec. 5, 1945, date of the last wage increase. An effort also will be made to clear up the remaining issues before the stabilization committee. Other demands include:

Pay for holidays not worked, night shift bonus increase, differential for repair work on all coasts, liberalized vacations, elimination of second and third class mechanics' rates and handymen's classifications; health, welfare and pension program, improved reporting and call-in pay, union shop, and provision by employers of quarterly wage data.

All locals were directed to authorize the national office to file strike notices at least 15 days prior to the contract expiration date of June 23—in the event negotiations prove fruitless.

Fishermen To Appeal

LOCAL 36 of the CIO Fishermen chose this week to fight out its battle to protect labor's exemption from anti-trust prosecution when it appealed fines totaling $12,100 levied against it by a Los Angeles federal judge for "a conspiracy in restraint of trade."

Judge Peirson M. Hall fined the union $3,000 May 21 when he pronounced sentence on Local 36 and 14 of its officials after a predominantly middle-class jury had found them guilty of violating the antitrust laws, in the first such decision in the west.

Hall stunned the courtroom audience when he divided the defendants into "tools" who followed the leadership of their officials, and "men who sought to secure only their own power" rather than the benefit of their union members by leading a strike against fish dealers last summer.

Five of the leading union officials were tagged as power hungry and fined a total of $9,000. The remaining nine individual defendants were put in the dupe category and fined only $10 each.

Rather than accept the decision Local 36 is filing an appeal "to prevent a wedge from being established that will allow any union to be prosecuted under the Sherman act." The cost of an appeal is estimated at about $50,000.

Union leaders fined were: Intl. Sec.-Treas. Jeff Kibre, $2,000; Local 36 Sec.-Treas. Gil Zafran, $2,000; Charles McLaughlin, $2,000; Ray Morkowski, $1,500, and Charles McKittrick, $1,500.

AUTO WORKERS REJECT FORD PACT PROPOSALS

THE CIO Auto Workers this week rejected the offer of the Ford Co. to an increase equivalent to 15c an hour because no agreement had been reached on old age, retirement and social security benefits.

Richard T. Leonard, UAW vice president and director of the union's Ford dept., and Pres. Thomas Thompson of UAW's Local 600, asserted:

"The issues between the company and the union involve more than just a wage increase. Equally important factors are the human needs of the workers involving old age, retirement and social security benefits."

Before the company made this offer the union asked the government for permission to take a strike vote in 30 days, and asked the locals representing nearly 40 plants whether they wanted to take a strike vote.

Meanwhile, UAW this week broke off negotiations with the Briggs Mfg. Co. and threatened to strike June 5 because the company was demanding contract changes "that are designed and would result in the destruction of the union and the forfeiture by Briggs workers of their collective bargaining rights."

CIO ENDS SLAVE WAGES IN WACO, TEXAS

ONE CIO member in Waco, Texas doesn't waste words when he runs across a merchant opposed to labor unions.

He extracts two well-worn payroll stubs from his wallet.

One dated December 1936 shows $8.70 for a week's work.

One dated December 1946 shows $89.40 for a week's work.

"There," he snorts, "is the story of CIO in Waco."

But seldom does he get a chance to flash the stubs. Anti-union ranks are thinning.

Most merchants know why Waco is no longer known as the "cheapest wage town in Texas."

They realize CIO has added an estimated $3 million annually to industrial workers' paychecks since 1944.

The low-wage pattern was dented in 1944 when a textile local was chartered in this city of 65,000. CIO membership now stands at approximately 3,000 in 12 plants, 6 organized since October, 1946 by Director Robert Oliver's Texas organizing staff.

OLIVER credits the United Rubber Workers local, chartered in 1945, with setting off the spark that fired the whirl-wind organizing drive in Waco.

Offered a 14c hike in 1946, the young local held firm for the full 18½c industry pattern and finally struck at General Tire & Rubber Co.

"General Tire imported an expert to break the strike," Oliver recalls. "His first full-page ad asked why highly-paid CIO workers were striking for more money. And, in an effort to show that the rubber workers were drawing top wages, the ad carried photostats of $100-a-week payroll checks.

"Workers in unorganized plants recalled their own wages of 40 to 45 cents an hour, took another look at the CIO workers' checks and m-m-m-m-med.

"Three organizers were rushed to Waco, and the stampede was on."

EMPLOYES of three textile plants, a clothing plant, a chemical plant and a cotton oil mill came into CIO within three months. Victory margins at the polls ranged from 72 to 98½%.

Victories were rolled up in Clifton Manufacturing, Crawford-Austin Co., Douglas Co., Swift & Co., Cotton Oil Mill, Waco Garment Co. and Spencer Chemical Co.

CIO wage increases in Waco have caused several employers to increase wages and install vacation plans in unorganized shops.

Irwin L. DeShetler, CIO Regional Director, Los Angeles, Calif., reports: Chrysler office workers, UAW-CIO 35; against 33. UAW-CIO Intl. Rep. William Goldman in charge of election.

CIO Chemical Workers defeated the AFL Intl. Chemical Workers Union by a vote of 139 to 14, with 7 voting for no union, among the production and maintenance workers in Heyden Chemical Co., Fords, N. J. In another election, office workers in Heyden Co. at Fords, N. J., also voted for CIO Chemical Workers by vote of 13 to 1. Plant protection guards voted for the CIO union by a vote of 4 to 0. In charge of organizing was David Elliot, Reg. Dir. and Dominick San Giovanni.

Mechanics of Western Airlines, Inc., voted to retain the UAW-CIO as their collective bargaining agent. The vote was a ratio of 5 to 1 for the UAW-CIO against the IAM. The IAM had petitioned for the election, claiming it represented the majority of the employes.

Paul E. Miley, UAW-CIO Regional Director, announces settlement of five-week-old strike at Bendix Westinghouse Co., Elyria, Ohio. A thousand employes of Local 971, UAW-CIO, voted unanimously to accept the strike settlement which includes:

Wage increase of 11½c per hour and six paid holidays; unqualified maintenance of membership; increased from 6c to 12c per hour in 13 job classifications; vacation pay of 40, 60 and 80 hours; social security and retirement program to be negotiated 6 months after date of contract. Strike settlement makes the Bendix Westinghouse wages the highest in Elyria.

At this writing the Joint Committee of the House and Senate has about agreed on the provisions of the Taft-Hartley Bill, the bill to shackle labor. It will now go before both Houses. Liberal forces everywhere are calling upon the President to veto this vicious anti-labor measure, and upon Senators and Congressmen to support the veto if obtained. Let your Congressman, Senators and President hear from you, and from your buddy and your neighbor.

A meeting was held in Philadelphia May 31 and June 1 with the officers of different telephone workers union who recognize clearly now the futility of independent unions, after their experience in the nation-wide telephone strike, which received the support of the CIO, its officers and members everywhere. On account of looseness of organizational structure, the strike failed to accomplish what the experience of the workers on the picket lines and elsewhere warranted.

Retaining the loose structure will not solve the problem. The telephone workers need one organization patterned after such splendid unions as are in the CIO, where an injury to one is the concern of all. The CIO is working with these groups and at their request has offered them affiliation through an organizing committee, having for its purpose the building up of an organization of and for the telephone workers.

SHORT BUT SIGNIFICANT

THE CIO Food & Tobbacco Workers and the R. J. Reynolds Co., Winston-Salem, N. C., makers of Camel cigarettes and Prince Albert smoking tobacco, this week resumed contract negotiations after FTA Pres. Donald Henderson appealed to the U. S. Labor Dept. to direct resumption of conferences.

The Labor Dept. put Conciliator D. Yates Haefner in charge of the case "in an effort to bring the parties together."

The strike of 10,000 workers at the Winston-Salem plant has been in progress a month. It began when the company made a final offer of a 5½c an hour wage increase.

The CIO Office & Professional Workers this week accused the Federation of Jewish Philanthropies, N. Y. City, of attempting to force a " wage-freeze" on employes of the federation's constituent agencies.

This accusation was made after the agencies offered salary increases of 2½ to 6c an hour to their workers.

The union warned that the effect of the Federation's policy will be "to put the agency in a position of either having to refuse a legitimate request of its employes, or to drastically curtail services."

C. V. O'Halloran, West Coast regional director of the CIO Auto Workers, this week announced the winning of 5 NLRB elections by the union during May. The victories were:

CIO FILLS THE NEED OF PHONE WORKERS

THE CIO stands ready to fulfill the need of the telephone workers for industrial organization, Allan S. Haywood, chairman of the newly-created CIO Telephone Workers Organizing Committee, asserted this week on the eve of a conference of telephone workers' leaders at Philadelphia.

CIO Pres. Philip Murray named Haywood, CIO vice-president and director of organization, as head of the committee following a conference he and Haywood held May 25 with telephone workers leaders in Atlantic City. Haywood declared:

"Convinced that the CIO method of organization and ability to deal with gigantic corporations was what telephone workers needed, leaders of telephone workers unions representing 100,000 who just came through a nation-wide strike called upon President Murray. They asked the CIO to take definite steps to bring their membership into affiliation with the Congress of Industrial Organizations.

"These leaders had seen the gallantry of their rank and file displayed. They had seen greater support given to the strike than to any other strike in the history of the nation, yet they found themselves helpless to withstand the resistance of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. to national bargaining.

"THEY had watched unit after unit make settlement, while other units remained out. They realized that the confusion of the top leadership was in striking contrast to that of the CIO, whose Steelworkers, Auto Workers, Textile Workers and other unions came through with sizeable gains and without strikes.

"They had also witnessed the great support given the telephone workers by CIO members everywhere throughout the nation on the picket lines, financially and otherwise.

"With these facts before them, they wanted to bring to their membership this kind of affiliation and structure.

"The telephone workers of the nation cannot continue divided and without national affiliation. That national affiliation must give full and complete recognition to industrial organization such as is offered only by the CIO.

"REMEMBERING their experience, these leaders requested the CIO to set up an organizing committee. The leaders will take this proposal to their membership in a democratic manner. We realize that the CIO will not only have the opposition of some of the telephone workers' leaders but of the AT&T as well.

"The CIO was born in this kind of opposition and thrives on it.

"Craft unionism cannot serve the workers of the telephone industry.

"The doors are open for all to affiliate and if the telephone workers really want an industrial organization, the CIO can and will assist them in every way to realize this goal."

Murray Offers 'All Rights, Privileges' Of CIO Affiliate

CREATION of a "full-fledged telephone workers international union of the CIO" for telephone workers, with "all the rights, privileges and status common to every other CIO international affiliate," was announced this week by CIO President Philip Murray as the goal of a newly-created Telephone Workers Organizing Committee.

"At the request of the officers of a number of telephone workers unions, CIO Vice-President Allan S. Haywood and myself met in conference with these officials at Atlantic City, New Jersey, on May 25," Murray said.

"All in attendance expressed a desire for affiliation with the CIO.

"The officials present represented more than 100,000 telephone workers. In addition, officers of many other telephone unions which had applied to the CIO for affiliation were unable to attend the Atlantic City meeting.

"THE recent telephone strike demonstrated a magnificent fighting spirit on the part of the telephone workers. Unfortunately, the loose federation structure of the telephone unions was ill-adapted to dealing with a tremendous, well-knit corporation like the American Telephone & Telegraph Co.

"This fact has convinced large numbers of telephone workers that they have a real and immediate need for a strong industrial union, and that it should logically be affiliated with the CIO.

"After due consideration, the CIO has decided to create a Telephone Workers Organizing Committee, representative of the groups in attendance at the conference and of other telephone unions and workers which have already indicated a desire for affiliation with the CIO.

"At the request of the representatives of the telephone unions who attended the meeting, I have assigned Allan S. Haywood, vice-president and director of organization as chairman of the Telephone Workers Organizing Committee. In addition to the officers of the telephone unions who will comprise this committee they will be assisted by four CIO representatives: Timothy Flynn, New York City; Michael Mann, Chicago; Delmond Garst, St. Louis; and Charles Gillman, Atlanta.

"The Telephone Workers Organizing Committee will have the same status and representation on the CIO Executive Board as all other CIO affiliates. The CIO will render financial and other assistance as is necessary in connection with its organizing and administrative functions.

"Opportunity for affiliation will be extended to all other telephone workers in the United States.

"THE Organizing Committee will be representative and in due course will call a Constitutional Convention to adopt a constitution for an international union, elect officers and establish itself completely as an organization of by and for the nation's Telephone Workers.

"This new organization will be a full-fledged international union of the CIO, having all rights, privileges and status common to all other CIO international unions."

MURRAY HITS 'LOADED' TAFT STATISTICS

CAN loaded questions and phony statistics solve American's important economic problems?

By no means, CIO Pres. Philip Murray told Sen. Taft (R. O.) last week, in a hotly-worded letter addressed to the Ohio Senator in his capacity as head of the Congressional Joint Committee on the Economic Report.

Murray referred to a questionaire distributed by Dun & Bradstreet, a big Wall Street financial reporting service, which has been hired by the Congressional group to gather information on what businessmen, labor and agricultural groups think about the economic prospects for the nation.

THE CIO President told Taft that:

1. Questions in the Dun & Bradstreet survey were "carefully designed to produce a pre-conceived result."

2. The result of the questionnaire desired by its sponsors appears to be a conclusion that nothing need be done to guarantee full employment.

3. Dun & Bradstreet's methods of lumping all the replies together in a summary will undoubtedly "create considerable bias."

4. Taft's committee is already four months late in providing a report to Congress and the nation, as required by the so-called Full Employment Act, which was passed shortly after V-J Day.

5. Public hearings rather than a questionnaire farmed out to a private financial institution would be the best way of bringing important viewpoints before the entire public.

Murray told the Ohio Senator that if hearings had been held earlier in the year, the Congressional Committee would have found that "our price structure, since decontrol days, and even before, has reached close to the peak in many lines and all-time highs in many others.

"The Committee would have also found that the savings of American workers have been depleted and that the rate of savings has been reduced; also that the consumption value of the American dollar has greatly depreciated.

"Something has to be done to bring the price-wage-profit picture into line if we are to avert a serious recession," Murray warned the Senate's No. 1 Republican.

Recent wage boosts, he said, have been a step "in promoting purchasing power," particularly since there has been some stabilization of prices. But "this wage-price development will stave off a recession only temporarily," the CIO President asserted, and more fundamental adjustments must be made.

Congress Booms Veteran For Forgotten Man Title

THE new forgotten man is the World War II veteran, the subcommittee on veterans of the CIO Legislative Committee reported this week.

The subcommittee—headed by Eugene Cotton—found that the 80th Congress in 4½ months has "accomplished nothing toward" the solution of the key problems facing veterans—jobs, housing, adequate allowances for training and education, disability and unemployment.

The Administration also "has done nothing to fight for adequate aid for veterans," the committee pointed out.

Statistics show the ex-servicemen's needs are great. The number of veterans drawing unemployment compensation in January and February averaged 1.1 million; 200,000 ex-servicemen had exhausted this form of aid ($20 a week for 52 weeks); 45% of them were living doubled-up, and in basements and attics.

In the face of these figures, the only bill passed by Congress weakens the GI Insurance Act by repealing provision for the reinstatement of lapsed term policies within 6 months of expiration by payment of two premiums and evidence of good health.

The House Veterans Committee this week reported out a bill keeping subsistence allotments for single vets going to school and taking on-the-job training at the present level of $65, raising allotment for married vets to $105 with $20 additional for first child and $15 for each additional child.

The bill contains a "joker" denying subsistence to ex-GIs belonging to organizations condemned by the FBI and providing penalties for such veterans who obtain allotments.

Sen. Taft (R. Ohio), chairman of the Senate Labor Committee, which held two days of hearings on bills that would raise subsistence allowances and the $200-a-month ceiling on on-the-job training, said allowance increases don't "stand the chance of a snowball in hell."

As far as Congress is concerned, the boys for whom nothing was to be too good—remember—can spend the rest of their days in cellars and attics. The House has passed the Wolcott bill (HR 2549) which would repeal most of the provisions of the Patman veterans' housing act.

315 Families To Be Evicted

MEMBERS of the Veterans Eviction Committee of the Parklawn housing project, Milwaukee, Wis., are planning a trip to Washington to protest eviction notices sent to 315 families.

No family making more than $2,300 a year may occupy a home. The average family income at Parklawn is now $3,038, but the tenants at an indignation meeting this week pointed out that the rule was not interpreted so literally during the war, and that the limit should be raised because the cost of living has gone up. One ex-serviceman said:

"Maybe we can get a law passed raising the income ceilings. After all, prices are away up, with food about doubled what it was when the project was built. Let them raise the rents."

"That's what we want to talk about," declared James H. Jones, 25-year-old vet and chairman of the committee. "That's what I want to go to Washington for. I'll see the President, our Congressman and Senators."

The meeting raised $150 for the trip to Washington and plans were made to raise more money.

WORLD LABOR

CO-OPERATIVE clothing will be established shortly in Italy, thanks to a $500,000 fund-raising campaign just completed by the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers.

August Bellanca, an Amalgamated vice-president, left for Genoa and Naples last week. He will remain in Italy for several months to speed plans for erection of the plants. Also slated to confer on the plans is ACW Sec.-Treas. Frank Rosenblum, who will visit Italy after attending World Federation of Trade Unions sessions in Prague in early June.

117 CARE food relief packages are on their way to European trade unionists as the result of a first purchase by the Natl. CIO Community Services Committee through its newly-established CARE food fund.

The packages were bought with $1,170 contributed to the fund by CIO national and local unions. They will be delivered to trade unions in Austria, France, Germany, Greece, Italy, Poland, Belgium and Hungary for distribution to most needy cases.

CSC Director Leo Perlis, in announcing the purchase, asked all CIO unions to make gifts directly from their treasuries or from membership contributions. Individuals desiring to send packages can send $10 checks or money orders to CARE, 50 Broad St., N. Y. Delivery is guaranteed to most European countries.

DISSOLUTION by the government of all Brazilian free labor unions violates a solemn pledge made at the Intl. Labor Organization conference at Philadelphia in 1943.

That charge was made by Lombardo Toledano, head of the Latin-American Federation of Labor, in a cable to Pres. Enrico Dutra last week.

The government's decision "against the Brazilian Federation of Labor violates this promise and categorically contradicts the principles of the United Nations," Toledano said.

"At the moment in which the United Nations are making every effort to amplify the rights of men and social guarantees, any attack on the freedom of labor association constitutes a blow to international democracy."

Every insurance man has heard those words. Perhaps they were spoken by a young mother, whose children cannot quite understand the mysterious mission called "work," that takes her from them during the day, and leaves her tired and worn in the evening.

The words are not soon forgotten. Even though every effort was made to show the father that his income, and his family's income, were one and the same, the words "If only he had bought more" are disturbing.

So when an insurance man calls on you, remember, won't you, that he is there to help you. And remember, too, that only you can make certain that your wife will never say "If only—"

Sprucing Up

SO NEAT — SO PRETTY

By HANNA SHERMAN

AT A PARTY recently, we met a young woman who claimed that she didn't care anything about the way she looked. But during the course of the evening she seemed to be more absorbed in her appearance than in any one present. She was nervous and very much occupied with fixing a shoulder strap on her too long slip, smoothing her skirt and using her hands awkwardly to conceal their uncared-for look.

We felt sorry for her, knowing that she really cared a great deal —and was merely being defensive about her carelessness that particular evening. Her poor grooming made her self conscious, lacking in poise. She worried about her appearance at a time when she should have been relaxed and having fun. And I thought that a little attention to her grooming before she left home might have made it a happy evening for her.

Besides the psychological reassurance that good grooming gives you, there are other dividends to be collected. To many people, the look of immaculate cleanliness is more attractive than mere prettiness and expensive clothing indifferently worn.

THESE dividends are yours almost for the asking. There's nothing magic about it, just a little common sense and consistent care are all that's required. Check your good grooming habits with these. They are by no means a complete list, but they are pretty basic. From them you can work out a schedule to suit your individual needs.

Your daily bath is a must and the basis of that clean feeling and that fresh look—especially important in the coming summer months. Under-arm care is just as necessary. Use a non-perspirant every two or three days and keep the arm pits free of hair with a clean razor. Use dusting powder and matching scented light toilet water even during working hours. It's another boon on hot sticky days.

Hair improves with frequent washing and brushing. Shampoo your hair at least once a week and brush it daily. Learn to "place" it at night with a few pin curls. It will look much neater the next day and be easier to fix in the morning. Make your face up carefully but don't expect that smooth look to last indefinitely. At the end of the day remove all traces of the old lipstick, rouge and powder and start the evening with a freshly made up face.

TAKE the time to give yourself a complete manicure at least once a week. In between times, repair your nail polish and file down any hangnails with an emory board.

Good grooming not only means being clean but looking clean, neat and well put together. It means well pressed clothes, even hemlines, spotless accessories, buttons and fasteners sewn securely in place. It means a daily change of underclothing and frequent changes of foundation garments.

Your shoes should be well shined or brushed, and of course, you'll always carry clean gloves and handkerchiefs. And try to keep your pocketbook so orderly that it might be ready for inspection at any moment.

Meticulous cleanliness and apple pie neatness tell the world that you think enough of yourself to give yourself the care you deserve—that you care enough about others to want to please them. It's sure fire for winning friends and influencing people.

WHEN EXAMS LOOM LARGE

This month and next will find boys and girls "cramming." We're delighted if they're interested in their work and it's all to the good if they have a sense of success at the end of the school year, but often we would do well to ration the midnight oil. Many a conscientious student has lost his chances to come out with flying colors by stealing hours from sleep for study. A cheerful curfew set up by mutual agreement is worth trying for. And how about accompanying the "to bed" suggestion with milk and cookies or a sandwich and a cool drink?

THE FRIENDLY PUSH

By HELEN GREGG GREEN

RECENTLY I heard a mother say, "Children need a friendly push—a little honest criticism — now and then."

I recalled some of the friendly pushes my mother had given me during our happy but all-too-brief twenty-two years together and what they had meant in character and personality development.

The most memorable friendly push was one that had acted as a challenge. Mother and I had been discussing my hobbies, interests, and accomplishments.

"Dear," said she, "you dabble in a lot of things, but you don't do any one thing well!"

I was completely dumfounded by her remark. However, it started me to thinking. I must have said to myself, "I'll show you, Mother!"

From that day, "Do at least one thing well" was my motto. I became so engrossed in becoming outstanding in at least one thing that it acted as an incentive in everything I did.

My friends frequently commented, "Anything Helen undertakes she does well." But had my mother not given me that friendly push, would they have had reason to say this? I doubt it.

SO while we, as parents, do not want to give our children inferiority complexes—heaven forbid!—neither should we wish to shower them with extravagant praise when little effort has been made to deserve it.

Very young children take it for granted that other persons will contribute in large measure to their happiness and well-being. The frequent tendency is to sulk when moods and desires are not catered to. Such an unhealthy habit should be discouraged by treating boys and girls on these occasions as objectively as possible, lest pleasure be derived from their self-pitying thoughts.

This means a judicious discrimination with regard to solicitude, since it is natural for a child, if he is given an overabundance of attention, to acquire an exaggerated idea of his own importance.

Most youngsters realize that they play a large part in their parents' scheme of things, and they often discover it takes little to please them. They notice that their very presence is often such a source of joy they scarcely need to exert themselves at all to gain admiration and attention.

SUMMER SCHOOLS AT HUDSON SHORE

Brophy Talks at CSC Institute

UNIONS have a crucial function to perform in helping their members achieve a feeling of greater security, John Brophy, director of CIO Councils, told the Institute of Community Services held the week of May 26-June 1 at Hudson Shore Labor School.

"We are probably running into rough water politically, economically, and socially," Brophy said in his speech at the opening session. "In periods of trouble and turmoil, candidates for dictatorship arise. One of the appeals they make is to the need which each person feels for security.

"The demagogue always offers economic and emotional security, the protection of a powerful leader. . . . If our unions can be strong enough and wise enough to give their members real security, the appeal of the demagogue will be weaker."

Leo Perlis, director of the Natl. CIO Community Services Committee, was chairman of the Institute which was attended by some 40 local CIO representatives on community chest programs in various cities throughout the country. In addition to Chairman Irving Abramson and other CSC-CIO representatives, officers of city and state CIO Councils and International unions also participated as speakers and discussion leaders.

UNION MEMBERS will be given intensive training aimed to fit them for leadership in local and shop educational work at the second annual summer school of the Greater New York CIO Council to be held at Hudson Shore Labor School, June 2 through June 7.

Some 35 local union members enrolled for this year's session will learn about the CIO's wage program, political action and educational work, use of movies and other visual aids and labor history. Classes will be conducted on the spacious lawn of the school grounds.

Students will have a chance to swim, play volley ball, badminton and other games. Hikes through the beautiful countryside along the Hudson River are also planned.

AN ADVANCED COURSE designed especially for union officers and former students of labor schools will be offered at the Hudson Shore Labor School for a two-week period from June 14-28. The course will be devoted to an intensive study of current labor and economic problems.

Another special two-week course for Service Workers will be held at the school from July 12-26. The special problems of household and restaurant employes and beauty operators will be considered. The course is aimed to interest those who work in small groups or alone as compared to those who are employed in large industrial establishments and have strong union organizations.

HUDSON SHORE'S regular eight-week summer session will be held June 14-Aug. 9. For the benefit of those unable to attend the entire session, it has been broken up into a series of four two-week periods.

In addition to its eight-week summer session, the school is also open for the use of unions and other community groups to hold their own educational institutes. Last year more than 1,000 persons came to the school from May to January.

NEGRO RIGHTS UNDER HEALTH LEGISLATION

NEGRO AMERICANS, a group most seriously in need of better medical care, would fare very badly under the Taft "Health" Bill (S. 545), reports the Committee for the Nation's Health.

Two bills concerned with national health problems have been introduced into the 80th Congress — the National Health Insurance and Public Health Act (S. 1320) and the Taft Bill. Although both contain a provision forbidding discrimination on account of race, creed or color, there is a crucial difference between them in the matter of administration.

The Insurance Bill calls for enforcement by a Federal agency, but under the Taft Bill, administration of the program would be left in the hands of the states. It is obvious what this would mean when applied to many southern states.

The minimum need for hospital beds is considered to be at least four beds per 1,000 people. In 1940 Southern States had an average of only 2.2 beds per 1,000, with a ratio of only .03 beds per 1,000 for use of Negroes.

Furthermore not enough money is appropriated under the Bill to cover more than a fraction of the need.

The Committee for the Nation's Health urges that the contrast between the two bills be brought to the attention of the Negro public.

New Pamphlet On Race Bias

A light but very effective presentation of the case against racial prejudice in rhymed verse is made in a humorously illustrated pamphlet, "Discrimination Costs You Money," just issued by the Natl. Labor Service, 386 Fourth Ave., New York 16, N. Y. Price 5c a copy, $3.50 per 100 copies.

Book Review

DRAMATIC STORY OF BIG '37 GM STRIKE

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

MANY a man in the labor movement—and perhaps a woman or two — has dreamed of some day writing a book on his impressions of events he has witnessed personally in the course of his trade union activities. It's too bad that so few ever really get around to doing it.

Henry Kraus is one who did. He has written the story of the great General Motors sit-down strikes of 1937 in an exciting book, "The Many and the Few," which every active CIO member will get a thrill out of reading.

At the time of the strikes, Kraus was editor of the CIO Auto Workers first paper, and under pressure of events became also an active leader of the strikers at GM's two Fisher body plants in Flint, Mich.

Newspapers at the time were full of screaming headlines about the strike. They carried lengthy accounts daily of the bitter conflicts going on between union and company forces, and of the tense conferences between Big Shots from both sides as they argued for hours in smoke-filled hotel rooms. Magazine writers were busy "interpreting" the strike, but the real story of what actually went on in the minds of the striking workers and their leaders was little understood and seldom explained correctly.

"THE Many and the Few" now tells the connected story from the inside. Kraus has an observing eye and a reporter's instinct. His book brings to life personalities and developments that are still an active influence in the American scene. Some of the hate and misunderstanding now showing up in the anti-labor legislation pending in Congress, for instance, can be traced to seeds planted during the sit-down strikes of ten years ago.

Much water has passed under the bridge since those days. Some of the union leaders of 1937 have passed from the scene. Some who were then friends are now enemies. One or two, like Homer Martin, then president of the UAW, have shifted over to the bosses' side of the fence.

Kraus wisely refrains from bringing in the union situation as it is today. He writes in terms of the labor scene as it was then, and leaves out factional fights. The people he writes about are seen again as they were in '37. Reading the book gives the effect of looking through an old photograph album. It makes you smile and yet feel sad at the changes time brings.

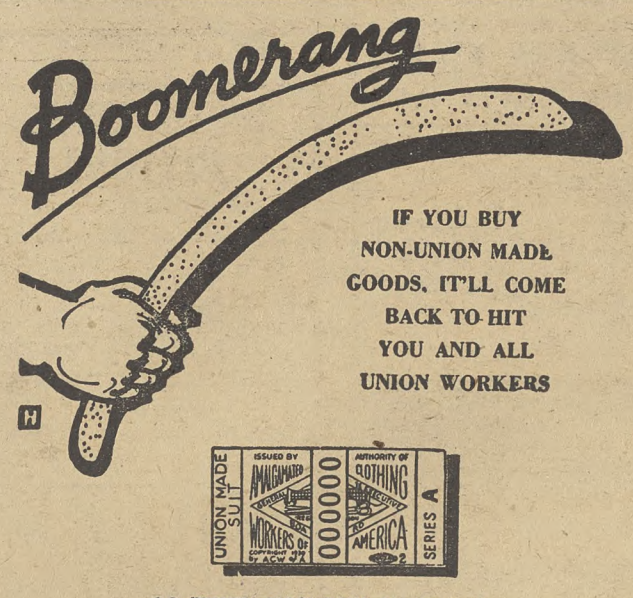
THE author is not harsh in his judgments. He writes about people with kindliness and understanding, and with tolerance for their human weaknesses. Even those in the enemy's camp, when they show signs of latent decency, are treated gently. You may find yourself, for instance, feeling sorry for the perspiring, unhappy Sheriff Wolcott, "Old Tom," who was forced against his will to take part in hostilities he hated and did not understand.

But Kraus also makes you detest the underhanded and hypocritical leaders of the Flint Alliance who did GM's dirty work under cover of being pretended friends of poor workers misled by a bunch of "outside agitators." You'll be enraged at the attempts made to intimidate the workers by the circulation of what the strikers called "I Love My Boss" petitions, and other low tricks described.

Some inside stories not generally known, of what went on behind the scenes, a few of them very funny, add to the book's interest. As for suspense and drama, the story told of the Battle of Bulls' Run at Fisher Body No. 2, is certainly one of the most thrilling in labor's whole stormy history.

This is really a book that no CIO'er should miss.

A second special trade union edition of "The Many And the Few" has just been issued, as the first was quickly sold out. The price to all CIO unions in group lots is $1.25 each. The regular bookstore edition sells for $2.50. Money orders and checks in payment should be sent with orders to: The Plantin Press, 1052 Manzanita St., Los Angeles 27, Calif.



Ohio Compensation Laws Threatened

Organized labor in Cincinnati is fighting an attempt to turn Ohio's industrial compensation law into a gravy boat for private insurance companies.

Legislators have submitted bills permitting private insurance companies to sell industrial compensation and to finance the administration of the law out of premium income rather than the state general fund. Worst of the lot is a bill encouraging private companies to challenge the payment of benefits, difficult enough to collect under present law.

State Laws

CRACKDOWN ON LABOR

WHILE Washington has been holding the spotlight, state legislatures did a thorough job of passing dozens of anti-labor bills.

The new state laws cover a wide variety of union activities—strikes, union security, boycotts, disputes in public utilities, union activities of government employes, etc.

Bills to limit strike activity have been passed in Delaware—home of the du Ponts, which has passed one of the worst of the state anti-labor laws—and in Utah and Texas.

New drastic restrictions on the right to picket have been placed on the law books in Delaware, Georgia, North and South Dakota, Texas and Utah.

All efforts of union workers to refrain from handling unfair or scab-produced goods have been outlawed in Delaware, Idaho, Iowa, Minnesota, North Dakota, Oregon and Utah.

INDIANA, New Jersey, Texas, Virginia and Missouri have passed laws limiting or outlawing the right to strike in public utilities. Under the Texas statute it becomes illegal to picket a public utility plant or to "intimidate" any utility employe with the intent of halting the service. The New Jersey law is aimed at prohibiting strikes altogether, while the Indiana statute would force a system of compulsory arbitration.

New York and Texas both prohibit strikes by state employes. Texas goes a step further by setting up a public policy against state officials entering into a collective bargaining agreement with a labor organization.

The Minnesota statute goes a step further by banning strikes in charitable institutions and hospitals.

New provisions for filing damage suits against unions were approved by the legislatures in Arizona, Delaware, North Dakota, South Dakota and Texas.

ALMOST a dozen states have passed laws or constitutional amendments to bar union security. Such provisions have been passed in Arizona, Arkansas, Georgia, Nebraska, South Dakota, Tennessee, North Dakota, Virginia, and North Carolina.

The state laws on union security have gotten the nod from the national Congress, where the conference version of the Taft-Hartley bill stated that any state action on the subject would overrule the national law.

One of the stiffest laws was that passed in Missouri. The King-Thompson bill, signed by Governor Donnelly and due to become law in September, provides $10,000-a-day fines against unions calling strikes in public utilities. In addition, it levies a $1,000-a-day fine against union officers leading such strikes. and deprives all strikers of their seniority rights.

TRUMAN URGED TO PRESS BILL TO BAN LYNCHING

PRES. TRUMAN was urged last week to take the lead in pressing for passage of federal anti-lynching legislation.

Officers of the CIO United Auto Workers sent a wire to the Chief Executive repeating the union's request that he take the lead in "seeking federal action to prevent such tragic violations of democratic justice as the recent legal farce in Greenville, S. C., which resulted in a 'not guilty' verdict for 23 confessed lynchers."

Nothing less than a federal anti-lynch law will serve to uphold "justice and decency in cases such as this," the wire said. It was signed by Pres. Reuther, Sec.-Treas. Addes and Vice-Presidents Thomas and Leonard.

"From all corners of the earth the eyes of people of many races and colors are turned upon America today to see if we can practice the principles we preach in the councils of the United Nations," the statement added.

"So long as lynch mobs are permitted to murder American citizens and go unpunished, these peoples of other nations will look with skepticism on our claim that we are the most democratic nation in the world."

Power Trust On Rampage

The power trust is in the midst of its most brazen and aggressive drive since 1920.

That charge was made by Pres. James Patton of the Natl. Farmers Union before the Senate Appropriations sub-committee studying allotment of funds to the Interior Dept.

Patton described the proposed cuts in funds for reclamation and irrigation projects as "gutting" the most valuable portions of the Interior Dept. budget.

Rent Control

ONE MONTH TO LIVE?

A MAJORITY group in Congress appears bent on performing a 1947 version of last year's operation on price control.

The Senate began consideration of the Buck Bill (S. 1017) amidst an even greater than usual flurry of double talk. What emerged was a clear goal on the part of many Senate Republicans to legislate rent control to death when the present act expires on June 30.

The Buck Bill as reported out of committee extends controls only until next spring, and it would permit state or regional governments to take the lead in decontrolling rents on a local basis.

Not satisfied with this, the Senate majority is moving to make the bill an even closer replica of the Wolcott bill passed in the House. That measure would run for a year, but it permits "voluntary" agreements between landlords and tenants to raise rents 15% on a lease. This clause has been described by the Natl. Assn. of Real Estate Boards as the best way of killing rent control.

The House bill also ends all special allocations of building materials to veterans homes projects under the Patman Housing Act.

THE SENATE majority has been casting envious glances at both these clauses, which may be amended into the Senate version early this week. In addition, the Senate has voted for an arbitrary system of decontrolling 30 of the country's 600 rent control areas each month.

WASHINGTON ROUNDUP

SMEAR PROBE: The House Un-American Activities Committee—fresh from a fishing expedition to Hollywood and an unsuccessful effort to find any trace of fascist activity throughout the nation — is planning to butt into union activities.

The committee, headed by Rep. Thomas (R. N.J.), has ordered an investigation of the strike of Local 22, CIO Food, Tobacco & Agricultural Workers, against the powerful R. J. Reynolds Co. at Winston-Salem, N. C.

The CIO local, with about 10,000 members at the plant where Camel cigarettes are made, went on strike when the company sought to tear up a union security clause and to hold back on wage increases. The strike has been in progress for five weeks, amidst a wave of anti-red hysteria in the local press.

The Un-American Committee announced that the inquiry had been asked by Rep. Bonner (D. N.C.), who fears that the union is being used by the "communist high command" to stir up interracial difficulties. Much of the excitement about the strike is believed to have developed from the fact that the union helped elect the first Negro alderman in Winston-Salem in several decades.

ANTI-BIAS BILL: Hearings on the new bi-partisan bill to outlaw racial or religious discrimination in hiring will open June 11. A CIO representative will testify in support of the bill during mid-June.

Sen. Dennis Chavez (D. N.M.), a leading sponsor of the bill, told the Senate last week that it should be adopted since job discrimination is "un-American."

"It results in low income for minority groups," he said, "thus limiting the market for goods and employment generally. It leads to inter-racial conflicts."

VOTE AGAINST THE PEOPLE: Congress voted 180-174 against the farmers and the school kids of America when it refused to recommit for further study the Agriculture Dept. Appropriation Bill.

Rep. Clarence Cannon (D. Mo.) offered the motion, as a means of increasing appropriations for the triple AAA, which gives soil conservation benefits to farmers; for the Rural Electrification Administration, which helps cooperatives bring electric power to remote areas; and for the federal lunch program, to provide decent meals for school kids.

"A vote against the motion to recommit will be a vote against the farmers, the farm families and the hungry children of America," Cannon said. Whereupon 180 votes were cast against the motion.

As a result the school lunch program gets only 45 million dollars, rather than the 75 million sought by its supporters; AAA lost 135 million; and REA lost 24 million.

WEEKLY PUBLICATION OF THE CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

To President Truman:

I have read the Taft-Hartley bill and I have followed its history. I write as one who has been in the labor movement for 45 years, as one who has deeply pondered the entire bill and each of its provisions. This bill is not merely unfair to labor. This bill is not merely one-sided. This bill is not merely immoderate and extreme. This bill is all of these things and more. Under this bill workers have fewer rights than they did a generation ago . . . The bill will not forward industrial peace. On the contrary it will stimulate a tremendous industrial unrest. The elimination of the closed shop, the burial of other forms of union security . . . the outlawry of the checkoff, the encouragement of company unions and of strike breaking, these provisions alone will reduce labor relations in the next few years in this country to a shambles if this bill becomes law.

Philip Murray

58-16 to Up Your Rent

HOPES for another year of firm rent ceilings went out the window with this 58-16 vote on June 2 to defeat a proposal for "as is" control through June 1948. The vote was on an amendment to the rent control bill offered by Sen. Taylor (D. Ida.) The amendment was based on the Wagner-Murray bill filed earlier in the session.

Fourteen Democrats and two Republicans voted for the Taylor amendment to maintain rent control (R), while 36 Republicans and 22 Democrats voted against (W). Twenty-one Senators did not vote (NV).

After defeating this proposal the Senate adopted without any record vote a bill permitting "voluntary" 15% rent hikes in new one-year leases. The bill now is in a conference committee for compromising House and Senate versions.

LANDLORDS' FIELD DAY

JUNE 2 was a gala day for the real estate lobby, one of the wealthiest and most powerful in the nation's capital.

On that day the Senate gave its approval to an in-name-only "rent-control" bill which allows 15% rent increases in all voluntary one-year leases signed by landlords and tenants.

The Natl. Assn. of Real Estate Boards has described the 15% formula as a major step toward smashing all rent control.

The victory for big landlords came on a 48-26 vote to approve the 15% "voluntary increase." The proposal had been offered by Sen. Hawkes (R. N.J.). A later effort of New Deal Senators, paced by Sen. Glen Taylor (R. Ida.) to give the country another year of tight enforcement of rent ceilings was smothered, 58-16.

With only 28 days then remaining before the present rent control law expires, Taylor warned of widespread hardships once the lid is forced off the nation's rent bill. Rent control has been the most effective brake on climbing living costs during the postwar periods.

BY ACCEPTING the 15% amendment, the Senate bill was brought into line with the weak-kneed Wolcott bill passed a month or more ago in the House. The House bill runs until June 30, 1948, however, while the Senate version would extend control only until the end of February.

The major difference between the two bills lies in the House-approved proposal to repeal the Patman Veterans Housing Act, under which the government allocates building materials to construction of veterans' homes. Numerous Senators took the floor during debate on the bill to indicate in no uncertain terms that they would have none of this stab in the back of ex-GI's.

THE shape of things to come if rent control is killed was indicated in clippings from Idaho newspapers inserted into the Congressional Record. Items:

● Roy Lindell of Twin Falls—where rent control ended recently—is faced with a rent increase of $150 a month.

● A 73-year-old grandmother occupying a three-room cabin was told that her rent would jump from $21.95 a month to $120, and "OPA officials were unable to help her."

● A. E. Robison of Twin Falls appealed to the mayor for help when his landlord raised the rent of his seven-room house—occupied by Mr. and Mrs. Robison and their five children—from $30 to $100 a month.

If rents are increased to that extent in a rural area, Sen. Taylor commented, "the Lord only knows how much rents will go up in heavily populated communities."

SEN. TOBEY (R. N.H.), one of the two Republicans who voted as a small, unsuccessful minority for substitution of an "as is" extension bill, soberly warned the Senate that loosening of controls will lead to disaster.

"What is going to happen when we take these controls off is an increase in rentals that will stagger people, particularly those with small incomes," Tobey predicted.

The "voluntary" rent increase provision, Tobey said, "will mean that the landlord will say: 'Come across and agree—or else.'"

THE last real chance for preserving decent rent control probably lies in the joint Senate-House conference committee appointed to bring out a final version of the bill.

The Senate conferees are divided, 3-2, with a majority on record in favor of the 15% increase, and at least one member—Sen. Buck—favors repeal of the Patman Act. The House conferees are similarly weighted in favor of softening the rent control law.

Letters to the conferees should demand a preservation of existing rent control laws and should stress the need for continuing the veterans housing act in order to help build more homes throughout the nation.

GIANT N. Y. RALLY POINTS UP CIO DEMAND FOR TAFT BILL VETO

A gigantic N. Y. City parade and mass meeting June 10 will add the exclamation point to CIO's nationwide protests against the Taft-Hartley bill.

The meeting, in Madison Square Garden, will feature as chief speakers CIO Pres. Philip Murray and Mayor William O'Dwyer.

The parade is expected to draw nearly 100,000 CIO members and supporters to the Garden, where the rally will be broadcast to overflow crowds in the streets.

O'Dwyer, in a plea this week for a Presidential veto of the bill, declared that the union movement is imperiled by it and that it "would be detrimental to the national welfare and our democratic system."

MEANWHILE, other CIO forces were conducting a last-minute battle to halt the anti-labor legislation.

Eight thousand members of Retail & Wholesale locals in N. Y. City took one hour at noon Wednesday to gather an estimated 100,000 signatures on petitions urging a veto.

A delegation from the Dayton, Ohio CIO Council arrived in Washington with 40,000 signatures on veto petitions.

The Bridegport, Conn. Common Council passed a resolution protesting the Taft-Hartley bill.

In Bloomfield, N. J., CIO unions invited all the town's businessmen to a luncheon addressed by General Counsel David Scribner of the CIO Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers.

The CIO had invited Rep. Hartley to debate the "merits" of his legislation, but he declined. Welcoming the businessmen was Mayor Huck of Bloomfield.

In Mobile, Alabama, CIO and AFL leaders joined in letters to Pres. Truman and Sen. Sparkman asking for a veto and for support of it in the Senate.

The Natl. League of Women Shoppers urged Pres. Truman to veto the bill, with Natl. Chairman Julia Algase charging that "in one form or another" the bill would destroy labor's right to organize and bargain collectively.

AS a by-product of the struggle for labor's fight for its life, a 100-man state-wide CIO-AFL policy committee was formed in Des Moines, Iowa to direct the battle against anti-labor legislation.

The committee will consist of one representative from each international union operating in Iowa—CIO, AFL and independent. Head of the policy committee is Pres. A. A. Couch of the Iowa Federation of Labor.

Meanwhile, in final wires urging a vigorous veto and support for it in Senate and House, the CIO Office & Professional Workers declared that the Taft-Hartley bill "represents an attempt by big business to undermine the democratic fabric of the country by shackling the labor movement."

TRUMAN FACES SHOWDOWN

A 13,000-WORD request for veto of the vicious Taft-Hartley anti-labor bill was sent to the White House this week by CIO Pres. Murray.

In a searching, point-by-point analysis of the bill and its effect on American unions and American democracy, Murray ridiculed efforts of sponsors of the bill and of the press to label it as mild and moderate.

The statement was sent to Pres. Truman shortly after the Senate had completed action on the conference committee version of the bill. The House had approved it by a 320-79 margin. That vote revealed a drop of nearly 30 votes against the legislation from the earlier action on the Hartley bill, a month or two ago.

THE CIO President voiced two major objections of principle to the bill:

1. That HR 3020 is a "repressive measure of unprecedented proportions."

2. That the bill, "completely and radically" altering our federal labor policy, has not been the subject of "calm objective discussion" concerning its detailed and intricate provisions.

Murray also launched a bitter attack on the alleged "mildness" of the bill.

Throughout the confernce committee sessions, Murray charged, a continous campaign of propaganda aimed at convincing the public of the mildness of the changes was carried on.

"What was ignored during this entire process—and what a cold analysis would have demonstrated—was that the Senate bill as it emerged from the Senate Committee had already approximated the Hartley bill in extremely important respects."

MURRAY said he had read the bill, followed its history and pondered its effects in the light of his long union experience.

"This bill is not merely one-sided, to labor," he wrote. "This bill is not merely immoderate and extreme. This bill is all of these things and more. Under this bill, workers have fewer rights than they did a generation ago."

Not only does the Taft-Hartley bill repeal most of the vital protections of the Norris-LaGuardia Act, Murray added, but it converts the Wagner Act into an instrument for defeating collective bargaining and discouraging self-organization.

MURRAY said that he felt confident the provisions of HR 3020 "cannot survive the objections which you offered on June 11 of last year to the Case Bill" since HR 3020 is "immeasurably more repressive in every respect than was the Case bill."

"HR 3020 marks a momentous cross-road" for the nation, Murray concluded.

"On the one hand, it marks the path to a repetition of the union-busting which followed the last war—only this time employers are promised an even more vigorous cooperation in the project by the government. It marks the path to 'normalcy', witch-hunts, the extinguishment of the bright flame of popular liberty, reaction, want and despair.

"On the other hand, there is the path of the economic bill of rights, the path of democracy, of civil rights for all, of universal dedication to a free and productive America . . ."

WHILE THE bill was passed speedily in the House, it was subject to longer debate in the Senate. Sen. Morse (R., Ore.) described it as opening a Pandora's box of trouble for labor, industry and the nation, and Sen. Murray (D., Mont.) was prepared to deliver a long criticism of the proposals.

The President has 10 days to sign the bill or veto it. While the size of the House majority for the bill rules out any possibility of sustaining a veto there, the story in the Senate is different. Strong pressure from back home, and from the Democratic Party organization could swing the necessary votes to prevent the bill from becoming law.

Labor's case against the Taft bill was taken to the people in Pittsburgh last week. Thousands of signatures on giant petitions were collected on the streets by members of the CIO Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers. AFL unions circulated petitions, too.

'MILESTONE ON THE ROAD BACK'

THE Taft-Hartley bill is "a milestone on the road back," according to two of the leading New Dealers in Congress.

Sen. Murray (D. Mont.) and Rep. Lesinski (D. Mich.), the two members of the Senate-House conference committee who voted against the bill, had this to say:

"We have previously stated that this legislation will cause domestic strife and uncertainty, and that it will be used abroad to discredit American institutions as marking a reactionary, anti-labor trend.

The weakening of the Wagner and Norris-LaGuardia Acts, the impediments placed in the way of legitimate trade union activity, the denial of settled rights, make this legislation a milestone on the road back.

"The conferees have worsened rather than improved it. They have added further restrictions on the right of unions to conduct their internal affairs.

"Trade unions are denied the right to engage, like other organizations, in political activity. Statements by employers, unlike those of all other citizens, are not to be used in evidence. In an attempt to outlaw 'feather-bedding' the bill restores the speed-up.

"THE conference bill is not only bad legislation—it is worse economics.

"It goes to the very root of our critical economic situation. It must, therefore, be judged by its effects on our economic future.

"If there is any mandate this Congress has from the American people it is a mandate to avoid the mistakes of 1929—to prevent the return of bread lines and apple stands. Already the first signs of recession are appearing. Business leaders have begun to dig economic storm cellars. . . .

"No propaganda can convince the American people that we have ever been 'picketed' into a recession or 'struck' into a depression. The American people know that we are speculated into panics and profiteered into depressions. They will not long be deceived by the hollow slogan that labor has become too strong."

CYANIDE SHOULD BE SO 'MILD!'

SPONSORS of the Taft-Hartley bill—the most severe restriction voted against unions in the nation's history—want you to think it's a mild cure of alleged abuses.

Nathan Cowan, CIO Legislative Director, says the bill is even worse than the Taft bill first passed by the Senate.

"It is far worse, far more loaded with subterfuge and insidious legal technicality intended primarily to disrupt and confuse collective bargaining relations," Cowan said.

But you should judge for yourself. Look over these key provisions of the Taft-Hartley bill. Think how they would affect your union and your collective bargaining. Weigh them against your own experience as a union member.

And if you agree that "mildness" is just a cover phrase to sugar-coat a vicious anti-labor bill, write or wire today to President Truman and your Senators demanding that the Taft-Hartley bill be thrown out. Under the bill:

● The employer, during an organizational campaign, can escape all responsibility for anti-union talk or actions of his supervisors, unless he has formally and technically made them his "agents"—which means you'll never pin charges of anti-union unfairness on the employer. MILD OR TOUGH?

● If the employer fires you on a technicality for union activity or other forms of discrimination, he can escape all penalty by showing "good cause"—that is, by producing an alibi. MILD OR TOUGH?

● Splinter, craft groups which ask the Labor Board for separate splitting elections are given an automatic, compulsory "yes" for an answer. MILD OR TOUGH?

● The Attorney General, after deciding that any strike affects "an entire industry or a substantial part thereof" and imperils the national health or safety, can apply for a 75-day strikebreaking injunction. MILD OR TOUGH?

● If you're on strike and the employer hires a strikebreaker for your job, you can no longer vote in a Labor Board election. If he hires enough strikebreakers, they can ask for a vote and cancel your union's collective bargaining contract. MILD OR TOUGH?

● If you refuse to handle scab products made by strikebreakers, or products made under sweatshop, non-union conditions, the government can prosecute you for an unfair labor practice or get out an injunction. MILD OR TOUGH?

● If you want to collect "call-in pay" for hours put in when you must come to the plant but there's no work—or if you want extra workers for safety reasons—that's an unfair labor practice. MILD OR TOUGH?

● If, in 1948 or 1950, your union wants to lick Sen. Taft, Rep. Hartley or any of the men who voted for this bill, it can't under the law buy any advertising during the campaign; can't print leaflets or give contributions to friendly candidates; can't give money to PAC. MILD OR TOUGH?

Are these mild or tough? Have you had enough? Write to President Truman and your Senators!

BANNER WITH A STRANGE DEVICE

STRANGE things are happening in this land of ours. Hardly have we emerged victorious from a world war against fascist tyranny than our Congressmen proceed to enact legislation to destroy some of our basic democratic liberties.

Like our defeated enemies they strike first at the rights of the workers, the staunchest defenders of democracy. They forge shackles to restrict them from freely organizing in unions and bargaining collectively.

On the banner of freedom and democracy, to which they proclaim hypocritical allegiance, they have placed a strange device—chains for labor.

The Taft-Hartley bill, passed by Congress and now on President Truman's desk, is a "repressive measure of unprecedented proportions," as CIO Pres. Philip Murray points out.

It runs counter to all our national professions of democratic freedom and mocks the proclamations of our statesmen to the rest of the world.

This bill destroys most of the rights which American workers have won in a generation of struggle. It gives anti-union employers new weapons against the workers—governmental weapons never at their command before.

It repeals the labor safeguards of the Norris-LaGuardia Act. It reverses the purpose and effect of labor's Magna Carta, the Wagner Act, making it into an instrument for defeating collective bargaining and hampering self-organization of the workers.

President Truman must heed the swelling demand of the working people, of all sections of labor, and of all true believers in democracy; he must veto this anti-democratic measure.

Congress, too, can undo the wrong it has done, by voting to uphold such a veto.

Let the President and Congress hear from you, before it is too late.

A WARNING TO LABOR'S ENEMIES

THE MEMBERS of Congress who voted for the Taft-Hartley bill might spare a few minutes to look back over some political history, before they decide how to vote on a veto of this anti-labor legislation.

Early in 1920, Congress passed the Esch-Cummins act, which not only removed the railroads from government control but also contained anti-union provisions vigorously opposed by railroad labor.

In the elections that followed, Senator Cummins, Representative Esch and most of the other leading supporters of this act were defeated, one after the other. Eight years after the anti-labor measure was passed, only 16 of the 47 Senators who voted for it still held their seats.

There was nothing accidental about this. American labor, particularly on the railroads, was so outraged at this action of its enemies in Congress that it launched an all-out political action campaign to defeat them whenever they ran for office.

The resentment of American working people will be even greater and more widespread, if the Taft-Hartley bill is finally enacted to destroy their rights, undermine their unions and weaken their bargaining power for decent conditions.

The enemies of labor responsible for such a law will have to reckon with many millions of aroused labor voters, who will resort to more effective political action than ever before.

This is something for the members of Congress to think over.

LOOKING AHEAD

BY LEN DE CAUX

SOME OF the founding fathers of this republic were very fearful of what might result from allowing the common people to vote.

They reasoned that the poor and underprivileged were in such a vast majority that they would run the country, under any democratic set-up, to the disadvantage of the rich and privileged.

But, judging from the record of the present Congress, they need not have worried.

●

THE GREAT majority of American families have annual incomes of less than $3,000, and about half have less than $2,000.

Federal Reserve Board figures for 1945 show 20% of all families with incomes under $1,000 a year; 47.7% under $2,000; 70.3% under $3,000; 85.8% under $4,000; and 92.6% with less than $5,000.

One might expect that politicians elected by majority vote would fall over themselves trying to serve the interests of the low-income majority of the population.

But that's not what has happened in this Congress.

●

THE TAX BILL passed by Congress is heavily weighted in favor of the rich minority.

It would add $37,430 to the take-home pay of an individual with a $300,000 income. It offers average tax savings of only $37.52 to 26 million taxpayers with incomes of less than $2,000; while the two million with more than $5,000 get tax relief averaging $742.

Under this bill, millionaires pay only 8.8% more taxes than in 1939, while persons with incomes of $3,000 must pay 3,700% more in taxes.

●

STILL LESS concern for the welfare of low-income Americans was shown by the top-heavy majorities which passed the Taft-Hartley bill.

This measure is a masterpiece of legalistic confusion, designed to upset nearly all existing collective bargaining procedures.

Nearly every sentence in its 73 printed pages places some new restriction on the workers' union rights and weakens their bargaining power for better wages and conditions.

Most of the Congressmen who trooped down the aisle to vote for this bill didn't even know its contents. But all of them knew it was a measure desired by anti-union employers to weaken the position of American working people.

●

ON EVERY measure before it, the present Congress has shown a similar favoritism for the tiny rich minority, and a similar indifference or hostility to the interests of the great majority of the people.

Instead of raising the present miserable minimum wage of 40c an hour, it has passed a bill to undermine the protections of the existing wage-hour law.

After destroying price control for the benefit of profiteers, it has now voted to permit the wholesale raising of rents.

At the same time, it has scornfully sidetracked health, housing and all other social legislation to better the conditions of the great majority of low-income Americans.

●

THE REACTIONARY majority in Congress hope to escape retribution at the polls, not only by confusing the issues and fooling the public, but also by preventing progressive political organization.

One of the less publicized provisions of the Taft-Hartley bill forbids any union contributions or expenditures for political action, in primaries as well as federal elections.

In addition, a bill has been introduced which would lift the lid on the political contributions of the rich, while clamping the lid still tighter on labor.

●

BUT IN THIS the tories are reckoning without their host.

It may be recalled that the Smith-Connally act, which sought to prevent labor political action, had the very opposite effect.

It led directly to the formation of the CIO Political Action Committee and to a great upsurge of labor political activity.

Our prediction is that the Taft-Hartley bill (whether finally enacted or not), and other actions of the present Congress, will not result in the American people lying down to be walked over by their misrepresentatives. The result will be more vigorous progressive political action than ever before.

But to make sure this happens, the first thing to do is to give a dollar to PAC and to get behind its campaign.

A BIG 'HELLO' FOR CIO

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

THE SCENE of the latest epoch-making CIO event—the birth of a new national telephone union—was laid in one of those big ornate hotel rooms used for banquets, dances and conferences, and so familiar to union people. In this case the hotel was Philadelphia's Bellevue Stratford. Time was Saturday and Sunday, the Decoration Day week-end.

The usual long table, covered with a cloth for the apparent benefit of doodlers who absent-mindedly draw or scribble, stood on a raised platform at the far end with a row of chairs behind it. Out in front a hundred or so chairs with fancy backs and red cloth seats were lined up in regular rows from the table to the big gold-framed mirror on the rear wall. Huge square pillars running to the high ceiling cut a few of the rows of chairs short.

Some hopeful caretaker had placed clean glass ash trays in the exact center of the red chair-seats at regular intervals. The high windows on two sides of the room were all closed tight.

AS THE telephone union representatives entered the door in the rear, secretaries at a small table near the entrance thrust registration cards into their hands. Groups stood around the room talking. A few took their seats.

Finally Allan Haywood, CIO vice-president and director of organization, and chairman of the new committee, arose from his seat at the big table in front, rapped for order and the conference called to lay the foundation for a CIO Telephone Workers Union began.

Ted Silvey of the CIO, secretary of the conference, read the names of those present. There were 43 representatives from 19 different telephone unions in 11 states and the District of Columbia. These included groups affiliated to the Natl. Federation of Telephone Workers and also independent unions.

A larger proportion of these representatives were women than in the average union conference, which is as it should be with so many women in the telephone industry. The women were not only there, but they were not backward in expressing themselves and took an active part in the lively discussion from the floor. From their remarks a vivid idea emerged of what they had gone through and learned from their picket-line experiences in last month's strike. They were confident that they could "sell CIO," as they put it, to their members.

THE FIRST day of the conference was devoted to explaining and discussing the set-up and function of the Telephone Workers Organizing Committee, which follows the CIO pattern used so successfully in steel, textiles, utilities and other industries. It would serve for an interim period pending a constitutional convention and the formation of a national union chartered by the CIO with exclusive jurisdiction in the telephone industry.

Some of the members of the new CIO Telephone Workers Organizing Committee at the TWOC conference in Philadelphia June 1-2. Seated, left to right, Mrs. Margaret Weiss, president, Maryland Traffic Federation; CIO Vice-Pres. Allan Haywood, chairman of the committee; Mrs. Norma F. Naughton, president, Local 1, American Union of Telephone Workers. Standing, Frank Fitzsimmons, president, Western Electric Employes Assn.; William Barry, president, Local 69, American Communication Equipment Workers, and AUTW Pres. John J. Moran.

Chairman Haywood, John Moran, president of the American Union of Telephone Workers, an NFTW affiliate with some 20,000 members in 42 states, and Henry Mayer, attorney for 14 telephone unions both inside and outside NFTW, all spoke at length explaining the program and great possibilities of a CIO union in telephones to the representatives of the various unions present.

These representatives were there as official or unofficial observers who planned to report the proceedings and plans formed at the conference to their own unions. Most of them stated that they would heartily recommend CIO affiliation.

In presenting the program for a CIO national union run by and for telephone workers, Haywood recalled some of the historic struggles won by the CIO in organizing such great industrial giants as U. S. Steel, Ford, General Motors and other big concerns which not so long ago were considered impregnable anti-union fortresses.

The powerful Bell Telephone System could also be organized, he assured the union representatives, by a strong CIO national union built to protect and fight for better wages and working conditions through industry-wide bargaining, for the 600,000 workers in the telephone field.

AUTW Pres. Moran told of the various attempts made in recent years to get the telephone workers together. He said that the recent strike had clearly demonstrated that the NFTW could not continue to exist as a conglomeration of loosely affiliated groups isolated from the main body of organized labor and survive.

He outlined the three main courses which the telephone workers might follow:

1 They could go along with the Communications Workers of America which is to be launched as the successor to the NFTW at a convention scheduled to open in Miami, June 9. Although CWA boosters maintain that this organization can affiliate with one of the branches of organized labor if the members so desire, Moran explained that the new constitution drawn up at the 13th National Assembly of the NFTW, held in Denver, Colo., in November 1946, contains a provision requiring a 51% vote of the entire membership to effect such affiliation. This, Moran said, would make it practically impossible for the CWA to achieve any affiliation. He and other speakers later pointed out that such a requirement was contrary to a democratic rule of government which requires only a majority of those voting to win.

2 The proposition for affiliation made by the American Federation of Labor would give the telephone workers only Class B membership in the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Moran stated. Class B locals in the IBEW have only one vote per 100 members, and one delegate for every 500 members. Class A membership, limited to those covered by the union's insurance and pension plans, gives one vote to each member.

3 Affiliation with the CIO as an autonomous industrial union with exclusive jurisdiction over telephone workers, Moran said, was the course that should be taken. He said that the executive board of his union had voted unanimously for CIO affiliation and that the proposition was being submitted to a vote of the membership. (This requires 45 days under the AUTW constitution, which will mean that results will not be known until July.)

The telephone workers' attorney, Henry Mayer, told of how his legal work in connection with the recent strike had convinced him of the complete ineffectiveness of independent unionism, which he termed a "disorganization of labor" and an idea planted in the minds of employes deliberately by the company.

Warning what the anti-labor bill passed by Congress would do to the labor movement, he said that it was vitally important now as never before to strengthen the union forces, and strongly urged the telephone workers to affiliate with the CIO.

Three CIO speakers — Pres. Carl Holderman of the New Jersey CIO Council; Ted Silvey, and Sherman Dalrymple, secretary-treasurer of the CIO's Southern Organizing Committee —spoke at a luncheon meeting. The afternoon session was devoted to general discussion from the floor.

ON SUNDAY the conference went into executive session, during which the rules for the temporary government of the CIO Telephone Workers Organizing Committee were drawn up and adopted.

The statement of rules set up the TWOC "to organize all the telephone workers in the U. S. and Canada into one national labor union within the structure of the CIO for the purpose of improving the standard of living of telephone workers and their families, and to establish industrial democracy in the telephone industry for the workers therein, through collective bargaining."

The committee is given jurisdiction over all work relative to the telephone industry, with the duty of supervising the organization's affairs until a national union is formed at a constitutional convention.

The committee is to consist of not more than two representatives of each affiliated organization and of representatives designated by the CIO President, not to exceed one-third of the committee's total membership.

An executive board of nine members is to be set up by the committee and will include the chairman, vice-chairman, secretary-treasurer and six other members. The board will have the authority to issue certificates of affiliation to existing telephone workers unions and new locals and to conduct and direct organizational work.

Dues will be not less than $1 or more than $2 a month, with no initiation or affiliation fee required. The committee will be represented on the CIO Executive Board by a telephone worker elected by the committee's board. The rules may be amended at any meeting of the committee. Names of the members of the committee and the Executive Board will be announced as soon as the selection has been completed.

Murray To Truman

TAFT-HARTLEY BILL AIMED TO W

TO PROMOTE WAGE CUTTING, SPE

The Taft-Hartley bill's "true purpose is to destroy collective bargaining in order to promote wage cutting, the speedup and a restoration of sweatshop conditions." That was the main point made in a letter from CIO President Philip Murray to President Truman. Murray urged Truman "to do all in your power to prevent this bill from becoming law." The letter, for release in Wednesday morning papers, follows in full.

DEAR Mr. President:

I urge you to veto H. R. 3020, entitled the "Labor-Management Relations Act, 1947."

My duty both as a citizen and as a leader of an American labor organization impels me to urge you to do all in your power to prevent this bill from becoming law. If this bill does become law it will engulf not only the labor movement but the entire nation in tragic consequences.

I am appending to this letter a statement of some of the reasons which require you to reject this legislation. I have found it imperative to set out at length my objections to the bill because of the propaganda campaign that this is a "mild," "compromise" bill.

LABOR'S objections to the bill have been uncritically swept aside by those from whom we have a right to expect a greater measure of fair play and objectivity. In other quarters labor's objections to the bill are met with frenzied abuse and intolerance.

The same repressive spirit which characterizes the bill is reflected in the reception accorded labor's protest against the bill. Indeed the bigots who seek to force the bill's heavy yoke upon labor point to labor's resistance in justification of their acts. The swelling voice of protest against the bill is regarded as "proof" that labor's "power" must be curbed.

I RESPECTFULLY urge you to consider the accompanying statement (see box—Ed.) of my objections to the bill. I am confident that you will agree that this is neither a mild nor a fair bill.

In the accompanying statement you will find a charge that the purpose of this bill is to commit to the anti-union employers of this country the power and authority of government for the purpose of smashing unions and wrecking collective bargaining.

This assertion is fully supported by a statement of Senator Taft of June 7 which he issued in reply to your charges that he holds fallacious and dangerous economic views.

In the course of Senator Taft's statement he admitted that the purpose of the Case bill which you vetoed last year was to

DAGGERS AT THE H

By PHILIP MURR

I HAVE READ the Taft-Hartley bill and I have followed its history. I write as one who has been in the labor movement for 45 years, as one who has deeply pondered the entire bill and each of its provisions. This bill is not merely unfair to labor. This bill is not merely one-sided. This bill is not merely immoderate and extreme. This bill is all of these things and more. Under this bill workers have fewer rights than they did a generation ago. This bill repeals many of the most vital protections of the Norris-LaGuardia Act. This bill does not merely neutralize the Wagner Act as a guarantee of the right of self-organization and collective bargaining. It converts the Wagner Act into an instrument for defeating collective bargaining and discouraging self-organization . . .

There is no question that the provisions of H. R. 3020 cannot survive the objections which the President offered on June 11 of last year to the Case bill. As I have indicated H. R. 3020 is immeasurably more repressive in every respect than was the Case bill . . .

The present bill, as I have already indicated, presents the curious phenomenon of a piece of legislation which has been steadily and systematically made more and more restrictive as it proceeded through legislative halls. Nevertheless, curb labor in order to arm employers with the power to degrade living standards. Senator Taft charged that by failing to permit the Case bill to become law you were responsible for high prices which, according to his argument, the Case bill could have averted by weakening unions.

WRECK COLLECTIVE BARGAINING

This is the most revealing admission and the most amazing charge which have come from a man in public life in a long, long time.

THE plain implication of Senator Taft's admission is that the purpose of H.R. 3020—incomparably more restrictive than the Case bill—is to destroy labor unions in order to throw the weight of government behind a program of wage cutting and speedup. The equally plain implication which flows from his charge that your failure to sign the Case bill caused high prices is that if you do veto H.R. 3020, you will be responsible for continuing high prices on the theory that wage cuts and a speedup of labor are necessary to lower prices—a result which, in Senator Taft's view, cannot be accomplished unless labor unions are destroyed.

This admission is in refreshing contrast with Senator Taft's joint statement with Congressman Hartley of June 2, strategically released to nourish the myth of "mildness," that the purpose of the bill is to "strengthen" collective bargaining. Senator Taft has now made it perfectly clear that the true purpose of the bill is to destroy collective bargaining in order to promote wage cutting, the speedup and a restoration of sweatshop conditions.

This objective if permitted to materialize would condemn the great mass of American workers to depression living standards and would preclude any lasting escape from recurring cycles of boom, bust and mass unemployment.

MR. PRESIDENT, H.R. 3020 is the keystone in a program to legislate a new depression.

But it is more than that. It seeks to accomplish its objective by the suppression of fundamental democratic rights of economic selfdefense against exploitation. It deliberately seeks to create an atmosphere of fear and depression so as to make possible a widespread cancellation of civil and political rights. Moreover, this program is to be set in motion at the time when the vitality of our democratic institutions is a matter of world import.

Occurring in the present state of the world, a massive governmental assault upon labor unions and an abandonment of collective bargaining, such as is projected by H.R.3020, can only serve decisively to influence the future of our own political institutions and to betray the faith of men the world over in freedom and democracy.

The bill must not only be vetoed, Mr. President; it must not become law. There is too much at stake for our entire people.

Sincerely yours,

PHILIP MURRAY.

HEART OF LABOR

P MURRAY

—through skillful propaganda, despite the fact that it is now incomparably harsher than it was when it emerged from the Senate Committee, it is offered as a "mild" bill and as a product of "compromise."

THE BILL will not forward industrial peace. On the contrary it will stimulate a tremendous industrial unrest. The elimination of the closed shop, the burial of other forms of union security under a host of outrageous conditions, prerequisites and requirements, the outlawry of the checkoff, the encouragement of company unions and of strike-breaking, these provisions alone will reduce labor relations in the next few years in this country to a shambles . . .

I think it is entirely accurate to say that if this bill is enacted into law it will represent a victory for those groups in industry who see this as the time to complete the process of destroying unions which this bill so plainly initiates. Conversely, it will represent a defeat for those employers who have placed their faith in industrial democracy and in collective bargaining. All the gains which have been made during recent years toward encouragement of trade unionism and the promotion of collective bargaining can be wiped out overnight by the existence on the statute books of this law . . .

Four thousand lunches are served each day at the picket line kitchen set up within 12 hours after the CIO Textile Workers went on strike at the Celanese plant at Cumberland, Md.

WEEK-END PAY ISSUE AS 9,000 STRIKE

UNWILLINGNESS of the company to pay for six holidays not worked and premium pay for Saturdays and Sundays are issues in the strike of 9,000 employes at the Cumberland, Md., plant of the Celanese Corp. of America. The strikers belong to Local 1874, largest unit of the CIO Textile Workers.

The union is asking time and half for Saturday and double time for Sunday, irrespective of whether such time is in excess of 40 hours a week. The premium pay issue is important not only to the workers in the Cumberland plant but to all other workers in the synthetic yarn industry because operations in the industry are on a 365-day-a-year basis.

As the strike entered its second week, the company continues its refusal to arbitrate the issues which also include strengthening of the seniority clause and clarification of the company's proposal for a fair day's work provision. Prior to the strike, negotiations had been going on since April 26.

Picketing is proceeding on a 24-hour basis at the four gates of the huge plant, and the members of the AFL Building Trades Council of Allegany County, who had been doing construction work at the factory, refuse to cross the picket lines.

The local is refraining from making demands for more pay in keeping with the TWUA's national policy on wages. Local 1874 leaders point out that the second round wage increase was obtained last January, when the union won a 13c an hour pay hike.

A conference of representatives of TWUA's locals in the cotton industry at Boston late in May and more recent staff conferences of organizers in the woolen and worsted industry decided not to seek wage increases.

The union has won its second round of wage increases.

The union's policy was outlined at the Boston meeting by TWUA Pres. Emil Rieve who declared that the objective was to make it possible for manufacturers to reduce prices to the consumer. It is the expectation that a reduction in prices will create additional demand and increased employment.

Rieve pointed out that this policy would also allow the industry to modernize its plants. He said that while profits were high in the first quarter of 1947, there were signs of deterioration in the cotton industry.

THE CIO Natl. Maritime Union is taking a strike vote, to be completed June 22. The seamen were asked by The Pilot, the union's paper, to vote for a strike to support contract demands or to back any maritime unions if their contracts are terminated by the ship owners June 15.

Contract demands include wage and overtime increases, the 40-hour week, extended vacations, increase manning scales, a health and welfare fund and improvement in working rules and living conditions.

NMU members held demonstrations this week at various U. S. ports to protest elimination of alien seamen from American merchant ships. Congress recently adopted a resolution restricting the employment of non-citizens on American ships. NMU urged the public to request President Truman to repeal HJ Res. 76 and to protest to the U. S. Coast Guard Commandant, Washington, D. C.

The CIO Shipbuilding Workers now represents all employes of Higgins Industry, New Orleans, La. The CIO union defeated the AFL 660 to 521 at Plant No. 1 recently in an NLRB election. The Shipbuilding Workers ousted the AFL in elections at Plants Nos. 2 and 3 of the concern last March. Until these election defeats, the AFL represented the workers at these plants.

Almost 4,000 production workers in the Clifton and East Newark, N. J., plants of the Federal Telephone & Radio Corp., were locked out last week. "Lockout lines," manned by hundreds of workers, surrounded the plants as the CIO Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers accused the company of trying to "bust the union."

The company said it had taken the action because of a production slowdown by the workers. Local 447 Business Manager Sprechman told Federated Press that the so-called slowdown was actually a return to "normal production speed" by workers after the company had let a 10-day deadline period elapse without negotiating the union's demand for a new incentive plan to replace the company plan.

A very important conference was held Saturday, May 31, and Sunday, June 1, in Philadelphia with representatives of the telephone workers. This group was representative of those telephone workers who favor affiliation with the CIO.

They decided to move to that end now and have set up a Telephone Workers Organizing Committee. The recent strike showed necessity of national affiliation now. They requested the writer to act as chairman and Ted Silvey as Executive Secretary of the Committee. The Executive Board and Organizing Committee are overwhelmingly telephone workers.

CIO Union Gets Hospital For Five Towns

MOTHER'S DAY was much more than that to the mothers of Marrero, La., according to Louisiana CIO Director Fred Pieper.

On that day, May 11, an emergency hospital for the Louisiana "West Bank" towns of Marrero, Gretna, Harvey, Algiers and Westwego was dedicated.

The hospital for this area, where there had been no hospital before, was the direct result of efforts by the CIO there, Pieper said.

"This was just another example of CIO's 'Operation Dixie' that was outside of organizing and an asset to the community," he declared.

"A good example is Local 179, CIO Chemical Workers, the union at the huge Celotex plant in Marrero, La. Marrero is located on the west bank of the Mississippi across from New Orleans.

"Marrero, like other west bank communities — Gretna, Harvey, Algiers and Westwego —had no hospital. The only way to reach New Orleans' hospitals is by ferry—a delay that has proved fatal in many emergency cases.

"So, Local 179 decided to do something about it. With Lloyd Gomez, a member of the local serving as general chairman of a committee, the local set out to enlist the aid of civic clubs, merchants associations, schools and public officials in a campaign to raise funds for a real emergency unit.

"The one they wanted would cost between 8 and 10 thousand dollars. It would contain an iron lung, oxygen tanks, fire fighting equipment, generators for operating a series of flood lights, fire hose and water pumps, acetylene torch and two ... radio, all on a 2½ ton truck.

"ANOTHER instance of real public service is the action of Local 5, Southern Fur Trappers in St. Mary's parish. For years it has been the custom for the children of fur trappers to accompany their parents to the trapping grounds during the season—November to February—with the result that they lost several months of school. This had been deplored, but until the trappers organized into a union, nothing was done about it.

"One of the first things the new local did was to petition the State Board of Education for a summer school. The union was joined by the Morgan City Rotary Club. With the strength of 450 members of Local 5 behind the petition, the school fathers granted the request and the children of the trappers now have a two-month summer school for their exclusive use."

15,000 ATTEND RALLY MARKING 'CAMEL' STRIKE'S FIRST MONTH

A MASS rally this week of R. J. Reynolds workers at Winston-Salem, N. C., marking the first month of their strike against the makers of Camel cigarets, heard an appeal for unity in the face of "divide and conquer tactics" from CIO Regional Director Frank Bender. Fifteen thousand workers and their families attended the rally.

The House committee on un-American activities has announced it will conduct an investigation of the striking union, Local 22, CIO Food & Tobacco Workers, on the basis of redbaiting stories in the local press.

"This is our government, and it should be a government for the benefit of the people," Bender said. "We are saying to American industry, if you don't give the working people what they need for security and a decent living, we are going to ask for government ownership of some industry."

TOUGH TIMES ARE HERE FOR WHITE COLLAR WORKERS

INCREASING unemployment in white collar fields is already being reflected in lower hiring rates, downgrading and greater employer resistance to granting salary increases, the General Executive Board of the CIO Office & Professional Workers declared last weekend.

Pointing out that employers are reluctant even to extend the wage increases granted to industrial workers to salaried employees, the UOPWA Board charged the national union and its local bodies with the need for immediate and aggressive leadership to increase organization and press for higher salary levels for white collar workers.

The UPOWA charged that responsibility for the serious economic problems of the white collar workers lies with big business and a reactionary Congress.

The Board gave special endorsement to the campaign of its Insurance Division for a $50 minimum and $10 raise for industrial insurance agents, employed by Metropolitan Life, Prudential, John Hancock and other companies, whose incomes are already being reduced by increasing lapses and surrender of policies.

During the three-day session the Board also acted to endorse the position of the national CIO in recent unity talks with the AFL and went on record for the early resumption of such talks leading toward full organic unity and immediate joint action in combatting the present drive against labor.

SURE OF VICTORY, LOCAL 248 ASKS NLRB POLL AT ALLIS-CHALMERS

LOCAL 248, CIO Auto Workers, filed a petition with the NLRB at Milwaukee this week for a consent election to determine the bargaining agency at the Allis-Chalmers plant, West Allis, Wis.

Although Local 248 was certified as the bargaining agent by the NLRB in 1937 and retained its representation rights on January 26 in an election conducted by the Wisconsin Employment Relations Board, Allis-Chalmers has refused to bargain with the union until a new election is held.

In view of the company's position, the union told the Board that it has "concluded to agree to the holding of a consent election, in order that we can again demonstrate to the Company that we in fact do represent the production and maintenance workers of Allis-Chalmers."

The union's action was taken following a plant-wide survey which it conducted which revealed that 87½ per cent of the production workers at Allis-Chalmers would vote for Local 248 in an NLRB election.

The Independent Workers of Allis-Chalmers, a company-dominated union organized during the strike among the scabs, the AFL Auto Workers, the AFL Patternmakers Association as well as several other independent craft organizations are expected to enter the race.

Unity Pays Off On Picket Line

With the aid of volunteer pickets from an adjoining AFL plant, members of the CIO Textile Workers on strike at the Gurney Manufacturing Plant, Prattville, Ala., put on such a show of strength this week that management abandoned all efforts to operate.

Despite flagrant attempts on the part of a group of strike-breakers, openly collected by the police, to provoke violence, there has been no disorder.

The scabs who went into the plant before the shutdown, carried pistols, blackjacks or knives. When union leaders pointed out this fact to the highway patrolmen stationed at the plant, the police merely grinned.

CIO Honors 3 For Fight On Bias

THE same forces in Germany which persecuted Jews and other minority groups were the strongest opponents of free German labor. The same groups which preach intolerance in America lead the drive against free U. S. labor.

That warning of the interconnecting forces of reaction was sounded in New York last week by Rabbi Stephen Wise, at a banquet in which he received a Certificate of Recognition from the CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination.

Similar citations for breaking down the barriers of minority persecution were awarded to Pres. Jacob Potofsky of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers and Pres. Emil Rieve of the Textile Workers Unions. The awards were presented at a Roosevelt Hotel banquet, with Pres. Willard Townsend of the United Transport Service Employes as master of ceremonies.

Townsend, secretary of the CIO anti-bias group, read messages of greetings from CIO Pres. Philip Murray and from Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, committee chairman, who is in Europe for meetings of the World Federation of Trade Unions.

RABBI WISE, head of the American Jewish Congress, told the crowd of 500 that "even as Hitler feared the Jewish devotion to the democratic ideal, so he feared and oppressed and sought to destroy yet another bulwark of democracy, namely, organized labor.

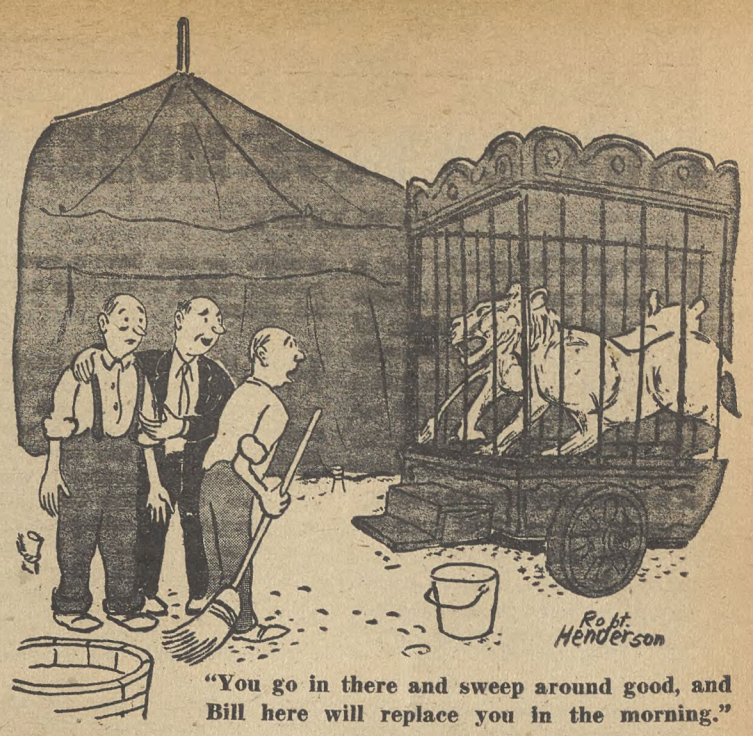
"And in striking down and dispossessing and lynching the leaders of organized labor, he struck a second, terrible blow at democracy."

The awards, made by the committee several weeks ago, were presented to the recipients in the New York area by members of the group. Rabbi Wise was lauded for "his tireless work, over a period of years, to promote tolerance among races and creeds" and for his recognition of the fact that "no minority is secure so long as any minority is persecuted."

PRES. POTOFSKY of the Amalgamated was cited for continuing the democratic union policies of the late Sidney Hillman. The ACW, the citation said, has shown that "men of many races, creeds and nationalities can work together in harmony for the greatest good of the greatest number."

Potofsky, in a message of reply to the committee, urged that strong steps be taken to fight discrimination before the strains and stresses of a possible depression make the job more difficult.

PRES. RIEVE of the Textile Workers Union was praised for his fight of several years against "discrimination and intolerance." The TWUA, with its thousands of workers in the southern states, "has made conspicuous progress in educating both its members and the communities in which they live that discrimination injures everyone," the citation said.



"You go in there and sweep around good, and Bill here will replace you in the morning."

Report Baring Fascism Wins Few Friends in Congress

YOU'D think that with all the trouble the U. S. has had with Fascist nations, it would be easy to get Congress to approve publication of a booklet on Fascism.

Rep. Wright Patnam (D. Tex.) probably thought so, too, but for several months he has been vainly trying to get his colleagues to authorize government printing of the document "Fascism in Action," prepared by the Library of Congress.

The booklet tells the methods by which Fascist groups seized power in Germany, Italy and Spain.

By constant prodding, Patman about a month ago got a subcommittee of the House administration committee to report the document to the full committee, without any recommendations.

The full committee got around to holding three hearings this week before deciding to postpone action for two weeks to allow Patman—if he desired—to delete passages the committee found objectionable.

PATMAN testified before the administration committee that never before in his 18 years in the House had he seen a committee hold up publication of a public document in order to weigh its merits at a public hearing.

He declared that Fascist groups in the U. S. "have the same earmarks as those that took power in other countries. Exposure through this study will help in stemming the danger to democracy for them."

Rep. Fred Busbey (R. Ill.) objected to the document because it calls Franco Spain a Fascist nation. Franco Spain, he added, "is in position to aid us in a possible future emergency." Busbey described the authorities quoted in the book as "pro-communist."

He also said that he was afraid of libel suits because the document tells about international cartels, including the relations of concerns like I. G. Farben in Germany with the duPont interests in the U. S. and others. Meanwhile, the House unAmerican subcommittee on Fascism is planning to hold hearings.

TWO members of the unAmerican Activities subcommittee on fascism, Rep. John McDowell (R. Pa.) and Rep. Richard Vail (R. Ill.), last week saw little danger of Fascism in the U. S. Observers are wondering what—if anything—hearings conducted by such men will uncover.

Vail, at a 10-minute meeting of the subcommittee, declared that he "wouldn't know a fascist if I had one by the tail." He owns the Vail Mfg. Co., Chicago, which has successfully barred the CIO Steelworkers from its plant, although the NLRB found the firm guilty of unfair labor practices and was upheld by the courts.

ASK STEEL SHORTAGE PROBE

WHY isn't the auto industry getting enough steel to build cars? Why are members of the CIO Auto Workers Union plagued with layoffs and short work weeks, attributed by management to shortages of steel?

This week the UAW asked Congress to investigate the capacity and production of the steel industry and the distribution of its products.

A letter from UAW Pres. Walter Reuther to Sen. Kenneth S. Wherry, of the Senate Small Business Committee, said a report based on published data showed that total steel production in the first quarter of 1947 was enough to "provide for a considerably greater output of cars and trucks than the industry produced," if the industry received its historical proportion of the total product.

Total steel production for the first quarter of 1947 was 35% above the quarterly average for 1940, yet auto production for the first quarter of 1947 was only 4% over the quarterly average of 1940, the UAW report said.

If You Can Afford One

WASHING MACHINE WILL LIGHTEN BLUE MONDAY

By JO LYNNE

IF EVERY housewife had a washing machine, blue Monday might become a thing of the past. Not every housewife can afford one, but as more and more machines come on the market in varying price ranges, washers become more of a possibility for the average household. The right machine for you may depend upon many factors. Some points should be kept in mind when making a choice.

Should you get an automatic? An automatic costs more to buy and to operate and requires a lot of fairly soft hot and cold water. Some types require bolting to the floor and are obviously unsuitable for apartment use and often need more pressure than the city water system provides.

If you can use an automatic, though, washing is a snap. You put in the clothes, set the controls, add soap and let the machine do the rest. It washes, rinses, damp-dries, cleans and drains the tub, leaving only the trap for you to clean.

The non-automatic washer, on the other hand, may require wringing piece by piece, in a wringer, or may have a separate spinner which damp-dries a tubful at once.

HOW big should your machine be? Government home-equipment specialists point out that some washers take more water than others for the same size load, a point to consider if water is scarce, the water rate high, and pumping or heating water is a problem. Consider not only the size of your washing but how you sort clothes for washer loads and how often you wash.

Portable washing machines, holding up to three pounds, are handy for baby clothes and small things but do not help much with family wash.

Also try to get a machine with control levers placed so you can reach them easily; rubber-covered swivel casters with locks on the casters to hold the machine steady when in use; an easily seen waterline; and a device for grounding the washer frame to avoid electric shock if the insulation should fail.

In a well-built washer, the agriculture department says, all parts coming in contact with clothes should be rustproof and gears enclosed. It has no sharp edges or rough screw and rivet heads that might tear clothes. Tub and motor should be mounted on rubber or hung on springs to lessen vibration and noise.

Be sure the local dealer from whom you buy has a dependable service department and, as a double check, look for the seal of the Underwriters Laboratories to make sure that the motor and all electrical connections have been approved as safe.

Then watch your washday backaches and laundry bills dwindle.

UNIONS SPONSOR CAMP FOR KIDS

A SUMMER camp accommodating two to three hundred children is being provided jointly by CIO and AFL unions of Muskegon, Mich., supported by others who warmly approve the project. The camp opens June 23 and will receive a new batch of kids every eight weeks.

A 1,200-acre stretch of wooded dunes, fronting on Lake Michigan, Muskegon Lake and Channel and equipped by the state for camping, will be the camp site. The children will be carried by bus to the park every day, given a hot meal and brought back to their homes in Muskegon at nightfall.

"The AFL and CIO in Muskegon are proving that they can live and work together when there is need for a public service in the community," comments the Western Michigan News.

ARE MANNERS OR APPETITE MORE IMPORTANT?

No, he hasn't chicken pox! He's just being allowed to learn to feed himself by healthy minded parents who know that children encouraged to help themselves (but helped as they show signs of fatigue) learn sooner than others to be self reliant. Such youngsters have natural healthy appetites and rarely fuss about eating. On occasional off-appetite days, wise parents do not urge them to eat, knowing they'll eat to-morrow, if they don't today. With friendly suggestions, good manners come in due time, especially if children are not pressured by over-anxious parents. (Copyright 1947, The CIO News).

Sprucing Up

Lower Prices?

By HANNA SHERMAN

TIME was you could go to your favorite shop and get value received for your money. And there was a great advantage to this. For even when you spent a little more on some things you were likely to get extra services that made the whole transaction friendly, pleasant and worth your while. So you bought everything you needed in one place.

That was in the old days, before the war. Then, except for special advertised sales, an article costing $5.98 in one store was sure to have a similar price tag in most others.

But the war came and in spite of OPA price ceilings, there was a hidden price rise. We paid good money for clothing of shoddy workmanship and poor fabrics. We needed some things, so we bought them. But I don't think that any of us were fooled even for a minute into thinking that we really got our money's worth.

Then OPA ceilings were lifted and the price of the same shoddy clothing reached new highs. We, as customers, really balked. In the trade, they explain this by saying that customers are "leery" of the new fashions. Consumer resistance is recognized as a real problem. Another reason — the fact that you and I have less money to spend—is mentioned only by the most progressive merchants and manufacturers, who wish OPA were back in the picture.

ON the bright side, we can expect prices to come down this fall. Already some clothing has felt the price slash. Just how much more prices will drop depends to a great extent on you. To get the most for your money now, you must shop all stores thoroughly, comparing item for item as to price and value before you make a final purchase.

Merchandise is more plentiful now, inventories are high. Both manufacturers and retailers are competing for your business. If you are determined not to pay the inflated price of the last few years, you can, by your buying power, bring the prices down to a level we can all afford.

THERE are some stunning cotton dresses around the $10.95 mark, others overpriced at least three times their value selling for $50 and $60. The fabrics in both are chambray in this case, cost about 65c a yard. The same amazing trend can be seen in play clothes, summer suits, shoes, hats and other accessories. It's not sale merchandise reduced for clearance we're talking about, but new clothing made this season.

So whatever your needs, or your family's are at the moment, no matter how pressed you are for time, "shop around." You will not only save money now, you'll indicate by your buying power that you are sick to death of high prices. You'll show that you, as Mrs. Consumer will have nothing more to do with them. Then watch prices next fall. They will be dropping fast and you will have made it happen. (Copyright 1947, The CIO NEWS).

FAVORS RICH 1,313 TO 1

UNDER the tax bill passed by Congress and now before the President—

A man with a wife and two children who earns $2,500 a year saves $28.50 a year in taxes.

A man with a $300,000 income saves $37,430 a year. This is 1,313 times the poor man's $28.50 saving.

On that basis, the CIO last week appealed to President Truman to veto the bill, since it "gives major tax relief to the high income individuals who least need it."

In a letter to the White House, Legislative Director Nathan Cowan recommended that Congress take action to increase personal exemptions from income taxes. Such a move would produce a more equal cut in taxes of both rich and poor.

it could put mousetraps in front of several big loopholes in the present tax laws. This would bring in millions of dollars which now escape taxation through technicalities.

Cowan noted that corporation profits taxes would also swell government revenue. "With corporate profits now running at their highest annual rate in the history of America, there is adequate room here for additional revenue," he said.

THE tax bill, fresh from a conference compromise session, moved through the Senate on a 48-24 vote—presumably enough to uphold a Presidential veto if many absent Senators were present—and was passed by the House 220-99.

In the House it came in for some rough examination by liberal Rep. Dingell (D., Mich.) and Rep. Eberharter (D., Pa.).

Dingell branded the bill as a "fraud," charged that it is worse than the Mellon tax plan of 1924, proposed by the Pennsylvania multimillionaire when he was Secretary of the Treasury, and charged that it "is vicious in favoritism."

Keep Your Eye On Congress

Taft-Hartley Anti-Union Bill HR 3020	Curbs all union activity, weakens collective bargaining with delays, injunctions, red tape, govt. intervention.	Final version passed by House and Senate. Pres. Truman has 10 days to veto or sign.	Wire Pres. Truman to send vigorous veto message. Wire Congressmen & Senators to uphold veto.
"Swiss Cheese" Rent Control Bill HR 3203	Extends rent control but permits "voluntary" 15% rent hikes on leases. Also weakens enforcement.	Bills passed by House & Senate. Now in conference committee to compromise differences.	Write Senators, Congressmen to stand fast for "as is" extension of rent controls.
Knutson Tax Bill HR 1	Cuts taxes heavily on big personal incomes, gives small cuts on small incomes.	Passed by Senate & House. Now awaits Presidential veto or signature.	Wire, write Pres. Truman to veto bill on basis it favors wealthy taxpayers.
Taft-Wagner-Ellender Housing Bills S. 866, HR 2523	Long-range housing program, with govt. help to spur construction of low-rent and slum clearance projects.	Approved by Senate Banking Comm., but not yet debated. House Banking Comm. boycotting housing bill.	Ask Senators to force early vote and pass. Ask Congressmen to demand hearing by Banking Comm.
National Health Insurance Bill S. 1320 HR 3548	Introduced by group of liberal Senators & Rep. Dingell in House. Sets up health insurance program based on 1½% payroll deduction.	Referred to Senate Labor Comm. and House Ways and Means Comm. Senate hearings now in progress.	Ask Senators, Congressmen to urge fast action by committees.
Federal Anti-Lynch Bill HR 3488	Makes lynching a federal crime, to be prosecuted in U. S. Courts.	Referred to House Judiciary Committee.	Write Chrmn. Michener (R., Mich.) and your Congressman to get fastest possible action.
Anti-bias Bill S. 984 HR 2820	Sets up natl. agency to enforce anti-bias policy on jobs, hiring. Uses voluntary and compulsory methods.	Referred to Senate & House Labor Committees. Senate sub-committee headed by Donnell (R. Mo.) opens hearings in June.	Write Senators & Congressmen to give strong support. Ask Rep. Hartley to order House hearings.

THE BILL before the President (HR 1) was sponsored by Sen. Knutson (R. Minn.) and was first sold as an "equality tax cut," since it proposed a straight 20% cut on everybody's income tax.

After the propaganda had blown away, CIO and other organizations pointed out that the Knutson bill was merely a pretty way of making big cuts in taxes of the wealthy, and trifling cuts in taxes of the middle and lower income groups.

"Fifty-three per cent of the taxpayers, some 26 million individuals, with earnings of less than $2,000 a year, receive on the average a tax saving of $37.52," Cowan said about the present bill.

"On the other side of the income ledger there are 1,948,000 taxpayers who have incomes in excess of $5,000 a year. They constitute less than 4% of the total taxpayers, but yet each of these individuals will receive, on the average, tax savings of $742."

So, Cowan pointed out, 26 million taxpayers will save about a billion dollars in taxes. And two million higher-bracket taxpayers will save about a billion and a half dollars.

"I, therefore, ask you once again in the interest of increasing purchasing power and promoting full employment and full production that you veto this bill and ask the Congress to pass a tax act which basically increases the purchasing power of the mass of American consumers," Cowan said.

"This can best be done by a tax act which increases the personal exemptions of individual income taxpayers."

If Congress really wants to balance the budget, the CIO legisaltive spokesman declared,

Little Hope For Vets

HIGH PRICES HALT BUILDING; HOUSING BILL STALLED

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

THE building boom has gone bust. Elaborate plans and promises worked out by private builders throughout the country for building critically-needed homes are being junked. The reason: rising prices.

The Taft-Wagner-Ellender bill promising a government long-range program to get homes built and rented at low prices, is moving at snail's pace in the Senate

In the House, Rep. Jesse Wolcott (R. Mich.) has flatly refused even to hold hearings on the bill at this session. Efforts by fellow members of the House Banking & Currency Committee, which Wolcott heads, to change his mind have ended in failure.

Along with the rosy predictions of the real estate lobby that the private construction industry would provide more than enough homes for all, have gone the hopes of millions of wage-earners and veterans for decent living space.

IN a special report on the subject, the Natl. Public Housing Conference had this to say:

"Every government and business survey, every newspaper headline, tells the same dismal story: Instead of a building boom, a building bust. Half of the promised million homes have died aborning killed by rocketing prices and the shortsighted profit-scramble by all sectors of the home building industry."

Back in January, the NPHC recalled, the builders trade group—the Natl. Assn. of Home Builders—had promised "good news" for homeseekers. A million new residential units will be on the market during the year, the prediction had said.

But higher prices—in many cases brought about by the builders themselves—killed the pretty promise.

Under the old price control law, building materials had jumped by 50% to 100% during 1946. That wasn't enough for the profiteers. In October, 1946, the Home Builders Assn. passed a resolution calling for complete removal of all price controls. And eventaully off they came, late in '46

Early last month the Scripps-Howard newspaper chain—a vigorous foe of price control—admitted:

"Acute shortages persist, but signs point to a smaller volume of new homes to be started this year than in 1946.

"Building has slowed almost to a standstill in some cities."

And about the same time the N. Y. Times revealed that plans for 100 million dollars worth of apartment construction in the nation's biggest city had been scuttled—even though Manhattan needs an additional 100,000 apartments.

THESE developments spring from an increase in the price of building materials of 26% since last November. This is nearly one-third of the total price increase since 1940.

The effects of this inflation on the hopes of American families for dwelling space are being felt not only in New York but in every other city, according to the Natl. Public Housing Conference.

In the New York City area, actual housing construction started in the months of January and February of this year were 53% below the same period in 1946. In Detroit, new building was down 37%. In Chicago, it had fallen 31%.

Last year, the builders put the blame on price control. This year, with controls gone and prices up, the builders are trying to blame labor. Herbert Nelson, head of the powerful Natl. Assn. of Real Estate Boards, tried to argue that 90% of the cost of a house is labor

He kept quiet about the fact that the price increase for materials has been five times the increase of weekly wages in the building industry.

IN this crisis labor and liberal groups have been demanding prompt action on the Taft-Wagner-Ellender bill. The bill was approved by the Senate Banking Committee, 7-6, and Sen. Taft (R. O.) has promised some supporters that it will be acted upon before adjournment.

An increasing number of Senators, noting the big mail from constituents on the housing issue, have begun to demand fast action.

But in the House, Rep. Wolcott—who helped give the builders the price increases they want—sits tight and refuses to act. In a letter to 18 organizations—including CIO—which had called for hearings, Wolcott said that "in all probability" none would be held this session.

Rep. Merlin Hull (R. Wis.), a member of the GOP liberal wing, wrote recently that members of the committee "have no more power to bring that bill before the committee than you have," since the party steering committees and the committee chairmen are in "almost complete control" of the action schedule.

In an effort to break the log jam, supporters of the bill have named June 25 as "Fight for Housing Day" and some 500 persons will come to Washington to talk with Senators and Congressmen

Unless they can get action, the housing situation isn't going to get any better. And if the 15% "voluntary" rent increase approved last week by House and Senate gets a final OK, a lot of people are going to suffer even more

John Green Named To U. S. Committee

Pres. John Green of the CIO Marine & Shipbuilding Workers has been appointed to the Federal Committee on Apprenticeship by Secretary of Labor Lewis B. Schwellenbach.

The Federal Committee is the national policy-making body for the U. S. Dept. of Labor apprenticeship and apprentice training service, and is composed of an equal number of representatives of labor and management.

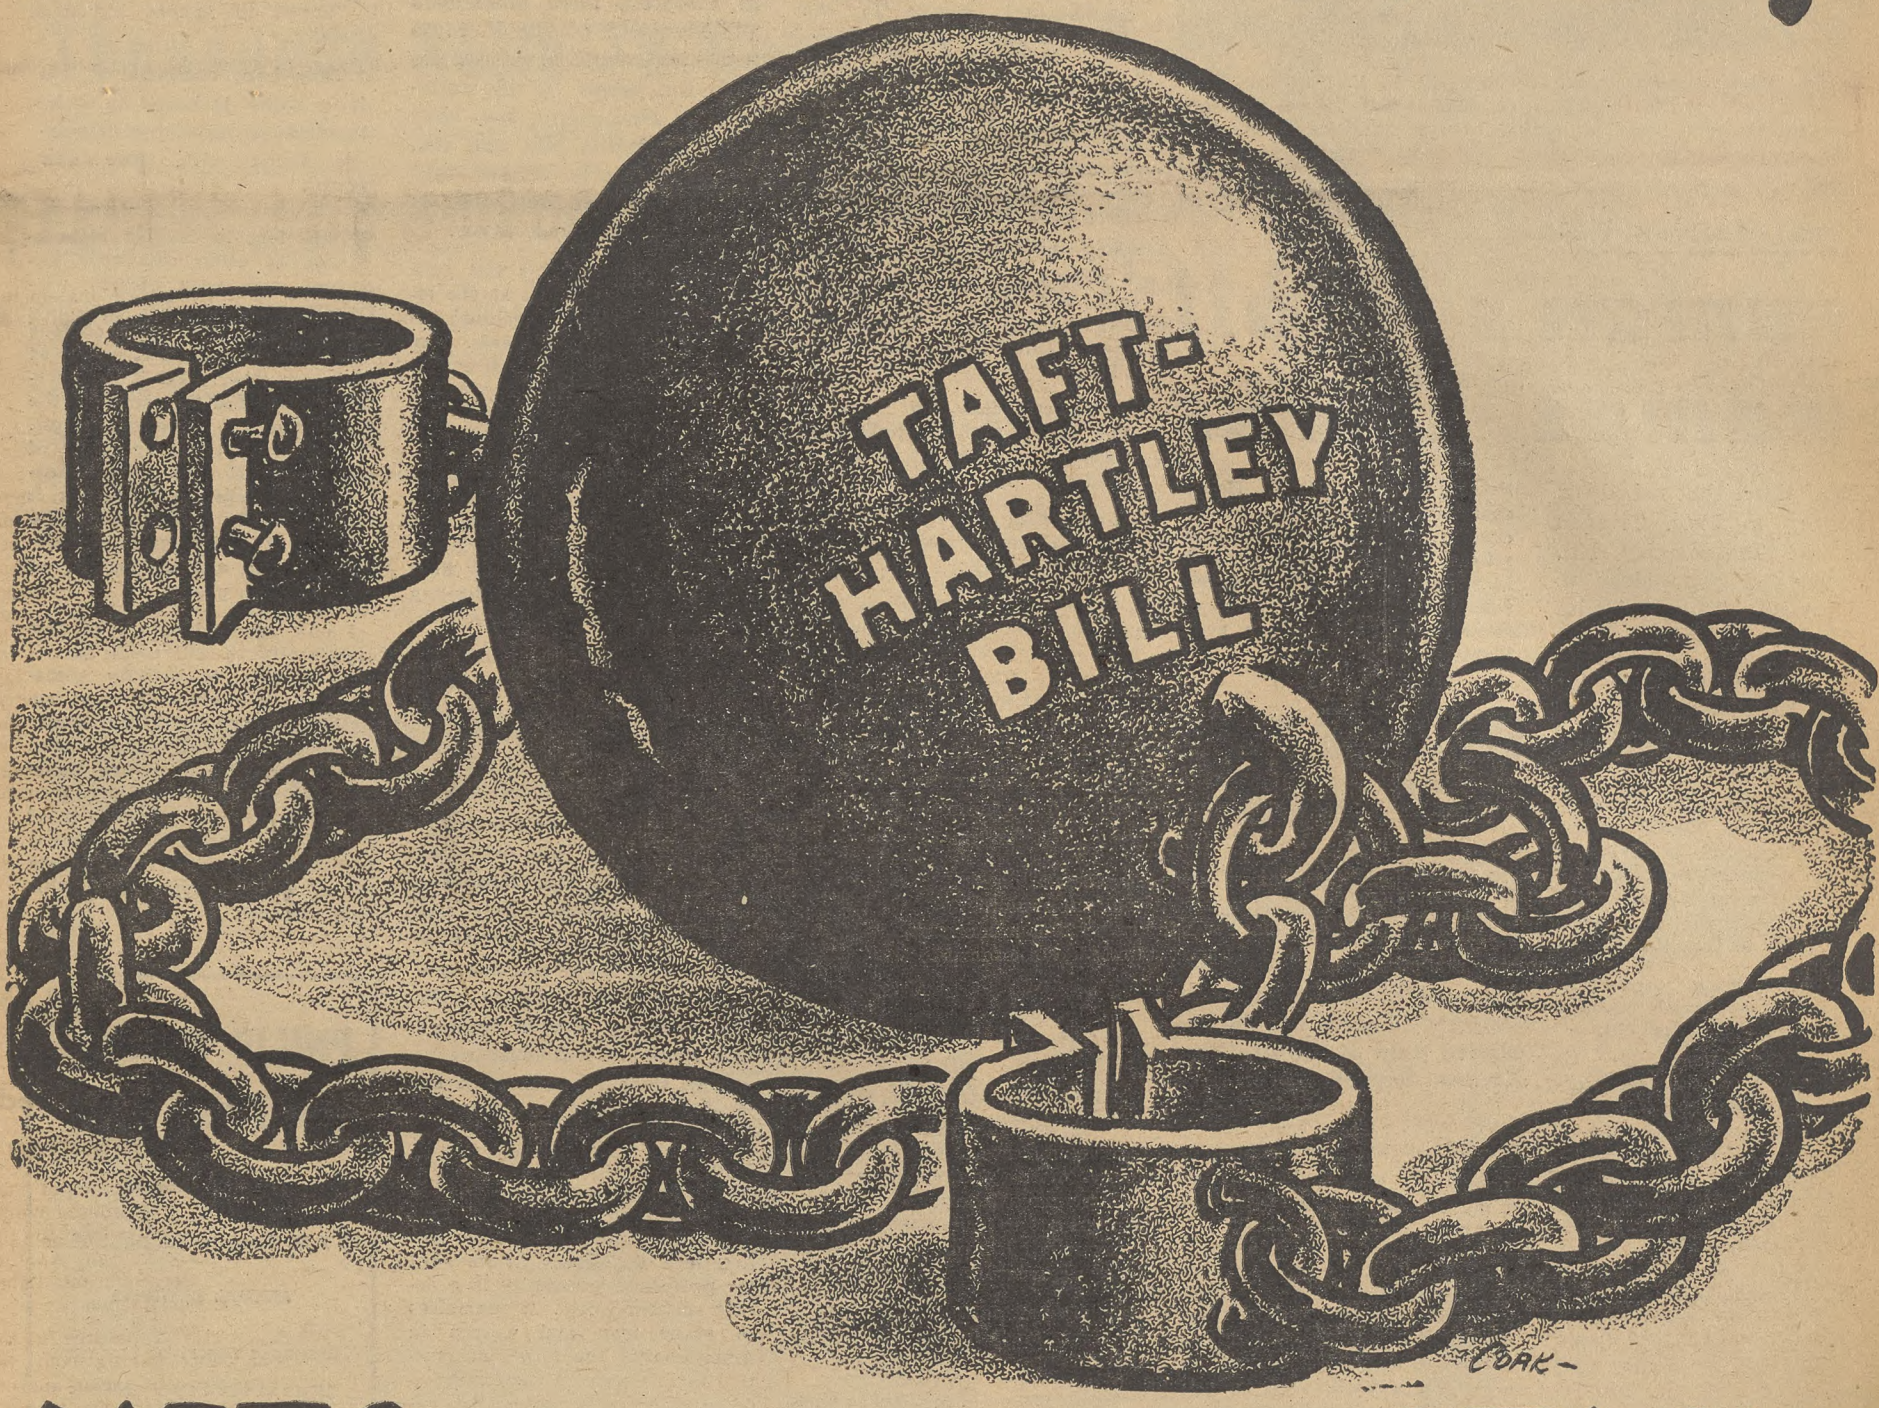
KEEP LABOR FREE!



VETO-and make it STICK!

The largest labor demonstration ever held in N. Y. City this week demanded a veto of the Taft-Hartley bill. One hundred thousand marchers wound up a four-hour parade to pack Madison Square Garden with an over-flow protest meeting.

N. Y. SPARKS RALLIES AGAINST TAFT BILL

NEW YORKERS paced the nation this week in mass turnouts against the Taft-Hartley bill that have aroused the public in virtually every community.

The biggest labor demonstration Manhattan ever has seen combined a parade of 100,000 CIO members and an overflow rally at Madison Square Garden.

Led by a color guard of veterans, the parade featured banners and signs demanding a veto of the bill and support for the veto by the House and Senate. Over half a million New Yorkers lined the streets to watch.

THE rally that followed—with thousands listening in the streets via public address systems—featured CIO Pres. Philip Murray and Mayor William O'Dwyer as main speakers.

Murray (see excerpts below) warned that "I see the threat of fascism because this bill, if it becomes law, will work a fundamental change in the American form of government.

"Instead of a government elected to serve the welfare of the people, it will be a government bound by law to do the bidding of employers against their workers. Can this be called by any other name than fascism?"

THE bill—supported overwhelmingly by the Republicans and by the reactionary Democrats—drew sharp criticism also from Democratic Mayor O'Dwyer.

"To call this bill 'mild' is like saying that tuberculosis is mild because it's not as bad as smallpox," the Mayor declared.

Lambasting the Republicans as "out to smash your unions," O'Dwyer warned:

"The Taft-Hartley bill is a depression bill. It will undermine free labor unions. It will stall collective bargaining. It will again bring about low wages and sweatshops conditions."

ADDING their voices to opposition to the bill were two prominent religious leaders, the Most Rev. Bernard J. Shiel who spoke via telephone from Chicago, and Dr. Stephen S. Wise, president of the American Jewish Congress.

Bishop Shiel declared that the bill is "a death blow aimed at all unionism," and predicted that it would foster industrial strife.

He said it contains "some of the most unintelligent provisions to come out of the Halls of Congress in many years."

Dr. Wise pointed out that President Truman was elected as part of the progressive Roosevelt administration.

"To fail to veto the Taft-Hartley bill would be to join in the repudiation of Roosevelt," Dr. Wise declared. He urged a "clear, explicit, decisive" veto.

"The President's veto ought to be so scathing as to compel Democratic members of the Senate to leave the anti-labor bipartisans in the Senate responsible for this iniquity.

ADDITIONAL support came from former members of the War Labor Board, who handled thousands of disputes that were settled in most part peacefully by negotiation and arbitration.

Both George W. Taylor and William H. Davis, former chiefs of the WLB, urged defeat of the bill, as did former public members Frank P. Graham, Edwin E. Witte, Nathan P. Feinsinger, Wayne L. Morse and Lloyd K. Garrison.

TO THE PEOPLE, A CHALLENGE!

By CIO PRES. PHILIP MURRAY

(Excerpts of a speech prepared for the New York CIO Rally)

BY passing the Taft-Hartley bill the reactionary forces in Congress have challenged the President of the U. S. to test his strength against theirs with the people of this country. In challenging him they are challenging you and me. They arrogantly believe that the tide of last November is still running in their favor.

The election returns last year reflected bewilderment at the effects of hasty and haphazard removal of wartime controls. The reactionaries do not realize that the American people have recovered from those confusions, and are aroused from that apathy . . .

We can now see quite clearly the effects of the destruction of price control. We can see, too, that the same groups who inflated our prices and are now bent on raising our rents are leading the fight for those anti-labor bills.

Throughout this spring the American people have been waking up, and now they know that a fraud is being perpetrated upon them.

Taft and Hartley have cut the heart out of the Norris-LaGuardia and Wagner Acts—and they say in the bill that they do so to "prescribe fair and equitable rules of conduct to be observed by labor and management in their relations with one another," and to "protect the rights of individual workers in their relations with labor organizations" . . .

SOME people say this bill turns the clock back. It does far, far more than that. It creates a new and shorter timetable for American democracy in its fight for peace and prosperity in a decent postwar world. It announces to every man and woman in America that the forces of reaction in this country want a showdown with free American labor—and they want it now.

This is a dangerously provocative bill. In the face of a series of peaceful settlements worked out by the leading CIO unions throughout this spring, the authors of this bill have gone steadily ahead to foment industrial disorder.

They have concocted a foul brew which is bound to make hundreds of anti-labor employers drunk with their new power.

TIME forbids further elaboration of other extremely important and very vicious provisions suggested by the Taft-Hartley law. It is quite obvious that the bill is directed solely at American labor. But it is nevertheless intended to undermine the liberties of the American people. It strikes at the very heart of democracy. It is a fascist measure, and indisputably so. It is premeditatedly prepared for the purpose of destroying the democratic ideals and aspirations of the American people.

I now take advantage of this opportunity to call upon American workers to solidify themselves in the great political activities of the CIO. I ask all our membership and all other citizens who sympathize with the noble aspirations of our movement to join with us in the perfection of a powerful political instrument to rebuff and return to private life all of the supporters of this ugly measure.

For Taft-Hartley Veto

Truman's Mail Swamps Clerks

IF YOU think that nobody is writing to Pres. Truman about the Taft-Hartley bill, don't mention your ideas to hard-pressed White House mail clerks.

Mail bags addressed to the President have been arriving at an unprecedented rate during recent weeks.

A White House spokesman estimated that over 100,000 letters and more than 350,000 postcards have been delivered to Pres. Truman since the middle of May. Additional thousands had been received prior to that time.

An overwhelming proportion of the letters and cards favored veto of the Taft-Hartley bill.

IN addition to the letters, petitions bearing more than half a million signatures were to be presented to the White House by CIO officials early this week. A Dayton, Ohio, CIO council group came into Washington a week ago with 50,000 signatures, which have already been turned over to the President's office. Sen. Downey (D. Cal.) who received between 40,000 and 50,000 signatures from Irwin De Shetler, CIO regional director in Los Angeles, a couple of weeks ago, is also planning to bring the petitions to Pres. Truman's attention.

The petitions accumulating at CIO headquarters for delivery to the White House come from every section of the country. Some are battered and soiled, having been circulated in factories and mills, but the signatures are just as good as those on neater, flossier petitions.

SEE TIDE TURN FOR LABOR

IN a special election in the 3rd District of Washington on June 7, Russell V. Mack, Republican, and wealthy newspaper publisher, was elected to Congress to serve out the unexpired term of the late Fred Norman, Republican.

Mack defeated Charles R. Savage, Democrat, former Congressman, logger and former business agent of the CIO Woodworkers, by a vote of 32,449 to 30,939.

Commenting on the election, Burke Christie of the union, and chairman of the Labor Committee for Savage, said, "The results of the election indicate clearly a definite turn in the tide against Republican reaction."

"In spite of the loss of the election by such a small majority, real gains have been chalked up over the 1946 election when the Republicans carried the district by 7,000 votes. This is not a numerical gain alone. For in this election the strength of labor, independent and progressive voters reached a new high."

The 30,939 votes for Savage were particularly significant in view of the fact that some conservative forces in the Democratic Party did not support his candidacy, according to press reports.

This giant postcard on New Orleans' Canal St. was signed by hundreds of passersby. It was mailed to the President by the CIO Council.

Madison Square Garden in N. Y. City was jammed with scores of thousands of people who joined labor in protesting the Taft-Hartley bill. L. to r.: Vice-Pres. Hyman Blumberg, Amalgamated Clothing Workers; CIO Pres. Murray; Mayor O'Dwyer; Sec. Saul Mills, N. Y. City CIO Council; and Pres. Louis Hollander, N. Y. State CIO.

Thousands Rally To Keep Labor Free

THE Taft-Hartley bill must be beaten! That was the message drummed into Washington's ears by labor and its thousands of progressive allies this week from every section of the nation.

Demands for a Presidential veto and for support of it by House and Senate came from tens of thousands of Americans — wires, letters, postcards, petitions, rallies, parades, radio broadcasts, newspaper ads and delegations featured the campaign to keep labor free.

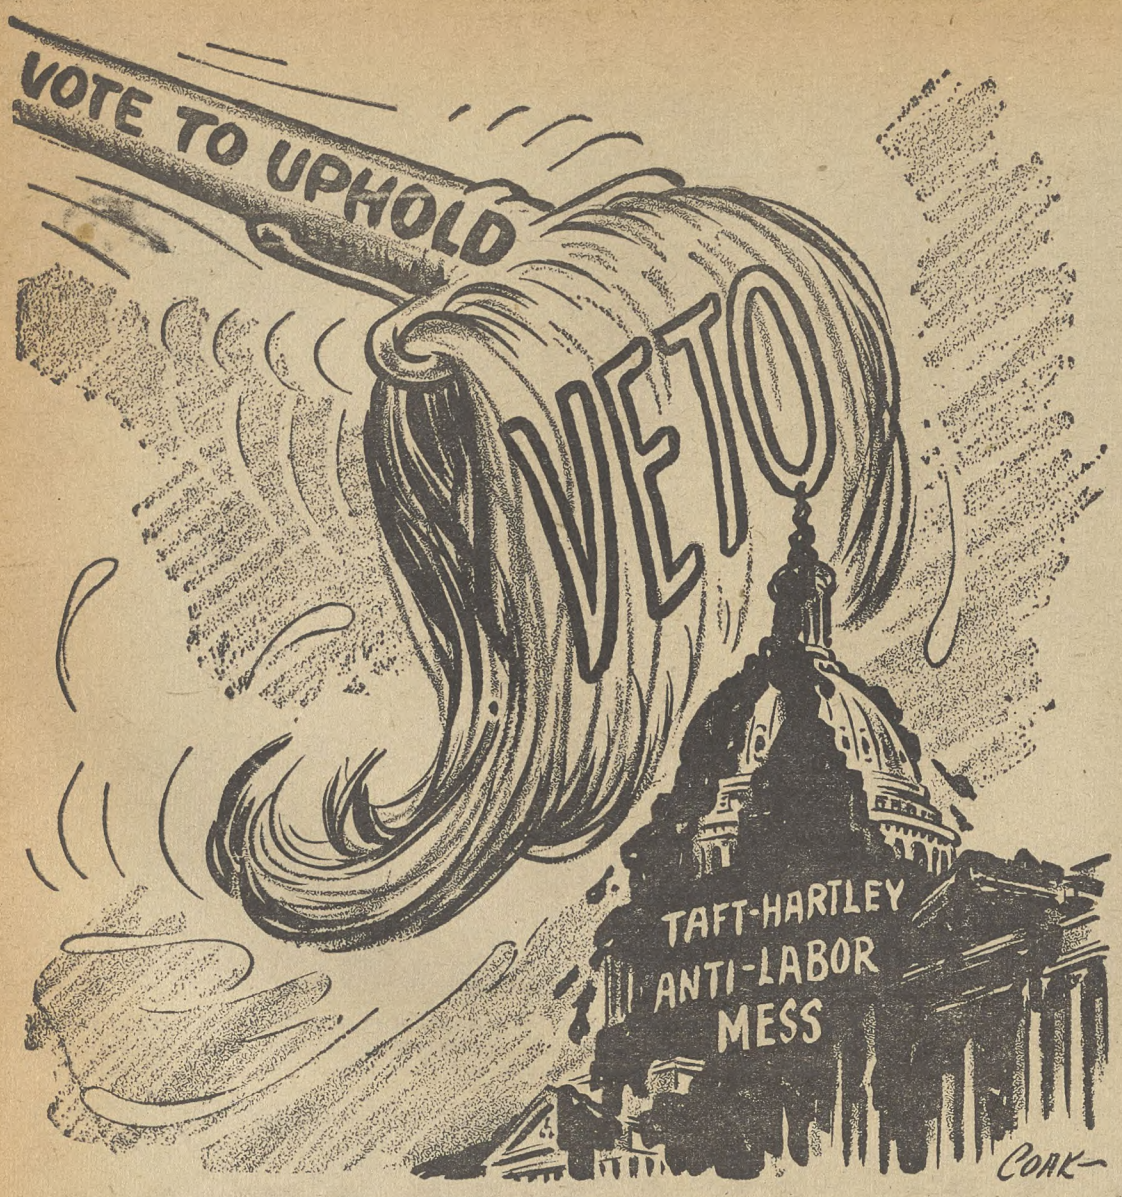
Resolutions urging a veto and Congressional support for it were passed by City Councils in Chicago; Pert Amboy, New Brunswick and Elizabeth, N. J.; Sheboygan, Wis.; and Baltimore, during the last week. Mayors of Detroit, New York, Newark, Elizabeth and Dayton, O., urged similar action, as did the governor of Rhode Island. And Democratic Party officials or groups in Michigan, Ohio, New York, Colorado, Montana, Wyoming and Iowa urged defeat of the bill.

Among organizations lending labor last-minute support were: Progressive Citizens of America, Americans for Democratic Action, Natl. Farmers Union, Natl. Lawyers Guild, American Jewish Congress, Social Action Dept. of the Natl. Catholic Welfare Conference, Northern Baptists and Natl. Religion and Labor Foundation.

CIO Pres. Murray warned the N. Y. rally of "the threat of fascism" in the Taft-Hartley bill because, if it passes, government by law will do the bidding of employers against workers.

Another giant postcard to the President was mailed by the Dayton, Ohio CIO Council. A Council delegation delivered petitions to the White House with 50,000 signatures against the Taft-Hartley bill.

Thousands of signatures against the Taft-Hartley bill were collected on Pittsburgh streets, and were brought to the White House by this delegation, from the CIO Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers.



BIG CLEAN-UP JOB TO DO

AMERICAN working people are not the only folks who will suffer if the Taft-Hartley bill is finally enacted.

Its purpose is to check union organization, to weaken the workers' bargaining power, and so to degrade their living standards. It also strikes at their democratic rights and liberties in many ways.

The lowering of living standards and the infringements of civil rights which this bill threatens will have adverse effects on all other sections of the population whose welfare depends on mass purchasing power and whose liberties are also endangered by any undermining of our democracy.

EVEN the employers on whose behalf the Taft-Hartley bill has been promoted may live to regret its enactment.

The drive for this legislation has come from the big-business monopolists who control the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers, rather than from the ordinary run of employers. And even these big-money boys may find it is a boomerang.

Some significant warnings are given to employers by the Executive's Labor Letter, on the basis of consultations with experienced industrial relations directors.

It points out that, whereas the Taft-Hartley bill will make it easier for employers to resist union organization and to kill off weak unions, there will be more industrial strife as a result and heightened dissension between unionized and non-unionized employes.

Other results will be a tremendous increase in litigation which may ensnarl thousands of employers in red tape for years to come; and greatly increased government dictation in industrial relations.

Finally, this employers' service predicts that the Taft-Hartley bill will result in political action by unions on a greater scale than ever before.

AMONG those who may have most cause to regret enactment of this anti-labor bill are the members of Congress who vote for it.

Because big business so ardently desires the Taft-Hartley bill, and has used all its enormous powers of wealth, political influence and control over press and radio to campaign for it, many politicians have kidded themselves into believing that the voice of big business is the voice of the people.

They are due for a rude awakening.

The millions of workers organized in unions have been aroused by this threat as never before.

The imposing mass demonstrations, the millions of names signed to petitions, the huge flood of wires, letters and postcards against the bill are only part of the evidence.

Labor's campaign against the Taft-Hartley bill has reached to and comes from the grass roots of America, and countless folks outside of labor's ranks have also been made aware of its menace.

It the bill is enacted, its effects will do far more to arouse the people; and every member of Congress will feel the results at the next elections.

★ ★ ★

CONGRESS itself has been smeared by its reactionary majority.

Not only through the Taft-Hartley bill, but through legislation to undermine the wage-hour act, to raise prices and rents, to favor the rich in taxation and coddle the profiteer—and through their failure to enact any legislation beneficial to the common people—these tories have created a Congressional mess that must be cleaned up.

This clean-up job can be started by a vigorous veto of the Taft-Hartley bill and by Congressional action to uphold the veto. It is not too late to wire the President and your members of Congress, particularly your Senators.

LOOKING AHEAD

BY LEN DE CAUX

SENATOR Taft's idea of 50-50 treatment for capital and labor seems to be 50 percent for the boss and 50 cents for the worker.

But, after studying his Senate speeches claiming the Taft-Hartley bill gives equal treatment to employers and employes, we get a glimmer of what he must mean.

If an employer goes union organizing, demanding higher wages, striking and picketing, he might get it in the neck from this bill just as much as any union man.

On the other hand, the worker can enjoy all the privileges the bill gives to employers. All he has to do is to buy a plant—it's a free country—and become an employer himself.

Then he too can fire union members "for cause"—any old cause will do—deny them union security, promote company unionism, bust real unions through the courts, and get the government to issue strike-breaking injunctions.

It's all perfectly fair and square—as fair as a brunette and as square as a ball.

★ ★ ★

THE FULL flavor of Taft's thinking on equality may be found in his defense of the section of the Taft-Hartley bill which prohibits any corporation or labor organization from making any political "contribution or expenditure."

Taft interprets this to mean a union may spend no money whatever for political purposes. This is fair and square, he says, since a similar ban applies to corporations.

Of course, every individual corporation big-shot, and each of his relatives, may contribute $5,000 apiece to a political campaign.

But then, individual union members are similarly free to contribute $5,000 apiece.

Can Taft help it if workers haven't got that kind of dough, and can only try to match employers' contributions by pooling pennies through their unions?

★ ★ ★

BUT THE real gimmick is in the new ban on political "expenditures."

Taft said this would forbid a union to issue pamphlets, buy radio time, place advertisements or use its periodicals for any political purpose.

Questioned by Senator Pepper and others about the effect of this on the labor press, he said it would mean that no union-financed paper could take any stand on political candidates.

But this was fair and square, Taft claimed, since corporations were also forbidden to print political stuff in their house organs.

Union members, he added, were as free as capitalists to start regular newspapers, supported by advertising and subscriptions, which might take any political position.

So, brothers, individually we're are free as any multi-millionaire to put a few tens of millions into a daily paper or chain of papers.

All Taft wants is to stop us from pooling our pennies through our unions to publish any paper expressing our political viewpoint.

★ ★ ★

BIG BUSINESS makes its money count in politics, not only by direct contributions, but even more through its ownership of the big-time press, radio, etc.

If you doubt who controls the daily press, and whose political interests it serves, consider its almost unanimous opposition to Roosevelt's New Deal and its attitude on the Taft-Hartley bill.

The Twohey Analysis of Newspaper Opinion reports this anti-labor bill is "given stronger newspaper support than any major policy of recent years," with 93% of the press supporting it, 3% noncommittal, and only 4% opposing.

★ ★ ★

THE PRESS has become so monopolized that nearly 92% of daily newspaper towns now have only one daily. Chains control more than half the total newspaper circulation; and nearly half the Sunday circulation is controlled by fewer than 50 millionaire owners.

A result of this increasing big-business monopoly is that it now takes millions of dollars to launch a daily paper or big-time magazine with any chance of competitive survival.

Working people don't happen to be millionaires. So the nearest they can come to countering the political influence of the employers' press is by pooling their meager resources through their unions to publish a comparatively small and weak labor press.

But Taft would deny even this small measure of press freedom to American workers.

The Taft-Hartley bill's assault on labor's political and press rights is a glaring example of its fascist tendencies.

Police in Bombay break up a demonstration of Indian students. British colonial interests, defending their grip on fantastically profitable Indian trade, have long fostered religious dissension to maintain their power. The grim facts of low wages and high prices have helped building working class unity.

REBELLION IN INDIA

By GERHARD HAGELBERG and MILL ROSEMAN

400 million long-suffering Indians are scheduled to receive a small measure of "independence" from the British empire. The political future, temporarily, is peaceful. But the rumble of rebellion is still heard among the underpaid workers, who are plagued by inflation and saddled with laws that make it difficult to strike. This is their story—told by two Americans who served in India with the U. S. Army.

THE greatest strike movement in the 50-year history of organized labor in India has taken place during the past 12 months. Industrial workers and bank clerks—organized and unorganized—have rebelled against long hours, low wages, job cutbacks, appalling housing conditions and inflated prices.

India has recently made the headlines in the U. S. because of the strife and rioting between Hindu and Moslem elements. In the midst of the fighting and dissension, when politicians are arguing and sermonizing, the workers have forged new bonds of unity. Hindus and Moslems, members of all political groups in India, have cut across the lines of religion and creed and joined together in their common struggle for subsistence.

HOW to meet rising prices with shrinking wages, and where to find decent housing, are the major problems of Indian workers, problems similar to those confronting working men and women elsewhere in the world. Indian conditions, however, are vastly more acute than those in the U. S. or in Europe.

The cost of living in the U. S. has gone up tremendously. In India it has skyrocketed. The cost-of-living index for Bombay rose from 100 in August 1939 to 266 in September 1946. Increases in wages varied from only 25% in the metal trades to a high of 123% in the relatively minor engineering industries. Estimated on a conservative basis, the real wages of most workers have gone down by about 20 to 60% since 1939.

Nineteenth century economics bring high profits to a few, and misery, starvation and death to many. Jobless and weak from lack of food, these two women and their children beg with empty food plates in a Calcutta street.

Wage scales in basic industries range from $3.33 per month for miners to the munificent monthly wage of $12 for steel workers, which may be augmented with a bonus of $5. In contrast, corporation profits have increased enormously. The figures of 15 leading cotton mills in Bombay show profits rising from $2,700,000 in 1940 to $39,180,000 in 1944, an increase of over 1,450%.

With monthly wages which wouldn't buy cigarettes in the U. S., the Indian worker is completely unable to afford any sort of decent housing. Whole families live in one-room dungeons. More than 300,000 workers sleep on the sidewalks, night after night, in the city of Bombay. Conditions in other industrial centers are no better.

Even this pitiful existence is insecure. Since the end of the war, it was recently stated by N. M. Joshi, general secretary of the All-India Trade Union Congress, "the demon of retrenchment hangs over the Indian worker like a sword of Damocles." Joshi estimated that 5,000,000 persons would be affected by cut-downs and layoffs. Able only to keep alive on the wages paid them while working, these workers are absolutely without reserves, and most of them become completely destitute the minute they lose their jobs.

INDIAN labor has reacted to this gloomy picture in a gigantic strike wave, which began at the end of the war and has grown in size and momentum like an avalanche. All types of industries and enterprises—even government departments—have been affected.

There were 1,466 stoppages in the first nine months of 1946, involving 1,737,462 workers and costing 8,962,356 work days. Of the 1,466 strikes, 558 were essentially for wage increases, the rest involved questions of shorter hours, etc.

FARM EQUIPMENT ASKS TO JOIN UAW

THE executive board of the CIO Farm Equipment Workers this week announced that it has offered to merge the union with the CIO Auto Workers.

The FE-CIO proposal, the result of months of study, calls for the establishment of a separate division to cover all basic farm implement employes now in both unions and all such workers organized in the future. It calls for the director of the new region having a seat on the UAW executive board, and the establishment of an industrywide top council.

In a letter communicating the full proposal to affiliated locals throughout the country, the FE board stated that the merger "would constitute the most far-reaching forward step which could be taken to safeguard the interests of our membership . . ." FE Pres. Grant Oakes said:

"We feel that the opportunity and necessity for a constructive merger is at hand. Under today's conditions, the need for action toward unity has been brought home to all of us very sharply."

FE-CIO reports a membership of 75,000. Other employes in the industry are organized in the UAW, with small groups also in the steel and electrical unions.

The largest department in FE at this time is its International Harvester Council which represents over 30,000 workers in ten IHC plants.

The contemplated merger would draw together virtually all the farm implement and tractor builders of the country employed by the John Deere, Allis-Chalmers, J. I. Case, Caterpillar Tractor, Oliver, Massey-Harris, and Borg Warner-Ingersoll chains, and thousands of workers in smaller firms, now divided between FE and the UAW.

N. Y. BOARD PUT IN SPOT

LOCAL 100 of the CIO Transport Workers this week voted to restore normal service on the New York City subways even though the Board of Transportation continues to reject the Davis-O'Dwyer labor peace plan.

Literal application of board-approved rules had resulted in delaying subway trains.

Pres. Austin Hogan of Local 100 said that the membership voted to restore service to normal to demonstrate "its complete responsibility." This action, he continued, puts "the burden of proof on the Board of Transportation to provide a decent American standard of living for its employes and to bring permanent peace" through the Davis-O'Dwyer plan allowing proportional representation of unions.

15 UNION SQUARE NEW YORK 3 N.Y.

In Rock Hill, S. C.

1 OUT OF 7 IN CIO

ONE-SEVENTH of the total population of Rock Hill, S. C., belongs to the CIO.

Every textile mill in Rock Hill except one provides its employes with "free" insurance.

The mill that provides no "free" insurance has a profit-sharing plan.

These things make Rock Hill one of the outstanding "union textile towns" of the South.

The CIO Textile Workers won its first NLRB election in Rock Hill in February, 1944, when employes of Industrial Cotton Mills voted 462 to 75 for union representation.

A month later workers at Rock Hill Printing & Finishing Co., largest bleachery of its kind in the nation, voted 909 to 442 in favor of TWUA.

No more elections were won until last year — and then TWUA chalked up five victories within eight months.

THE CIO now has collective bargaining rights at 7 of Rock Hill's 10 textile mills and at 1 body repair plant, and is conducting organizing drives at the 3 non-union mills.

Textile wages in the town have increased 36½c an hour during the past two years as a direct result of union activity. The non-union plants granted the wage increases won by TWUA during contract negotiations.

Last September TWUA obtained "free" insurance at Rock Hill Printing & Finishing Co. All of the other mills, union and non-union, except one, now provide their employes with insurance protection paid for entirely by the companies. TWUA is now negotiating for an insurance plan at the one remaining mill.

TWUA obtained paid vacations for its members. Now all Rock Hill textile mills give their employes vacations with pay.

Following is a list of TWUA-CIO victories in Rock Hill:

Industrial Cotton Mills, 462 for TWUA and 75 against; Samarkand Rugs, Inc., and Rock Hill Yarn Co., 128 to 19; Rock Hill Printing & Finishing Co., 909 to 442; Highland Park Mfg. Co., 197 to 194; Jac Feinberg & Son, Nocturne Hosiery Division, 147 to 5; Gold-Tex Mfg. Co., 351 to 39; Rock Hill Body Co., 58 to 27. (Rock Hill Yarn and Samarkand Rugs are different corporations although under the same management.)

Coincidence!

Clare Hoffman this week was elected recording secretary of the Port Cities CIO Council, Muskegon, Mich.

Any similarity of name to that of labor-hating Rep. Clare Hoffman, also of Michigan, is purely coincidental.

Delegates to the National Federation of Telephone Workers, meeting in Miami Beach, Fla., refuse to amend their constitution to enable affiliation with a national body through the democratic process and the majority of those voting.

They claim to represent some 161,000. A breakdown of their actual affiliation, not counting losses sustained through the strike, brings the figure nearer to 138,000. To have affiliation with a parent body, which they sorely need, and which the CIO offered as well as a national union of their own, would require more than 50% of their entire membership to vote in favor of it.

This is like the NAM-backed Taft-Hartley bill, which would require a favorable vote by a majority of all employes covered by an agreement, before a union shop would be legal. It must be remembered that all the matters, except amending the constitution are decided by the majority of those voting, which makes it quite clear that it was a deliberate attempt to prevent national affiliation. And, to amend the constitution in this recent convention, would require the favorable vote of 75% of the delegates present.

They retain their ineffective, dividing structure. They did one thing. They set salaries of 15 of their top people in a share-the-wealth manner. They shared it—but not with the rank and file. The salaries alone of this group would amount to about a third of their total income, which leaves them little to operate on and does not take into account travel and other expenses and salaries of their employes.

The CIO supported the telephone workers all over the nation, more so than any other group, financially and in many other ways. Yet, they by design adopted measures to prevent affiliation with a bona-fide labor movement.

The attendance at their convention was much less than what it was at their last convention. The rank and file of the telephone workers showed a splendid spirit in the strike and deserved more than the weaknesses demonstrated by inexperienced top leadership and ineffective structure.

The CIO is going forward with its organizing committee to get for these workers a real effective industrial union. The movement cannot sit idly by and permit these workers to be kicked around and to endanger by their weakness the whole national wage structure. The telephone workers need and are entitled to a real industrial union and affiliation with the Congress of Industrial Organizations.

WIN 15c FOR 20,000 BRIGGS WORKERS

ON the eve of a strike by the CIO Auto Workers, the Briggs Mfg. Co., auto body makers, this week agreed to accept the pay increase pattern set for the industry by the union. More than 20,000 workers in 7 Detroit plants and one in Evansville, Ind., are covered by the contract.

A joint union-company announcement said that the settlement provided basically for an 11½c hourly increase and six paid holidays a year. This matches the pattern of benefits aggregating a total increase of 15c an hour.

The pay increase is retroactive to April 28, the date Chrysler, Briggs' biggest customer, granted its employes the same raise.

This the company said it would not do when negotiations broke down last weekend. Armed with an affirmative strike vote, the UAW was set for a walkout June 11, but the company agreed to the union's demands the night before

Sen. Pepper Declares

TAFT BILL TORPEDOES MARITIME TALKS

Pres. John Allard of Chrysler Local 230 of the CIO Auto Workers, Los Angeles, phones an urgent request from the west coast to the White House. Members of his local who chipped in to pay for the call listen as he asks that President Truman veto the Taft-Hartley bill.

IF all U. S. shipping is tied up June 15, blame the ship owners and the Taft-Hartley bill.

That's what Sen. Pepper (D. Fla.) this week charged in the Senate, in the presence of Sen. Taft (R. Ohio) who did not answer the charge.

The ship owners have failed to renew their contracts with three CIO unions on the west coast, the Marine Engineers Beneficial Assn., the American Communications Assn. and the Marine Cooks & Stewards.

They have also refused to engage in serious collective bargaining with the CIO Natl. Maritime Union on the east coast. All these contracts expire June 15.

The CIO Longshoremen & Warehousemen this week won an agreement for the extension for one year of their present contract, but it is conditional on reaching agreements with the other CIO unions.

Pepper declared on the Senate floor that although the maritime union contracts "expire midnight this Sunday (June 15), the ship owners have refused, despite insistent demands of union negotiation committees, to schedule round-the-clock bargaining sessions.

"The unions opened negotiations more than a month ago, but no bargaining sessions involving anything but formalities have yet taken place."

Pepper said that employers, already counting on the passage of the Taft-Hartley bill, have refused to participate in genuine collective bargaining in the coal, textile and maritime industries.

The senator read into the record a letter from Joseph Curran and Murray Winocur, chairman and secretary respectively of the East Coast Policy Committee of the CIO maritime unions, which stated:

"We are trying to negotiate with a group of employers who currently enjoy the most profitable years in maritime history. As Undersecretary of State Will Clayton recently told a Congressional Committee, the shipping companies are 'making enormous profits, unheard of profits in peacetime . . . I tell you they are making plenty of money and they are not complaining on that score. They would be laughed out of court if they should.'

"This confirms the truth of your statements during the debate on the Taft-Hartley bill, that totally apart from the punitive provisions, the bill is a complete barrier to collective bargaining."

Curran, who also is NMU President; ILWU Pres. Harry Bridges, MCS Pres. Hugh Bryson and ACA Pres. Joseph Selly met in New York City this week and issued a joint statement warning that a lockout of the west coast unions would "inevitably result in a nationwise shipping tie-up because all of the maritime unions affiliated with the CIO Maritime Commitee will be affected on all coasts."

'CAMEL' STRIKERS WIN DESPITE WILD BLASTS

By C. W. FOWLER

IN the face of wild accusations against their union, 10,000 members of the CIO Food & Tobacco Workers this week won their 38-day strike at the huge Camel cigarette factory in Winston-Salem, N. C.

With the successful conclusion of lengthy negotiations in behalf of employes of the Camden, N. J., and Chicago plants of Campbell Soup Co., FTA this week won substantial increases for a total of 20,000 members.

The strike settlement, which removes Camel cigarettes and Prince Albert smoking tobacco from the "don't buy" list, brings the workers a total of 12c an hour increase, voluntary revocable checkoff and two paid holidays.

The Campbell Soup deal, won after five months of negotiations, brings the workers 14.9c an hour and other gains, and was described by FTA Sec.-Treas. Harold J. Lane as giving Campbell workers the highest wage level in the entire canning industry. With the new contract, the average at Campbell's is now $1.34 an hour—higher than any other food industry wage — in fact, higher than a considerable proportion of all manufacturing wages.

The Winston - Salem strike, which tied up production at the R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. at less than 20% of normal, was settled by a rank and file negotiating committee headed by FTA Pres. Donald Henderson.

Compromising of the Reynolds workers demand of 15c at the 12c figure was laid by the union to the extreme pressure of the political situation, with a union-busting bill being rushed through Congress and now awaiting President Truman's action.

"The conduct of the strike, the responsibility of the leadership, and the discipline of the rank and file, who for 38 days carried on a strike involving 10,000 workers with no arrests or violence, is a complete answer to those mud-slingers and would-be strike-breakers who attempted to provoke the workers and the community with wild attacks on the union," the local's strike policy committee said.

"The strike settlement, in the face of the worst political reaction our nation has seen, is a tribute to the unity of leadership and rank and file of FTA Local 22.

"The major lesson in this strike was that a growing unity of all groups of workers prevented disruption and violence. It was proved that future and greater economic gains for the workers and the community rest upon greatly strengthening this understanding and unity for a common cause."

All the familiar strikebreaking tricks were trotted out by the Reynolds Co., which has run Winston-Salem North Carolina with an iron hand for generations. Red-baiting, use of the un-American Thomas-Rankin Committee, attempts to provoke "race riots" and drafting of school kids under legal age for use as scabs were all tried—and failed to break the strike.

Textile Workers Say

NATION IS TAKING ROAD TO REACTION

THE CIO Textile Workers' executive council last weekend declared that the failure of the U. S. to develop a "constructive, democratic policy" either at home or abroad has started this nation on the road to reaction.

On the domestic front, the council attacked the Taft-Hartley Bill, premature removal of price controls and the tax bill in a resolution on freedom — at home and abroad. Failure of action on expansion of social security, low-cost housing and on the minimum wage was condemned.

The council was likewise critical of U. S. foreign policy, citing the failure of the Greco-Turkish aid program to provide for "the extension of democratic rights," and our apparent readiness "to enter into full military partnership with the Peron dictatorship in Argentina."

The foreign relief program was called too small to give the forces of democracy "an opportunity to function." The council declared that these domestic and foreign actions of our government aid and comfort "Fascist totalitarianism" and "Communist totalitarians of the left by enabling them to take advantage of our mistaken policies."

Separate resolutions were passed on raising minimum wages to 65c, urging a Presidential veto of the proposed rent control extension bills, supporting the CIO-PAC's drive for $1 contributions and calling upon the President to veto the Taft-Hartley Bill.

Merrill Resigns

THE administrative committee of the Office & Professional Workers this week announced the resignation for ill health of Lewis Merrill as president of the union.

Merrill has held the post since the birth of the CIO union in May 1937. His resignation took effect immediately. UOPAW's executive board will meet in New York June 28 to name a new president.

Merrill's letter to the executive board said that he did not discuss his resignation at the board's recent meeting because he hoped at least to serve out his term of office. He added that he is "convinced that the union's welfare demands a chief executive who does not suffer my disabilities and who is able really to lead the organization."

Merrill's resignation was accompanied by a letter from his physician, Dr. Harold Stevens, Washington, D. C., who declared that "complete change in your mode of living must be effected as soon as possible."

IT'S ONLY FAIR TO SHARE — A good rule for youngsters. And for grown-ups, too — especially on telephone party lines. Outstanding activity in fighting job discrimination on grounds of race, religion or nationality was recognized last week by the CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination. Citations went (l. to r.) to: Pres. Emil Rieve, Textile Workers; Rabbi Stephen Wise, head of the American Jewish Congress; and Pres. Jacob Potofsky, Amalgamated Clothing Workers.

RENT DECONTROL BILL NEARS PASSAGE

UNLESS somebody does something drastic pretty quick, effective rent control will go out the window at midnight, June 30.

A Senate-House conference committee last week gave its approval to the "swiss-cheese" bills passed by the two branches of Congress. After adjusting minor differences, the committee sent the bill back for a final vote, probably some time this week.

Sen. Glen Taylor (D. Ida.), who fought unsuccessfully for adoption of "as is" extension of rent controls when the bill was being debated in the Senate, was bitterly critical of the final version.

"It should be known as the Rent Decontrol and Dehousing Act of 1947," he said.

Rep. Brent Spence (D. Ky.), ranking Democratic member of the House Banking Committee, said his sentiments are also "along that line."

EARLIER, Chairman R. J. Thomas of the CIO Housing Committee had charged that "millions of tenants . . . are being sold down the river" by the bill.

"The rent control bill won't control rents, it won't protect the public, it won't hold the line against living costs," Thomas said. "The one thing it does accomplish is to put into effect the full legislative program of the Natl. Assn. of Real Estate Boards."

He predicted "hardships of a disastrous nature" for the public if Congress fails to strengthen the existing bill.

In Detroit, UAW Pres. Walter Reuther said the Republicans will be able to claim "undisputed authorship of the 1947 recession" now that the GOP-controlled Congress has killed rent control. "Rent increases on top of inflated prices will be the last straw," he said.

THE bill approved by the conference committee has these major points:

1. It permits 15% rent increases on a so-called "voluntary" basis when landlords and tenants sign one-year leases. This proviso has been a basic plank in the program of the real estate lobby, which has publicly predicted it will spell the doom of effective controls.

2. It ends all controls on March 1, 1948.

3. It repeals all the most important sections of the Patman Veterans Housing Act, through which building materials were issued on a priority basis for construction of homes for vets.

4. It turns defense against evictions over to the states.

5. It provides for a complex system of regional rent control boards, with power to recommend lifting of rent ceilings in the various sections of the country.

WHILE turning over to the states the final word on evictions, the conference bill spelled out four reasons for which a tenant can be evicted: committing a nuisance; occupying property which the owner wishes for his personal use; occupying property which the owner wishes to sell to a third party desiring to occupy the property; occupying property which the landlord wishes "substantially" to alter or remodel.

These provisions pave the way for widespread evictions in cases where the tenant declines "voluntarily" to enter a lease with its 15% higher rate.

It was because of provisions like these that Thomas charged Congress with merely "going through the motions" of extending rent control for an additional year.

ONE OF CIO'S FOUNDERS DIES

The death in Butte, Mont., of Thomas H. Brown, international president of the Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers from 1930-36, is reported in the June 9 issue of the union's official paper. Brown was a member of the original CIO (Committee for Industrial Organization) within the AFL, and was president of Mine-Mill at the time it was one of the founding unions of the CIO.

PRESS GAG SEEN IN LABOR BILL

WILL The CIO NEWS or any other labor paper have the right to say that Senator Taft shouldn't be elected President of the U. S.?

Will The CIO NEWS or any other paper have the right to express its hope that any Congressman or Senator who voted for the Taft-Hartley bill should be returned to private life by the voters?

Will The CIO NEWS or any other labor paper have the right to run a Congressional voting record, indicating which Congressmen voted pro-labor and which voted anti-labor on any particular piece of legislation?

Senator Taft's reply to questions such as these is a flat "No."

In statements interpreted in union circles as a threat to freedom of the press, Sen. Taft spelled out his theories during the course of Senate debate on the meaning of a section of the Taft-Hartley bill which makes unlawful any "contribution or expenditure" by unions or corporations in connection with any federal election or primary, or any political convention or caucus held to select candidates.

The Taft interpretation was brought out by repeated questioning from liberal Senators Pepper, Magnuson and Barkley, all Democrats.

ON the basis of Taft's discussion of the law and its meaning to both union publications and daily or weekly general newspapers, Len De Caux, CIO publicity director and editor of The CIO NEWS, immediately called upon the American Newspaper Publishers Assn. to throw its influence squarely against the Taft-Hartley bill.

De Caux urged the big publishers to act within "the few days remaining to exert "their great influence" against the bill.

"The freedom of the press which all democratic Americans hold sacred must not be permitted to be abridged under cover of a bill relating to a totally different sphere of activity," De Caux declared.

De Caux's letter, based on Senate debate June 5-6, was addressed to the ANPA's general manager, Cranston Williams. De Caux charged that "Sen. Taft expressed the clear intent to use this Section (of the bill) to prohibit labor publications from giving any editorial expression to their preferences between political candidates or political parties, and, in effect to deny them all right to participate in the democratic political life of our country."

De Caux, noting a probable difference of opinion between CIO and the publishers on the industrial relations sections of the Taft-Hartley bill, said the ANPA should be concerned nevertheless with this "direct assault on the freedom of expression of the American labor press—a press which reaches at least 13 million readers.

"While this gag is now intended primarily for the labor press, it would pave the way for equally serious restrictions on the press freedom of daily papers and magazines generally," the CIO editor declared.

"Since there is no qualification to the expression 'any corporation whatever,' the present bill might even be applied to gag any of the publishing corporations represented in your association."

TAFT'S argument was based on the idea that labor papers which are distributed to union members as part of the organization's service to its membership are an "expenditure" of the union. Since the overwhelming majority of union papers function on this basis, they would—under Taft's interpretation—be barred from any comment involving political activities or elections.

Taft claimed further that labor papers—or any other papers—which are self-supporting through subscriptions and advertising, would escape the gag rule, but there was no indication of what legal basis he used for this line of reasoning.

In addition, the Ohio Senator forecast that labor unions would be prohibited from buying radio time to express their views on political matters of any kind. Presumably, they could use free radio time—if they could get it.

The Taft-Hartley bill, as seen by its Senate sponsor, would prohibit unions from any expenditure for pamphlets, leaflets, advertising, newspapers, magazines, or radio time in which to voice any views remotely bearing on the national political scene.

These figures are about four times larger than those for the full twelve months of 1940, which saw the first big strikes of the war for a cost-of-living bonus.

They do not include strikes in the 562 Indian states ruled by Maharajahs and Nawabs, which comprise two-fifths of India's territory and more than one-fifth of its population. Nor do they include the general strike of postal workers, which lasted over three weeks, the one-day sympathy strike for the postal workers all over India, nor the general strike on the South Indian Railway, in which 40,000 workers took part.

THE recent installation of popularly-elected governments in the various provinces of British India raised hopes among the workers that energetic steps would be taken to end their miserable conditions. All that has been done so far, however, is the appointment of a number of "enquiry committees," and the reports of these committees, after a passage of several months, are not yet ready.

"In the meantime," states N. M. Joshi, "there is not only no sign of prices going down but they are actually going up, making the discontent more acute. Various provincial governments tried to check this discontent by introducing bills banning strikes without notice, enforcing compulsory conciliation and arbitration, and declaring strikes illegal during the pendency of these proceedings.

"The Government of India has extended the operation of the (wartime) Defense of India Rules, banning strikes without notice for a period of six months . . . and in the meantime has brought forward a new bill to restrict the workers' right to strike so as practically to annul it."

Provincial anti-labor legislation has been accompanied by violence. Indian political leaders, who themselves were jailed many times by order of the British, are now decreeing the arrest of their striking countrymen. The use of police clubs to disperse picket lines has been sanctioned by cabinet ministers who only lately felt the impact of nightsticks when they, themselves, were demonstrating for poliitcal freedom.

APPLICATIONS of force and infringements of civil liberties are very numerous. Among the most glaring have been the arrest of 1,500 workers, including 50 women, during the strike on the South Indian Railway; the smashing of the office furniture and equipment of the South Indian Railway Labor Union by the police (damages amounted to $15,000); and the attack on a peaceful picket line at the Stanes Mills in Coimbatore, when 12 workers, including two women, were killed, and scores injured.

This joint offensive by Government and employers has not prevented the unions from expanding and even growing across industrial lines. The movement is no longer confined to workers in large industries, but has spread to white-collar clerks, government servants, coolies and street sweepers.

The total number of unions affiliated to the All-India Trade Union Congress has grown from 401 in January, 1945, to 608 today, with a corresponding increase in membership from 451,915 to 726,439.

But even more significant is the representation of all religious, national and political elements in the All-India Trade Congress. The 1,100 delegates from all over India who attended the last session of the Congress held last February in Calcutta demonstrated this unity by electing to the executive council the followers of four different political parties, together with non-party leaders, and by unanimously adopting all resolutions on political and economic questions which vitally affect the trade union movement.

Together with the peasant organizations which have forged unity in various sections of the countryside, the labor movement gives promise of creating expanding islands of peace and cooperation among religious groups in the raging tide of communal strife now surging over India.

EASY FOR YOU, FUN FOR YOUR CHILD

Long hours of healthy outdoor play are here again! Good equipment makes life easier for parents and better for children. Covered sandboxes that keep out dirt and animals are recommended. But lacking facilities for a real sand-box, children will enjoy digging and playing if some bags of sand are dumped into a hollow square 4x6 feet and 1 foot deep. This will be large enough for two, possibly three children. Old kitchen utensils, inexpensive cookie cutters, flour sifters, funnels, salt shakers, unbreakable dishes, pails and sand toys afford many hours of happiness. Non-rusting plastics or painted tin are recommended. Photo: W. M. Haas. (Copyright 1947, The CIO News.)

Have You A Big Shady Backyard?

CIO WOMEN SUGGEST GOOD USE FOR IT

WHAT DO you women think of the idea of holding a six weeks' course, on Good Citizenship, say, in somebody's backyard or in a nearby park this summer? This is one of the hints for summer activities suggested by the CIO Congress of Women's Auxiliaries as being fun, practical and educational.

CWA groups could obtain the help of the CIO Political Action Committee in preparing a course on Good Citizenship, says the CWA's June Newsletter, and not only members of the organization but also other women in the neighborhood could be invited to attend.

To make attendance convenient and pleasant, the CWA suggests a sitter for the children of women in the class, paid for by the Auxiliary, and lemonade, ice cream or other refreshments served after the class.

A graduation ceremony with union officers, relatives and other guests invited could be arranged at the end of the course.

If you get busy right away, we are sure you can arrange a very interesting and fruitful summer activity which everyone involved will enjoy," says the CWA persuasively.

"You will also be preparing yourselves and all the other women in the class for understanding and activity in the most crucial election of our lives—the coming 1948 election."

Another suggestion made is for picnics at which a speaker can talk on the Auxiliary's work. "Such gatherings are an excellent opportunity to meet the families of your local members," says the CWA Newsletter. "Get acquainted with them. Have Membership Teams at picnics, explain the Auxiliary work and get women to join."

The CWA invites CIO women to write to its national office for further information about the outdoor course. An effort will also be made to supply speakers for picnics upon request. The address is: 807 Ninth-Chester Bldg., Cleveland 14, Ohio.

BEFORE YOUR NEXT PERMANENT

By HANNA SHERMAN

WE'VE just had a huddle with the experts on that permanent problem. We asked lots of questions and here's a few of their answers that I'd like to pass on to you.

They all agreed that the skill of the operator determines the cost of the permanent. You pay for her know-how in shaping the hair, blocking and winding it, her judgment as to how long the heat or wave solution stays on. So a good permanent may cost as little as $7.50, on upward to around $50 at some of the swank big city salons.

Your best bet is a shop that has given a good wave to somebody you know. Find out the price she paid (prices in the same shop sometimes vary), the name of her operator. Then go thou and do likewise.

Part of the success of a permanent is up to you. Besides your regular hair care, you should include three oil treatments at weekly intervals before the date set for your permanent. Hair in good condition takes a better wave.

INSIST on a wave that is not too tight. Better to have permanents more frequently than to suffer the fuzziness of a too tight wave. A test curl will show just how much your hair can take. Be sure to get one before the entire head is subjected to any heat or solution.

After your wave, avoid brushing the hair for the next four days. It takes about 36 to 96 hours for the hair shafts to harden again after the application of permanent wave heat or solutions. That's why the plain water rinse given by the operator immediately after the permanent is quite O. K. Treat yourself to a hot oil treatment again before your next shampoo. It will help restore your hair to its smooth, shiny self.

As to whether gals with naturally wavy or curly hair should get permanents, most of the experts said no. If you were born with a natural curl in your hair, cut it to bring out its beauty. If short ends at the back of the neck insist upon straggling, you can have just a few permanent curls put there.

That's something for all of us to remember. Beauty shops can be persuaded to give you one or two ringlets where you need them most. It's much cheaper and easier on the hair than too many full permanents.

WHICH type of permanent for your hair? Oily hair responds best to a hot wave—either machine or chemical. Dry hair usually needs a cold wave. This is true also for hair that is baby fine or bleached. Dyed hair stands less chance of becoming discolored with a cold wave. Coarse textured hair that is neither dry nor oily can be successfully waved with any type of permanent.

How long should a permanent last? It could last forever if your hair did not grow. But since most normal hair grows out at the rate of one-half inch per month, re-waving is necessary at regular intervals.

WOMEN AT WORK

IN UNION CONTRACT: An agreement between a local of the CIO Marine & Shipbuilding Workers and an Alabama shipyard contains two provisions affecting women employes. One calls for the same rate of pay for women as for men doing the same kind of work. The second states that other working conditions for women shall be considered on the basis of recommendations issued by the U. S. Dept. of Labor's Women's Bureau.

★ ★ ★

STATE LEGISLATION: California has repealed its War Production Act, with all permits issued under it, thus fully restoring prewar legislation for female employes. Massachusetts has made permanent the 11 o'clock closing hour for night employment of women and certain minors in manufacturing. The Commissioner of Labor, however, may after hearings, suspend until July 1949 labor laws or regulations affecting employment of women and minors when conditions of emergency or hardship are deemed to exist.

★ ★ ★

MINIMUM WAGE: In Connecticut, a revised cleaning and dyeing order, now effective, increases minimum rates to 60c an hour for experienced workers and 55c for inexperienced. Time and a half is to be paid for all hours worked in excess of 45 a week.

A new retail trade order which becomes effective in the District of Columbia June 16, provides a weekly minimum of $25 for a workweek of 36-44 hours; a part-time and overtime rate of 65c an hour: a guarantee of four hours pay for any day a worker is called in, and an additional 75c a day if the employe works a split shift.

LABOR EDUCATION BILL CHALLENGES CONGRESS

THE Bill to set up a Labor Extension Service in the Dept. of Labor, strongly endorsed by the CIO and all organized labor, has at last been introduced in the Senate. Republican Senator Wayne Morse, speaking for himself and Democratic Senator Elbert D. Thomas of Utah, now out of the country on official business, made the introduction.

The constructive nature of this bill (S. 1390), as opposed to the destructive Taft-Hartley Bill, was brought out pointedly in some remarks made by Sen. Thomas in a statement which Sen. Morse asked to have printed in the Congressional Record.

Referring to the action taken on the Taft-Hartley bill "over labor's unanimous protests," Sen. Thomas declared that the Labor Extension Service Bill "challenges us to consider a bill which, its proponents contend, will really promote healthy and peaceful industrial relations."

The bill will accomplish this, he said, "not by prohibitions, nor injunctions, nor by rules and regulations, but equipping wage earners with a better and more up-to-date knowledge of the world, the nation, the state, and the community in which they work and live, with a better knowledge of the economic facts about their own industry and plant and their relation to other industries, plants, and the entire economy of the nation."

SEN. Thomas urged Congress to accept the challenge to aid labor—as farmers have long been aided—and warned of the danger inherent in moving "with awful force to regulate labor with all the vast power of the State." This might suggest to labor, he said, "that its remedy and relief are to be found, if at all, not at the bargaining table, but on the battle lines of desperate industrial warfare such as we witnessed in the twenties and early thirties."

Labor's long struggle for improved educational standards, and "the hunger and thirst for knowledge back of this bill," Thomas said, should be remembered.

Declaring that "we are all in a race between education and catastrophe," the Senator said that "education is the only road to wisdom for an individual, a group or a nation," and that "Labor is willing and eager to travel that road."

THE Labor Extension Service Bill would aim to aid wage earners, as the agricultural extension service aids farmers, through a Labor Extension Division set up in the Dept. of Labor under a director appointed by the President and approved by the Senate. His salary would be $10,000 a year.

To administer the service, the bill sets up a National Labor Extension Council of 15 members, chosen by the Secretary of Labor, the majority to be selected from a panel "submitted by bona fide labor organizations national in scope." Other members would include representatives of cooperating institutions designated by the states planning labor extension programs.

The program would function through the states, which would be authorized to set up State Labor Extension Boards of at least nine members and not more than 15. The majority of these are to be chosen by bona fide state labor organizations.

Also on a state Board would be the head of the state agency charged with primary responsibility in labor matters, and one or more representatives of cooperating institutions, and "wherever possible a person representing organizations in the field of workers education."

At least 25% of the amount of federal funds allocated to a state must be matched by the state, or by the colleges, groups or individuals in the state interested in the program.

A noteworthy clause in the Bill bars discrimination "on the basis of race, creed, color, sex or national orgin" for labor extension services for wage earners.

To Test Missouri Law

Joint legal action to test a new law banning strikes in public utilities, and other antilabor laws, is planned by Missouri organizations of the CIO, AFL and independent unions, according to Federated Press.

CIO SUMMER SCHOOLS

TEN thousand CIO members are getting ready to attend some 35 to 40 schools being run by international unions, state councils, and the National CIO this summer.

"I wouldn't take a thousand dollars for my chance to go to a CIO school last summer," one student wrote the Natl. CIO Dept. of Education and Research recently. This is typical of how CIO members all over the country feel about this chance to learn to be effective leaders in their local unions.

An impressive list of major colleges and universities will cooperate in developing these CIO summer school programs, including the Universities of Wisconsin, Michigan, New Hampshire, Kansas, Illinois, Indiana, North Carolina, Rhode Island, Wyoming, California and Chicago, and Penn State, Springfield and Antioch Colleges.

In addition summer schools will be housed at union-owned camps, such as the Franklin D. Roosevelt Camp at Port Huron, Mich., at church and Y camps, and at the Hudson Shore Labor School and Highlander Folk School.

The Natl. CIO Dept. of Research and Education has entered this field for the first time in sponsoring seven schools during the summer of 1947. These are planned to give international unions and councils which do not have their own schools an opportunity to train local CIO leaders to do more effective work in their local unions.

The schools are being run in cooperation with various agencies, and it is hoped that eventually these groups will take over the schools in their respective areas so that the National CIO can go on to help other CIO groups establish their own education programs. Following are the National CIO schools:

CIO TERM AT HIGHLANDER FOLK SCHOOL, June 15-July 12, Monteagle, Tenn. This is the only four-week CIO summer school. It is planned for CIO members from the South who are qualified for this added training for leadership. A two-weeks session is planned, June 29 - July 12 — to be held for the benefits of those unions which cannot afford the full term this year. Special classes wil be offered for students attending this session. Limit: 20 students. Tuition, board, and room—2 weeks, $40.

INDIANA, Aug. 10-16, at the University of Indiana, Bloomington. This school is limited to the Indiana CIO and CIO members from the Middle West who receive special permission to attend. Limit: 35 students. Tuition, room and board, $35.

ROCKY MOUNTAIN AREA (Colorado, Wyoming, Montana, and Utah) at the University of Wyoming, Laramie. Tentative dates, Aug. 10-14. Limit: 60 students. Tuition, room and board, $20.

MINNESOTA, IOWA, AND NEBRASKA — Aug. 17-23, at Danebod Folk School, Tyler, Minn. Limit: 100 students. Tuition, room and board, $30.

PENNSYLVANIA, NEW JERSEY, AND NEW YORK—Aug. 17-23, at Pendle Hill, Wallingford, Pa. Limit: 40 students. Tuition, room and board, $25.

VIRGINIA, WEST VIRGINIA, AND MARYLAND, Aug. 17-30, at Hampton Institute, Hampton, Va. This school is divided into two one-week terms: August 17-23 for Business Agents and Presidents of locals; August 24-30 for Committeemen and Officers. Limit: 30 students. Tuition, room and board, $25.

MISSOURI, KANSAS, AND SOUTHERN ILLINOIS — Septembeber 7-13, at Montebello Vacation Camp, near St. Louis, Mo. Limit: 30 students. Tuition, room and board, $30.

If you want to attend one of these schools, write immediately to George T. Guernsey, Asst. Director of Education, CIO, 718 Jackson Place, N.W., Washington 6, D. C.

CIO Urges

ANTI-LYNCH BILL, BAN ON BIAS

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

DISCRIMINATION against Negroes and other minority groups came in for a three-way fight by CIO last week.

1. James B. Carey, CIO secretary-treasurer, called upon leaders of the Senate and House to organize immediate hearings on the federal anti- lynch bill, which has been pigeonholed since its introduction a couple of months ago.

2. A call for an end to discrimination in the press galleries of the Senate and House was sounded by Carey, who told Congressional leaders that public hearings would show proper application of present rules would end a long practice of discrimination.

3. CIO prepared to offer testimony in behalf of the Chavez-Ives anti-bias bill (S. 984), as hearings opened before a Senate Labor sub-committee.

The bill, modeled upon the New York state statute, was introduced by eight Senators—four GOP, four Democratic. It would outlaw job discrimination on grounds of race, religion, color, national origin or ancestry. Employers failing to comply with court-endorsed recommendations of a national government agency established by the bill would be subject to prosecution for contempt.

Sen. Ives (R. N. Y.) pointed out that the bill "is limited to equality of economic opportunity —to the right to get and hold a job."

Sen. Chavez (D. N. M.), who has long fought in Congress against discrimination of all kinds, described the bill as a logical extension of the "safeguarding of individual rights in the Bill of Rights." He added that the 79th Congress, by letting the wartime Fair Employment Practices Committee die, had "broken faith with some 20 to 30 million people" in minority groups.

Sen. Smith (R. N. J.) indicated that efforts will be made to remove the already mild punitive sections of the bill.

MEANWHILE CIO moved to produce some action on the anti-lynch bill. Carey, in wires to Sen. Wiley (R. Wis.) and Rep. Michener (R. Mich.), head of the two judiciary committees, called for speedy hearings on S. 1352.

Acting in his capacity as head of the CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination, Carey said the "nation and the world" were shocked at the acquittal verdict in the recent Greensvilles, S. C., mass lynching trial.

"The CIO believes your committee has a clear mandate," he said, "to approve federal legislation against denial of simple justice. "We therefore strongly recommend that hearings be scheduled immediately" both on the Morse-Wagner bill in the Senate and the Case bill in the House.

In Detroit, UAW Pres. Walter Reuther sent similar wires. The Greensville verdict and recent attempted lynchings in the south demonstrate "that only federal legislation is adequate to deal with this barbaric crime," he declared.

IN another set of communications, this time to Sen. Brooks (R., Ill.) and Speaker of the House Joseph Martin (R., Mass.), Carey urged immediate hearings on the question of "admission of qualified Negro newspapermen" to the Senate and House Press galleries.

Continued protest has led only to the admission of one Negro correspondent for a daily paper and one for a weekly paper, he said.

"This is all that happened, and it seems clear that efforts were made to convince the people that these two isolated and lonely events contained a solution of the problem," the CIO secretary wrote to the Illinois Senator.

WASHINGTON ROUNDUP

FALSE propaganda against the Natl. Health Insurance Bill (S. 1320) was bitterly denounced by Sen. Murray (D. Mont.), a sponsor of the measure, in a wire to the convention of the American Medical Assn.

Sen. Murray called on the Assn. to repudiate its political arm, the Natl. Physicians Committee, which he labeled as "an utterly unfair and un-American" outfit.

Some $300,000 was spent by the Committee during the last five months of 1946 to fight the health insurance bill, Murray said.

OPPOSITION to the so-called Loyalty Bill (HR 3588) and to Pres. Truman's loyalty executive order 9385 was voiced last week by CIO United Public Workers.

In a statement to the House Civil Service Committee, UPWA noted agreement with the objectives of the order and the bill to protect the government from disloyal persons.

But methods proposed in both statutes are "subversive of important principles and guarantees of liberty which distinguish American democracy," the union said. These methods were described as throwing out fundamental concepts of American law and assuming a man is guilty until he can prove his innocence.

Witch Hunt Begins

Moving as expected into a job of harassing labor, the House un-American Activities Committee will hold hearings June 24-26 on alleged "communist" activities in at least two CIO unions.

The committee said it would subpena witnesses from locals of the CIO Electrical Workers in Bridgeport, Conn.; Schenectady, N. Y.; and New York City. Meanwhile a subcommittee has requested a probe of the CIO Food, Tobacco & Agricultural Workers local at Winston-Salem, N. C.

The committee is fresh from a Hollywood smear tour in which the name of the late Pres. Roosevelt was hauled into the headlines in connection with a highly-colored "plot" to influence the movies. The committee left Hollywood midst laughter and scorn from movie actors, producers and the liberal press.

THE FTA local was victorious in a six-weeks strike against R. J. Reynolds, makers of Camel cigarettes.

Rep. Nixon (R. Cal.), a leading supporter of the Taft-Hartley anti-labor bill, said that some of the local's 29 officers "may belong" to the Communist Party. Proof of such membership, Nixon predicted with relish, might make the union a test case under the anti-labor bill, if it is adopted.

BILLS WOULD SET NEW PAY FLOOR

BILLS to give real meaning to federal minimum wages in the present era of high prices were dropped into the Congressional hopper last week by a group of bi-partisan liberal legislators.

Purpose of the bills is to raise the minimum legal pay rate from 40c an hour to 65c an hour. The rate would be jumped to 70c after one year and to 75c after two years. The present 40c minimum has been in effect since 1940.

The Senate bill follows recommendations of Pres. Truman and of CIO Pres. Murray for a sharply increased minimum wage rate for low-paid workers. The President's call for a general increase was sounded at the time he signed the Portal Act of 1947, which substantially weakened workers' rights and enforcement standards of the Wage-Hour Division.

Sponsors of the bill (S. 1404) are 11 Senators. They are: Pepper (D. Fla.), Wagner (D. N. Y.), Thomas (D. Utah), Murray (D. Mont.), Chavez (D. N. M.), Green (D. R. I.), Magnuson (D. Wash.), Myers (D. Pa.), Taylor (D. Ida.), Langer (R. N. D.) and Morse (R. Ore.).

Companion bills (HR 3764-66) were filed in the House by Reps. Madden (D. Ind.) and McCormack (D. Mass.).

It is anticipated that the Pepper-Wagner-Madden bills, with the provision for a sliding scale increase in minimum rates, will receive widespread labor support.

Meanwhile four Republican Senators headed by Aiken (Vt.) have introduced a bill providing only for the increase to 65c but omitting the further rise to 75c.

IN a statement backing up their bill, the 11 Senators said it is "high time" the country took some action on the matter, since living costs have risen 55% since the 40c minimum came into effect.

"The ultimate minimum wage of 75c under our bill would bring economically defenseless workers who are grossly underpaid a step closer to a decent minimum American standard of living," the Senators declared.

IRATE U. S. ASKED VETO

From hundreds of New Orleans CIO workers came giant postcard message to Truman urging Taft-Hartley Bill veto. CIO officials examining the display are: l. to r., Nathan E. Cowan, CIO legislative director; David J. McDonald, secretary-treasurer, CIO Steel workers; Allan S. Haywood, CIO organization director, and Henry C. Fleisher, assistant CIO publicity director.

CIO Washington representatives look over veto petitions before sending them to President Truman. L. to r., Bill Hanscom of the Oil Workers, Herman Clott of the Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers; Hoyt Haddock of the CIO Maritime Committee, Irving Richter of the Auto Workers, Natl. CIO Legislative Director Nathan Cowan, John Edelman of the Textile Workers, Russ Nixon of the CIO Electrical Workers, and Robert Lamb of the Steelworkers.

FROM every section of the country, from men in every walk of life, a mighty demand arose last week that President Truman veto the Taft-Hartley bill, and that Congress support his action.

Ministers, employers, city mayors and councils, governors, Democratic national committeemen, public officials, former members of government agencies — all threw their support against the bill.

In East St. Louis, members of CIO Fairmont Smelter Workers Local carried two armloads of telegrams to Western Union and sped them on their way to Washington. In Lowell, Mass., Mayor Leo Roy, after meeting with labor and public officials, traveled to the capitol to ask Sens. Lodge and Saltonstall to sustain a veto.

"At Fall River, Mass., the city council unanimously condemned the bill. Chicago's city council did likewise, by a 36-1 vote. New York's Mayor O'Dwyer had previously issued a public proclamation against the bill.

The National Catholic Welfare Council condemned the bill, and warned it would produce chaos and confusion. A national Clergyman's Committee presented the White House with a statement signed by 642 prominent religious leaders of all sects, which demanded defeat of the bill as violating the "ethic of democracy and religion."

Meetings, parades, demonstrations were conducted by scores of thousands of workers in every city. Groups from AFL and CIO unions in west coast cities drove a motor cavalcade to Washington for last-minute lobbying.

In Washington, CIO Vice-Pres. Allan S. Haywood said chiseling employers have tried to take advantage of the law even before its passage by stalling, interfering with union activities and making illegal discharges.

"The Taft - Hartley bill is loaded with more jokers than the cardpack of a Mississippi riverboat gambler," Haywood said.

THE final days of the fight to defeat the bill brought a record-breaking swarm of mail, telegrams and petitions into the nation's capital.

Giving the complete lie to stories that the bill was directed against union officials were some 175,000 letters, 575,000 postcards, a flow of more than 26,000 telegrams, and a wide variety of giant placards, displays and posters from rank-and-file union members.

A 20-man staff at the White House mail room worked valiantly to handle the flow of mail, arriving at the rate of some 50,000 a day. Three White House teletypes and an occasional swing-shift Morse operator handled the incoming wires.

Some half a million signatures on petitions from every corner of the nation were deposited at the White House June 18 by a group of CIO leaders: Vice-Pres. Allan Haywood, Legislative Director Nathan Cowan, Sec.-Treas. David McDonald of the steel union, John Brophy, CIO councils director, and Tom Owens, Rubber Union legislative representative.

"The public knows that this is a 'big corporation' attempt to sell American labor short," Cowan said. "The public is speaking up —and it is speaking up against this vicious, short-sighted bill."

Cowan said the signatures were "collected in steel mills, electrical plants, auto factories and on the Main Streets of America." They are evidence of a "great popular mandate" to veto the bill.

TAFT BILL SHOWDOWN IN SENATE

A final, all-out effort to swing Senate support for the President's veto of the vicious Taft-Hartley anti-labor bill was in progress as The CIO NEWS went to press.

At stake was the future freedom of American workers and their union organizations.

The President's veto message reached Congress on June 20, the final day under the law on which he could disapprove. The House over-rode his veto by a vote of 331 to 83. A two-thirds vote is necessary to over-ride the veto and enact the bill into law.

In a strongly-worded veto message President Truman said the bill contained the seeds of discord which would plague this nation for years," and was "a dangerous stride in the direction of a totally managed economy."

(CIO Pres. Philip Murray warned Legislative Conference in Washtwo months ago at a special CIO ington, D. C., that "the enactment of the contemplated anti-labor legislation is the first real step toward the development of Fascism in the United States.")

President Truman said that the Taft-Hartley Bill would result in more Government intervention in our economic life, would fail to improve employer-employe relations, would prove unworkable and was unfair.

CIO Pres. Philip Murray "highly commended" President Truman for vetoing the Taft-Hartley bill and for "his excellent message to Congress," in a statement calling upon Congress to sustain the veto.

"The penetrating analysis contained in President Truman's message fully exposes the devastating effect on our national economy if the Taft-Hartley bill were to become law," Murray said.

"Within recent weeks, profound opposition to this legislation has not come solely from labor but from all ranks of American life," he added, pointing to the outstanding academic, professional and religious leaders, and the small business men and farm groups who "have united in their clearcut opposition" to the measure.

"For the best interests of the American people, it is to be sincerely hoped that the members of Congress will support the President's veto."

Director Jack Kroll of the CIO Political Action Committee similarly commended Truman's veto.

"It proves that the voices of the people, when fully roused, can be heard even in the highest circles of their government and, in democratic fashion, can help in shaping their government's policies," he said.

VOICE OF AMERICA: CIO officials look over some of the petitions calling for veto and defeat of the Taft-Hartley bill as they bring the half-million signatures to the White House. Left to right: John Brophy, councils director; Nathan Cowan, legislative director; Allan S. Haywood, vice-president and director of organization; Tom Owens, legislative representative, CIO Rubber Workers; David McDonald, secretary-treasurer, C$0 Steelworkers. The petitions had been collected by unions throughout the nation.

"The President has heard their voices and acted in the best interest of the people. It indicates, too, that the Democratic Party has not detached itself from the source of their greatest strength—the people."

Kroll urged the President to "make every effort to use the great influence of his high office to have his veto upheld. Anything else will be looked upon as political maneuver.

"No other issue in recent years has alarmed and aroused the wrath of the people as much as this destructive labor measure. They are alert. They are watching to see the eventual outcome."

Highlights of Truman's Veto Message

HIGHLIGHTS of President Truman's veto message on the Taft-Hartley Bill follow:

"THE bill taken as a whole would reverse the basic direction of our national labor policy, inject the government into private economic affairs on an unprecedented scale, and conflict with important principles of our democratic society. Its provisions would cause more strikes, not fewer.

"It would contribute neither to industrial peace nor to economic stability and progress. It would be a dangerous stride in the direction of a totally managed economy. It contains seeds of discord which would plague this nation for years to come."

"I find that this bill is completely contrary to that national policy of economic freedom. It would require the government, in effect, to become an unwanted participant at every bargaining table.

"It would establish by law limitations on the terms of every bargaining agreement, and nullify thousands of agreements mutually arrived at and satisfactory to the parties. It would inject the government deeply into the process by which employers and workers reach agreement. It would superimpose bureaucratic procedures on the free decisions of local employers and employes."

★ ★ ★

"COOPERATION cannot be achieved by force of law . . . (This legislation) would encourage distrust, suspicion and arbitrary attitudes."

"I find that the Natl. Labor Relations Act would be converted from an instrument with the major purpose of protecting the right of of the workers to organize and bargain collectively into a maze of pitfalls and complex procedures. As a result of these complexities employers and workers would find new barriers to mutual understanding.

The bill time and again would remove the settlement of differences from the bargaining table to courts of law."

★ ★ ★

"MUCH has been made of the claim that the bill is intended simply to equalize the positions of labor and management. Careful analysis shows that this claim is unfounded. Many of the provisions of the bill standing alone seem innocent but, considered in relation to each other, reveal a consistent pattern of inequality."

★ ★ ★

"1 The bill would substantially increase strikes.

"2 The bill arbitrarily decides, against the workers, certain issues which are normally the subject of collective bargaining, and thus restricts the area of voluntary agreement . . .

"3 The bill would expose employers to numerous hazards by which they could be annoyed and hampered.

"4 The bill would deprive workers of vital protection which they now have under the law.

"5 The bill abounds in provisions which would be unduly burdensome or actually unworkable.

"6 The bill would establish an ineffective and discriminatory emergency procedure for dealing with major strikes affecting the public health or safety.

"7 The bill would discriminate against employes.

"8 The bill would disregard in important respects the unanimous convictions of employer and labor representatives at the National Labor-Management Conference in November, 1945.

"9 The bill raises serious issues of public policy which transcends labor-management difficulties."

★ ★ ★

"I have concluded that the bill is a clear threat to the successful working of our democratic society.

"One of the major lessons of recent world history is that free and vital trade unions are a strong bulwark against the growth of totalitarian movements. We must, therefore, be everlastingly alert that in striking at union abuses we do not destroy the contribution which unions make to our democratic strength.

"This bill would go far toward weakening our trade union movement. And it would go far toward destroying our national unity."

THAT '48 SHADOW

NOW IS a good time for members of Congress to think about that poem, "I have a little shadow that follows me around."

The shadow which follows them around, and can be seen by all when the light is thrown on them, is their voting record.

Between now and the next elections the full light of publicity should be turned on every member of Congress, so the voters may see and know their records.

Every citizen is entitled to know how his representatives voted in Congress on issues which affect his welfare. Only with this knowledge can he cast his ballot intelligently.

American working people have been shocked at the big vote in Congress for the Taft-Hartley bill—one of the worst blows ever directed at their unions, their wages and conditions, and their fundamental liberties.

They will want to know whether their own Congressmen and Senators voted for them or against them; and, if they are wise, they will not forget these votes.

The shock experienced by labor can be a salutary one if it leads, as it should, to the greatest growth of labor political action this country has ever seen.

To throw the spotlight of publicity on every member of Congress, to see that every voter knows and remembers the record of his representatives on this and other issues, to mobilize support for labor's friends and opposition to the reactionaries, to get every citizen to register and vote—these are some of the main functions of CIO's Political Action Committee.

If your representatives betrayed your interests, or if they voted right and you want to back them up, the thing to do in either case is to give a dollar to PAC and to start organizing now for effective political action.

CONGRATULATIONS

THE BEST news we have heard for a long time is the announcement of Director Van A. Bittner of the CIO Organizing Committee that CIO membership in the South has increased approximately 70 percent during the past year, to a total of 680,000 members.

At a time when reaction is in the saddle in Congress, when living costs still soar above purchasing power, when there are so many signs of coming depression, and when the papers are full of international friction, it is good to know that American workers are organizing in such numbers in the last strongholds of non-unionism.

For union organization is the fundamental first step which workers must take, not only to protect their immediate interests, but also to lay the basis for all economic and political progress we may hope to make in this country.

Without union organization, there is no foundation or solid support for any kind of progressive democratic movement. But, with organization, the working people become the greatest force working for prosperity, freedom and peace.

Congratulations to the officers and staff of the CIO Organizing Committee, including the more than 1,000 volunteer organizers, on the success they have achieved, despite so many difficulties, in their all-important task.

And congratulations to the hundreds of thousands of Southern workers who have had the courage and intelligence to join CIO unions, to stand up for their rights, and to play their part in advancing the whole cause of labor and progress.

LOOKING AHEAD

BY LEN DE CAUX

ABRAHAM LINCOLN might well have been talking about the present Congress when, in 1864, he said:

"We all declare for liberty; but in using the same word we do not all mean the same thing.

"With some the word liberty may mean for each man to do as he pleases with himself, and the product of his labor; while with others the same word may mean for some men to do as they please with other men, and the product of other men's labor . . .

"The shepherd drives the wolf from the sheep's throat, for which the sheep thanks the shepherd as his liberator, while the wolf denounces him for the same act, as the destroyer of liberty . . .

"Plainly, the sheep and the wolf are not agreed upon a definition of the word liberty."

★ ★ ★

TO AMERICAN workers, the Wagner labor act was the greatest act of liberation since the emancipation of the slaves.

It freed them from fear of arbitrary discharge for union activity and from countless other employer tyrannies. It freed them to organize strong unions to defend their rights and advance their interests.

But in so doing, this act restricted the liberty of wolfish exploiters "to do as they please with other men and the product of other men's labor."

These wolves fought back through an organization they called the Liberty League.

A majority of the present Congress has continued this fight for the liberty of employers to break unions and impose working conditions of their choosing.

★ ★ ★

CONVINCED of the one-sided class character of the Taft-Hartley bill, the American Newspaper Publishers Assn. raised not a squeak against a clause that might threaten the press freedom of all newspapers.

When Senator Taft interpreted the ban of political "expenditures" as preventing labor papers from taking any political position, the CIO warned the ANPA that the same ban applied to "any corporation whatever," and might conceivably be used against any newspaper publishing corporation.

But the publishers ignored this warning. As big-business spokesmen, they could not conceive of their bill being used against themselves, regardless of its language.

THIS CONFIDENCE in the wolf-loving intentions of the present Congress is justified on the record.

It freed the profiteers to ravage labor and consumers, by ending the excess profits tax and price control, while continuing tax kickbacks to union-fighting corporations.

It passed, and nearly over-rode the veto on, a tax bill to favor the rich with tens of thousands in reduced taxes, while granting lower incomes only a few dollars and the poor not a penny.

It is also freeing landlords to raise rents 15%, without caring for the freedom of tenants to have housing they can afford.

★ ★ ★

ON HOUSING, health, minimum wage, anti-lynching and FEPC legislation, Congress shows the same concern for the liberty of the wolves, and the same indifference to that of their victims.

Through the so-called portal-to-portal act, it gave greater freedom to sweatshop employers to evade the minimum wage law; while it has left the minimum at the starvation level of 40c.

No permanent FEPC has been created, despite the campaign pledges of both parties; and nothing has been done to interfere with the freedom of lynch-mobs to lynch their victims.

The House un-American committee has used all its powers to harass and smear unions and liberals, while lifting not a finger against fascist wolves; and a Congressional report on "Fascism in Action" has been suppressed to date.

★ ★ ★

ONE FINAL wolf-liberty the tories are not neglecting—their own liberty to misrepresent the people.

They inserted in the Taft-Hartley bill new restrictions on union political action; and are considering lifting the lid on political contributions from the rich, while clamping it still tighter on labor.

But, though they refuse to enfranchise new millions by outlawing the polltax, they dare not take the vote away from those who have it.

So start organizing now to make your votes count.

PITCHING HAY TOGETHER

By NORMAN DOLNICK

"IT DOESN'T make much difference whether a guy is out working in the fields with his harrow and plow or if he is slicing carcasses in a packing plant," said an Iowa member of the CIO Packinghouse Workers.

"We have pretty much the same problems. There are kids to feed, rent to pay, clothes to buy, and we both work plenty hard to get those things.

"Just look at that law my state legislature passed a short time ago," the Iowan continued. "They threw the book at us just to make it tougher for my union to do a job in getting better wages and working conditions.

"Plenty of my farm neighbors voted for these representatives. Guess that means we have a big job ahead of us to give them the facts.

"Maybe if we get the idea across that all working people are better off if they sit down and think their problems out together, we won't have to put up with big business stooges in the State Houses and Congress who are out to chop labor unions into pieces. In the long run, the farmers will feel the same axe."

Farmer-Labor Plans Pay Off Well

IN NO fancier terms than these words by the Iowa worker, the UPWA has launched an expanded farmer-labor relations program which in a few weeks has made dramatic progress toward better understanding between farm and factory workers.

Newly appointed director of the UPWA farmer-labor program is Lee R. Simon, formerly on the staff of the Des Moines Register and Tribune. Lyle Cooper, UPWA Research Director, also contributes much to this program through his monthly newsletter to the farmers, "The Meat of It," as well as through his vast experience in working with farm groups.

Shortly after the new program was under way, its effectiveness was seen when Simon acted an as informal conciliator in a dispute between the farm milk producers at Ottumwa, Iowa, and the four major dairies in the area.

As a result of union know-how in dealing with big business trade associations, the Ottumwa farmers beat off an attempt by the dairies to reduce farm prices and have become aware of the advantages of organization.

Farmers Appreciate CIO Assistance

Their appreciation of CIO help was evidenced by a voluntary ad the farmers placed in the local Ottumwa paper which says in part:

"We're glad that the CIO is interested in farmers' problems. We're glad the CIO helped us win. We've been told a lot of things about labor unions that we now find aren't true. We're glad we had a chance to meet representatives of the trade unions."

SOON after the Ottumwa incident, the UPWA farmer-labor program again proved what it can do when it settled the bogged-down contract dispute between the UPWA local union in Mayfield, Kentucky, and the Pet Milk Company.

At Mayfield, the farmers in the area were invited by the union to sit in as observers while negotiations were in progress. Unable to withstand the common front presented by the union and the farmers in the community, the company came to terms and signed its contract.

Explaining the technical end of the negotiations was UPWA's farm-labor relations director. Simon helped the farmers understand the union's position on the issues in dispute. In addition, he spoke at a Graves County Farm Bureau meeting and reported on the negotiations. Also representing the International Representative, who helped organize the new local.

UPWA's farm-labor relations director made it clear to the farmers of the region that they were welcome at negotiating sessions and urged "mass attendance."

"If more farmers sat in at negotiating sessions," he told the farmers, "the packers and food processors might not prove so unreasonable and so stubborn.

"The union feels its position at the negotiating table is entirely justifiable, and we have no hesitation in inviting the participation of observers."

Union-Company Talk Amazes Farmers

THE MAYFIELD farm representatives were amused at an extended discussion between the union and company on "ability to pay." The union said that the company's financial statement showed a profit of $2,263,157. The company insisted doggedly that it was "only $1,713,157." And besides, the milk company's spokesmen continued, "We don't make money on milk, we make money on dividends."

Representatives of the company squirmed when one of the farmers told them "having a million dollars isn't all there is in the world."

Not quite so dramatic as the Ottumwa and Mayfield incidents is the hard work foreseen for the UPWA-farmer-labor program in establishing local union committees to reach into the rural communities. These committees have a long row to furrow in reviving the traditional liberalism of the American. However, they have the keen advantage of a determined will to do the job.

In the coming 1948 elections, the UPWA expects to have accomplished giant strides in bringing a united farmer-labor front to the polls and bringing into office representatives who will act in behalf of all working people — whether on the farms, in small towns or large cities.

One Year's Progress

70% MEMBERSHIP INCREASE IN SOUTH

By ALLEN L. SWIM

CIO MEMBERSHIP in the South has increased approximately 70% during the past year, Director Van A. Bittner of the CIO Organizing Committee announced this week.

"The Congress of Industrial Organizations had approximately 400,000 members in the Southern states when the CIO launched its Southern membership campaign last summer," Bittner said. "Now the CIO has about 680,000 members in the South.

"We have made splendid progress, especially when you consider the opposition we have met and the large amount of time required to recruit and train our organizing staff.

"We feel that our gains in the future will be greater than those in the past, because we now have a smoothly functioning field staff and more than 1,000 volunteer organizers. We also have well-established CIO unions in regions in which the CIO was virtually unknown before our arrival. An example of the latter can be found at Laurel, Miss., where there were no CIO members a year ago and where nearly 6,000 are now working under CIO contracts."

Bittner, reporting on the CIO Organizing Committee's first year of operation, said that "a large amount of time during the last half of 1946 was required to establish and equip offices throughout the South and to make first-rate organizers out of men and women who had been working in plants and mills until hired by the Committee."

BITTNER said that NLRB elections "can be used to measure only a part of our success in the South."

"The CIO has won about 500 NLRB elections in the South during the past year," he said. "Most of these, naturally, resulted from campaigns conducted by the committee. Some resulted from drives that started before the committee was organized. Some were won with assistance from the committee and some by the various international unions without committee aid.

"The CIO has signed up a majority of the employes of about 275 Southern plants at which elections have not yet been held. Most of these groups have functioning local unions although they have not yet received official NLRB recognition.

"We have healthy pluralities in about 150 additional plants, and membership in perhaps 100 others at which organization work was started recently.

"And we have been accorded bargaining rights in a dozen or more plants without going through the formality of NLRB elections."

BITTNER said the organizing drive has had "a very healthful effect" on the old CIO unions of the South.

"Our gain in membership in new local unions has been accompanied by good gains in the old locals," he said. "This has resulted from the enthusiasm engendered by our campaign and from work done by the volunteer organizing committees that we helped establish.

"It is impossible to accurately measure the economic benefits gained by Southern workers as a direct result of our drive—but they are large. Contracts negotiated by our new unions brought higher pay and improved working conditions to thousands.

"Unorganized workers gained much, too, because many employers attempted to discourage membership in the CIO by granting their workers wage raises equal to those won by our unions through negotiation."

Bittner charged that a large portion of the textile industry "has engaged in wholesale violation of the Wagner Act." He said some textile manufacturers have even gone so far as to blacklist employes fired illegally for union activity. Bittner continued:

"It is interesting to note, in contrast, that employers in other industries have in slowly increasing numbers granted union recognition without the necessity of NLRB elections or have agreed to elections without delay and without hearings before the NLRB."

BITTNER said 19 CIO organizers and local union leaders have been physically assaulted during the campaign, that two were shot at and their car set afire, and that dynamite was set off at two meeting places in an effort to keep workers from organizing.

"There have been numerous cases in which the civil rights of our representatives and local leaders have been violated—and several towns enacted unconstitutional city ordinances in an effort to impede our work.

"Our attorney, Jerome Cooper, has won acquittal for every CIO representative arrested on charges of violating these city ordinances, usually by getting the prosecutor or presiding judge to declare the ordinances unconstitutional. (The ordinances provided large license fees for labor organizers and prohibited distribution of leaflets.)

CLOTHING WORKERS' ASSETS $5.8 MILLION

IN accordance with its voluntary practice, the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers this week made public its annual financial statement, revealing that its total net assets, as of Dec. 31 last, stood at $5,824,852.

The audit of the union's financial statement was certified by public accountants. Total ACW assets show an increase of $488,069 over the previous year.

Organization expenses increased about $452,000; contributions to labor organizations and organization drives increased about $340,000; pension fund and employe welfare disbursements increased about $214,000, and operating costs in all departments increased as a result of increased wages.

The report made public by Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky and Sec.-Treas. Frank Rosenblum showed that the Amalgamated held $3,817,240 in U. S. Government securities and $200,128 in Dominion of Canada bonds.

Southern Drive Doubles Membership in Arkansas

THE convention of the Arkansas CIO Council last weekend sent telegrams to President Truman urging him to veto the Taft-Hartley Bill and to Sens. McClellan and Fulbright asking them to sustain a veto.

Officers reported that since the CIO Organizing Campaign started a year ago membership in the state has doubled.

Resolutions called on Congress to abolish the poll tax and grant Federal aid to boost teachers' salaries, and on the membership to support a voluntary per capita tax of 10c a month to increase legislative work and organizing.

The convention amended the constitution to bar from office in the council members of the Industrial Workers of the World, the Working Class Party, the Ku Klux Klan, the Bund and the Nazi, Fascist and Communist parties or "any other un-American organization." Office was also barred to persons subscribing to "Nazi, Fascist or Communist principles."

Speakers included Director of CIO Councils John Brophy, Pres. Joseph Froesch of the CIO Glass Workers, Vice-Pres. William Botkin of the CIO Woodworkers; State Director Walter H. Harris of the CIO Organizing Committee, and Delmond Garst, of the CIO organization department.

Lee Tucker and Charles M. Catton were elected president and secretary-treasurer.

MICHIGAN CIO COUNCIL CONFAB RENAMES OFFICERS

BY a margin of over 500 votes incumbent president of the Michigan CIO Council, August Scholle, and Sec.-Treas. Barney Hopkins won re-election at the council's convention in Detroit this week.

Losing candidates were Douglas Frazier, president of the DeSoto Local 227, CIO Auto Workers, and John Skrocki, president of the Saginaw Industrial Union Council. Frazier sought the presidency and Skrocki was candidate for the other post.

Speakers included UAW President Walter Reuther, who called for industrial planning, price reductions, housing and full utilization of government plants to attain full production.

Anthony Smith, assistant director of CIO Councils, presented the need for the Murray Industry council plan and CIO-PAC Chairman Jack Kroll, who pressed for political action and for dollar contributions to finance it.

FLOOD VICTIMS NEED HELP

Recent floods in the Mid-west took their heaviest toll in Ottumwa, Iowa, where nearly half the homes were destroyed or seriously damaged. Among the victims are many CIO Packinghouse workers, who must now rebuild their homes and provide new clothing for their families.

Most urgently needed are the following:

Children's clothing and shoes, adults' clothing and shoes, bed clothes, furniture, floor coverings, and building material.

Send supplies to Local One, UPWA-CIO, c/o John Morrell & Co., Chicago, Ill.

INJECT 5c FARE IN WAGE ISSUE

Indications this week that Chairman of the Board of Tranportation Charles P. Gross would resort to the old private industry technique of "higher wages, higher prices" further complicated attempts of CIO Transport Workers, New York City subway employes, to obtain a wage increase.

The issue of the increased subway fare has been opposed by the CIO union on the grounds that it would work greatest hardship on low-income groups. Mayor O'Dwyer, also an opponent of the fare increase, has expressed a desire for a November referendum on the question.

The Union is objecting strenuously to attempts to make the wage boost contingent on higher fares.

"The 33,000 transit workers believe," said Austin Hogan, president of TWU Local 100, "that they perform a vital service to the people of the city of New York comparable to that of its policemen and firemen and that their wages should depend not on the income which the City receives from its subways, but on the transit workers' needs and the national CIO pattern."

CIO Auto Workers Pres. Walter Reuther makes a plea for Fair Employment Practices law before a subcommittee of Senate Labor Committee. (See story on page 12.)

LOCKED OUT FOUR WEEKS, UE LOCAL SEEKS COURT AID

LOCAL 447 of the CIO Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers announced this week that it has filed a motion in the Supreme Court of New York to compel the Federal Telephone and Radio Corporation, Nutley, N. J., to arbitrate under the terms of its contract.

Over 4,000 production workers, members of UE Local 447, have been locked out by the Federal Telephone Company since May 28th in the first major lockout in the nation since the end of the war. The lock-out followed a series of contract violations by the company which culminated in the company's "suspension" of all production workers.

Resort to Court action was taken by UE Local 447 after unsuccessful attempts to get the company to arbitrate the union's demand for reinstatement of all production workers with back pay since May 28th and reinstatement of more than a score of union stewards who were summarily discharged by the company the week preceding this lock-out.

Hearing on the Union's petition is scheduled for June 30th. The Union requests the court to direct the company to proceed with arbitration as provided for in the agreement, with respect to the discharge of the stewards and with respect to the lock-out.

Mr. Moses Shapiro who is designated as the arbitrator in the union contract has served as the agreed upon arbitrator for the past three or four years and has heard and determined numerous arbitrations between Federal Telephone Company and UE Local 447.

PACKARD LOCAL WINS 15c BOOST

Instead of the 11½c straight raise plus paid holidays, working out to another 3½c an hour, the Packard Motor Co. this week departed from the industry pattern to grant Local 190, CIO Auto Workers, a straight 15c raise for two years. It is retroactive to April 28.

Convention Schedule

CIO international and state CIO councils are scheduled to hold conventions as follows:

N. J. CONFERENCE STRESSES PAC

Representatives of 50 CIO local unions in New Jersey aired and absorbed practical techniques in political action and worker education last week at a two-day State CIO Education Conference.

Assembled at Goodwill Camp, Butler, the conferees heard State CIO Council Pres. Carl Holderman outlinne the threats to unions in the New Jersey and Congress.

Alexander Barkan, executive secretary of the Council, and Stephen J. Moran, state PAC chairman, spoke on the political action role of local unions, emphasizing necessity for a successful PAC dollar contribution drive.

Four special workshop sessions concentrated on a training program for shop stewards, making a dynamic shop paper or bulletin, the union and the community and education for abolishing discrimination.

MARITIME UNIONS WIN DEMANDS

GENUINE collective bargaining after weeks of stalling by the ship owners was all that was needed to put an end to the four-day maritime lockout this week.

Winning a 5% wage increase and overtime for nine holidays, the Marine Engineers Beneficial Assn., the Natl. Maritime Union and the American Communications Assn., all CIO, were back at their posts on the east coast this week as port after port reported acceptance by the membership of the proposed terms.

Twenty-two thousand NMU members on tankers were covered by a similar contract signed earlier this week.

Joseph Curran, president of the NMU, predicted that terms of the new contracts would set the pattern for all CIO maritime unions, including those on the Pacific Coast. He had heard, he said, that collier companies in Boston had already agreed to give the same kind of contract.

On the West Coast CIO Marine Cooks and Stewards and ACA radio operators agreed to an interim extension of their contract which expired June 15 while negotiations continue with the Pacific American Shipowners Assn. Nathan Feinsinger, special mediator acting for Secretary of Labor Schwellenbach, expressed confidence in a "prompt, peaceful settlement."

The interim agreement permits the immediate sailing of all ships.

The CIO Longshoremen and Warehousemen several days ago won a year's continuance of their contract with the Waterfront Employers Assn. conditional on settlement with the other CIO maritime unions. This contract provides for two reopenings for wags discussions.

The West Coast CIO Maritime Committee stated that the "unions expect to reach a satisfactory permanent agreement through bona-fide collective bargaining within a day or two."

The committee pointed to the agreement as a "clear indication to the President that labor disputes can be settled satisfactorily and speedily resolved without restrictions or interference by government and courts such as would be injected by the Taft-Hartley Bill . . ."

LABORITES WIN IN MINNEAPOLIS

CIO-PAC ward and precinct organization and a united labor campaign paid off last week in Minneapolis, Minn., where five labor-backed aldermen and a mayor won election.

The labor slate was headed by Mayor Hubert Humphrey, who easily overcame strong Republican opposition. Liberals in the city council now hold half the seats.

With the election of two candidates to the school board, laborites now hold a 4 to 3 edge over the conservatives.

TO STUDY CAUSES OF INDUSTRY PEACE

PEOPLE pretty well know what causes strikes—disagreements, poor management policies, low morale among employes, refusal really to accept the union's status.

But there's not much information about the other side of the coin—what the causes of "industrial peace under collective bargaining."

The Natl. Planning Association, a private research organization, has decided it's about time somebody found out.

Following out an idea offered by Clinton S. Golden, former vice-president of the CIO Steelworkers and a leading figure in the NPA, the agency is embarking on a survey of labor-management relations in some 12 or 15 firms which have "experienced successful and peaceful" relations with their unions.

Discussing the need for a new approach to labor-management problems, Golden said:

"About every seven or eight years since 1876, the government through Congressional committees or presidentially appointed commissions has been making inquiries into the causes of industrial conflict and strife.

"In my opinion, the time has come when, instead of looking into the causes of conflict that we know and hear so much about, we ought to try to discover how much peace there is and what makes peace."

Golden pointed out that there are well over 50,000 collective bargaining agreements in force in the United States, and that nine out of every ten agreements are settled peacefully without strikes or lockouts.

The project will be under the direction of two special Committees composed of both NPA members and non-members.

ESTABLISHMENT of a "Peron Doctrine" appears to be in the making. At the same time that the U. S. government has buried the axe so far as the fascist Argentine administration is concerned, Dictator Peron's wife is on a triumphal personal tour of Europe.

Reports indicate a wildly enthusiastic reception for the Argentine dictator's first lady in Franco's fascist Spain. Mrs. Peron will also visit Italy, Portugal and possibly England during her continental tour.

CUBA'S CONFEDERATION of Labor, meeting in Havana, has soundly condemned the action of Braxilian Pres. Dutra in dissolving all unions affiliated with the Confederation of Labor.

An Allied Labor News report from Havana said the convention resolution scored Dutra's action as an attack "not only on Brazilian workers but against democracy, liberty and progress in all Latin America."

$1,000 To Aid Displaced

A check for $1,000 to help the cause of 850,000 displaced persons who are still confined to camps two years after V-E Day, has been presented by the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers to the Citizens Committee on Displaced Persons.

The Citizens Committee is the sponsor of the Stratton Bill which would permit the entry into the United States of 100,000 displaced persons annually for a period of four years. Hearings are now being held on the Stratton Bill in the House.

In the letter accompanying the check, ACW Pres. Jacob Potofsky said:

"I need not tell you how our organization, the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, feels about the urgency of this cause. Made up of many minority strains coming from Europe, our members feel keenly the homelessness and suffering of refugees and displaced persons who cannot find a haven abroad."

65 - 75c WAGE LAW WOULD HALT PAY CUTS

THE creeping paralysis of unemployment has already affected 20,000 woolen and worsted workers throughout New England, and is making serious dents in cotton industry jobs, the CIO Textile Workers charge in a renewed plea for a 65c-75c minimum wage.

In a letter to Speaker of the House Joseph Martin (R. Mass.), John Edelman, Washington spokesman for the union, called for immediate action to lift the floor under wages from its present low 40c-level.

He noted that Sen. Taft (R. Ohio) has predicted the Senate would not act upon the bill unless the House had passed the measure first.

"You must be well aware of the fact," Edelman wrote to Martin, "that once unemployment becomes apparent in an industry such as textiles a tendency towards wage cutting on the part of certain employers follows almost automatically.

"Enactment of a higher minimum wage immediately would have a direct stabilizing effect, and would be of special benefit to the light manufacturing industries in Massachusetts and throughout New England.

"Actually there is no need for unemployment in cotton textiles. The unmet demand for textile products is still very great. But too many operators are either holding back anticipation of wage cuts or are failing to make the necessary price adjustments that would cause the public to resume buying at high volume.

Prepare To Bury Rent Controls

Housing and rent controls were moved a bit closer to the legal grave last week as the House voted 163 to 73 to accept the conference report on the Buck-Wolcott bill, leaving the measure up to the Senate and then Pres. Truman. Major features of the bill are:

1. An end to almost all controls on construction under the veterans emergency housing program of 1946.

2. Decontrol of rents on new structures, conversions and units rented for the first time.

3. A provision allowing landlords a 15% increase in rent if they succeed in signing up tenants to leases extending into 1949 or later.

4. Complete end of all federal rent control by March 1, 1948.

Rep. Frank Buchanan (D. Pa.), attacked the measure as a "save-the-landlords bill," and referred to the so-called 15% voluntary increase clause as the "blackjack clause."

Military Probe Links U.S. Banks With Nazi Monopolies

By ALLIED LABOR NEWS

GERMANY'S two largest banks —which as late as 1940 still had close connections with major U. S. banking houses—formed the center of the Nazi octopus that sought to engulf the world, a U. S. Military Government investigation has disclosed.

Though the material has been collected for a war crimes trial, only a few of the chief offenders will be present.

Many have escaped to Argentina, Spain and other "friendly" countries and others have slipped into new managerial posts in the U. S. and British zones of occupation.

The two banks are the Deutsche Bank and the Dresdner Bank whose officials, through interlocking directorates, actually controlled the big German monopolies such as I. G. Farben, Krupp, Flick and others.

Both banks were tied to the Chase Natl. Bank and the Guaranty Trust Co. in the U. S. In addition, Deutsche had connections with the Natl. City Bank and the Bank of Manhattan Co. and Dresdner with the Bankers Trust Co.

According to the U. S. findings, these banks had such tight control over every aspect of Hitler's economy and politics that the root of virtually every war crime can be traced back to their handful of directors.

SHORN of legalistic language, the report boils down to this: Hitler could not have embarked upon his master plan to conquer the world without some of the world's biggest money behind him. The banks—which always operated for profit—considered Hitler's program to make all of Europe subservient to Germany the most lucrative enterprise on the books.

Deceit and direct lies were employed by the government and the banks to drain money from the German people for phony re-employment schemes. Actually, according to documents unearthed by the investigators, money raised from the people by such means was designed to build up the armed forces.

In later years, when the Nazis became more brazen with success, they didn't even bother to cover their tracks. For instance, such leading Nazis as Heinrich Himmler simply received huge yearly grants for "special purposes," with no explanations made.

In Germany, as in the U. S. and other countries, the connections between the big banks and major industries were never publicized and were known by only a handful of the people. According to the report, however, 54 directors of the Deutsche Bank held 707 positions as directors and officers of the big corporations that produced the German war machine. Thirty-four Dresdner directors held 451 other directorships.

The banks are linked in the report with some of the most vicious slave labor and death camp practices of the Nazis—all part of a master plan to insure a constant cheap labor supply and wipe out workers' resistance for big business.

Hail India Settlement

"A new standard of democratic statesmanship" in working out relations between Great Britain and India was hailed last week by 129 leading citizens, including CIO Pres. Murray and numerous other union officials.

The statement, addressed to British Labor Prime Minister Attlee, acclaimed the settlement as "historic steps . . . toward a solution of the infinitely complex political problems" of the Indian people.

"While no one, in reason, can expect the new Indian freedom to emerge without great trial and difficulty, this beginning is a moral victory, almost without parallel for the conscience of the democratic world," the statement said.

YOUNG GARDENERS

Through Victory Gardens many city dwellers learned the satisfaction of growing their own vegetables. Children under six can take only limited responsibility, but they get real joy out of helping to set out and pick pansies and out of planting such quick and hardy growers as nasturtiums, red and white radishes and lettuce. Children's interest should be fostered, not forced. Seven- and eight-year olds can do more than younger ones, but should not be expected to carry full responsibility. A chance to pick or help prepare home-grown vegetables often leads to liking vegetables previously not eaten. Photo: Conreid, Monkmyer Press Photo Service. (Copyright 1947, The CIO NEWS.)

HALF OF UN STAFF ARE WOMEN

PERHAPS as you follow the attempts of the United Nations to arrive at international peace and understanding, you have wondered where the world's women are in all the furore.

The Women's Division of the U. S. Dept. of Labor reports that although women comprise 45.7% of the total UN staff, comparatively few hold policy-making positions. This is largely due to the fact that such responsibilities require international experience, a qualification that fewer women than men hold.

In addition, many posts require a background in fields in which the fairer sex has seldom participated, narcotic drug control, colonial affairs, demography, international trade, fiscal affairs, political affairs and research among primitive peoples.

Sixteen women of six nationalities, however, do occupy senior posts in the UN Secretariat, all of them involving some degree of policy-making. Nine of these are Americans, whose salaries range from $6600 to $11,000 a year, tax free.

To the first session of the General Assembly in London last year came nineteen women from 11 countries as delegates and advisers. These included Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, Miss Dorothy Fosdick and Miss Frieda S. Miller. Women have also been occupying prominent roles in the various branches of the Economic and Social Council.

The majority of women on the UN Secretariat are employed as secretaries, stenographers, interpreters, translators, filing clerks or in the documents division.

There should be good employment opportunities for women with specialized knowledge and experience with UN's Specialized Agencies. Of these, only the International Labor, Food, & Agriculture Organization and World Health Organizations are ready to recruit for jobs.

Others will require personnel as soon as their organization crystalizes: the International Monetary Fund, the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, Provisional International Civil Aviation Organization, United Nations Educational Scientific & Cultural Organization and the International Refugee Organization.

Until an International Civil Service Commission is established, persons interested in working for specialized agencies will have to make individual contacts.

Sprucing Up
THAT HEALTHY TAN

By HANNA SHERMAN

A HEALTHY outdoor color has been the fashion for many years. And rightly so. For sunlight, containing precious vitamin D, is essential to our good health.

Besides this, a deep tan is very attractive on most women. We've become a nation of sun worshippers. Yet it's surprising how we neglect the most simple precautions in our haste to acquire that "bronzed" look.

Our doctors agree and insist that the sun is best taken in small doses, at least in the beginning. Tan acquired over a period of time, they say, will not burn or harm the skin. So why not try the scientific approach this year?

Remember that sunshine is good for you and tends to destroy bacteria, but that it has many hazards. A severe sunburn is just as serious as a severe burn from other causes.

First of all, start with very small doses. Some doctors say that two or three minutes exposure at a time (twice or three times a day if you like) is best for a starter. Gradually increase the time of exposure. If you're careful about it, you need never be "burned" at all.

HERE are some extra tricks you can use to help acquire an even coat of tan. Do your sunbathing lying on a large white sheet or towel. The white background eliminates shadows, and all parts of you will be exposed to the sun evenly.

Start on your back and rotate your body, first to one side, then onto your stomach and finally the other side. Be sure your back, front and each side get exactly the same amount of time. This should be not more than three minutes each or 12 minutes in all the first few sessions.

Rub generous amounts of a good suntan oil on your skin at the start of your summer program. Olive oil or coconut oil with a few drops of vinegar added is excellent for this purpose. Gradually use less oil as your skin builds up resistance to the sun's rays.

Wear sunglasses in the direct glare of the sun and never fall asleep while sun bathing. You'll tan faster at the time when the sun's rays are strongest; that is from 11 in the morning to about 3 in the afternoon. Another thing—don't think you're safe from burning on a cloudy day.

Protect your hair when you're in the sun. Some sun is good for the hair, but an overdose dries and fades it. You'll want to protect your face too with makeup and lipstick.

As you grow darker keep your makeup colors in harmony with your darkening skin tones. Buy a small box of very dark powder and mix small quantities of it with the powder you regularly use. This saves buying a large box of very tan powder and enables you to darken your makeup to match your coloring.

Hudson Shore Faculty

THE Hudson Shore Labor School, West Park, N. Y., this week announced the participation of leading government, AFL, CIO and university specialists on labor in its faculty for the summer session.

Faculty members include Herman Erickson, former director of the St. Paul Labor College in Minneapolis, now with the Georgia Workers' Education Service; James Street, Univ. of Pennsylvania; Louis Yagoda, member of the New York State Mediation Board, formerly with the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers.

Also, Julius Manson, New York State Mediation Board; Mildred Jeffery of the CIO Auto Workers; Karin Nelson, U. S. Dept. of Labor; Leonore Rankin, formerly with the CIO Playthings, Jewelry & Novelty Workers; Samuel G. Janis, AFL Ladies Garment Workers Union; and Rhetta Arter, education director of the school.

The eight-week summer session, which began June 14, will run until August 9. Students may attend for only a two-weeks period if they so desire.

In addition to courses in economic problems, union leadership, trade unions in action, parliamentary law, public speaking, writing and publicity techniques and drama, the school offers recreational facilities such as swimming, hiking, boating, parties and sports.

Workers may register by obtaining registration blanks from local educational directors or from Rhetta Arter, Education Director, Hudson Shore Labor School, West Park, N. Y.

VFW Chapter 'Taken In'

SEDITION TRIAL DEFENDANT DEFINES AMERICANISM

THE Washington chapter of the Veterans of Foreign Wars has been played for a sucker by a defendant in the wartime mass sedition trail.

Using the local VFW "Americanism" program as a vehicle, fascist-sounding material prepared by Col. Eugene N. Sanctuary, a retired officer from the first World War, is being dished out to well-intentioned ex-GI's by a VFW publication.

Appearing in the June 15 issue of the Nation's Capital VFW News, official organ of the District of Columbia VFW encampment, is a chart on the alleged designs of Communism.

One of the references in that chart is to "Protocol II to the Wise Men of Zion", a sinister fraud which has been used by hate groups for the past 50 years. Origin of the pamphlet has been traced to paid agents of the Czars of Russia.

The Protocols of Zion was used extensively by Hitler to fan the flames of anti-semitism in Germany, and has been similarly employed by the lunatic fringe of hate groups in the United States —despite the frequently - cited fraudulent character of the pamphlet.

The chart, on which Col. Sanctuary holds the copyright, lists a hundred alleged indications of communism. They include: "strikes", "League of Nations," "World Court," "cigarette smoking", "equal rights for women", "government ownership of public utilities", heavy inheritance and estate taxes," and so on and so on.

Possibility that the chart may go into other VFW papers was indicated in a line which said: "Your Americanism Chairman, E. A. Grady, has been granted the right for the reproduction in VFW publications by copyright holder Col. E. N. Sanctuary, former member of Intelligence Corps, World War I.

"This chart in its abbreviated form will show concisely the insidious manner in which they intend to carry out their philosophy."

Sanctuary has written many race-hate pamphlets. He is a good friend of Van Horn Mosely, a retired army general, who several years ago attained national publicity by telling a Congressional Committee of his desire to lead a fascist army on Washington to overthrow the government. Mosely has said that democracy "is nothing but communism."

Sanctuary was one of the more than a score of defendants in the wartime sedition trial, which broke down upon the death of the judge and was never revived. Other defendants included Elizabeth Dilling, a hysterical race-baiter; Gerold Winrod, a Kansas anti- semitic leader; and Robert Edmondson, a strong pro-Nazi spokesman.

It is from a person of this sort that the VFW group has been persuaded to accept and print "Americanism" propaganda.

LAWYERS GUILD CALLS LOYALTY ORDER 'DANGEROUS DOCTRINE'

"THE way to progress lies through the free exchange of ideas. Those who advocate social change and criticize the existing order must be as free to express their views as those who advocate the status quo. That is the real essence of democracy."

....Thus echoing such men as Jefferson, Madison, Lincoln, who fought to keep the right of free speech inviolable, the National Lawyers Guild, attacked President Truman's Executive Order on Loyalty of Government Employes in a recent analysis of the decree, published in the Lawyers Guild Review.

The study chronicles attempts to suppress freedom of speech since the American Revolution, cites Supreme Court decisions which have consistently upheld the constitutional right of Americans to choose their political beliefs with the same freedom they choose their religious tenets.

The Presidential decree, the Guild charges, is "a dangerous doctrine, fraught with the direst consequences . . . Nowhere in the Constitution is such power vested in the President or Congress. Further, to impute doctrines of an organization, so illegally determined, to its members with resultant dismissal from employment, constitutes heresy hunting of the worst kind."

Labor Haters' Silly Season

Donald Richberg, one time labor union attorney turned corporation stooge, walked away with the prize for the silliest statement in support of the Taft-Hartley bill.

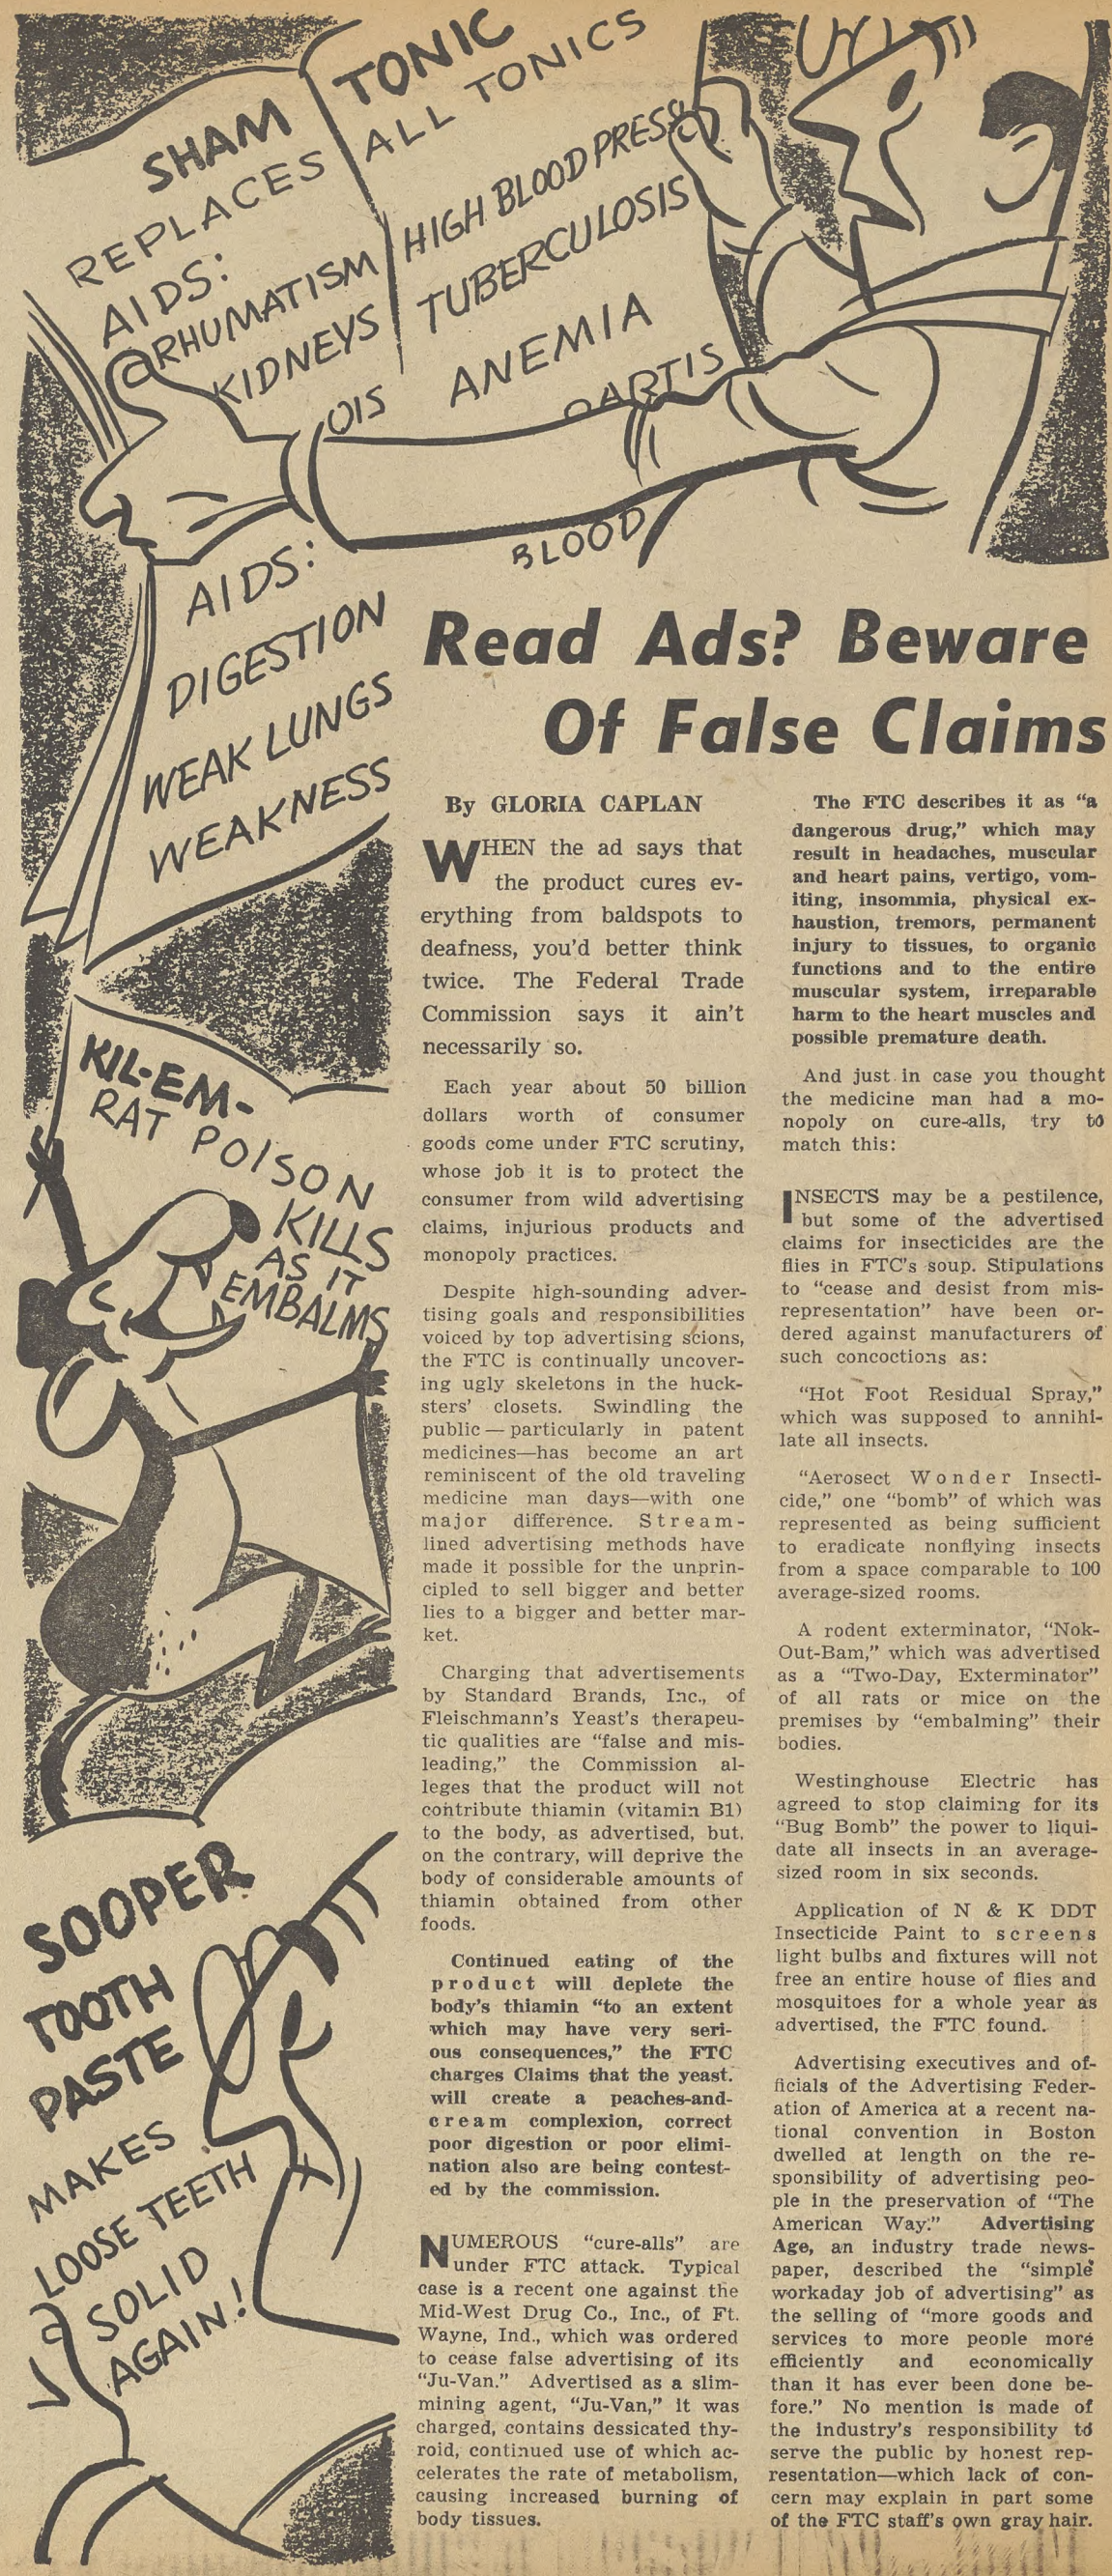
Richberg, in a radio broadcast last week, won the award against heavy competition.

Some beauties from the Richberg talk:

Pres. Truman can perform "the more difficult but the real act of friendship" to labor unions by signing the bill to hogtie their functions.

A President veto would be an act of "misplaced friendship" to labor.

"This labor bill was" passed not by the enemies of labor in Congress but by labor's friends."



Read Ads? Beware Of False Claims

By GLORIA CAPLAN

WHEN the ad says that the product cures everything from baldspots to deafness, you'd better think twice. The Federal Trade Commission says it ain't necessarily so.

Each year about 50 billion dollars worth of consumer goods come under FTC scrutiny, whose job it is to protect the consumer from wild advertising claims, injurious products and monopoly practices.

Despite high-sounding advertising goals and responsibilities voiced by top advertising scions, the FTC is continually uncovering ugly skeletons in the hucksters' closets. Swindling the public — particularly in patent medicines—has become an art reminiscent of the old traveling medicine man days—with one major difference. Streamlined advertising methods have made it possible for the unprincipled to sell bigger and better lies to a bigger and better market.

Charging that advertisements by Standard Brands, Inc., of Fleischmann's Yeast's therapeutic qualities are "false and misleading," the Commission alleges that the product will not contribute thiamin (vitamin B1) to the body, as advertised, but, on the contrary, will deprive the body of considerable amounts of thiamin obtained from other foods.

Continued eating of the product will deplete the body's thiamin "to an extent which may have very serious consequences," the FTC charges Claims that the yeast will create a peaches-and-cream complexion, correct poor digestion or poor elimination also are being contested by the commission.

NUMEROUS "cure-alls" are under FTC attack. Typical case is a recent one against the Mid-West Drug Co., Inc., of Ft. Wayne, Ind., which was ordered to cease false advertising of its "Ju-Van." Advertised as a slimming agent, "Ju-Van," it was charged, contains dessicated thyroid, continued use of which accelerates the rate of metabolism, causing increased burning of body tissues.

The FTC describes it as "a dangerous drug," which may result in headaches, muscular and heart pains, vertigo, vomiting, insommia, physical exhaustion, tremors, permanent injury to tissues, to organic functions and to the entire muscular system, irreparable harm to the heart muscles and possible premature death.

And just in case you thought the medicine man had a monopoly on cure-alls, try to match this:

INSECTS may be a pestilence, but some of the advertised claims for insecticides are the flies in FTC's soup. Stipulations to "cease and desist from misrepresentation" have been ordered against manufacturers of such concoctions as:

"Hot Foot Residual Spray," which was supposed to annihilate all insects.

"Aerosect Wonder Insecticide," one "bomb" of which was represented as being sufficient to eradicate nonflying insects from a space comparable to 100 average-sized rooms.

A rodent exterminator, "Nok-Out-Bam," which was advertised as a "Two-Day, Exterminator" of all rats or mice on the premises by "embalming" their bodies.

Westinghouse Electric has agreed to stop claiming for its "Bug Bomb" the power to liquidate all insects in an average-sized room in six seconds.

Application of N & K DDT Insecticide Paint to screens light bulbs and fixtures will not free an entire house of flies and mosquitoes for a whole year as advertised, the FTC found.

Advertising executives and officials of the Advertising Federation of America at a recent national convention in Boston dwelled at length on the responsibility of advertising people in the preservation of "The American Way." Advertising Age, an industry trade newspaper, described the "simple workaday job of advertising" as the selling of "more goods and services to more people more efficiently and economically than it has ever been done before." No mention is made of the industry's responsibility to serve the public by honest representation—which lack of concern may explain in part some of the FTC staff's own gray hair.

Reuther Testifies

BIAS IN HIRING INCREASING

THE new is giving way to the old, so far as industry's handling of anti-discrimination hiring policies is concerned, a Senate Labor sub-committee was warned last week by Pres. Walter Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers.

Testifying for CIO and the UAW, and as a private citizen, the union official called upon the sub-committee to report favorably on S. 984, which provides for the legal enforcement of fair employment practices.

The bill, based largely upon provisions of the New York state antibias law, would set up a national agency, with both powers of persuasion and possible contempt-action to bring employers into line against discrimination in the cases of persons from minority groups.

On the stand for two hours, Reuther said, "Non-white workers have borne the brunt of post-war unemployment." Job listings in Detroit U. S. Employment Service offices contained discrimination notices in 44.4% of the openings in April 1947, compared to only about 22% in 1946, he said.

"The CIO and the UAW-CIO endorse S. 984 out of the conviction that full and equal economic opportunity for the minorities of this nation mean a higher standard of living for all," Reuther said in a brief filed with the committee in advance of his oral testimony.

"Access to employment on equal terms for all Americans means releasing the majority as well as the minority from the burden of poverty, disease, crime and unused talents which represent the high cost of discrimination.

"The lifting of this burden through passage of S. 984 and through energetic community programs to make the American creed a reality can mean opening the way toward full participation in the national productive effort by the one-tenth to one-third of our people now denied this right.

"Higher levels of employment and wages mean greater purchasing power, greater demand for the products of our factories and farms, a greater chance to keep America at work and at peace. Fair employment is an essential component of any full employment program which seeks to reach the goal of security and abundance without sacrifice of democracy and basic freedoms."

"The experience of the CIO and UAW-CIO in combating discrimination in employment offers a case history in effective democratic action which at the same time points to the need for federal legislation," he said.

"The vigor with which the UAW and CIO have pressed for the full integration of minority workers both into the union and the industry, while dramatic testimony to the potentialities of voluntary group action, serves also to underscore the severe limitations of such action and the urgent need for the community to supplement and reinforce voluntary effort by legislative enactment of laws upholding fair play in employment."

Earlier, Rabbi Stephen Wise of new York had scored job bias as dangerous and costly to the nation. He told the committee:

"An incomplete democracy is an insecure democracy. Despite all the progress we have made, American democracy remains alarmingly incomplete because millions of our fellow-citizens are still being denied their legitimate democratic rights and full equality of treatment on account of their race, color, creed or national origin.

In no area is this denial of democratic rights more serious or destructive than in the field of employment—the denial of work or promotion to qualified applicants solely because of racial or religious considerations.

SAYS TREATY BREAKS LAW

DEFEAT of the Anglo-American oil treaty by the U. S. Senate was asked by Acting Pres. A. R. Kinstley of CIO Oil Workers, in a letter to Sen. Vandenberg (R. Mich.)

Control of the world's oil resources should be under the United Nations, rather than under monopolistic oil companies of Britain and the United States, the union urged.

"We believe," said the union's statement, "that past history and past practices of the oil companies involved warrant and support our opinion that the treaty will strengthen and even legalize the monopolistic practices of these dominant oil companies."

The Oil Workers Union holds that treaty provisions are in conflict with the anti-trust laws. Nor does the treaty safeguard the welfare and economic rights of oil workers in foreign lands employed by American or British corporations.

"The problem of petroleum resources and supplies," the union stated, "is in reality an international problem concerning nations and not just Great Britain and the United States. The United Nations therefore should be charged with the responsibility of finding a solution compatible with the best interests of all nations."

IS FREE SPEECH UNAMERICAN?

It's getting so bad in Washington that reporters may not be able to call congressmen "jerks."

Writer John Keats of the Scripps-Howard Daily News, Washington, D. C., was covering the U. S. Court of Appeals hearing which resulted in Justice Alexander Holtzoff's being barred from presiding over the trial of the executive board of the Joint Anti-Fascist Refugee committee.

During the verbal argument, Keats turned to associates at the press table and commented unfavorably about "that jerk Parnell Thomas." (Rep. J. Parnell Thomas, R., N. J.).

Holding down a place nearby was Chief Investigator Robert Stripling of Thomas' unAmerican activities committee. Jumping up, Stripling demanded "what's your name . . . whom do you represent?" as he busily scrawled the remark on a handy pad.

Keats obliged with the information and Stripling went away, smirking . . . and left the reporters wondering when Keats will be summoned for a hearing into his "unAmerican and subversive" attitude.

TAX BILL VETO AIDS U. S. ECONOMY—MURRAY

THE GOP's "spare the greedy" tax bill wound up in the discard pile last week, as the House sustained President Truman's veto.

Two Republicans — Andersen (Minn.) and Hull (Wis.)—joined 134 Democrats and one American Labor Partyite to give the President the necessary one-third vote of confidence. The House victory for friends of decent taxation came as a surprise, since it had been assumed the real test would have been in the Senate.

CIO, through Pres. Murray, hailed the President's action and the subsequent sustaining vote in the House.

Murray said the CIO "is gratified" at the veto and felt Congress had a "bounden duty" to sustain it.

"The President's veto action is an important step to preserve the stability of our economy, to help achieve continuing full employment, and to forestall an outrageous dividend to those high-income earners who least need financial assistance from the government," he added.

"The people of the country will applaud the President's action. They look to Congress for similar statesmanship. Congress should now devote itself to developing a long-range tax program that will truly meet the needs of the government and of the public."

Tax rates, it was virtually certain, will remain the same another year until 1948, when both parties are bound to assail one another's tax program as the presidential derby gets hot.

Voting Records 'Concealed'

Renewed demands to publish and distribute voting records of Congressmen were sounded last week.

In New York, the American Labor Party charged that the House Administration Committee is "pigeonholing" a bill introduced by Rep. Boggs (D. La.) for publication of the records by the Library of Congress. The bill, according to ALP Chairman Hyman Blumberg, was introduced in March, but no hearings have been held. Blumberg said:

"At present, the Library of Congress will not make a voting record of any member of Congress available unless such Congressman specifically authorizes it to do so.

"The bill by Rep. Boggs provides that the voting records of any member of Congress must be furnished upon the request of any 10 citizens or upon the request of any publication."

REACTION WINS TEMPORARY VICTORY

SENATOR TAYLOR (D. IDAHO): "If a depression or recession, corrective or otherwise, or a shake-out, or whatever one may want to call it, comes upon us, we can look back to this day and say: 'That was the greatest step toward financial ruin since the days of Herbert Hoover'."

SENATOR PEPPER (D. FLA.): "If in fighting this vicious legislation workers are accused of treason, there will be some of them who, like Patrick Henry will say, 'If this be treason, make the most of it.' They will fight to defend their homes, firesides, jobs and their standard of living.

On this page are the pictures of the four Senators who fought the battle for time—time to hear the voice of the American people supporting the President's veto of the Taft-Hartley bill.

They succeeded in stalling the Republicans' plan for an immediate vote on overriding the President's veto, but they were unable to gain time for the people to support Truman.

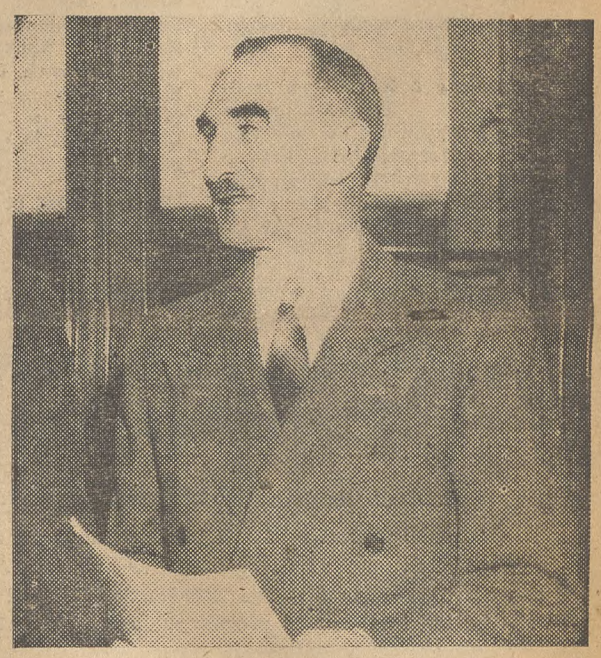
The four of them spoke more than 24 hours in an historic effort to halt a coalition of reactionary northern Republicans and bourbon southern Democrats hell-bent on overriding the veto.

Time was on their side—the side of the American people—but they were unable to gain enough of it.

As one of them—Sen. Pepper—said just before the vote was taken:

"History shows that the victories of reaction are not permanent."

Remember their historic effort. Pay tribute by voting out labor's enemies in '48.



SENATOR MORSE (R. Oreg.): "Lawyers do not need to worry about the future, because if this bill becomes law it will operate as a full employment bill for lawyers—that is, if the workers have any money left to pay them, so far as the labor lawyers are concerned."

SENATOR KILGORE (D. W. VA.): "Advertised as a measure to promote harmony, it (the Taft-Hartley bill) will invite stress, discord, and never-ending litigation. Hailed as a bill to limit strikes, it will prove the greatest incentive to industrial unrest and increased friction . . ."

NOT TIME ENOUGH TO UPHOLD VETO

REACTION — north and south—lined up together June 3 to halt temporarily the march of America to a more abundant life.

The northern Republicans and the southern Democrats in the Senate, who have by now become accustomed to joining forces, voted 68 to 25 to enact the Taft-Hartley bill over President Truman's veto.

The act will distort the Wagner Act—though keeping it formally alive—will attempt to revive the days of the open shop, will bar labor's political activities and will gag the labor press on political issues.

The House had overridden the veto June 20 immediately after it received Truman's scorching veto message. But the progressives in the Senate were made of sterner stuff.

Confronting a Republican leadership hell-bent on keeping the Senate in session until a vote was taken, the liberals—Sens. Pepper (D. Fla.), Taylor (D. Idaho), Kilgore (D. W. Va.) and Morse (R. Oreg.)—decided to discuss the issues until the nation had an opportunity to express itself on the bill.

MORSE was the first to object to the taking of an immediate vote June 20. He was followed by Pepper who spoke more than three hours.

Intent upon postponing the vote as long as possible, Sen. Taylor took over at 6:55 p. m., when Pepper ended his speech.

Almost eight hours later at 2:35 a. m., June 21, Taylor was still talking, studding his speech with picturesque statements such as:

"I am not a lawyer, but suppose we wrote a law aimed at preventing a man and his wife from sitting down and talking over their differences, their disagreements, and having to go to court every time they got into a scrap.

"We would have more divorces; marriages would not last long enough to say 'Jack Robinson.' That is similar to what has been done here. It has been made practically impossible for an employer and his employes to get together on any kind of friendly terms."

Taylor ended at 3:15 a. m., and Morse immediately took up the fight, for time—time which is on the side of progress.

NEXT to take the floor was Sen. Kilgore, who spoke a few minutes short of two hours. Then agreement was almost reached to postpone the vote until Monday, June 23, but the effort was thwarted by the single objection of Sen. Dworshak (R. Idaho).

Throughout the night, Morse had offered to relieve Taylor. Morse started in sparingly at 6:30 a. m., speaking in a low voice and conserving his energies until noon.

But thereafter he gave an animated talk, varied to suit his needs. At 3 p. m. he appeared to tire and started to read the President's veto message, but later he rallied, soaring to oratorical heights.

MORSE for the most part stuck to an analysis of the bill, declaring at one point:

"This bill is the very antithesis of fairness and candor. It puts all the cards under the table or up the sleeve of the lawyers for both parties. Such legislation will never receive my vote."

Morse finished at 4:29 p. m., but not until agreement had been reached not to vote until the afternoon of June 23.

He had held the floor a minute short of 10 hours to make the longest speech in the Senate since June 12, 1933, when the late Sen. Huey Long (La.) had spoken for more than 15 hours against the Natl. Industrial Recovery Act.

He had worn the Republicans down. He had gained time, but not enough.

Meanwhile, the battle was continuing over the air waves. Truman and Sen. Taft (R. Ohio), co-author of the bill, both had taken to air June 20 to present their divergent points of view. Taft had declared that the veto message had been authored by CIO General Counsel Lee Pressman, who went on the Mutual network the next day to tear the bill to pieces.

THE CIO climaxed its campaign of several months against the bill and its predecessors with a telegram from Pres. Philip Murray to Sen. Barkley and Chairman Hannegan of the Democratic Natl. Committee, declaring:

"The vote will be the test whether the Democratic party can be the instrument for the protection of the interests of the American people against those who would destroy our democracy."

Only two Senators switched sides—Lucas (D. Ill.) and Sparkman (D. Ala.) voting to sustain the veto after having voted for the original passage of the legislation. Just two Republicans besides Morse deserted Taft to line up with labor on the vote—Langer (N. Dak.) and Malone (Nev.)

Time had been gained, but not enough. In the closing moment of debate before the vote was taken, Sen. Pepper took the floor to declare that "history shows that the victories of reaction are not permanent."

Sen. Murray (D., Mont.)

Sen. Johnston (D., S.C.)

Both Murray and Johnston continued the argument for upholding the veto after agreement time for the Senate vote.

ANSWER TAFT REACTION WITH BALLOTS—MURRAY

CIO Pres. Philip Murray this week predicted that the Taft-Hartley law "will reduce the great mass of American workers to depression standards and will preclude any lasting escape from recurring cycles of 'boom' and 'bust' and mass unemployment."

In a speech before the 38th annual conference of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People in Washington, D. C., Murray charged that the new labor law "deliberately seeks to create the atmosphere of fear and depression in order to deprive American workers of fundamental civil and political rights. Moreover, this program is to be set in motion at a time when the vitality of our democratic institutions is a matter of world import."

Murray said that the present period in many ways parallels the years following World War I, when a savage onslaught on unions was unleashed. He reminded his audience that:

"Organization such as yours did not escape this wave of reaction. The 1920's witnessed the rebirth of the Ku Klux Klan and the increase of mob rule. The NAACP was placed in the same category as labor organizations and was attacked by these same forces of reaction . . .

"Already, we have too many signs of an exactly similar state of affairs. These are not accidental developments in our economy. They are not the results of coincidence or even of natural economic forces. Many, if not most of the dangers I have described are the results of powerful economic concentrations, unnatural and improper in our economy, which more and more are exercising an unholy influence in shaping the destinies of our country.

IN addition, they represent the refusal of the average American citizen to intelligently cast his ballot, as was demonstrated in the elections in November, 1946."

To offset reaction's gains and to obtain equality and justice, Murray urged "translating our ideals and legislative program into every ward and precinct in America."

He declared that "every citizen must register, pay his or her poll tax, and vote. We must qualify ourselves to vote and simultaneously work to eliminate the poll tax and other restrictive voting requirements.

"We must carefully examine the voting records of the candidates of all parties before entrusting our destinies in their hands. We must be as careful and selective in giving our support to local and state candidates as to those candidates who aspire for Federal office.

"The local sheriff, prosecuting attorney or judge, can at times be as important in securing equal justice as the highest Federal officers. We must demand the same strict accountability from our elected government officials as we demand from our officers of our unions and from the officers of the NAACP."

CIO Union Leaders Score Taft Act

Jack Kroll, director, CIO Political Action Committee:

"This organization of ours is not going to lie down and die just because a Taft or a Hartley or a Van Aken says we are going to die. The Taft-Hartley bill and the Van Aken bill in Ohio will provide the spark that will set off effective PAC activities for 1948.

"Every generation has to preserve its liberties. This is it."

★ ★ ★

Albert J. Fitzgerald, president, CIO Electrical Workers:

"We were opposed to the Taft-Hartley bill, we are opposed to it, and we will fight the law through every legitimate means."

★ ★ ★

Jacob S. Potofsky, president, CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers:

"Labor's political action is No. 1 on our agenda. Reactionary legislators and their sponsors, the National Association of Manufacturers, will hear from an aroused electorate including 15,000,000 organized trade-unionists, their friends and their families.

"It is our solemn conviction that the Taft-Hartley law is unconstitutional. We are prepared to challenge the constitutionality of this reactionary, un-American measure. Section after section is in clear violation of the Bill of Rights. Most infamous of all is its section which seeks to abridge the rights of a free labor press in this country. The proponents of the bill seek to muzzle the very criticism they have earned for their assault upon the rights of other Americans."

Harry Bridges, President, CIO Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union:

"We are telling our members from this moment on to remember and to lay the blame for this fascist slave legislation on their own employers. We are telling them, also, to prepare now to clean out of Congress their employers' political mouthpieces."

GOP Plan

PLAY LABOR FOR SUCKER

REPUBLICAN bigwigs, a bit intimidated by the violence of union reaction to the Taft-Hartley law, are going to try to play labor for a political sucker.

The deal came to light in the Wall Street Journal, pipeline to the GOP inner sanctum. In essence it consists of throwing labor the bone of a 60c or 65c minimum wage sometime in late 1948, but in time for the elections, in hopes of making "the 1947 labor reform bill just a faint memory."

"GOP forces in Congress are working out a strategic plan to counter-balance union-rankling effects of the Taft-Hartley labor measure," writes Wall Street Journal correspondent Edward Hughes from Washington. While he admits the idea of raising minimum wage levels is "hardly a new one," Hughes points out that "the novelty of the present situation is that a corps of Republican legislators is ready to embrace the idea."

In a devious and tricky play, "seasoned Republican Leaders" will let the announcement of their intention be made by some of the newer GOP members so they can test its reception "back home" before openly committing themselves to it.

CIO URGES UNCEASING DRIVE TO ERASE TAFT-HARTLEY LAW

THE CIO has pledged to carry on an "unceasing campaign against the un-American conspiracy" that produced the Taft-Hartley law, CIO Pres. Philip Murray said this week.

In a statement of policy unanimously approved by the CIO Executive Board meeting in Washington June 27, Murray declared that the anti-labor bill passed over the President's veto "represents a triumph of repression."

"Free men can only marvel at the cynical contempt for human liberty which the bill reflects. The fundamental democratic rights of workers against exploitation are trampled upon by this legislation. No right was too fundamental, no activity of workers too basic, to escape the bill's hatchet."

The policy statement charged that the Taft-Hartley bill in effect has destroyed the Wagner Act and the legal machinery set up under it, for the protection of the fundamental democratic rights of American workers.

"This legislation has been adopted at a time when the vitality of our democratic institutions is a matter of world import," Murray stated. "It can only serve to betray the faith of men the world over in freedom and democracy.

"The audacity and cynical contempt of the sponsors of this bill for the rights of the people have gone so far as to convert into crimes the exercises by workers and their unions of basic political rights.

MURRAY charged sponsors of the Taft-Hartley legislation with attempting "to destroy labor unions, to degrade living standards, to extinguish and to cripple the exercise of basic rights and forever to prevent the great mass of the people whose needs are thus to be sacrificed to reaction and privilege from shaking off this yoke of want and repression."

He asserted that the CIO as an organization of free American workers "treasures the precious American heritage of freedom," and was born and grew strong through the exercise of rights basic to our democracy.

Murray stated that therefore it was the duty of CIO members, "both as trade unionists and as citizens of a democracy," to work with unswerving determination to have "this infamous law . . . erased from the statute books."

The CIO President declared that the CIO pledged itself "not to permit this bill to destroy either the economic or the political rights of the people. Nor will we permit the blackmail, the threats and the smears of legislative hatchetmen operating through the House Labor and Un-American Committees to divide or deter us."

Murray told a press conference after the Board meeting that while the CIO was determined to fight untiringly to wipe this oppressive law off the statute books, it had solemnly committed itself to carry out contracts now in effect.

"Our unions will respect their contracts," he declared, and will expect employers to law affecting the constitution-do the same."

REFERRING to the provisions of the Taft-Hartley ally guaranteed rights of freedom of press and speech, Murray said that the CIO would continue to exercise its right to support candidates for public office.

He told the press conference that the board had voted unanimously to continue and to strengthen the CIO Political Action Committee.

Statement of CIO Executive Board

The following statement was issued by Pres. Philip Murray in behalf of the CIO executive board, which met in Washington this week:

IN DEFIANCE of the overwhelming protest of millions of Americans, the Congress has passed the Taft-Hartley Bill over the President's veto.

In overriding the veto, the Congress has wilfully and deliberately placed the power and authority of the Government into the hands of the organized anti-union employers of this country led by the NAM for the purpose of smashing organized labor.

This bill was not passed in a vacuum. It is a vital part of a coordinated program to destroy the living standards of our people for which the zealots in the Republican and Democratic parties share the responsibility.

The bill seeks to condemn the great mass of the American people to depression living standards and to prevent any lasting escape from the cycle of boom, bust and mass unemployment.

This bill is part of the process in voting out price control, cancelling rent control, destroying workers' rights under the Wage-Hour Act, protecting monopolies, ignoring the needs of veterans, crippling our social insurance system and turning over our homeless veterans to the tender mercies of the building and real estate lobbies.

The purpose of this bill is to render unions powerless to resist wage cuts, speed-ups and the restoration of sweat-shop conditions. It has been made completely unworkable so that workers will be robbed of even the meager protections which survive in the bill.

THE BILL represents a triumph of repression. Free men can only marvel at the cynical contempt for human liberty which the bill reflects. The fundamental democratic rights of workers against exploitation are trampled upon by this legislation. No right was too fundamental, no activity of workers too basic, to escape the bill's hatchet.

The Wagner Act created the legal machinery for the protection of fundamental democratic rights and needs of the American workers. The Taft-Hartley bill destroys this instrument. This new bill converts the Act and the Board into instruments of oppression against workers' rights. This legislation has been adopted at a time when the vitality of our democratic institutions is a matter of world import. It can only serve to betray the faith of men the world over in freedom and democracy.

The audacity and cynical contempt of the sponsors of this bill for the rights of the people have gone so far as to convert into crimes the exercise by workers and their ·· ions of basic political rights. The sponsors of this bill have even boasted that henceforth it is illegal for a labor organization even to print the voting records of the reactionaries who have approved it.

The sponsors of this legislation have attempted to commit the perfect crime. They seek to destroy labor unions, to degrade living standards, to extinguish and to cripple the exercise of basic rights and forever to prevent the great mass of the people whose needs are thus to be sacrificed to reaction and privilege from shaking off this yoke of want and repression.

AS AN organization of free American workers, the CIO treasures the precious American heritage of freedom. The CIO was born and grew strong through the exercise of rights which are basic in our democracy.

The liberty of workers, like the liberty of all our people, was won only after bitter struggle. Untold numbers of common people have starved and suffered, have been beaten and blacklisted, have been exploited and hunted, so that labor organizations might have a right to exist and flourish as a fundamental part of a democratic society.

Our duty, both as trade unionists and as citizens of a democracy, demand of us an unswerving determination that this infamous law must be erased from the statute books.

The economic needs of all our people and the hope of a depression-free future require us not to permit this law to become an instrument of exploitation. If industrial peace is to continue in this country it cannot and will not be at the price of the living standards, the energies and the health of all our people. We will never permit this law to become a means of sacrificing our human resources to that greed for profit which gave rise to the law.

We propose, as good Americans, to fight the political restraints in this legislation.

We would not merit the name of free Americans if we acquiesced in a law which makes it a crime to exercise rights of freedom of speech, freedom of press, freedom of assembly. We would betray a fundamental heritage of political liberty if we allowed ourselves to be gagged by the law. The Constitution remains the law of our land and we propose to enjoy its protection. We will not comply with the unconstitutional limitations on political activity which are written into the Taft-Hartley Bill.

We dedicate ourselves to an unceasing campaign against the Un-American conspiracy which has produced this bill. We pledge ourselves not to permit this bill to destroy either the economic or the political rights of the people. Nor will we permit the blackmail, the threats and the smears of legislative hatchet-men operating through the House Labor and Un-American Committees to divide or deter us

WE propose to exercise our political rights for the purpose of mobilizing the American people for the repudiation not only of the Taft-Hartley Bill but of the entire reactionary program of which it is a part.

Our responsibilities require us to work immediately for a repeal of the law and for the defeat of those forces in our political life which have sponsored it and worked for its passage. We shall not shirk those responsibilities.

We intend to comply with existing collective bargaining obligations. We expect the employer likewise to respect those obligations. We intend in the future to seek to negotiate new contracts. As existing contracts expire we intend to seek to bargain with employers in good faith and amicably to reach through collective bargaining a solution of our problems.

We expect employers to negotiate and to bargain with us in good faith. We expect employers to continue to live with the labor organizations representing their employes, to recognize that the strength of the collective bargaining agent is an indispensable part of the collective bargaining process. Through such bona fide collective bargaining, in the best American tradition, industrial peace and prosperity can be assured.

If employers choose instead to employ the Taft-Hartley Bill for the purpose of frustrating the bargaining obligation and renewing their assault upon unions then the hope of the future for industrial peace will be shattered. The responsibility for industrial peace in the days to come is a responsibility which bears heavily upon employers. We will never permit the Taft-Hartley Bill to become a shield for repression.

From this day forward we dedicate ourselves to the mission of obtaining a repudiation of this infamous legislation and of the reactionary program of which it is a part. We will expose to the entire American people the reactionary forces which have produced this legislation. We will bring our message not only to workers but to farmers, small businessmen and other groups whose economic welfare this legislation threatens.

We hereby dedicate our organizations and the entire membership to work unceasingly in the political field in complete unity with all labor organizations, and other progressive groups to insure the political repudiation of those reactionaries who are responsible for the Taft-Hartley Bill and to preserve a free America.

MUFFLED BUT NOT SILENCED

"PROCLAIM Liberty throughout all the land unto all the inhabitants thereof," reads the inscription on the historic Liberty Bell.

The Taft-Hartley Act is an amendment to this inscription, which might well read, "with the exception of the working people whose Liberty to organize and bargain collectively is hereby circumscribed."

On this Fourth of July, it is appropriate to draw inspiration from the unconquerable spirit of the American people as demonstrated by their love of liberty and their willingness to fight for it.

The Liberty Bell might be cracked, but it was not silenced nor surrendered.

The Taft-Hartley muffler is an attempt to hamper labor's freedom of action and weaken its resistance to tyranny and exploitation.

But the whole history of the American people serves notice that such usurpations do not cow their spirit, but rather stimulate new and more determined effort in the struggle for freedom.

Labor has suffered a serious reverse in the passage of the Taft-Hartley Act. Its activities will be hampered and its conditions impaired.

But the fight against this measure has aroused American working people as never before. Labor will not rest until it is repealed.

All sections of labor have been drawn closer together in the common fight. United action and greatly increased labor political activity are likely to be two by-products of the anti-labor act which will discomfit its sponsors.

The CIO, for its part, will be stimulated to increase its organizing activities and to put ever greater effort into the fight for better conditions, to overcome the new obstacles.

Its members have drawn the lesson that the failure to bring out a sufficient progressive vote in the elections of November, 1946, exposed labor to the offensive of reaction in the present Congress.

They will study the voting record of every member of Congress, will mobilize for coming elections through the CIO Political Action Committee and, as Philip Murray urges, will "translate labor's ideals and legislative program into every ward and precinct in America."

LABOR'S COUNTER-OFFENSIVE

THE CIO, through its Executive Board, has served emphatic notice that it does not intend to take the Taft-Hartley slave labor act lying down.

"As an organization of free American workers, the CIO treasures the precious American heritage of freedom," Pres. Philip Murray said, in a statement on behalf of the Board. "The CIO was born and grew strong through the exercise of rights which are basic in our democracy.

"We propose, as good Americans, to fight the political restraints in this legislation.

"We dedicate ourselves to an unceasing campaign against the un-American conspiracy which has produced this bill.

"Our responsibilities require us to work immediately for a repeal of the law and for the defeat of those forces in our political life which have sponsored it and worked for its passage."

In order to implement its resolve to fight back against the tyrannies of the act, to assert the workers' basic constitutional rights, and to defend their interests against this murderous assault, the CIO Board voted for a great expansion of organizing and political activity, and for united action with the AFL and Railroad Brotherhoods in labor's common fight.

Through these and many other proposed steps, labor will launch its greatest counter-offensive against the present offensive of un-American reaction.

LOOKING AHEAD

BY LEN DE CAUX

ONCE there was a man rowing a boat upstream. With all his effort, he could little more than hold his own against the current. He was fearful that at any moment the boat might be carried into dangerous rock-strewn rapids.

In the boat were two other men, taking it easy and singing, "Merrily we roll along, roll along, roll along."

The man at the oars yelled to them to give a hand, warning of the rapids.

But they shouted him down. One took the rudder but only to yank it in the wrong direction. The other kept leaning back for long swigs at a bottle of whisky, almost capsizing the boat.

★ ★ ★

THEN THESE two took to criticizing the man at the oars.

"What's he hollering about? We're doing fine, and he's got a job at good wages," said one.

"These laboring people are never satisfied," retorted the other. "Always wanting more. Got too much power."

When the oarsman got good and mad, the other two put their heads together.

"Arrogant, dictatorial, subversive, that what he is," they said. "What's more, he's rocking the boat. We'll fix him."

And they took a rope, made it into a lasso and threw it over the oarsman's arms.

★ ★ ★

AT THIS critical juncture, we must interrupt the story to say we don't know how its going to end.

It looks bad, unless the oarsman can disentangle himself and unless the others realize the danger and give a helping hand.

The Taft-Hartley bill has been made law, to lasso labor, to entangle it, to weaken its power.

Congress has done either nothing or the wrong thing. It has yanked the rudder of the boat of state in a dangerous direction, threatening to wreck it on the rocks of depression. And big business, drunk on super-profits and anti-labor venom, is rocking the boat with a vengeance.

★ ★ ★

A SOBER description of the present economic drift has just been presented to the Senate-House Committee on the Economic Report by Emil Rieve, on behalf of the CIO Full Employment Committee.

His statement points out that, whereas there is at present a high level of overall employment, there are dangerous signs of growing unemployment in the textile, apparel, electrical, rubber and some other industries.

Wholesale food prices have gone up 31% since June, 1946. Retail prices reached an all-time high in March. And there is no sign of decline in sky-roaring living costs.

While corporation profits, after taxes, were running at a record annual rate of $16.2 billion in the last quarter of 1946, and bid fair to break this record in the first half of 1947, real wages have declined by about $6 weekly since 1945.

The proportion of national income going to wages and salaries has dropped from 70.2% in 1944 to 62.2% in the first quarter of 1947, while the proportion going to profits has increased by nearly one-half.

THESE AND many other facts brought out in this CIO report add up to the conclusion that "high prices, exorbitant profits, the redistribution of national income, the liquidation of savings by low-income individuals, the shift to consumer loans, the reduced purchasing power of the mass of American consumers, are all steps on the road to collapse of our economy."

The strongest force to check this drift to the rapids of depression is organized labor, which works to increase purchasing power, to correct the maldistribution of wealth, and to promote an ever-expanding standard of living.

But, instead of aiding this force, Congress has passed the Taft-Hartley bill to curtail collective bargaining and to prevent the extension of union organization.

Its every other action has tended to rock the economic boat and head it in the wrong direction —repeal of the excess profits tax, raising prices by ending OPA, increasing rents, tax relief to the greedy and not the needy, and stumbling-blocks in the way of foreign trade.

The fight against the Taft-Hartley Act and to bring Congress to its senses and elect a better one, is a people's fight against the dangerous drift to national depression.

CIO BACKS SHIPYARD WAGE DEMANDS

THE CIO Executive Board this week threw its full weight behind the wage demands of the CIO Shipbuilding Workers. The board:

1. Called upon the U. S. government to investigate "the management conspiracy" to destroy the Shipbuilding Stabilization Committee, which in the past has regulated wages paid members of the union.

2. Pledged full support for all its affiliates in the strike that has already caused 40,000 members of the Shipbuilding Workers to leave their jobs, principally at Bethlehem Steel yards.

3. Vowed to call the attention of the members of the affiliated unions and the public to the "conspiracy of management in the shipbuilding and ship repair industry" to destroy the Shipbuilding Stabilization Committee in which management, government and the union had participated. The resolution was:

"Because of the refusal of employers' representatives on the committee to attend any meetings since July, 1946, it has been impossible to conduct the 1946 wage review.

"Not only is this true of the 1946 wage review, but under the terms of the tripartite one Standards Agreement as amended, further wage review should have been completed by the Ship Building Stabilization Committee on or about June 1.

It was pointed out that the union's agreement with management expired June 23.

East Coast shipyards have refused to grant the demand of the union for increases despite the fact that the Northern Pacific Coast employers in the same industry had completed an agreement with the AFL Metal Trades Council to boost the wages of ship repair workers by 13 cents an hour and ship construction workers 13-15c an hour.

Among the companies entering this agreement was the Bethlehem Steel Co., which refuses on the East Coast to make a concession to the union, the board's resolution stated.

SHIPPING TIEUP OVER. A nationwide CIO shipping stoppage ended when union demands were met by shipowners after a 4-day tieup. Scanning the agreement are (l. to r.) Pres. Joseph Curran of the Natl. Maritime Union, Pres. Frank Taylor of the American Merchant Marine Institute, Asst. Sec. of Labor John W. Gibson and Pres. Samuel J. Hogan of the Marine Engineers Beneficial Assn. Standing are U. S. conciliators William Margolis, Fred Livingston and Pres. Joseph Selly of the American Communications Assn. (Federated Pictures)

De Caux Resigns, Swim To Succeed Him

CIO President Philip Murray this week announced the resignation of Len De Caux as CIO Publicity Director and Editor of The CIO News, expressing his "appreciation of the services which you have rendered the Congress of Industrial Organizations and the support which you have given the CIO."

At the same time, Murray announced the appointment of Allan L. Swim, public relations director of the CIO Organizing Committee, as successor to Mr. De Caux.

De Caux' letter of resignation follows:

"For personal reasons, which I have already outlined to you, I wish to resign as CIO Publicity Director and Editor of The CIO News.

"I would like my resignation to take effect as soon as you can conveniently relieve me of my duties and trust that July 15 will be satisfactory to you as the effective date.

"It has been a privilege and an honor to work for the CIO since its inception. This great movement has inspired, and still inspires, my enthusiastic loyalty and devotion and I hope to continue to be of service to it in any way I can."

Accepting the resignation, Murray replied as follows:

"This is to acknowledge your communication dealing with the matter which you and I discussed in the course of our meetings during the present week.

"You have expressed an anxiety to do some writing and that whilst occupying your present position as publicity director for the CIO you have not had the time and opportunity to devote yourself to this work.

"I have an appreciation of the services which you have rendered the Congress of Industrial Organizations and the support which you have given the CIO. I am therefore, in accordance with your letter of June 26th, accepting your resignation."

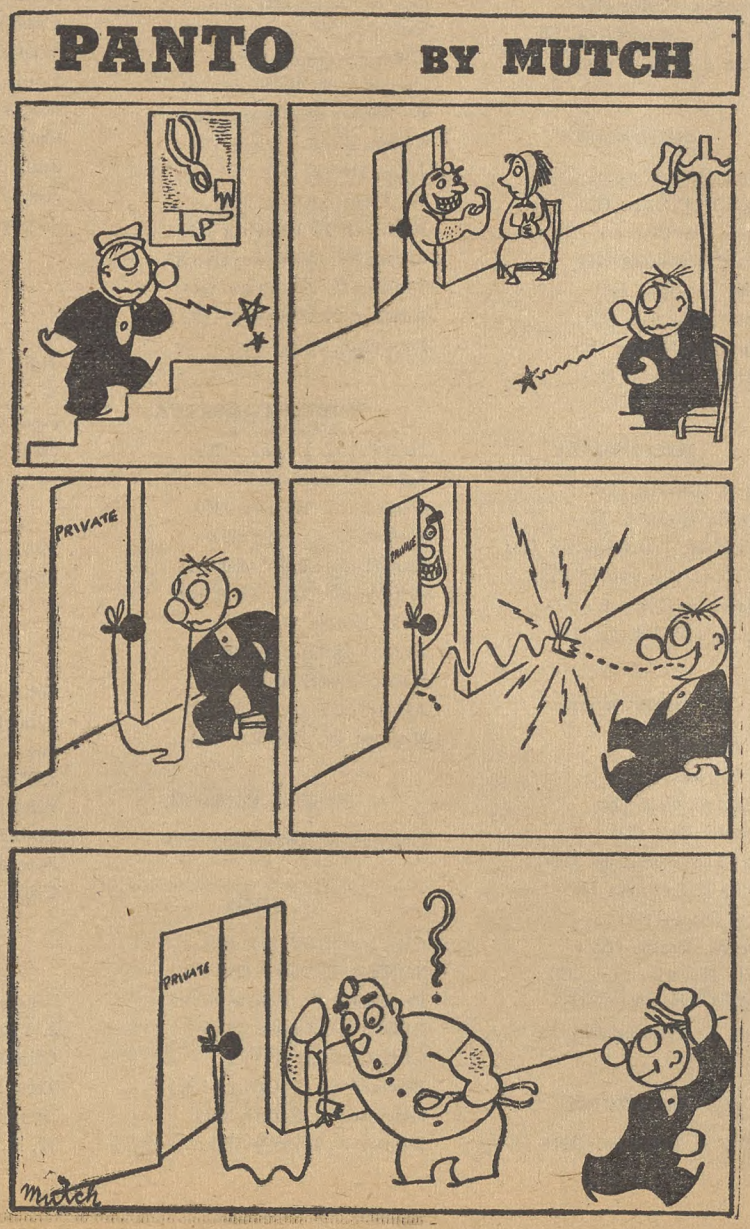
Allan L. (Pete) Swim, who will become CIO Publicity Director and Editor of The CIO News after July 15, is 36 years of age, married and has one daughter. He was born on a farm near Pana, Ill., and educated at Stuttgart, Arkansas.

Swim started newspaper work in 1928 as reporter on daily paper at Stuttgart, later becoming editor, then co-publisher of the paper.

He joined the Scripps-Howard organization in 1935 and later became assistant city editor of the Memphis Press-Scimitar. He traveled over the country for two years for Scripps-Howard Newspaper Alliance, writing about management - labor affairs and "hate" organizations such as the Ku Klux Klan.

Swim resigned his newspaper job with Scripps-Howard in May, 1946, and became director of public relations for the CIO Organizing Committee in the South.

He joined the American Newspaper Guild in 1937, served two terms as its president and three terms as president of the Memphis Industrial Union Council.



CIO Calls Drive

necessary for carrying on PAC's work will continue as planned, Murray stated. He expressed the belief and the hope that these individual voluntary contributions would be greatly increased in the light of the situation created by the passage of the Taft-Hartley law.

The Board also voted unanimously to conduct a more intensive organizing drive all over America, Murray told the press conference.

"There is nothing in the Taft-Hartley law that is going to deter us from organizing the unorganized," he declared.

Murray explained to the newsmen how certain provisions of the Taft-Hartley law had created indescribable confusion as to what effect they would have on standard terms long included in agreements reached through collective bargaining.

In the steel industry, for example, it was the standard practice to include in signed contracts a provision requiring payment of four hours "reporting time" in cases where workers were called to report for work. If for some reason they were not put to work, they were to receive four hours pay.

It was also a standard practice in most industries to pay "stand-by" time, in cases, for example, of a breakdown of machinery, where workers were told to wait around until work could be resumed. Murray said the provision in the Taft-Hartley law forbidding payment except for work actually done, might be construed to mean that workers could not receive pay either for "reporting time" or for "stand-by time."

The law also might be construed to rule out vacation pay, Murray said.

IN answer to a question as to whether or not the CIO was planning any strike action, Murray replied that the CIO would not condone or support any strike called in violation of any collective bargaining agreement.

It was the outstanding decision of the Board, he said, that the CIO must live up to all its contractual commitments.

As part of its all-out campaign to wipe out the Taft-Hartley law, Murray said that the Board had authorized the officers of the CIO to communicate with officials of the American Federation of Labor and the Railroad Brotherhoods, inviting them to meet with the CIO to draw up a common program to fight the Taft-Hartley law.

Murray explained that following the action taken by the CIO Executive Board, the statement of policy adopted and the legal analysis of the Taft-Hartley law prepared by CIO legal counsel, would be sent to the various international unions. These national and international unions, he said, will then determine what action to take.

The executive board of his union, the United Steelworkers of America, was meeting July 2, Murray said, to discuss such questions, and other unions would be doing likewise as soon as possible.

TO HELP YOU REMEMBER HOW THE

WHEN the following Senators and Representatives come up for re-election, many of them will either skip reference to how they voted on the Taft Bill veto or will engage in double talk.

The CIO NEWS prints the list not only of those who voted against upholding the President's veto but also those who voted for upholding the veto, because a vote against the veto was a vote against labor and a vote for the veto was a vote for labor. SAVE THIS LIST FOR ELECTION DAY.

SHIPYARD STRIKERS READY TO TEST TAFT-HARTLEY ACT IF NECESSARY

PREPARED to be the first to test the constitutionality of the Taft-Hartley Act, more than 40,000 members of the CIO Shipbuilding Workers dropped their tools this week.

The walkout, affecting nine East Coast shipyards of the Bethlehem Steel Company and the Atlantic Basin Iron Workers in Brooklyn, climaxed four weeks of fruitless negotiations.

The union, seeking a speedy settlement, scaled its original wage demand of 17.4c an hour down to 13c to conform to the recently-set steel pattern, Pres. John Green explained. "In all the negotiating meetings held with all locals and all companies not a single counter offer was made," he said.

If agreement is not reached by July 1, this walkout may become the opening gun in an East-Gulf Coast shutdown affecting 150,000 shipyard workers.

Mass meetings in Baltimore and New York demonstrated the workers' indignation at the Taft-Hartley Act and management's failure to bargain in good faith. Addressing the New York rally, Green said: "On Monday the U. S. Senate voted that we shall be slaves. The tremendous outpouring here today shows our determination to remain free men."

Green charged that a six-pronged pitchfork had been thrust at his union: the postwar dissolution of shipbuilding, destruction of price controls, abrogation of joint agreements with Government and labor by the employers, the Taft-Hartley law, failure of employers to make a reasonable offer and the recent agreements reached between union members and employers on the Pacific Coast.

Shortly afterwards Green wired President Truman and Sen. Taft, chairman of the Senate Labor Committee, requesting an investigation of the employers' breach of a tripartite agreement between the Government, management and labor.

Persistent refusal of management to attend meetings of the shipbuilding stabilization committee, which administers zone standards agreements, has amounted to a "lockout of the union from peaceful means of negotiations and settlement of wage adjustments rightfully due labor in this industry," he charged.

"If it be shown that the management conspiracy to destroy an agreement to which it has committed itself with the Government of the U. S. and with labor is in effect, then the full force of the law of the U. S. Government must be brought against those participating in such conspiracy," the wire concluded.

Under provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act the Attorney General may obtain an injunction against strikers who in his opinion "imperil the national health or safety." In the event that this action is taken by the government, the Union will appeal to the courts in a test of the constitutionality of the statute.

HOSIERY PACT

THE CIO Hosiery Workers and the Full Fashioned Hosiery Mfgs. of America demonstrated this week how to maintain industrial peace without such laws as the Taft-Hartley Act.

The Hosiery Workers have just signed a two-year contract providing for a 13c an hour increase two months before expiration of their present contract.

The wage boost brings average earnings in the full-fashioned women's hosiery industry to $1.50—highest peak yet achieved.

NO SALARY FOR PRESIDENT, NEWSPAPER GUILD DECIDES

DELEGATES to the CIO American Newspaper Guild's 14th annual convention at Sioux City, Iowa, voted this week, 242 to 91, against changing its constitution to provide for a paid presidency.

The Guild traditionally, since the days when its founder, Heywood Broun, was president, has been headed by an unpaid, working newspaperman.

Efforts to change this custom were led by Milton Murray, ANG president. The question was submitted to a membership referendum last fall. The proposal lost at that time by a narrow margin, but was revived at the convention.

Among the resolutions adopted was one which expressed resentment at the intrusion of communism into the Guild's affairs, following the lines of a similar resolution adopted by the national CIO at its convention last November.

BAN AGAINST CIO LEAFLETS HELD UNCONSTITUTIONAL

By ALLAN SWIM

TWO Gastonia, N. C., city ordinances involving freedom of speech which were invoked in an effort to impede CIO organizational work have been declared unconstitutional in the state's Superior Court.

Three groups of CIO field representatives and local union members were arrested during recent months, some of them on charges of distributing printed leaflets and the others on charges of operating a sound truck illegally.

Two series of trials were held. Those arrested were found guilty in both Municipal and County Courts. The cases were dismissed in Superior Court and the judge ruled the ordinances unconstitutional.

In the last case, involving the arrest of three CIO representatives and two employes of the Firestone plant at Gastonia, the Superior Court judge sternly criticized Solicitor Basil Whitener for attempting to enforce an unconstitutional ordinance prohibiting the distribution of leaflets.

CIO Attorney Jerome Cooper said that he asked Solicitor Whitener to drop the cases and inform city officials that the ordinances were unconstitutional.

"Whitener refused to do so though I told him all he was doing was wasting the taxpayers' money attempting to enforce unconstitutional ordinances that abridge freedom of speech," Cooper said.

ANNUAL PAY PRAISED

THE Maine State CIO Council, holding its fifth annual convention at Waterville, last weekend re-elected George Jabar and Roscoe B. Fitzpatrick as president and secretary-treasurer respectively.

Gov. Horace A. Hildreth of Maine told the 150 delegates that "An annual wage provides relief from worry, promise of steady incomes for the worker's family and builds his confidence and pride in the comfortable assurance of a steady job.

"Management has found that it works both ways, too. Employes thus provided with steady pay are less likely to change jobs from time to time. Absenteeism has been greatly reduced where annual wages are in effect."

Convening shortly after the President vetoed the Taft-Hartley Bill, the convention heartily applauded the Chief Executive. John Brophy, national CIO director of councils, called on workers to challenge the "unfair and unconstitutional character" of the measure in the courts and in the political field.

THE BEER THAT MADE MILWAUKEE FAMOUS

ON THE SPOTS

By JO LYNNE

THERE'S no use crying over spilled ink — or pouring milk over it either, household custom to the contrary. The thing to do with the stain, as with most spots, is to get after it as quickly as possible.

Take it from the textile chemists at the Dept. of Agriculture, cornmeal, cornstarch or talcum powder should be spread fast to keep the stain from spreading and to absorb excess ink.

As the powder shows color, shake it off and keep shaking on more until no more ink is taken up. Then, douse the stain with glycerine or one of the soapless shampoos on the market if you happen to have one around. Rub lightly, rinse with clear water and if there is still a stain, apply lemon juice or citric acid powder (sour salt).

Of course, if you have been provident enough to have only washable, nonpermanent ink around where the offspring can get into it, a good long soaking in soap suds will probably be enough to do the trick. One sad reminder:

Taking ink out of a nonwashable fabric is downright impossible by home methods. If the fabric is hurt by water, it has already been harmed by the water in the ink, which is basically a water solution.

Use Boiling Water On Coffee Stains: Another common household stainer is coffee—and routine laundering won't do you much good with such spots either. Washable fabrics are best stretched over a bowl, fastened with a rubber band and treated with boiling water poured from about two or three feet above the stain.

Old stains sometimes respond to hydrogen peroxide solution or chlorine bleach used very sparingly.

CARBON tetrachloride or any other grease solvent sometimes works on a non-washable fabric to take out a creamed coffee stain, if it is followed up with glycerine which is allowed to remain for a half hour and then carefully rinsed.

Boiling water poured directly on the spot usually takes out fruit stains and it's good insurance to remove the stains before laundering, because soap and water sometimes set a stain.

Carbon tetrachloride is just about the only thing that will take chewing gum off easily, once it has hardened. The same goes for tar, which may be tracked in when the summer sun goes to work on highways and roofs.

Blood (murder prosecutors to the contrary) is one of the easiest stains to remove. Just remember: Never use hot water or soap on blood stains. Soak the cloth with cold water, add a little ammonia if necessary, and rub hard. Usually that means the end of the spot.

Equal Pay For Women

HOW equal pay for women protects the wage levels of all workers is explained in an excellent new educational leaflet issued by the Women's Bureau, U. S. Dept. of Labor, Washington 25, D. C.

Entitled "Equal Pay for Women," the illustrated folder gives in simple outline form the important facts about the subjects. It tells how the principle of equal pay became firmly established during World War II and what needs to be done now to integrate the principle into the nation's wage structure.

It explains why equal pay is important, not only to working men and women but to other groups in society, and briefly describes the equal-pay legislation now in effect in seven states.

What to work for and what to avoid in equal-pay bills is also explained. In addition to the leaflet, the Women's Bureau also has available for distribution copies of its revised Draft State Equal-Pay Bill for use in helping groups draw up their own state bills.

IS MUSIC PART OF EVERY DAY LIVING FOR YOUR CHILDREN: Sometimes it's fun to surprise the young with new records, and then again a trip to the music store and the chance to help select some new records will develop capacity for thoughtful listening and appreciation. Your advance selection of 6 or 8 records, with final selection left to the child, will give him a growing experience that won't overtire him. On hot summer days, the machine and some well loved records can be enjoyed indoors, in the yard or in the park. Do you budget for music the whole family will enjoy? Few investments will bring greater dividends... Photo: Monkmeyer Pinney.

HOW ABOUT A PLAYSUIT?

By HANNA SHERMAN

WHEN it's 90 in the shade, a gal's best friend is her playsuit. It is the most comfortable summer costume ever invented. Comes July and there is nothing that can take its place for household chores, gardening, marketing and—all right—even playing. In a playsuit you have the cool advantage of a very brief costume and the look of ladylike modesty by simply donning a skirt.

Playsuits have become so popular that the best designers in the country are now creating them. And no matter what your figure problem, you should be able to find one that is not only comfortable but flattering. Styles are so varied you'll find it easy to do. Here are a few pointers that you may find helpful.

That hardy perennial, the classic two-piece playsuit, with its covered-up shoulders, real sleeves and simple button-down-the-front gored skirt is still with us. It's a classic because it's so very good. It will streamline the picture of you this summer if a slimming effect is what you need.

It's a natural too for older women. It comes in a great variety of fabrics and no summer wardrobe is complete without at least one of these.

AMONG the more costumy of the play suits you'll find full dirndl skirts. They're most flattering to the young and wonderful for the slim gal who needs a more rounded look. Many of the peasant styles also have gathered or shirred blouses—kind to both the flat chested and full bosomed figure. And so very easy to wear.

The bare midriff style is too revealing for most of us and best on the slim waisted. But you may be just the type for the playsuit with the new off-the-shoulder neckline. You'll like the way it sets off a lovely throat and good shoulders.

If it's for you, by all means wear it. If you don't like the way you look in shorts, keep your skirt handy for all public appearances.

MANY of this year's playsuits—last year's too — can double for street and business wear. They look like summer dresses. If you add stockings or leg make-up and tailored shoes to your costume, no one will be the wiser.

Use your ingenuity and wear the skirt of your play-suit with other separate blouses in your wardrobe, and with simple pullover jerseys or T-shirts. You'll like the variety it gives you and your wardrobe will seem much larger than it really is.

For certain sports like tennis or golf, we still like the look of the gal who pays attention to the rules. A short white dress still has it over anything else on the tennis court. It's OK too for white shorts, if they become you, but make sure they're long enough.

I'd say no to anything frilly and feminine on the fairway. A well-cut shirtwaist dress with plenty of room through the shoulders and a skirt you can really move in is your best bet for the golf course.

New Handbook

FACTS FOR LABOR

KNOCKING down arguments based on the lies and distortions so often used against unions is one of labor's hardest and biggest jobs. It takes a lot of up-to-date facts and figures to do it.

A rich mine of such facts can be found in the new Labor Fact Book 8 prepared by the Labor Research Association.

This handy volume eighth in a series published every two years since 1931, has long been a standard reference book on labor matters. It covers the critical years 1945-46.

Opening with a quick summary of recent economic developments in America, it gives basic production and consumption figures; reveals the huge wartime profits of Big Business, and shows the trend toward monopoly and concentration in industry.

A section on labor and social conditions is packed full of information on distribution of income and savings; average weekly earnings in manufacturing industries and other facts and figures needed in labor's fight for higher pay and improved working conditions.

An entire chapter is devoted to the condition of the Negro in the United States, whose position is shown to be still very insecure in spite of certain gains made during the war.

Other special subjects featured are farmers and the growth of farmer-labor cooperation; political action and trade union developments at home and abroad.

A VISIT TO MEXICO

A good neighborly welcome to Mexico is being planned for the first group of trade unionists whose lowcost sight-seeing tour south of the border is scheduled for Aug. 16-29.

On their arrival in Mexico City on Aug. 19, the visitors will be feted at a banquet and fiesta given by Mexican unions, meet with Mexican union leaders informally, and spend a full day visiting union activities.

They will be entertained officially Sunday, Aug. 24 at the floating gardens of Xochimilco by Alejandro Carrillo, vice-governor of the Federal District and public relations chief for President Miguel Aleman during his campaign.

Other highspots will include a two-day excursion to the resort town of Cuernavaca and the picturesque silver center, Taxco; two days at San Jose De Purua, and two days in Mexico City.

European unions for years have exchanged trade union delegations and tourists, but this is the first summer such a program has been arranged for U. S. unionists.

Disabled Women Veterans

Women veterans of World War II on Veterans Administration pension and compensation rolls numbered 12,648 as of January 1947, according to the VA. All but nine of these women veterans had service-connected disabilities.

The number of women veterans of World War II who were hospitalized as of Feb. 28, 1947, was 1,024. In addition there were at the same time 625 women veterans of Warld War I hospitalized.

Here's The Answer To A Union's Prayer

THE Union Service Workshop in Chicago believes it has the answer to a union's prayer. It is a loose-leaf booklet containing more than 150 original sketches for trade union mimeograph work.

Called "Trace-O-Pics," the portfolio has a sheaf of cartoons intended for use in bulletins, leaflets, and shop papers. These line drawings are on such subjects as wages, union security, grievance procedure, women's problems, education, company stooges and other union topics. Two of them are shown here.

Included in the book are some simple rules and suggestions on mimeograph technique explaining what tools are needed, how to make an attractive layout, and how to trace the cartoons.

This good advice to union organizers, publicity and public relations people, is given in the book: "The trade unionist who seeks to influence a mass audience through the printed word must sharpen his tools and exploit their fullest potentials. He must use imagination and originality. He must be quick to adopt the latest and most advanced techniques.

Trace-O-Pics may be ordered from the Union Service Workshop, 1703 West Madison St., Chicago 12, Ill., $5.00 prepaid, $5.50 c.o.d. Supplements by subject chosen from sheets in the copy-kit are available at $1.50 each.

Textile Workers' Institutes

THE first of eight one-week institutes sponsored by the CIO Textile Workers Union opened June 22 at the University of Wisconsin with 70 union members in attendance. Some 500 textile workers are expected to attend the sessions to be held at six educational centers this summer.

The institutes will train plant leaders of the union in the essentials of peaceful collective bargaining and democratic trade unionism. The union has 1,600 contracts in 33 states covering 440,000 workers.

As in previous years, a number of institutions of higher learning are making their facilities available to the Textile Workers Union. This is the sixth year of the union's summer educational program. More than 1,000 union members have taken the courses. This year's institutes are planned to reach textile workers in every section of the country where the union has membership.

CIO Committee Charges

JOBS-FOR-ALL ACT SABOTAGED

CONGRESS was taken severely to task this week by a CIO spokesman for its wilful failure to pass legislation needed to promote the well-being of the American people while showing tender regard for the upper income groups.

Emil Rieve, administrative chairman of the CIO Full Employment Committee, in testimony presented before the Joint Congressional Committee on the Economic Report, charged the Congressional Committee with violating the intent of the Employment Act of 1946.

Rieve is a vice-president of the CIO and president of the Textile Workers Union of America.

The Employment Act clearly sets forth as its objective, Rieve told the committee, the promotion of maximum employment, production and purchasing power. Failure of the Joint Committee to prepare any data relating to the Economic Report of the President presented to Congress early in January "constitutes a violation of the intent of the Act," he said.

"If it does not see fit to comply with the Employment Act, if it continues wilfully to violate both the spirit and letter of the law, then the leaders of the Joint Committee should resign so that other members may be appointed who are willing to cooperate in a common effort to promote maximum employment, production and purchasing power."

RIEVE reviewed briefly some of the present trends in employment, prices, profits wages, savings, production and other important economic facts which he said called for "bold action" by Congress.

- Employment in manufacturing industries, has declined for the past two months, according to the Dept. of Labor. A total of 251,000 workers has been laid off in various segments in manufacturing industries. In the textile and apparel industries, for example, employment dropped by 143,000 between March and May.

The electrical goods industry has lost almost 60,000 workers and employment in the rubber products industry, including tires and tubes, has declined about 16,000.

- What has happened to prices since the elimination of price control is obvious to everyone, Rieve stated. Wholesale food prices of all commodities since June 29, 1946, just before OPA temporarily expired, have gone up 31%, which was superimposed upon a 46% increase between 1939 and the middle of 1946. In mid-June 1947 wholesale prices of foods were 43% above OPA price ceilings.

- Profits of all corporations on an overall basis attained record highs during 1946. The annual rate of profits earned by all corporations, after taxes, in the fourth quarter of 1946, was $16.2 billion. This is almost $6 billion more than the peak attained during 1943.

- Wages and salaries dropped in their share of national income from 70.2% in 1944 to 62.2% in the first quarter of 1947, while on the other hand the share going to corporate profits after taxes increased from 6.6% in 1943 to 9.2%.

Workers have had their real purchasing power reduced by about $6 from the peak period 1945 to the present period in spite of the 1946 round of wage increases.

- Savings of almost half of the individuals earning less than $3,000 a year have declined, while about 50% of those with incomes above $3,000 show a large increase. War bonds of the lowest denomination, series E, were cashed in at a greater rate in 1946 than in any previous year, with the amount of redemptions exceeding the amount of sales.

INSTALLMENT buying "an unhealthy way to bridge the gap between income and purchases," is reaching all-time peaks, Rieve stated. "Inflation first steals savings and then tends to continue on its merry way through expanding consumer credit," he declared.

Rieve listed a few factors on the favorable side of our economic ledger, including the still large unfilled demand for many consumer goods—autos, refrigerators, radios, houses, etc., which he said should be sufficient to maintain our economy at a high level for a period of years, provided prices are within reach.

Instead of aiding full employment, Rieve said, Congress "encouraged big business to profiteer" by eliminating excess profits taxes; practically wiped out price control; passed a tax bill (vetoed by the President) giving tax relief to those who least need it; reduced the appropriations of administrative agencies, thus curtailing the effectiveness of some basic laws; and passed an anti-labor bill to throttle unions.

Instead of passing legislation designed to curtail collective bargaining, Rieve said Congress "should be passing legislation promoting trade union organization."

He recommended the legislative program supported by the CIO for consideration of Congress, to "tackle the fundamental issues of maximum employment, production and purchasing power."

This program proposes a price board set up to curb profiteering and force lower prices; price control; a revamped tax structure; a 65c minimum wage increased to 75c in two years; improved social security and other progressive measures.

Carey To Study Aid To Europe

PRES. Truman this week named CIO Sec. - Treas. James B. Carey to a non-partisan committee to study European aid.

Truman said that the committee would advise him on the limits of U. S. aid to foreign nations "and on the relation between this assistance and our domestic economy.

"In carrying out this work this committee will have the benefit of the studies which are to be made within the government, as well as the materials already prepared by various Government agencies."

Other members of the non-partisan 19-man committee include AFL Sec.-Treas. George Meany; former Sen. Robert M. LaFollette, Jr.; Honorary Chairman Owen D. Young of General Electric, and Pres. Harold G. Moulton of Brookings Institute.

Carey is expected to arrive June 30 from Prague, Czecho-Slovakia, where he attended a meeting of the general council of the World Federation of Trade Unions.

One government study will be conducted by a committee directed by Interior Sec. Krug, the other will be under the supervision of the President's Council of Economic Advisers headed by Dr. Edwin G. Nourse.

TAFT PASSES THE BUCK ON OWN HOUSING BILL

SEN. Taft (R. Ohio), co-author of Taft-Hartley Act, let another cat out of the bag this week.

His name appears along with that of Sen. Wagner (D. N. Y.) and Sen. Ellender (D. La.) on a bill to provide for construction of 15 million homes in the next 10 years. Keenly aware of America's housing crisis, 400 persons from 28 states representing 35 National organizations including the CIO and the AFL came to Washington this week to demand action on the Taft-Wagner-Ellender bill (S 866).

Taft, recognized candidate for the Presidency in 1948, told them in essence that it was up to them to bring sufficient pressure to obtain passage of the T-W-E bill because he did not have sufficient control of the Republicans.

Taft said that the T-W-E bill would have to be modified considerably to win acceptance of the House, where it still is in the hands of the banking committee. The measure has been reported out by the Senate banking committee, but is not yet on the Senate calender.

In contrast to Taft's apathy was the rousing speech of R. J. Thomas, chairman of the CIO Housing Committee and vice-president of the CIO Auto Workers. Thomas was greeted by applause when he declared:

"We want action and we want it quick, by this session of Congress."

Thomas asserted that he knew "of no single proposal that has more united, more enthusiastic, more desperate support from the people of this country."

He charged that the "majority of Senators and Congressmen are victims of a campaign of psychological warfare conducted by the real estate lobby"—as shown by the passage of the Buck-Wolcott bill "rent decontrol" bill and their failure to act on the T-W-E bill.

Friends of housing are moving quickly to meet this impasse on the T-W-E bill. Rep. Helen Gahagan Douglas (D. Calif.) is circulating a petition to have the House companion measure of the T-W-E bill the Javits bill (HR 2523), discharged from the House banking committee.

They point out that time is of the essence, as Congress is expected to adjourn in a few weeks, and call for letters to Senators and Congressmen.

STEEL, UE SHUN LABOR BOARD

(See Page 3)

Plans to fight employer blackjacks, wielded legally under the Taft-Hartley law, were made in Washingon, Pittsburgh and New York last week by CIO, the Steelworkers and the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers. Among those at the CIO Executive Board Meeting in Washington were, left to right: Presidents Emil Rieve and Jacob Potofsky of Textile and Clothing Workers; CIO Pres. Philip Murray; Lee Pressman, CIO general counsel; and Vice-Pres. R. J. Thomas of the Auto Workers.

IT'S THE SAME H-C-L IN DIXIE

By GLORIA CAPLAN

"WHY, my mother pays more for the same bag of groceries in Okemah, Okla., than I do in New York City!"

With that, Gladys Dickason, a vice-president of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers who is also assistant director of the CIO Organizing Committee, opened her barrage against the widespread myth—promoted by opponents of a national 65-75c minimum wage bill—that it takes less money to live in the South than in the North.

Miss Dickason — and Solomon Barkin, research director of the CIO Textile workers, and J. E. Fadling, president of the CIO International Woodworkers — presented the worker's case for a 65-75c hourly minimum wage before a sub-committee of the House Labor and Education Committee last week.

Living Costs Same For North, South

Committee members seemed to feel that southern workers—who would be most affected by the upward revision of the wage minimum—required less for subsistence than their northern brothers, and therefore, perhaps regional minima should be set up.

"But there's no such thing as regional differences in the cost of living," retorted Miss Dickason. "Now you take a southern worker. His alarm clock goes off at 5 o'clock in the morning. Do you think he paid less for that clock than the worker in the North? Of course not; chances are he paid more, because it was probably made in Connecticut."

The witness pursued her story of an average day in the life of a southern worker. He ate cornflakes for breakfast just like his northern brother—and paid the same price if not more. Same was true of his clothes and the fan-belt for his car—and his rent would be about the same as for a comparable house with the same facilities—as up north.

More often, though, his house wasn't a "comparable one." Often it lacked heat and electricity, running water and indoor bath. For that, of course, he paid less. But should Congressmen assume that, because our southern worker often gets along without such "conveniences," he would not prefer to have them?

No Excuse For Differentials

Sixty-five cents an hour will buy just about as much in Lynn, Mass., as in High Point, N. C., the CIO witnesses brought out, and there, therefore, could be no excuse for present-day regional differences in wages nor in any revision of the minimum wage based on regional differences in the cost of living. No excuse, that is, except profit greediness.

THE case of the 65c minimum wage bill is undergoing its second session of congressional scrutiny and stalling. To neutralize the rising anger of labor after enactment of the Taft-Hartley law, there is reason to believe that the Republican high command will seek to "buy" labor friendship for 60c—as indicated by a 60c an hour minimum wage bill sponsored by Rep. Gerald Landis (R.-Ind.).

The bill also provides a downward escalator clause, which would permit downward revision of the minimum in the event of a depression. CIO representatives have been adamant in their insistence on nothing less than 65c, with annual rises of 5c until 75c is reached.

A minimum of 65c itself is far short of a living wage. The 40c minimum, now in force but long obsolete, is the equivalent of 71.4c at today's prices. And even that is insufficient to provide a life of decency and security. The Emergency Sustenance Budget developed in 1935 by WPA authorities—lowest budget devised by American authorities—would require an hourly wage of 92.9c.

Minimum Opposed Only by Greedy

Yet the modest proposal of a 65c floor on wages—less than the 1939 minimum in terms of real goods, less than a minimum standard of decency—encounters the organized opposition of those who amass fabulous profits over the half-starved bodies of their employes, and of the grossly uninformed, who naively believe that industrial bankruptcy would follow payment of a living wage.

In the first place, the CIO witnesses pointed out, most workers make far above 65c an hour. Only 1.25 million workers out of a total 20,085,000 now covered by the Fair Labor Standards Act will be affected by the change. So far as industry is concerned, the impact would be small, amounting to less than .2% of the payroll.

Secondly, low wages are the product of underpayment and discrimination. For practically every job that is rated less than 65c by one employer, there are other employers who rate the same job more than 65c. One employer is thus able to increase his profits—not by more efficient management—but by squeezing it out of his workers.

IN lumbering, for instance, as testimony submitted by Fadling indicated, workers in the Southern Pine region average about 40 or 50c an hour. Identical work in the Pacific Coast Douglas Fir region pays $1.32. Productivity of one group is no less than that of the other; the lumber is sold at about the same price. What does it mean? The southern employer, taking advantage of unorganized—or newly unionized—labor, and of a ridiculously low wage floor—40c—is able to get the jump on his western competitor. Adoption of a reasonable minimum would thus protect the fair employer from such cut-throat competition.

With enactment of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 many manufacturers had to hike wages fourfold to meet the initial 25c minimum requirement. Instead of collapsing, as they had tearfully predicted in opposing law, they flourished with the rise in purchasing power made available to millions.

"Low wages make for substandard citizens in both industry and in the community," Barkin stated. "Low income workers suffer from malnutrition, from excessive illnesses and from inadequate medical care. Their life span is shorter than that of their higher-paid brothers, they cannot enjoy educational opportunities as other segments of the community; they are condemned to poor housing; often they become part of a baronial company community not unreminiscent of feudalism."

What's Good For Labor Benefits All

BUT why is CIO so concerned about an admittedly substandard minimum wage which would affect few of its own members?

CIO spokesmen reply that they are concerned primarily with the general welfare. The well-being of its membership is directly linked with the economic health of the nation. When one segment is reduced to poverty, it means fewer goods purchased, production contracting, fewer jobs available, employment taking a plunge.

It means, furthermore, that when unemployment is on the loose, the absence of a reasonable wage floor jeopardizes the entire wage structure, pulling it rapidly downward as men undercut other men in the competition for jobs.

In the long run low wages profit no one.

When workers have more money, they buy more and better groceries, more and better clothes. The farmer gains; the businessman gains; the worker gains—and the community gains a happier, healthier, more productive citizen.

"I wish you could talk with the veterans that are trying to live on less than 65c an hour," Miss Gladys Dickason, a vice president of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers, tells Congressmen as she testifies before a sub-committee of the House Labor and Education Committee in favor of a national 65-775c minimum wage law.

STEEL, UE SHUN LABOR BOARD

TWO big CIO unions representing more than a million and a half workers in basic industry this week decided to shun like a plague the new Natl. Labor Relations Board set up under the bitterly fought Taft-Hartley act.

Executive boards of the Steelworkers (meeting in Pittsburgh) and the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers (meeting in New York) condemned the new NLRB as an instrument designed to obstruct rather than to aid collective bargaining.

In a separate resolution, the Steelworkers board warned that the complicated Taft-Hartley act will tend to disrupt peaceful labor relations by substituting law suits for collective bargaining.

"This situation," said the resolution, "creates a serious danger that the United Steelworkers of America may be harassed by law suits and its treasuries imperiled as a result of the use by unscrupulous employers of spies, provocateurs and disrupters . . .

"It is no longer possible for the United Steelworkers of America to commit itself in future contracts to no-strike obligations enforceable by harassing law suits."

THE UE board warned that employers must continue to comply with contracts, and added that if any are breached, "it will be done by the deliberate choice of employers, not by this union."

Noting that some employers may choose to use the Taft Hartley act for repressive actions against workers, the UE declared:

"The time may come when such employers will be judged unfit to sign contracts, and will be forced to deal with the unions of their employes on a day to day basis."

BIG business publications, meanwhile, carried joyful headlines ("A New Deal for America's Employers"—Business Week; "Your Rights Under the New Labor Law—and How to Make the Most of Them"—Prentice-Hall, Inc.).

The daily press tended generally to be slightly less enthusiastic. Publishers were taking a second look at a baby that the overwhelming majority of them wanted—and were discovering that even proud uncles can suffer all the pangs of uncertain fatherhood. While they are in favor of drastically weakening unions, they will still have to live with them, and it may not be easy.

Their fears have validity, according to the Steelworkers, who declared:

"The new law has imposed so many new requirements for the holding of elections and has created so many new opportunities for use of the election machinery as an obstruction rather than an aid to collective bargaining rights that the entire practice will serve simply as a device to hamper and discourage organization and collective bargaining.

"The United Steelworkers of America would be deluding its membership if it holds out any hope that the use of the facilities of the new Labor Board would provide any protection to workers seeking to organize unions and to exercise their right to engage in collective bargaining . . .

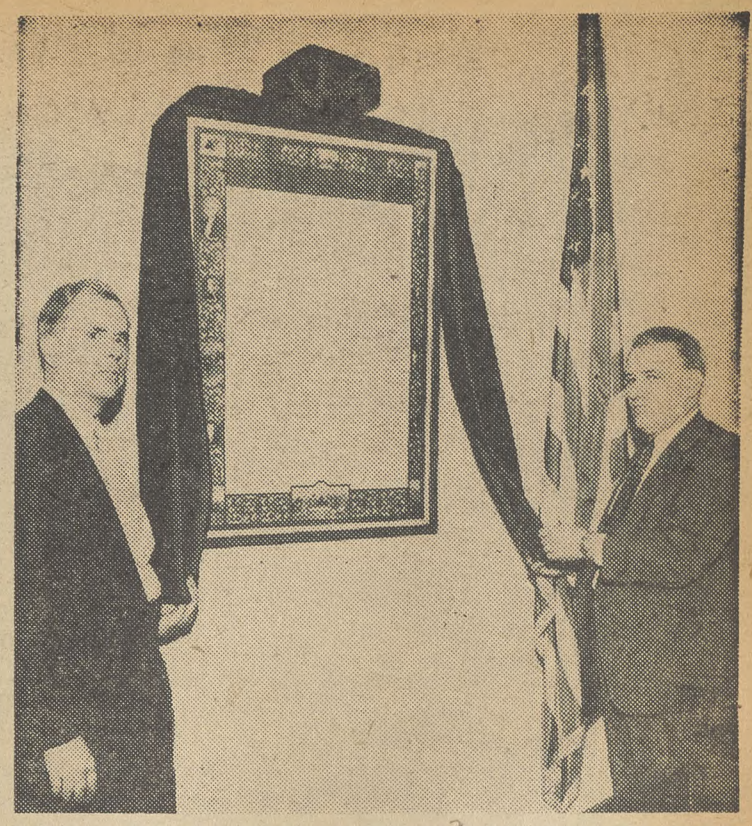
"We shall in good faith seek to resolve all issues between our union and the employers through bona fide collective bargaining and other peaceful means whenever possible.

"The right to strike in the event of disputes must be preserved or our freedom shall be lost."

AND the UE board, in warning its members away from the new NLRB, declared:

"Nothing but injury can result to the interests of the membership of any union that takes a seat in this crooked game, where the rules are rigged and the dice are loaded against them . . .

"The focus of the political fight on the act must be the 1948 elections and as a first step in organizing for 1948 the board calls upon the districts, locals stewards and membership of the UE to exert every effort toward the success of the current membership and contribution drives of CIO-PAC."



Symbol of what labor thinks of the Taft-Hartley law is this copy of the U. S. Constitution draped in black, in the Cleveland office of District Director William P. Donovan of the CIO Steelworkers (left). Staff Rep. B. W. Ohler agrees that the crape should stay put until the law is repealed.

WFTU BACKS U. S. LABOR'S BATTLE

AMERICAN labor, in its fight against the Taft-Hartley act, has the sympathy of the 71 million workers in the World Federation of Trade Unions, WFTU Gen. Sec. Louis Saillant told Allied Labor News in Paris this week.

"The final vote on the anti-labor law, overriding the President's veto, cannot fail to have deep repercussions in all world labor and democratic circles," Saillant said.

"The limitations on democratic and union rights in the U. S. appear to contradict American foreign policy, which is presented by American diplomacy as representing the highest democratic principles.

"In many European countries such as England, Belgium, Norway, Sweden, Czechoslovakia, France and others, union rights are uncontested. The passage of laws limiting workers' rights in the U. S. risks setting labor and democratic opinion in these countries against the U. S."

Meanwhile, the British Amalgamated Union of Foundry Workers voted unanimously at its convention to ask the Trades Union Congress to raise the question of U. S. anti-labor legislation before the World Federation of Trade Unions, it was reported from London this week by Allied Labor News.

The workers' poison, the bosses' meat. Steve Audler (left) of Cloverdale, Pa., lets the world know what he thinks of the Taft-Hartley law, while suave banker and longtime Rep. Howard Smith (D., Va.) expresses dignified pleasure. Polltaxers like Smith helped lead the fight to override the Taft-Hartley veto.

Round the Nation With T-H Law

First Injunction

The first labor injunction under the Taft-Hartley law was issued at Dallas, Tex., June 25, to halt picketing in a secondary boycott.

The injunction, curbing the activities of a local of the AFL Boilermakers, Iron Shipbuilders & Helpers, was granted by District Judge W. L. Thornton at the request of the Southland Steel Co.

The union struck June 20 when the company refused to cease purchasing material from another struck Dallas firm. The judge ruled the situation constituted a violation of the anti-secondary boycott provisions of the new law. He said he was not enjoining the union from striking—but only from picketing!

Week of Mourning

A week of mourning for the demise of the Wagner Labor Relations Act was voted by the Hamtramck, Mich., City Council. The Council called on all citizens not to acquiesce in sorrow from June 30 to July 6, but to "prepare themselves to fight for the repeal" of the Taft-Hartley law.

NAACP Protest

It is "false and misleading" to consider any part of the Taft-Hartley anti-labor law as beneficial to American Negroes, said the labor and employment resolution passed June 28 at the 38th annual conference of the Natl. Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, in Washington, D. C.

The 775 voting delegates to the NAACP meeting voted to swing the organization behind labor efforts to repeal the drastic law, at the same time calling its own members and followers to join labor unions and become active members in them.

Press Challenge

Determined to challenge sections of the Taft-Hartley law that would curb labor's freedom of the press, the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers' "Advance" denounced those members of Congress who voted for the law and urged their defeat at the polls.

Sections of the law allegedly would prohibit a union-financed publication from criticizing or supporting political candidates or from publishing their voting records. ACW Pres. Jacob Potofsky and Exec. Vice-Pres. Hyman Blumberg expressed their conviction that the provision would not stand up before the U. S. Supreme Court.

Iowa Campaign

Opposition to state and national anti-labor legislation has served to unite AFL, CIO and unaffiliated unions in Cedar Rapids, Iowa, in a citywide campaign for repeal of the labor curbs. Over 1,000 attended the meeting launching the campaign.

Correct Your Veto Vote List

The CIO NEWS regrets that it made two errors last week in listing the Congressional vote on the President's veto of the Taft-Hartley bill.

Reps. Cecil R. King (D.-Cal.) and Thomas J. Lane D.-Mass.) were listed as having voted both "yea" and "nay." Both voted to sustain the veto.

To the Congressmen and to our readers we extend our apologies.

LOOKING TO '48

WHILE each CIO union is determining how best to protect its own contracts and the wages and conditions of its members, now that the Taft-Hartley bill has been enacted, there are three ways of fighting back on which all have agreed and will combine.

The first is the basic job of organization, the root of all labor strength. The CIO Board's first reaction was to vote for a "spirited, intensive and aggressive organizing campaign."

The second is united action by all labor, for which purpose the CIO has voted to approach the AFL and Railroad Brotherhoods to work out a common program.

The third is political action, which involves not only labor but all liberty-loving Americans. The CIO voted to "fight the political restraints" of the new law, to intensify PAC activity, and not to rest until the Taft-Hartley act is repealed and the whole un-American conspiracy that produced it is given a resounding defeat at the polls.

BLAME THE POLL TAX

THE LONG fight of all democratic (small d) Americans to abolish the poll tax is warming up again, with hearings under way before a House subcommittee.

The CIO and labor generally have always made the enfranchisement of millions of citizens, now denied the right to vote through the poll tax, one of their foremost demands.

But there is now an additional and most urgent reason why working people should intensify their efforts to this end.

The poll tax was one of the chief causes of the failure of Congress to sustain the veto of the infamous anti-labor Taft-Hartley bill.

Senators and Representatives elected from poll tax states (mostly Democrats) constituted a solid bloc in Congress which gave the Republicans the margin they needed to secure the final enactment of the law.

A survey of the final vote shows that 58 House polltaxers voted against labor and only five supported the veto.

In the Senate, 10 polltaxers voted to override the veto and only three poll-tax Senators voted to sustain.

The reason for the predominantly anti-labor bias of members of Congress elected under the poll-tax system is clear. This system denies the vote to the less well-to-do, including great numbers of working people, and permits a minority of more prosperous and conservative citizens to determine the selection of Congressmen.

According to figures submitted by Asst. General Counsel Eugene Cotton, testifying on behalf of the CIO, the percentage of potential voters in the seven poll-tax states who voted in the 1946 elections was 9.58%, and in South Carolina the percentage was as low as 3%.

In states where the poll tax has been repealed by state action, the percentage voting was 13%, and in states which had never in recent years had a poll tax, the percentage was 47%.

"This means," said Cotton, "that Congressmen and Senators from the poll-tax states actually represent a much smaller electorate than do a similar number of Congressmen and Senators from non-poll-tax states, and exercise therefore an undue influence on national legislation."

This "undue influence," this minority rule, is not only essentially undemocratic, but it is also a chief reason for the reactionary record of the present Congress on all legislation affecting the welfare of the common people.

The poll tax must go, and it will take federal legislation to ditch it. Let's put all our weight behind the fight for final victory in this long struggle for democracy.

LOOKING AHEAD

BY LEN DE CAUX

ACCORDING TO movie and comic-strip tradition, there are many members of the gentle sex whose idea of romance is rough and primitive treatment.

They are supposed to swoon with delight at the very thought of being clubbed by hairy cave-men, kidnapped by Arabian sheiks or manhandled by ape-like Tarzans.

Personally, we've learned to shun any generalizations about the opposite sex. But, on the basis of limited research, we are inclined to challenge this assumption.

The women we've met evidence no particular yearning to be victims of clubbing, mayhem and other forms of near-assassination.

Nor can we feature them standing in line for a cave, jungle or nomadic life of dirt, disease, danger and hardship, after knowing the conveniences of modern civilization.

★ ★ ★

IN THE Congress of the United States, however, in some of our most exclusive clubs, and in the intellectual swill-shops that cater to wealth and reaction, there are many who profess to yearn for a return to cave-man tactics and the law of the jungle in labor relations.

Of course, they visualize themselves as dishing out the rough stuff, and possibly don't reflect that under such conditions even big apes may get chawed up by bigger apes.

As Exhibit No. 1 we present Dr. Willford I. King, who in an article circulated by the "Committee for Constitutional Government," as part of its campaign against the Wagner Act, glorified labor conditions "in the early days of our Republic," and called for a return to them.

His version of these primitive conditions was that the individual worker took the best job he could get, while "the employer hired at as low rates as possible"; that "in the absence of any contract to the contrary, any worker could quit when he pleased, and the employers could discharge a worker at pleasure"; and that "employers were forbidden to combine to keep down wage rates, and employes were forbidden to combine to push up wage rates."

★ ★ ★

AS EXHIBIT No. 2 we present Rep. Max Schwabe (R., Mo.) at a House labor subcommittee session considering an amendment to the Wage-Hour Act to raise the minimum wage above its present starvation level of 40c an hour.

As reported by the New York Times, Schwabe argued that the Act itself was "contrary to the American way and Republican Party policy," and was Communistic.

"I think this bill is veering to the left," he said. As an illustration, Schwabe added that if a man went to a public sale and bought an article cheaply it was his right, and "if he hires a worker cheap, that's the American way of doing it."

Pressed repeatedly to answer the question, "Does freedom mean the right to pay starvation wages?" he finally said, "If you want to put it that way, yes."

★ ★ ★

THESE TWO exhibits represent some of the elements, in and out of Congress, that have been campaigning to destroy legislation protecting labor's right to organize and bargain collectively.

They have wanted to render American workers helpless victims of the economic club wielded by cave-man employers, to prevent them from "combining to push up wage rates."

They hail the Taft-Hartley act as one of their triumphs, though this act does much more than deprive labor of legal protection.

It not only leaves the corporations with all the modern powers of monopolistic combination, but adds to their arsenal of clubs against labor the most up-to-date weapons of governmental repression.

★ ★ ★

IF, HOWEVER, the more regulated procedures of collective bargaining, as developed under the Wagner Act, are to be denied to labor, there is still recourse to the methods of struggle whereby workers organized, established strong unions and won better conditions before there was any Wagner act.

The American labor movement is many times stronger now than then. Millions more workers have tasted the benefits of organization and learned how to mobilize for political action.

Labor has no yen whatever to be clubbed and pulled by the hair into any industrial cave-life, and woe be to those cave-thinkers who attempt it!

CIO To Tenants:

ORGANIZE TO FIGHT RENT GOUGERS

"KEEP the rent down and and the roof on."

That was the advice given by CIO to the people last week in urging the nation's tenants to band together against illegal evictions and rent-gouging which were reported sweeping the country following passage of the new federal rent bill.

In a communication to all local and state industrial union councils, John Brophy, director of the Industrial Union Councils, and Legislative Director Nathan Cowan stated:

"We urge you to initiate and to assist in the organization of tenants by apartment houses, housing developments, blocks and neighborhoods. With the protections of the law removed, we must move to protect ourselves."

The bill, signed by President Truman in a slashing, denunciatory message calling for a Congressional investigation of the real estate lobby, brought immediate rises in rents for permanent hotel residents as high as 400%.

Sen. Glen Taylor (D.-Ida.) has introduced a resolution calling for an investigation of the real estate lobby by the Senate Banking and Currency Committee. The resolution would authorize the committee to look into the "activities, connections methods and financing of all groups commonly known as the real estate lobby."

Emphasizing that the new rent law strips much, if not all, protection from the average tenant, Brophy and Cowan said: "To resist a drive by landlords to sign up tenants for a 15% increase, and to resist unjust evictions, tenants will have to organize and be prepared to act together.

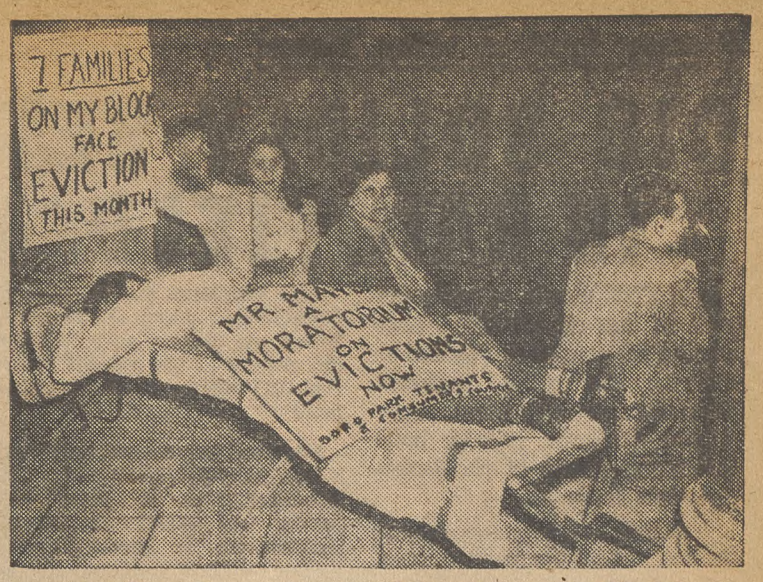
"We are convinced that public opinion in every community of the country can be aroused to demand fair and reasonable treatment from landlords, despite the apparent intent of Congress to victimize tenants under the new law.

"Unjust evictions should be resisted by every proper means. Tenants should be promptly informed of eviction moves by landlords. Letters should be written to the local papers. Newspaper editors should be visited. These measures require organized leadership."

Pointing to the power of state advisory committees authorized by the new law, the CIO officials urged that the names of qualified persons to serve on the committee be submitted to the governors who have the power of appointment.

The CIO spokesmen stated that the federal rent control administrator retains some powers under the new law, and that "National CIO, through the Cost of Living Committee, intends to see that these are exercised for the protection of tenants as far as the law permits."

The President, in signing the bill, said it was "the lesser of two evils" and made it perfectly clear that the bill would only heap new hardships on American families, already suffering from tremendous rises in the cost of living. The President focused attention on the misleading 15 per cent "voluntary" rent increase clause, stating it was voluntary only so far as the landlord is concerned.



Now that Pres. Truman has signed the phony rent bill that was pressured through Congress by the real estate lobbyists, tenants like the Weisman family will have even more trouble trying to keep a roof over their heads. After having been evicted, reinstated and then evicted again, they decided to camp on the doorstep of New York's Mayor William O'Dwyer until they found some place to live. (Federated Pictures)

32 STATES PASS ANTI-LABOR LAWS

WITH 32 state legislatures marching straight down the NAM-Chamber of Commerce line this year to enact anti-labor measures, union members, forced also to cope with a stringent federal law, may well feel that they've "had enough" by election time next year.

Forecast of things to come, indicating that this may be only the beginning, was voiced by Earl Shreve, president of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce recently. "Perhaps," he predicted following passage of the Taft-Hartley law, "time will show the necessity for further legislation. And it may be necessary to supplement this law with comparable enactments by the states."

Most of the 1947 state legislation stabbed at the closed and union shops under the deceptive banner of "right to work" laws. Such regulations were slapped onto the books in Arizona, Arkansas, Delaware, Georgia, Iowa, Maine, Nebraska, New Hampshire, North Carolina, South Dakota, Tennessee, Texas and Virginia.

North Dakota and New Mexico legislatures also okayed bills of this nature, but the proposals must be submitted to the people for approval at the next election before becoming law.

Strike activity is hampered by legislation in Connecticut, Delaware, Georgia, Michigan, North Dakota, Texas and Utah.

Nine states now prohibit secondary boycotts. These are California, Delaware, Idaho, Iowa, Minnesota, North Dakota, Oregon, Texas and Utah.

Legislation has been enacted in nine states—Florida, Indiana, Michigan, Missouri, Nebraska, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Texas and Virginia—regulating public utilities disputes; while two prohibit strikes by public employes—New York and Texas. Strikes by employes of charitable hospitals are prohibited in Minnesota.

Seven states threw monkey-wrenches into the collection of union dues by "check-off": Delaware, Georgia, Iowa, North Carolina, Rhode Island, Texas and Virginia.

—And still they cry for more!

To Honor Hillman

A memorial meeting in honor of Sidney Hillman, late president of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, will be held at Carnegie Hall, New York City, July 30, the union announced this week.

Speakers include CIO Pres. Philip Murray, Rabbi Stephen S. Wise, and New York City Mayor William O'Dwyer. Bishop Francis J. Haas has also been invited to speak.

Oxy-Acetylene Safety Hint

Don't start fires. Protect overhead floor beams with asbestos, metal, or other non-combustible shields.

PLAN PAC FOR '48

THE CIO Political Action Committee Executive Board will meet in Pittsburgh July 11 with CIO Pres. Philip Murray to map plans for an all-out political offensive in 1948, PAC Director Jack Kroll announced this week.

The PAC session is expected to set off greater political activity in the field aimed at repudiating the Taft-Hartley law and those responsible for its passage.

Kroll stated that PAC would intensify its activity, that it would "organize block by block, neighborhood by neighborhood, precinct by precinct, ward by ward. The unfair, unworkable Taft-Hartley law has aroused the workers of America, and they will answer back with political action."

GOP PREPARES 'SOP' FOR VETS

Republican leadership in the House this week prepared to throw a "sop" to veterans.

The House armed services committee approved a bill to authorize the cashing of terminal leave war bonds Sept. 1, and to extend for a year the period in which exservicemen may apply for payment for unused furlough time.

In the Senate, the Labor Committee this week approved bills to raise the on-the-job training ceiling from $175 a month to $200 for single veterans, and from $200 to $250 a month for married veterans. There would be no change in the present subsistence allowances.

A petition is being circulated in the House to bring to the floor a similar measure now bottled up in the Rules Committee.

Pennsy System Wins Mean!

CIO SOLIDLY SET IN RAIL FIELD

AS THE result of victories in run-off elections conducted by the Natl. Mediation Board, the CIO Railroad Workers now represent some 41,000 workers in six non-operating crafts of the Pennsylvania Railroad.

The CIO won bargaining rights in the run-off for carmen, electricians and sheet metal workers.

CIO Vice-Pres. and Director of Organization Allan S. Haywood hailed the victory, asserting that the results of the run-off "place the CIO solidly in the railroad field."

Haywood pointed out that these victories, along with other CIO triumphs such as those won among the maintenance-of-way workers on the Santa Fe and marine workers employed by the railroads in New York, "establish for CIO a real base of operations in the railroad field."

He said that plans are being made to intensify drives among several key railroads, and complimented Director A. B. Martin of the railroad workers, who was chairman of the drive among The Pennsylvania Railroad workers, and his staff, for their untiring work over several years.

In the run-off the company-dominated Brotherhood of Shop Crafts retained bargaining rights for the machinists. The company union also won the comparatively small blacksmiths' group in the original election. The AFL was entirely eliminated by the elections.

In the original election the CIO union retained its right to represent the boilermakers, molders, powerhouse employees and laborers, which it had held since winning previous elections in 1945.

WARREN RESIGNS CONCILIATION JOB

Edgar L. Warren this week resigned as director of the U. S. Conciliation Service.

Following irresponsible red-baiting attacks by the House Appropriations Committee, Warren's departure was forced by the Taft-Hartley Act's transfer of the Conciliation Service from the Labor Department to the National Labor Relations Board.

Unity Meeting

Representatives of 10 CIO, AFL and independent maritime unions held an unprecedented joint meeting in Seattle June 27 to plan cooperative defense against forthcoming effects of the Taft-Hartley Act.

The officials met to discuss the measure's impact on contracts held by the Seafarers Intl. Union and the Masters, Mates & Pilots (both AFL), which expire Sept. 30.

JAMES H. DURKIN

Durkin Heads Office Union

The CIO Office & Professional Workers' executive board last weekend elected James H. Durkin as president, succeeding Lewis Merrill who resigned early this month on account of ill health.

Durkin will serve until the 1948 convention. On UOPWA's staff since the union was founded in 1937, Durkin pledged to continue the fight for "security and higher salaries for white collar and professional workers."

Durkin, who is married and has a one-year-old daughter, is a member of the union's national administrative committee and general executive board and has recently been serving as national representative attached to the national insurance division.

Durkin pledged continued support to the policies of the CIO and the leadership of CIO Pres. Philip Murray. Durkin declared that the union would continue to fight for the equal rights of all members, would not participate in any witch hunts and would conduct with all labor a fight against restrictive legislation and attacks on labor and minority groups, including the Taft-Hartley Law.

GUILD NAMES NOMINEES

PRES. Milton Murray unexpectedly ended a bitter fight for the presidency of the CIO Newspaper Guild by withdrawing his nomination at the 14th annual convention of the union at Sioux City, Iowa, last week.

His withdrawal from the race left only the names of Harry Martin, Memphis, Tenn., and Willard Shelton, Washington, D. C., to be submitted to the membership for election. In declining the nomination, Murray said:

"I deplore the friction which has arisen in the Guild in the past five years. There has been plenty of vicious politics which I feel should be eliminated. I am going to do what I think best for the Guild by declining this nomination with heartfelt thanks."

The only member of the Murray-Rodgers-Eubanks slate of 1941 remaining after the convention developments was Executive Vice-Pres. Sam Eubanks, who will be opposed for re-election by Jack Buckman, Manchester, N. H.

Sec.-Treas. William W. Rodgers failed to win nomination. Nominated for that post were Ralph Novak, Detroit, and G. K. Williams, Los Angeles.

ORGANIZING

BY ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

An important announcement was made by the Natl. Mediation Board last week. Results of a run-off election in non-operating groups on the Pennsylvania Railroad definitely places CIO solidly in the railroad field.

As the result of these victories and those previously won in the original election, the CIO United Railroad Workers holds bargaining rights in six of the eight non-operating shop crafts and represents some 41,000 workers on this system alone.

The company union which previously held the bargaining rights for these crafts won one craft in the run-off, giving them some 12,000 workers as against 53,000-54,000 on the system and in this craft the independent union won by a majority of approximately 200. The company previously won an election among the comparatively small blacksmiths' group.

The AFL craft unions were eliminated entirely by the elections.

To Director Martin and his entire staff, the CIO extends its congratulations on this fine achievement: Results of the run-off election are:

Reminder to Taft:

PROBE UNEMPLOYMENT IN AUTO INDUSTRY

THE Employment Act charges a joint congressional committee with the responsibility of reporting to the President on steps to be taken to promote maximum employment, production and purchasing power.

The committee—known as the Joint Congressional Committee on the Economic Report—has been holding hearings but failed to make a report to the President as the act required it to do last January.

The chairman of the committee is Sen. Taft (R. Ohio) of Taft-Hartley Act infamy. This week Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers wrote Taft telling the Senator that "it would not be amiss for you to direct your immediate inquiry" into current heavy layoffs in the auto industry. Reuther wrote:

"It is difficult for us to understand why, with total steel production in the first quarter of 1947 thirty-five per cent above the quarterly average of 1940, automobile production in the first quarter of 1947 was only four per cent above the quarterly average of 1940.

"I would like to make the concrete suggestion that your committee call before it as witnesses representatives of the management of both the steel and automobile industries to explain the inability of the automobile industry to achieve full production and maintain continuous employment at a time when demand for automobiles far exceeds the supply."

A Major Innovation

UAW Wins Pension Plan At Ford

THE CIO Auto Workers this week won a retirement pay plan from Ford Motor Co.—a major innovation in American heavy industry.

UAW Vice Pres. Richard T. Leonard, director of the Ford Dept., said that the retirement program, which will go into effect as of last Jan. 1, "will involve the expenditure of more than 200 million dollars for past service benefits alone."

In addition, the new contract will include a 7c across the board hourly wage increase and an additional 5c hourly wage raise for more than 10,000 maintenance workers, core makers and jobbing molders.

Pensions, which will cover practically all Ford workers after one year's employment, will be 1% of the worker's annual pay for each year of service, including all the years he was employed before the plan went into effect. The amount is in addition to social security benefits.

Leonard said:

"A Ford worker earning $200 a month would contribute about $1,800 in 30 years and receive a total of $100 a month at retirement, $55 of which is purchased by the company's contributions. If the same worker were to purchase an individual annuity, it would pay him $55 a month for life and cost approximately $9,000."

Other features of the plan are payment in the event of death of all the employe's contributions to his beneficiary, total and permanent disability payments, and full vested rights for each worker in his contribution with partial vested rights in the company's contribution after a specified number of years.

No definite retirement age has been reached, but it will probably be optional between 55 and 65 years of age. It is estimated that 95% of the Ford workers will be eligible to participate in the pension plan at once.

'Camel' Strikers'

STORE STILL BANS HUNGER

By CONNIE ANDERSON

"NOBODY hungry" is a hard principle to live up to, when low-paid workers strike one of the most powerful anti-labor corporations in the South.

But tobacco stemmers and hogshead handlers turned themselves into grocery clerks overnight during the strike of the CIO Food and Tobacco Workers to make that slogan a reality by operating a commissary which served thousands.

The commissary is still fighting to meet the needs of 481 strikers locked out by the R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., Winston-Salem, N. C., after the strike was over, in violation of the contract.

The story of the commissary is an example of the tremendous reserves of working-class initiative and ability. Early in the strike, workers found cash relief was not enough to go around. As one of the strikers said:

"When I buy groceries from the $5 the union give me, all I have is small sackful of goods. If the union will buy the cheaper things, that will be better."

That's where resourcefulness and energy came into demand. A vacant store building across from the union hall was stocked with flour, grits and other staples. Workers came off the picket lines to weigh packages for the various size families. Food was brought in bulk and repackaged at the commissary to fit the needs of the people without any waste.

The food wasn't much—just enough to keep going on. The first week's "menu" was, per person, two pounds of flour, a half-pound of white beans, a pound of corn meal, a half-pound of lard, a half-pound of fat back, a quarter-pound of coffee, one tall can of milk, and a half-pound of snap beans.

There were tiny packages of salt, soda and baking powder to help make biscuits and corn bread. For each baby on the bottle there were 7 tall cans of milk.

In the first three weeks, 2,866 strikers received a week's supply of food for families totaling 12,120 adults and children and 759 bottle babies. That's quite a big grocery business to be handled from scratch, but the tobacco workers took it in their stride.

Shipbuilding Union To Truman:

U. S. SHARES RESPONSIBILITY IN SHIPYARD STRIKE

PRES. John Green of the CIO Shipbuilding Workers this week charged that the U. S. Labor Dept., the Army and Navy Depts. and the Maritime Commission "share responsibility for the strike" of 70,000 members of the union.

These charges were made in a letter to President Truman.

Typical of scenes in which 70,000 ship workers on the three coasts and Great Lakes participated this week, CIO Shipbuilding Workers are shown picketing a yard.

One hundred per cent effective, the strike has shut down all major yards with which the Shipbuilding Workers hold contracts except the Todd yards in New York, Hoboken and New Orleans where negotiations continue. The Todd yard at San Pedro is down.

The morale is so high among the strikers that it is only necessary to maintain token picket lines at the yards scattered along the Great Lakes, the Atlantic, Pacific and Gulf Coasts.

Green asserted that the Secretary of Labor has not exercised his authority to fill the places vacated by the resignation of certain of the industry members on the Shipbuilding Stabilization Committee.

This committee consisting of industry, union and government members was charged with the responsibility of setting up the wage rates in shipbuilding. Green pointed out that the Secretary of Labor has the authority, under the President's executive order transferring the committee to the Labor Dept., to name members to the committee.

Green also said that the procurement agencies announced that they would not participate in any wage review action taken by the committee, "thus leaving labor at the mercy of a group of employers who have already sufficiently indicated that they would do everything in their power to obstruct the holding of a wage review or a fruitful outcome for such wage review."

The strike was precipitated by the companies when they tried to cut earnings, destroy working conditions such as seniority rules and to incorporate the Taft-Hartley Act into contracts.

The union is seeking wage increases, six paid holidays and improved vacation clauses.

The companies refuse to grant wage increases despite the fact Bethlehem Steel and other employers granted raises of 13-29c an hour to members of the AFL working in the San Francisco yards.

Even Dynamite Fails To Halt CIO in Dixie

By ALLAN L. SWIM

NEARLY everything from pious words to dynamite has been used in an effort to keep Southern workers from joining the CIO.

So-called "Operation Dixie" has been a rugged battle from the minute it began, but, despite the opposition, the CIO increased its Southern membership approximately 70% during the past year.

And the pay of workers below the Mason-Dixon line has been increased by millions of dollars annually as a direct result of the work done by the CIO Organizing Committee.

Opposition tactics have varied widely—and some of them have been rather spectacular.

Organizers in an Alabama textile town were forced to cease using their sound truck to avoid arrest on a charge of disturbing public worship. Management accomplished this by employing a group of "ministers" who conducted religious services at the plant gates during shift changes.

Dynamite charges were exploded at one meeting place in Georgia and one in North Carolina in an effort to convince workers—and the organizers, too—that the opposition was willing to play roughly.

A Georgia mill superintendent told an organizer to cease handing out leaflets at his plant. The organizer ignored the warning. A short time later the superintendent attempted to run down the organizer with his car. He chased him out of the street, across a sidewalk and over a fence.

AN Alabama "goon squad" attempted to kidnap an organizer and a local union leader. The CIO representatives fled. The "goons" followed, fired guns at the CIO men and set their car afire. One of the unionists wandered around in the nearby woods all night before reaching safety.

Nineteen organizers and local union leaders have been physically assaulted. Many have been told to "leave town." A dozen or more have been arrested on such charges as "distributing leaflets" and "using sound trucks." (All arrested were later acquitted.)

Most effective opposition has come from mill owners who decided to follow the simple practice of firing nearly every worker who expressed an interest in the CIO. Some of the workers thus fired also have been blacklisted.

Many persons unfamiliar with the economic and political structure of the South say they cannot understand why industrialists fight the CIO so bitterly—why they so openly violate the NLRB.

Van A. Bittner, vice president of United Steelworkers and national director of the CIO Organizing Committee, explains it this way:

"The building of a strong CIO movement in the South will mean a new way of life for most Southerners.

"There is more than pay rates and working conditions at stake. Some of the mill owners are virtual kings of all they survey. They own and operate the mills and the mill villages. They control towns economically or politically, or both.

"For years they have laid down the rules under which their employes worked and lived. The coming of the CIO means that they can no longer reign supreme. It means that the workers themselves have something to say about the conditions under which they work and live.

"It is natural that the industrialists should fight—and fight hard—to retain the old way of life.

"THERE is a matter of pride involved, too. Some of the mill owners have provided their workers with fairly good houses and fairly good pay and working conditions. They honestly think it is better for them to 'take care of' the workers than for the workers to attempt to provide for themselves and make their own decisions. So pride is injured when employes attempt to toss off the yoke of paternalism.

"A recent visitor to my office who had been in one of the best mill towns of the South made a statement about the mill owner that throws important light on the subject. Of the mill owner he said, 'He provides his workers with everything except the right to make their own decisions.'"

Packinghouse Wins 2nd Hike

An agreement for a 6c an hour wage increase was reached this week by the CIO Packinghouse Workers and Armour & Co.

The increase was bargained pursuant to a clause in the current contract, which allows for two wage reopening periods. The contract was signed last December, at which time the union received a 7½c an hour increase and other gains, including geographic wage adjustments, eight paid holidays, and a sick leave plan.

Pres. Ralph Helstein noted that the Armour agreement is subject to ratification by the local unions in the Armour chain. Retroactive date for the increase is June 16.

The signing of the Armour agreement is the first in the present negotiations between the CIO union and the leading packing companies.

Sprucing Up

THAT FOOT PROBLEM

By HANNA SHERMAN

HAPPY is the gal whose feet are both good looking and healthy. Especially during these summer months. It's a time when even the healthiest feet may hurt just because it's hot. So, if your pedal extremities are less than perfect (and whose aren't?) why not get them into fine condition for the summer ahead?

Calluses are painful. Unnecessarily painful, we might add, since most types of calluses are so easily removed. File the callus down gently with a special file made for that purpose or with a pumice stone. Use the stone after your bath when the skin is soft and moist. Finish the job with a soothing lotion or cream—it's that easy.

A callus on the sole of the foot behind the second and third toe is more serious. There may be something wrong with your metatarsal bones. Make sure with a medical examination. Never cut a callus yourself. It's special work for the podiatrist (chiropodist).

MOST of us have corns because we wear the wrong shoes for our feet and walk badly. The first step in getting rid of corns is to develop a walk that balances your weight. Then be sure always to wear shoes that really fit you.

That's preventive. For the corn itself, see a podiatrist. He generally will remove it by cutting it away. It's dangerous to try to cut a corn yourself. Infection can follow unskilled cutting and careless use of chemical agents may injure the surrounding tissue. Once a corn has been removed professionally, it will rarely reappear—provided you take care of that matter of your walk and your shoes.

Ingrown toenails can be prevented. File your toe nails straight across, and never, never cut down into the corners. Don't play doctor by probing into the skin along the side of the nail. If the nail tends to dig into the flesh at the corner, just insert a bit of cotton under the nail with a toothpick. Relieve the pressure and the nail will grow over straight.

EXCESSIVE perspiration of the feet responds quickly and easily to treatment. Once a day plunge the feet into hot water—as hot as you can stand—for about a minute and a half. Then dip them in icy water, for just half a minute. Repeat this several times and dry your feet with a rough towel.

Follow up this bracing routine with a dusting of talcum powder or any good foot powder. It's heaven sent on the days when your feet are tired, aching, swollen, or just plain hurt.

Do take care of your feet—you've just got to stand on your own, no matter how hot it gets.

Women In CIO

WOMEN members of the CIO, modest, hard-working and inclined to be shy, as a group do not always get the attention they deserve. So it's good to see one of them get a nice plug in the Connecticut State CIO monthly paper, Connecticut Vanguard.

She is Rose Hess, member of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, and vice-president of the State CIO Council since 1945.

"Rose is one of Connecticut's finest examples of whole-hearted devotion to trade unionism," says the Vanguard.

"Despite the fact that she works every day as a sewing machine operator, she has never been known to turn down an assignment to do something for her union or the State CIO. She does all her tasks with a steady cheerfulness. She's the stuff of which successful, durable trade unionism is made."

Rose Hess became active in May 1933 when the ACWA signed its first union contract with the Brewster Shirt Corp., in Danbury, and has been a member of her shop committee ever since. For the last 11 years she has been shop chairlady.

THE SUMMER VACATION—A CHORE OR A RICH EXPERIENCE FOR YOUR CHILDREN?

A little planning by parents who know how to cooperate with neighbors and friends can make that big part of the year—the summer vacation—a full and profitable time for their children. Going on excursions is fun, brings new ideas to play and helps do away with that sad plaint, "What Shall We Do Now?" If you've an airport, a factory, a sawmill, a brook, or a farm nearby, you're in luck. Round houses, fire stations, docks and all means of transportation hold perennial interest. Parents who go on trips with children find it most rewarding. (Photo: Monkmeyer Conreid).

Report from Germany:

Paper Shortage Slows Workers' Education

"IN a democracy the people are the supreme rulers," said the teacher to his class, adding in a matter-of-fact tone: "Please repeat five times."

After they had done as he directed, the teacher said: "Next, in the final analysis, nobody is superior to the people. Repeat five times."

That is the picture of a class conducted by a German trade union for a youth group in the American zone. The picture was brought back by Mrs. Alice Hanson Cook, of the education staff of the Philadelphia Joint Board of the CIO Clothing Workers, who was sent to the American zone by the War Dept. for two months as a consultant in workers' education.

The reason for the unique teaching method is the shortage of paper. The teacher alone had notes. The pupils had neither paper nor books.

"Lack of paper is the greatest handicap to workers' education in the American zone," declared Mrs. Cook.

She explained that the formal education of most Germans ends at 14, because that is the age at which apprenticeship training begins. Thereafter, the pupil goes to vocational school only one day a week until his apprenticeship is completed.

Under such a system the job of training youth for citizenship falls on the unions, which set up youth groups on the plant basis and in the neighborhoods. In the plant the union is permitted to bring in a speaker every Wednesday afternoon.

"IN Germany I saw the best job I have ever seen in functional education—that is learning to do by doing," Mrs. Cook said. "The young people were learning how to handle grievances by actually handling them after being guided by experienced teachers."

On the neighborhood level, the unions hold discussions of trade union problems, of current events and of cultural matters for the youth groups. They add zest to their neighborhood activities through holding folk music nights.

"Workers' education is also hampered by the lack of good teachers," Mrs. Cook pointed out. "Many qualified teachers were killed by Hitler and others can't be spared from the other essential functions of their unions.

"The Germans need food for their bodies, but they also need ideas for their minds, and they can't be given those ideas until the paper shortage is overcome."

Movie Moguls Echo Anti-Labor Law

THE Taft - Hartley law's "long step toward fascism" is finding its echo in the movie industry. Already there is talk of "industrial peace," lower production costs (at labor's expense), and even more ominously, a proposal for national censorship.

What will happen nationally if Congress accepts Rankin's ideas of censorship can be seen by a glance at the record of Lloyd T. Binford, Memphis fuehrer of the cinema. In the past few months, this Bourbon has banned seven pictures because Negroes have appeared in dignified roles or the political content was not to his "crumpy" taste. His latest triumph of misjudgment involves the prohibition of any showing of "Monsieur Verdoux," Charlie Chaplin's bitter satire on modern society.

Coming from Binford, this can be construed as a compliment, for "Monsieur Verdoux" was never made to fit the fascist tastes of Binford and his Taft-Hartley friends.

CHAPLIN'S Verdoux is a fine blending of humor and entertainment with a powerful political punch. No one beats you over the head with a "message" yet the very story of this meek, dapper bank clerk turned murderer is a powerful indictment of the same political forces that are treading the long road today.

The story concerns a petty bank clerk, fired suddenly after thirty years' devotion to the financial institutions. To support his crippled wife, and children, he enters a new business—methodically killing women with overstuffed bank accounts. Seeing no difference between men who profit by wars and his own pursuits, he keeps neat business-like records, dispatches his victims with production-line efficiency and tallies his profits and losses every so often.

When finally caught, he merely pleads guilty to his individual crimes and then troubles the conscience of the world by saying that killing only a few is murder, but war-makers who murder by the millions find respectability in numbers.

This may not be the usual stuff for comedies, but Chaplin overdoes everything with such precision and dexterity that his every motion is laugh-provoking. His love-making with a purpose, his handling of poison and his nimbleness in counting money turn into masterpieces of comedy. With the gracefulness of a lumbering tramp steamer, Martha Raye contributes the best screen performance of her career as one of the objects of Chaplin's business.

"Monsieur Verdoux" is a picture you will enjoy and remember a long time.

THE year 1947 will go down in history as the time of the British Invasion — cinematically speaking. In increasing numbers, England has been sending over fine pictures which are finally making their way into movie houses all over the country. "Vacation for Marriage," "Brief Encounter," "Stairway to Heaven" and "This Happy Breed" are but a few examples of the fine overseas films now making the rounds.

The topper, so far, has come in "Great Expectations," Dickens fine story of Pip, a poor lad projected into nobility's ranks by the kindness of a criminal he befriended. John Mill's fluctuating romance with Estella (Valerie Hobson) starts off with terrific interest and builds to a dramatic climax.

The beauty of this fine film, however, lies mainly in the excellent weaving of detail and incident against the somber background of nineteenth century standards. Its two hours are filled with enchantment, humor and romance to a degree that might well sound "beware" to the often overdramatic efforts of Hollywood.

"Odd Man Out," which brings James Mason back to the screen in an adventurous role, is another example of the fact that good English pictures are not flukes or one-a-year events. Mason is an Irish revolutionary who escapes from prison and organizes a gang to combat the British with violence. They rob a mill for funds, and in the fracas Mason loses his discipline and kills a guard. Wounded himself, he is the object of a thrilling, back-alley manhunt.

For eight hours, the police hunt him down like an animal. His band scatters and he keeps one step ahead of the police with the aid of various people, all of whom have special reasons for helping the fugitive. Only one—a girl—helps him, out of pure charity and love.

Realistic and grim, the picture is tense and dramatic. Occasionally it lags—but the lull only serves to sharpen the ensuing incidents. Mason makes up for the recent "lulus" in this one.

"THE ADVENTURESS," with Deborah Kerr, who makes her American debut in the forthcoming Hucksters, deals with an Irish background in a lighter vein. Full of the Blarney spirit, Miss Kerr plays the role of an Irish lass whose traditional hatred of the British misleads her into helping the Germans.

She becomes involved in wacky spy plots, secret missions and military secrets—defying and defeating all sides until she ends up with a sane point of view and a handsome husband. The picture is racy, funny and full of high comedy.

While the above comments may lead to a comparison of American versus British films, there is no actually fair basis for such. For one thing, the foreign films sent to our shores represent the cream of the crop—and if any statistician wanted to, he would probably find Hollywood with an equal batting average. Certainly, the British have shown they are human, too, when they send over a dreary drama of tragic love entitled "A Lady Surrenders."

BACK to the American scene, to "Miracle on 34th Street." This humorous phantasy about a Santa Claus is enough to take the curse off the heat. Of course, the Department Store Workers' local doesn't benefit from the "Miracle" but everyone manages to have a lot of fun and good-natured spoofing.

The "Miracle" is born when Edmund Gwenn, who looks suspiciously like old Santa himself, joins Macy's parade. One thing leads to another, and he ends up with Santa's job in the huge store.

Having the true spirit of Christmas, he tells the customers to buy in Gimbels or other stores where prices on certain items are lower or the supply is more plentiful. (This would be a miracle!)

His spirit spreads to store-wide policy and he also manages to put over a drawn-out romance between Maureen O'Hara and John Payne. The climax comes during a riotous courtroom scene where it becomes accepted legal authority that Kris Kringle is Santa Claus. Everyone is happy including the audience for a change.

Charlie Chaplin, the businesslike killer in "Monsieur Verdoux", inspects his prospective victim as she safeguards her strongbox. Chaplin's complaint is that murder is made respectable by numbers—witness war-makers.

John Mills, who plays the part of Pip in the picturization of Dicken's "Great Expectations" rescues Migwich, his benefactor, from the sidewheels of a packet boat. Magwich, an escaped convict, faces jail if caught in England.

Van Johnson and Cameron Mitchell fight with all their professional skill to keep a Navy Catalina airborne after a victorious clash with a Japanese submarine. Johnson switches from the bobby-sox roles to do a serious portrayal of a plane-wrecked pilot who seeks "High Barbaree", his island of dreams.

Two noted musicians bring different types of music to the screen. Louis Armstrong blows his hot horn in "New Orleans", a saga of jazz that is captured by the "Satchmo's" musicraft. Ferruccio Tagliavini (right) sings the Count's role in the new Italian film, "The Barber of Seville", full-length movie version of the famous opera.

SHORT TAKES

DEAR RUTH—is a bit dated but still holds up as very funny comedy. Story concerns little brat who writes love letters in her older sister's name. When soldier comes home to claim his V-mail bride, complications set in. Joan Caulfield and William Holden are the "victims" of the hoax.

LOST HONEYMOON—Franchot Tone, suffering from amnesia, forgets his English bride and kids and prepares to marry the boss's daughter. When his family turns up, the usual nonsense takes place. Recommended if the theatre is air-conditioned.

Getting down to work in one of the UNION VOICE classrooms. Courses included painting, arts and crafts, singing, dancing, games and story-telling.

Here's a scene from one of the recently-finished series of Saturday morning children's classes, showing a little student explaining her art project to a classmate.

Boy! Do we love to sing! That's the general idea of this photo, showing some of the audience participation as folk-singer Oscar Brand got the kids into tune with some lively rhythms.

A work of art in progress. It's a serious business to this young artist who is so absorbed in his creation he isn't even aware he is having his picture taken.

UNION MEMBERS IN THE MAKING

By IRVING BALDINGER

FOUR-year-old Alan Frank is talking union.

In the hurried, high-pitched babble he uses to tell of the major events in his young life, he's regaling his friends with wondrous tales of the things he learned and did at his dad's union, where mother had been taking him on Saturday mornings during the past year.

There are over 200 youngsters like Alan, ranging in age from 3 to 10 years, telling similar tales to wide-eyed pals in their neighborhoods in New York City these days.

They're graduates of special classes for children of CIO members, held under the sponsorship of UNION VOICE, newspaper of seven New York locals of the CIO Retail, Wholesale and Department Store Union — Wholesale and Warehouse Workers Local 65, Department Store Employes Locals 1-S, 2, 3, 5, and 1250, and Display Workers Local 144.

THE classes, open to children of members of these local unions, were held at the headquarters of Local 65, where the junior unionists romped through meeting rooms reserved for them, and sent their piercing whoops rolling up the corridors of the eleven-story structure.

Under the careful supervision of trained nursery teachers, the toddling CIOers engaged in such activities as painting, singing, dancing, and turning themselves into cats, cows, horses and bears as they acted out stories told to them by the instructors.

Group singing of union songs was a favorite part of each weekly session, and many a group of union members, gathered in nearby meeting rooms on more serious affairs, would simply have to suspend their weighty discussions till the shrill chorus of children's voices rounded out another stanza of "Solidarity Forever."

DURING the past year, three series of such classes were held, averaging 10 weeks each — and each new term saw the enrollment total climbing steadily up. Use of union-owned meeting rooms, plus the active cooperation of the mothers themselves in helping to administer the classes, keeps costs down to a minimum, enabling the course to operate with tuition fees of $3 to $4 per term.

The 1946-47 program of UNION VOICE - sponsored children's events came to a thumping finale on Saturday afternoon, June 14, in the form of a Kiddie Carnival. There, the graduates entertained several hundred parents with the songs and games they had learned in class.

PART of the Carnival program—as originally planned—included entertainment by guest artists for the children—including a series of folk ballads, a puppet show and a dance recital.

But the youngsters very quickly made it clear that this was their show—climbing up on the stage to touch and harmonize with the ballad singer; to follow the steps of the exhibition dancer; and to look behind the curtain to see what made the puppets go.

And that, said the class teachers and sponsors proudly, was a spontaneous demonstration of how well the class had achieved one of its main purposes—breaking down the reticence of young children, giving them poise, and generally conditioning them (especially those of pre-school age) for contented group activity.

OF course there's another aspect to the question of why UNION VOICE has undertaken the sponsorship of such programs as a children's class, a beauty contest for kiddies, and parties for the junior unionists.

Such activities are an important means of integrating the interests of a union man's family with the program of the union, of giving Mrs. Member a more direct reason for wanting to read the union paper, of creating for her and her child a union spirit as strong and enthusiastic as her husband's.

U. S. Honor at Stake

POLLTAX BLOT WORLD - WIDE

THE same sort of democracy as the U. S. is urging upon other nations must be extended to seven southern states in this country, Eugene Cotton, CIO assistant general counsel, urged last week.

Testifying before the House sub-committee on elections, in behalf of a federal law banning the poll-tax, Cotton pointed out that the voting requirement was disfranchising millions of American citizens.

In support of his claim, Cotton stated that the average percentage of potential voters who actually used their franchise in the 1946 Congressional elections was 9.58% in polltax states as compared with an average of 47% in non-polltax states. South Carolina Congressmen were elected by only 3% of the potential electorate. (All of the state's Representatives voted against labor on the Taft-Hartley Bill.)

As a result, "a small percentage of the voters in those states elect a disproportionate number of Congressmen and Senators to the federal Congress, which passes laws which affect the whole population of the United States," Cotton testified.

THE CIO, which has battled the polltax for the past nine years, last year in a resolution adopted at the national convention termed the tax "a standing blot on the pages of American democracy."

Filibusters or threats of filibusters by southern Senators have prevented the anti-polltax bill from reaching a vote in the Upper House in three successive sessions of Congress, although the House had each time passed the bill and a majority in the Senate had expressed approval.

"Until every U. S. citizen has the right to vote in federal elections without being called upon to pay for the exercise of that right, we cannot face the world with a clean conscience," the witness declared.

"Nor can we," he continued, "in good faith find fault with governments elsewhere in the world because they do not measure up to our standards of democracy when in our own country we do not live up to the standards we would set for others."

Delaying tactics, which have characterized the treatment of anti-polltax legislation in previous Congressional sessions, are being employed by southern members of the House sub-committee on elections this year. Three weeks remain before Congressional adjournment, and in that time the bill must clear the sub-committee, the full committee, the rules committee and final floor action.

Little Taft Bill Backfires

An overdose of enthusiasm in ramming a "little Taft-Hartley Bill" through the Ohio state legislature backfired last week.

In their haste to write a bill equally as repressive as the national anti-labor act, Ohio legislators haphazardly lifted snatches of the Taft-Hartley bill in a desperate effort to cram in as much poison as possible in the few hours remaining before the legislature adjourned.

Result was a hodge-podge, which Republican Gov. Thomas J. Herbert vetoed as "unworkable" after consultation with Sen Taft.

The speed with which the GOP-dominated legislature wrote and passed the bill to subjugate labor has been unmatched by any similar hurry to enact legislation to raise workers' living standards, William Lavelle of the Ohio CIO Council declared.

WASHINGTON ROUNDUP

URGENTLY needed social legislation, including national health insurance, a 65c minimum wage, housing and educational programs, may not even be able to reach the floor for action before Congress adjourns.

Sen. Harley M. Kilgore (D. W. Va.) declared this week that opposition of the NAM and other powerful lobbying groups plus the fact that some Congressional leaders consider social legislation "too controversial" would stall the bills until time for adjournment (tentatively scheduled for July 25).

Big business this session has lost only one major issue—the tax bill—and even that appears likely to go their way.

HELLBENT on making good their '46 campaign promises to "reduce taxes," GOP leaders are shoving through the same bill that died with President Truman's veto—with only a change in the effective date.

The so-called "relief" measure amounts to relief for the greedy, would scarcly provide a "visible" deduction in the wage-earner's pay envelope. Some Democrats, who had originally stood by the President's veto, are said to be ready to override this time.

The GOP will attempt to ram the measure through before the public, which supported Truman's veto according to a Gallup poll, has a chance to know what hit it. Letters to Congress are in order.

★ ★ ★

THE sub-committee of the Senate Committee on Education and Public Welfare is considering two opposing proposals for solution to the nation's disgraceful medical care deficiency.

To sidetrack a comprehensive health insurance program, Sen. Taft is prescribing legislation which in essence would be a relief dole administered by the American Medical Assn.

CIO, which finds the Taft medicine distasteful, is demanding passage of the Wagner-Murray-Pepper-Taylor-McGrath bill, which insures adequate medical attention for every American. The bill is based on the principle that health care is the inherent right of all of us and should not be distributed according to ability to pay.

Gladys Dickason, a vice-president of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers, will testify in behalf of the measure July 10 before the Senate sub-committee.

★ ★ ★

IN a move that should place them far in the lead as the ladies' pinup Senators of '47, Claude Pepper and Wayne Morse last week introduced an equal pay bill for women.

The measure would make it an unfair labor practice to pay women lower wages than men for equal work of equal quality.

The Senators declared in a joint statement:

"Growing unemployment increases the tendency to lower women's rates of pay with consequent lowering of men's rates and the entire wage structure in industry, with serious consequences for purchasing power and living standards."

OUT of the mouths of bigots: Avoid anti-Semitism "like a plague . . ."

But Rep. Ed Gossett's (D. Tex.) good advice turned out to be a case of "Do as I say, not as I do," because in the next breath he almost quoted Herr Goebbels. He declared that Jews contribute to anti-Semitism "when they band themselves together in Jewish organizations, when they use their power and influence for obviously selfish purposes, when they seek to control the press and radio for selfish ends, when they conspire to destroy the immigration barriers."

The Congressman was voicing his objection to HR 2910, sponsored by Republican William Stratton of Illinois, which would admit 100,000 displaced persons to this country each year for four years. The House sub-committee on immigration, of which Gossett is a member, is now holding hearings on the bill.

Contrary to the Texan's belief that the bill was originated with "a number of prominent Jewish organizations," it was first pushed by the Citizens Committee on Displaced Persons, whose vice chairmen include such persons as CIO and AFL Presidents Philip Murray and William Green, Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, James A. Farley, Maj. Gen. William Donovan and Charles Taft.

The Congressman also apparently didn't know that the Jews constitute only about 25% of the displaced persons.

TEST OF POLITICAL FREEDOM

ON Tuesday, July 15, a special Congressional election will be conducted in one of the Districts of the City of Baltimore

One of the candidates, Judge Ed Garmatz, has been officially approved and endorsed by the CIO Political Action Committee for the State of Maryland. The candidate for the opposition party is notorious among the working men and women of Baltimore for his anti-union views and activities.

The CIO has been requested by representatives of its members within the Congressional District involved in this election to give publicity to the action of the State PAC and to urge that members of CIO unions in the District cast their votes for Judge Garmatz.

THE Congress of the United States, however, has recently enacted a law, commonly known and referred to as the Taft-Hartley Act. This law purports to make it illegal for American working men and women organized into labor organizations and acting through their duly elected officers to expend their common funds to make their views heard and known in matters relating to elections for federal office.

Senator Taft, the foremost sponsor of the new law, has publicly stated his view that it is the purpose, intent and effect of the new law to stifle the voice of labor in political matters and particularly to prevent labor from supplying in its own publications, distributed among its own members, facts and information with respect to current election issues and candidates.

I have been reared in a tradition of respect for the law of the land. In my public and private life I have adhered religiously to the principles of that training. Consistent with those principles I deem it the duty of citizenship to abide by and respect the highest law of the land—the Constitution of the United States.

It has always been my understanding that that document guarantees the basic American rights of free speech, free press, free assemblage and forbids the denial of life, liberty or property without due process of law. Those guarantees and those protections, I am advised and firmly believe, are and must be available to all without distinction, caste or class.

By PHILIP MURRAY
President, Congress of Industrial Organizations

I am advised and firmly believe that they are rights and protections to which the working men and women of this country, the members of labor unions, the members of CIO unions, are fully entitled.

IF the Taft-Hartley Act means what is has been proclaimed to mean, it flagrantly flaunts fundamental principles which have been cornerstones of American tradition and American freedom ever since the founding of our great nation.

I believe that I would be remiss in the performance of my duties as an American citizen if I did not speak and act firmly in support of those great traditions and those vital freedoms which have made America what it is today.

Under the procedures of our courts it is possible to strike down unconstitutional laws only by taking affirmative action in reliance on and in the exercise of the liberties guaranteed by the Constitution.

This I have decided to do.

I have made this decision not in a spirit of defiance or bravado or bitterness. Rather do I act in a spirit of regret that the Congress of the United States should have chosen to curb basic liberties, and in a spirit of hope and trust that the courts of the United States will vindicate those liberties.

PHILIP MURRAY

I therefore have directed and requested the editor of the CIO NEWS to publish this statement, including the following paragraphs, and to give to this issue of the CIO NEWS proper circulation among the members of CIO unions in the City of Baltimore and, particularly, within the Congressional District in which this election is scheduled to take place.

The Taft-Hartley Act has imposed upon American workers and their unions untold ills and hardships which threaten their living and working standards and the very existence of their organizations. The evils of this law have become well known to members of our unions throughout the length and breadth of our land. It is vital for the preservation of the living standards of America that this law be repealed.

It is apparently the judgment of CIO members and leaders in the City of Baltimore that Judge Garmatz is a candidate whose record, experience and understanding are such that he may be expected to appreciate the evils of this law and to act in the public interest for its repeal. The CIO NEWS belongs to the members of CIO and serves as the organ of expression for the principles and views democratically adopted by its members and affiliates.

In performance of my duty as President of CIO, I therefore open the pages of this publication to an expression of views of the CIO members in Baltimore.

In accordance with their decision and request I take opportunity to urge that all members of CIO residing and voting in the Congressional District in which this election is scheduled to take place cast their votes for Judge Garmatz, and make every effort to bring their neighbors and friends and to all persons eligible to vote in this election a full understanding of the issues involved and of the importance of voting for Judge Garmatz.

I firmly believe that the action which I now take is fully legal under the law of our land. It is my understanding that the issue as to whether proper respect will be paid to the fundamental guarantees and principles of our Constitution must now rest in the hands of the law enforcement agencies of the federal government.

"Sh, after a while they'll go away."

FREE 400,000 REFUGEES FROM BONDAGE - MURRAY

America should take in 400,000 displaced persons now "sweating it out" in refugee camps throughout Europe, CIO told Congress last week.

A statement by Pres. Philip Murray, filed with the House Immigration sub-committee, voiced strong support for the Stratton Bill (HR 2910), which would make back, unused immigration quotas available for bringing in the refugees over a four-year period.

"The United States must take the lead in delivering these people from the peculiarly cruel and special kind of bondage into which the strange circumstances of war have forced them," Murray's statement declared.

"The 850,000 displaced persons in Germany, Austria and Italy are not merely living as exiles but as uprooted human beings without a homeland. This entire army of people is being denied an opportunity to support themselves or to enjoy their human right to productive labor in a community for which they can develop loyalties, sincere civic pride and the opportunity to assume the responsibilities that go with full and earned citizenship."

America is a land of immigrants and the children of immigrants, the CIO statement said. That fact is a constant reminder to working men and women that "we are the sons and daughters of men who came to this country to escape absolutist governments, religious persecution and exploitation."

Much of the statement was devoted to knocking down arguments that the immigration of DP's into the United States might cause unemployment.

"Let me say for the record we in CIO can find no basis in fact or reason for the fear that admitting one hundred thousand immigrants a year for four years would jeopardize the jobs of American citizens," Murray said. "If subsantial unemployment should arise in the next four years—it will not be the result of the fact that we have admitted a pitiful handful of displaced persons, but only as a result of a wrong headed blundering in respect to domestic economic and social policy.

"It is not the presence of sturdy and willing workers such as these people are which causes unemployment. On the contrary, they stimulate employment by adding to the sum total of productive economic activity in our country.

"I do not think it is the true friends of labor who will argue that our economy cannot stand the addition of less than one-tenth of one percent of the number of our population annually for four years without creating unemployment. The argument is in any event fallacious on its face.

"When we speak of unemployment, by any rational definition we are talking about millions of unemployed. Joblessness on this scale is clearly not related in any way to the admission of a few thousands annually for a limited period.

"Neither can opposition be based on the theory that these immigrants will themselves be unemployed and hence public charges.

"They must under the law be guaranteed against becoming such in order to be admissible, and if within some few years after entry they do in fact become public charges they may be deported."

HOUSE FINALLY OK's REPORT ON FASCISM

IT TOOK the House of Representatives 6 months to get around to authorizing last week the publication of the report on Fascism in Action.

The vote for publication of the report prepared by the Legislative Reference Service of the Library of Congress at the request of Rep. Patman (D. Tex.) was 124 to 115.

Although the vote was close it does not tell the story of open and concealed opposition to the publication of the study of the economies of our recent enemies —Japan, Italy and Germany—and of Spain.

The open fight in the House Administration Committee was led by Rep. Busbey (R. Ill.) who objected to sections describing Spain as a Fascist regime and to veiled references to pre-war participation of American corporations in the German-dominated industrial cartels.

The concealed opposition was shown by the fact that both the sub-committee and the full House Administration Committee reported out Patman's resolution without recommendation, an unusual procedure.

Busbey had reason to fear the report because in chapter 7, dealing with the economy of Spain, Italy and Japan, it stated that "fascism began by pleasing business, disciplined labor, suppressed independent trade unions, prohibited strikes and checked consumer cooperation."

The Legislative Reference Service's researchers found that in every country the fascist movement was spearheaded by big business, industrialists and "the top echelons of army and navy." The report continued:

"All such totalitarian movements similarly attracted as followers those with consuming hatred against labor, against the Jews or other racial minorities; the timid that wanted to be sure to be on the winning side; the opportunistic and lawless elements; the confused; the small that imitated and envied the powerful; those ready to sacrifice a considerable amount of conviction and principle in order to escape getting hurt; the unemployed and others who felt that they might gain while having little to lose save theoretical freedom."

THE chapter on labor which was written by Ludwig Hamburger, formerly of the staff of Brookings Institute, states:

"One of the most important changes Fascism brings about is the abolition of free collective bargaining and self-governing labor organizations. Labor policy under Fascism first of all takes away from the worker all means for self-defense. It renders all militant labor action impossible.

"Furthermore, the state sanctions all significant conditions and terms of the wage contract."

Patman, in the introduction to the report, asserts that "there are many strong symptoms of Fascism in our own democratic society. True, this movement in the United States masquerades under other names than the discredited one of Fascism, but whatever it may be called, its peculiar characteristics are alarmingly evident.

"Organized labor must be alert to the dangers of Fascism . . . It is significant that one of the early acts of every Fascist regime is the abolition of all labor organization outside of government control."

Farm-Labor Conference

Southern farmers and workers proposed that the Federal Government guarantee full urban employment as the surest road to prosperity, at a Farmer-Labor Conference held July 5-6 at the Highlander Folk School, Monteagle, Tenn.

Participating in the meeting were county leaders of the Tennessee Farmers Union, students representing nine CIO international unions attending the fourth annual southern CIO school, and CIO officials.

Speakers included CIO Director of Education & Research Kermit Eby, Pres. A. C. Lange of the Tennessee Farmers Union, and Verda Barnes, Women's Division, CIO Political Action Committee.

LANDLORDS PUT ON HEAT FOR 'VOLUNTARY' HIKES

LANDLORDS all over the country were jumping in with both feet last week to take advantage of the "voluntary" 15% rent boost permitted under the new federal "rent control" law.

At the same time hotel owners, whose curbs were relaxed even more sharply by the new law, were giving a demonstration of what may be in store if rent controls lapse entirely next February as they are at present scheduled to do. A partial survey of a few major cities indicated they were breaking the one restriction imposed upon them to demand rent boosts of up to 400% from permanent tenants.

A survey also showed that 90% of the landlords in Knoxville, Tenn., were preparing to ask for "voluntary" boosts, some 60,000 tenants were scheduled to be hit in Pittsburgh, with similar large numbers to be affected in other centers.

Although the law calls for "voluntary" participation of the tenant in approving the rent boost, landlords were finding ways of trying to bring about such agreements. Restrictions on summer subleasing were instantly tightened and tenants were told that the only way they would get much-needed redecorating and other repairs would be through signing leases embodying the 15% rent increase.

The CIO, working through its Industrial Union Councils, is urging tenants to organize to resist rent gouging, and resolution has been introduced in the Senate to have the Banking and Currency Committee investigate the real estate lobby.

But it was in the hotels that the lids were really off. Despite the clause in the law requiring that owners apply to the Office of Rent Control for permission to decontrol their rents, hotels in cities from coast to coast were immediately putting into effect rent boosts that ran as high as 400%.

That peak was registered in Philadelphia but increases in New York averaged up to 50% with some running to 125%. In Denver one boost of 300% was registered, in St. Louis a jump from $50 to $150 was reported and in Los Angeles one apartment hotel raised its rents from $45 to $120 a month.

So flagrant were many of the demands that even the real estate interests were alarmed. The Real Estate Board of New York was moved to announce that "such a policy is embarking upon a course likely to wreak injury to real estate as a whole and is certain to invite regulatory action by the state legislature."

It Should Happen To GOP Senators

One of the capital's most expensive and socially desirable addresses is the swank Westchester apartments — a building that looms up castle-like over the wooded dells of Rock Creek park.

The Westchester's rentals begin at around $150 a month for a small affair with two tiny bedrooms and range upward to $210 for three bedrooms in what the management calls a 7-room job.

Among the tenants enjoying the cool park breezes where air conditioning is not necessary are such Republican legislators as Sens. Brooks (Ill.), Ferguson (Mich.), Revercomb (W. Va.), Wiley (Wis.), Cain (Wash.) Buck (Del.), Baldwin (Conn.) and Morse (Oreg.)

Now it just happens that late last month each of these statesmen except Revercomb, who was absent, voted with a forceful "aye" in favor of the GOP rent control extension bill that Pres. Truman signed with a warning that it was a backward step and would destroy rent controls.

But just the other day the Westchester management announced to its tenants that there would be a 17½% boost in rentals within 30 days and that application had been filed with the District of Columbia rent control office.

Although these GOP leaders voted to permit just such increases, they are collectively hollering bloody murder now that the landlord has made a pass at their pocketbooks — wallets that U. S. taxpayers fill at the rate of $12,500 per year plus some fancy expenses and travel money.

'We Have More To Give Than To Guard'

"Many of us come here today out of affection for a man, but those of us who loved him most, I believe, come also in devotion to the things to which Franklin Roosevelt gave his life. It was his genius that he could speak clearly in warm-hearted leadership for us in an American period of difficulty never equaled in the history of our nation.

"What we say here will be soon forgotten. On this day we are only a little group of the millions who will come not merely for aid in the ills of the body but for help in the deeper sicknesses of the spirit.

"We come to these springs to which a young man came. How young and debonair, striding and strong he had been. I am glad I can remember not only that he was great but that he was beautiful as well. He came here a cripple to recruit his strength.

"It is fitting that we come here in an hour today when there seems to be more hate and confusion than love and purpose in the world. In New World and Old World alike, recent allies of courage and sacrifice are made in their victory to seem implacable enemies across an impermanent peace.

"There are men among us who would defend democracy by infringing its liberties. There are some who think that the democratic faith depends for defense upon military force rather than the steady fulfilment of its promise for plenty and freedom together and everywhere.

"We need not be the captives of our fears.

"Only the already lost can think of our future as beseiged.

"We have more to give than to guard.

"Our powers are not weapons but tools with which to build the promise of democracy into the purposes of mankind.

"Sometimes that faith is hard to hold. Even to one who has seen many years, these times seem dark. But this place is lit with courage. Indeed, it is illumined with faith."

TWO MORE CIO UNIONS BOYCOTT TAFT BOARD

TWO CIO internationals — the Furniture Workers and the Office and Professional Workers—advised their affiliated locals to boycott the Taft-Hartley National Labor Relations Board last week.

In a 12-point directive the UOPWA charged that the Board has been "converted into a union-busting agency." It also urged review of all existing contracts with a view to reinforcing and extending them. The locals were advised to continue publication of political information for their members.

President Morris Pizer of the Furniture Workers, told the General Executive Board at its semi-annual meeting: "The Labor Board is of no use to us. We do not intend to hand over our union to the Taft-Hartley Board."

The union's executive board said in part: "The National Labor Relations Board was an agency created for the sole purpose of administering the Wagner Act. The Taft-Hartley Act has destroyed the Wagner Act, and replaced it with a series of snares, traps and pitfalls to defeat and frustrate labor."

"Thus an agency initiated as an instrument of labor protection has been perverted into a weapon against labor . . . It is incumbent upon us to save our membership from the crushing machinery of the new Board, which is nothing but an employers' protective association.

The four international officers of the Longshoremen and Warehousemen will recommend to its General Executive Board when it meets July 24 and 25 that the union keep hands off the Labor Board, which they term an employers' anti-labor union busting weapon.

Included in the five-point program to be submitted for adoption are also recommendations for the intensification of political action to repeal the law, elimination of the no-strike pledge and work-stoppage penalties from contracts.

President Joseph Selly of the CIO American Communications Assn., published a signed statement on the front page of the union paper calling for an all-out fight to repeal "this infamous slave labor law."

PINEAPPLE WORKERS STRIKE

Twelve thousand Hawaiian pineapple workers, members of the CIO Longshoremen & Warehousemen, walked out of the fields and canneries late last week at the height of the harvest.

The strike affected eight companies who produce 90% of the world's pineapple supply in a $65,000,000 annual industry. The companies rejected flatly the union demand for a 10c an hour increase, retroactive to Feb. 1, which had been scaled down from 23½c.

PAC's Answer

REGISTER, DONATE, KILL T-H ACT IN '48

"THE way to handle the Taft-Hartley problem is by electing the type of representatives to Congress in 1948 who will repeal the act."

This was the view of CIO Pres. Philip Murray as the CIO's Political Action Committee delivered its answer to the Taft-Hartley law last week in the form of a twin drive, a nation-wide registration push, aimed at qualifying all CIO members to vote in the 1948 elections, and an intensified voluntary fund-raising campaign.

Meeting with Murray, the PAC Executive Board issued a statement which said:

"The answer of the CIO Political Action Committee to the Taft-Hartley law is the announcement of a nation-wide registration campaign to encourage all members of CIO and their families and friends to qualify to vote in 1948 elections.

"We believe that all American citizens should actively participate in the affairs of their government, and that registration of all eligible voters is the first requirement to such participation. The unions of CIO will give this endeavor their wholehearted cooperation and support."

Calling for an "army of one million citizen volunteers who will preach the need for registration and vote in the blocks in which they live," the PAC board said that CIO union members, "exercising their constitutional rights," would form the core of such an army.

"A mass registration drive reaching into the homes of our members is based on the activity of these block workers," the board declared.

In a press conference following the meeting, Pres. Murray asserted that the registration drive would be the "most highly concentrated registration drive ever conducted in the history of our nation."

ASKED how many voters would be added to the voting lists, PAC Director Jack Kroll said that the registration of all CIO members and their families would total about 15,000,000 or about 25% of the nation's vote.

To spur the registration and fund-raising drives, Murray said that, "he hoped and believed the CIO international unions will hold national conferences of their staffs during the year at which they will devote their time exclusively to consideration of registration and voluntary contributions." He stated that such a conference of 500 staff representatives of Steelworkers would be held in August.

The PAC statement, in calling for intensification of the dollar drive, urged "all groups of CIO to devote their Labor Day celebrations to political action and dedicate Labor Day as PAC Day." It said that filled reports indicated an sweeping support of the PAC fund drive.

"The Taft-Hartley law and the record of Congress has produced an over-whelming sentiment in behalf of the PAC dollar voluntary contribution campaign," the statement continued. "All reports indicate that the members of the CIO feel that they are directly contributing to the repeal of the Taft-Hartley law by giving their voluntary contribution to PAC. The PAC dollar drive will be intensified throughout all unions of CIO."

The miserable record of the 80th Congress came in for a thorough blasting by the PAC Board, which asserted:

"This registration campaign is the result, not only of the Taft-Hartley law, but of the entire disgraceful record of the 80th Congress to date.

"Whether it be the question of prices, rent controls, the elimination of workers' rights under the Wage-Hour Act, ignoring the needs of veterans, crippling our social insurance system, legislating tax relief for the rich, the absence of anti-discrimination legislation, and turning homeless vets over to the tender mercies of the building and real estate lobbies, this Congress has shown shameful disregard for the welfare of the American people and our nation."

-SUPPOSE-ER-UH-SUPPOSE LABOR REALLY UNITES AGAINST US?

Politics Is What You Make It

Workers Oust Company Rule

The story of how political action transformed a company town into a union town in two short years is told by Vice Pres. Bill Botkin on the CIO Woodworkers.

In 1945 Botkin went to talk to a new IWA local at a little town called Dierks, Ark. Botkin thought he'd go easy on political action in his talk, figuring the workers were green to unionism and wouldn't have time for it immediately. He tossed in a casual mention, however.

Recently Botkin passed through Dierks again. He found that they had elected the union president mayor and won every other post except one minor office.

Republican Hammer Act

Deft use of the sledge-hammer in Republican quarters has probably been a boon to GOP fund-raising, but it's rough on some people's sensitivities.

Copy of a "fund-raising" letter from the local Republican Committee received by an irate Amherst, N. Y. city employe, fell into the hands of Pres. James H. Durkin of the CIO Office and Professional Workers. The letter said:

"The Amherst Republican Committee solicits your financial assistance to support the activities of the committee during 1947. Your share of this responsibility is $50.00. A contribution to the committee of this amount will be appreciated."

PASSING UP THE PEOPLE

CONGRESS has been acting like a wayward bus, supposed to serve the people but imagining itself to be a private limousine.

The Republican majority, assisted by the poll tax Democrats, has been an obsequious chauffeur for big business.

It has jumped to obey every order of the profiteers, to give them tax relief, higher prices and rents, and everything else they ask.

It has enacted the anti-labor Taft-Hartley law, as demanded by the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers.

And now, with all this big-business baggage attended to, the Congressional leadership is stepping on the gas and hurrying to adjournment.

* * *

MEANWHILE, the American people have seen this Congress pass them up again and again, leaving them waiting and ignoring their needs.

These needs are great.

The present boom is heading for a bust. Profits and prices are grossly inflated, while the share of national income going to wages and salaries has sharply declined.

The tax system favors the greedy at the expense of the needy. Millions are ill-housed and lack adequate medical care. Educational facilities are in a deplorable condition. Job discriminations are growing in industry. Civil liberties are suffering from assault. The minimum wage remains at the sweatshop level of 40c an hour.

The people are entitled to expect their elected representatives to attend to such needs, and to legislate for their economic security.

But Congress has been so busy serving big business that it has no time left for the people. And now it is getting ready to adjourn.

* * *

AMONG the unfinished domestic business before Congress are the following bills:

The Wagner-Ellender-Taft housing bill, to spur construction of low-rent houses and slum-clearance projects.

The national health insurance and public health bill (S. 1320) to make medical and hospital care available to those who need it most.

A bill to raise the minimum wage under the Wage-Hour Act from 40c to 65c an hour, 70c in 1948 and 75c in 1949.

The anti-polltax bill, to abolish this restriction on the right to vote in federal elections.

The anti-bias bill, to set up a permanent FEPC to prevent discriminations in hiring and on the job.

The anti-lynching bill, to make lynching a federal crime which may be prosecuted in U.S. courts.

The federal aid-to-education bill, to improve school facilities and grant all children more equal educational opportunities.

* * *

CONTRAST the above legislation which Congress has neglected with the bills which it has enacted, if you want to judge the character of the present majority and to know which master it serves.

Then remember that this same majority has tried to perpetuate itself in office by restricting the political rights of working people, through the Taft-Hartley Act.

This should make any freedom-loving American mad enough to organize politically for a thorough house-cleaning of Congress at the next elections.

The CIO, for its part, is determined to stand up for the workers' constitutional rights and to fight the political restraints of the Taft-Hartley Act.

President Murray's statement on the Congressional election in Baltimore, in this issue of The CIO NEWS, is a ringing challenge to these unconstitutional restrictions.

It also reflects the determination of labor to fight back politically and not to rest until the people's voice is heard and heeded in the Congress of the United States.

LOOKING AHEAD

BY LEN DE CAUX

HE WAS young, green, an immigrant; the bosses thought he had an "open-shop face."

So he didn't have too much trouble picking up jobs, though there were long lines outside factories in those depression years of the early nineteen-twenties.

He greased cranes and did other jobs in South Chicago and Gary steel mills. He handled hams and soap in packing houses. He worked on copper wire in electrical plants. He became a deck-hand on the Great Lakes and on salt water.

Footloose, without family, he changed jobs often during those years, partly due to layoffs and partly because he concluded there were no good jobs but some were worse than others.

But it got him that older men with families had no job rights, were hired and fired at whim, and had to put up with any conditions the boss dictated. The look in the eyes of some of them stayed with him.

★ ★ ★

WHATEVER his face was like, his mind had unionism in it.

In not one of the great plants where he worked was there union organization.

He searched out the AFL unions. The business agents laughed kindly, told him those industries were unorganizable and to forget it.

If you want to be a union man, they said, you better become apprenticed to a trade, when the books are open — which they weren't.

Still, he begged or bought his way into AFL unions on one or two jobs—just to keep the union hope alive in him.

★ ★ ★

LATER, he took up labor newspaper work, for the United Mine Workers. He saw what a union could do.

He also saw what happened in the mine fields when union conditions were broken down—hunger, misery, hovels, children without clothes to go to school in.

Then he worked for the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, strong enough to protect seniority rights but not to prevent demotions all down the line to the extra board, as jobs grew scarcer.

In those years of the late twenties and early thirties, the labor movement was in retreat from the idea of organizing all the unorganized, and from the political activity that reached its peak in the LaFollette-for-President campaign.

The unions should "stick to their knitting," said the craft leaders, stick to the highly skilled few, not bother about the "unorganizable" many; they should shun political action, industrial unionism and other "world-saving" ideas.

★ ★ ★

THE CIO was a dream come true, a hope fulfilled; it shook a declining labor movement out of its narrowing rut. He became one of CIO's first employes.

Here was a new movement as broad as the old one was narrow. It welcomed all workers without discrimination; it organized energetically.

It was jealous of labor's independence from company-union and other big-business pressures. It believed the working people were entitled to a movement of their own, through which they could democratically determine their own course in industry, politics or anywhere else.

He saw all the plants where he had worked organized by CIO—higher wages, better conditions, seniority, paid vacations. He saw labor assuming a new status, a new leadership in national affairs.

He also saw all the forces of reaction launched against this growing movement, attacking from without and seeking to disrupt from within—lying, slandering, baiting, giving hypocritical advice, seeking to introduce division, narrowness, discrimination, to turn it from its course if they could not destroy it.

He became convinced that the CIO was the biggest and most hopeful thing in his lifetime in this country; and that the principles of its success were the most worth guarding and fighting for.

★ ★ ★

THIS IS the "what-the-CIO-means-to-me" story of one out of six million CIO members—who is now concluding the last of these columns he will write.

On such an occasion anyone is entitled to be a little personal, reminiscent and sentimental.

So long, folks, and good luck; I'll be seeing you.

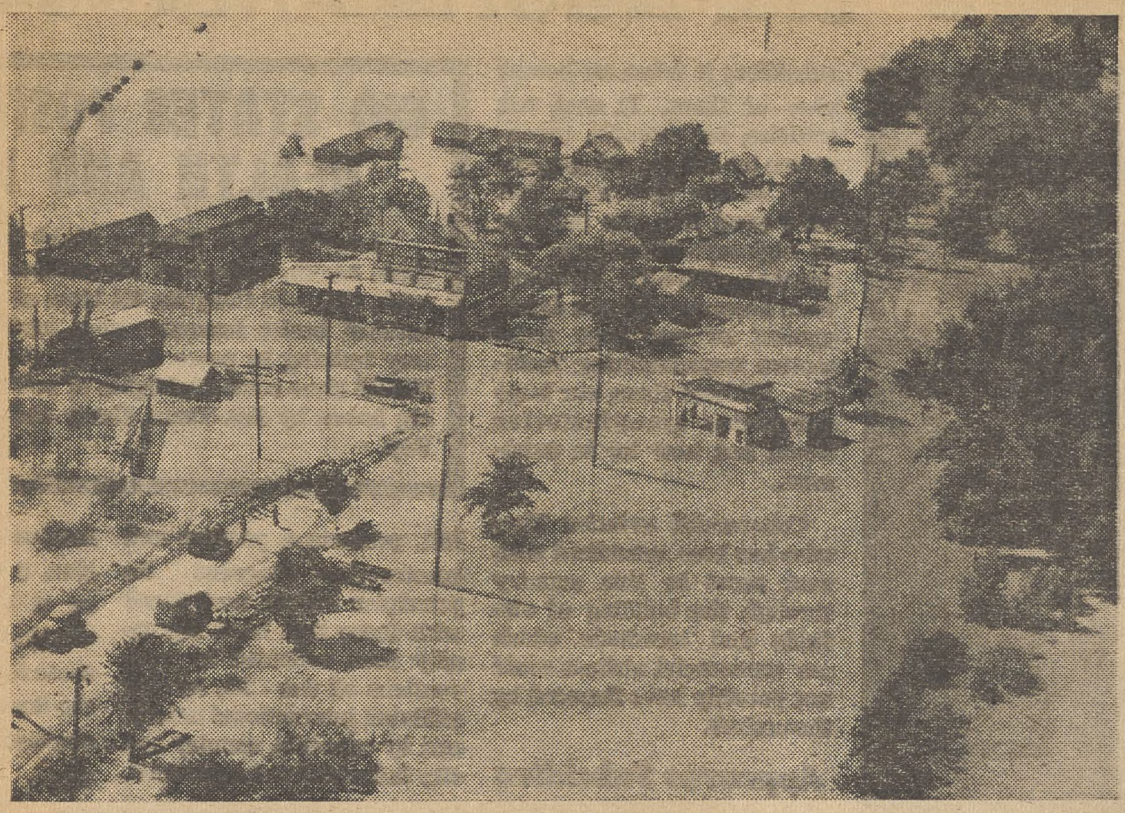
The Tale of Two Rivers



Towns like this one (above) and farms were innundated with disastrous damage to property and crops as the Missouri river overflowed its banks. Such scenes as this could be prevented if there were a Missouri Valley Authority such as CIO has long advocated. Contrast the above tragedy to this peaceful scene near Tennessee Valley Authority dam at Fortuna, N. C., where a river has been made to work for man, providing low-cost electrical power and irrigation.

UAW URGES U. S. LOANS FOR VETS' HOMES

PROPOSED legislation to create 200,000 dwelling units through government subsized loans was endorsed last week by Jack Widick of the CIO Auto Workers veterans department before the House Committee on Veterans Affairs.

The bill, HR. 3565, does not, however, answer the over-all housing problem, Widick stated, "but certainly would alleviate many hardship cases of an acute character, provided, of course, that both the provisions of the bill and its administration were geared to meet the problem of the average veteran."

As it was written, the bill does not make such provisions, Widick said. He proposed that specific language be included to insure housing that would fall into the $30-$50 rental range which most veterans require. "Nothing would be a greater mockery of the spirit of this proposed bill than to have the federal government subsidize housing that would rent at $80-$100, for example, and be out of reach of the majority of veterans."

Widick further suggested that the program be placed under the jurisdiction of the National Housing Agency instead of the Veterans Administration, which he described as already overburdened and that the project be given an emergency and priority character.

The legislation provides for construction either by an approved local public agency or an approved corporation financed by private enterprise. Citing President Truman's reference to the "greedy" real estate interests, the witness said the veterans had stronger words for referring to the real estate group.

Federal housing would be preferable, he stated, as it would assure construction for the veteran "instead of futhering vain illusions about private real estate interests doing something for the veteran."

PLEADS FOR MORE WELFARE MONEY

AMERICAN welfare agencies are running short of funds in the face of swelling relief rolls and the rising cost of living, according to Leo Perlis, national director of the National CIO Community Servvices Committee.

In letters, sent last week, to the American Public Welfare Association and Community Chests and Councils, he proposed:

1. An active campaign for the immediate enactment of the Public Welfare Act of 1947 (S. 135 and H. R. 3636).

2. The establishment of higher goals by community chests this fall and the allocation of adequate funds to competent voluntary agencies for direct supplementary relief assistance.

SOP-FOR-VETERANS BILL IS PASSED BY HOUSE

OFFERING a sop to veterans, whose demands for housing and other beneficial legislation have fallen on deaf ears, the Republicans in the House this week secured unanimous passage of a bill to authorize cashing of terminal leave bonds.

The bonds, which compensate enlisted personnel for unused leave accrued up to 120 days are held by 9 million veterans and aggregate $1,800,000,000. The bonds, the bill provides, could be cashed at face value plus accrued interest at any local bank. The Senate has not yet acted on the measure.

The House had originally passed such a bill last year, but action by the Senate substituted the 5-year bonds. Since then objections to the effect that the bonds constituted actual pay which the veteran should be permitted to spend as freely as his pay check have caused Congress to reconsider.

To an economy and election minded Congress the cash-for-bonds issue offers a double appeal. Each bond cashed before it matures would save the U. S. Treasury interest and is a natural vote-getting instrument. Rep. Rogers (D. Fla.), author of the original terminal leave act of 1946, charged Republicans "got behind the cashing legislation when they saw how popular it is."

During the debate on the original measure last year the CIO, through its Veterans Committee, backed the terminal leave pay bill, pointing out that the practice of paying commissioned officers for terminal leave and not enlisted men constituted an act of discrimination.

ASKS MAGAZINE FOR CORRECTION

Describing an item in Newsweek about his resignation as CIO Publicity Director as "malicious and untrue," Len De Caux this week called upon the magazine to make correction. In a letter to Executive Editor Chet Shaw he said:

"(1) The CIO News article on India to which reference is made did not "denounce the British plan as a fraud," nor did it "urge an Indian uprising," as you can see for yourself from the inclosed copy. It dealt solely with the struggle of the trade union movement in India against starvation conditions and legislative repression.

"(2) The publication of this article had nothing whatever to do with my resignation, the reasons for which are set forth in the inclosed release which was made available to Newsweek at the time."

The release, published in The CIO News, contained the exchange of letters between Pres. Philip Murray and De Caux explaining the reasons for the latter's resignation.

THREE RECEIVE CIO RACE RELATIONS AWARDS

TWO prominent Chicagoans and a Virginian were presented with certificates of Award by the National CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination at a banquet at Washington last week.

The awards were made in recognition of their "contributions to the furtherance of political and economic democracy in the field of race relations."

Recipients of the Awards were Michael Mann, CIO Regional Director, for Illinois and executive secretary of the Chicago CIO Industrial Union Council; Miss Sara E. Southall, Assistant Personnel Manager, International Harvester Co.; and Dr. Charles Johnson, President, Fisk University.

In presenting the award to Miss Southall, James B. Carey, CIO Secretary Treasurer and Chairman of it's Committee to Abolish Discrimination, lauded her for integrating minority groups into the war effort and for her service as an adviser and consultant, not only at International Harvester, but to many employers as to the most effective method of employing and upgrading Negro workers. In response Miss Southall said:

"Conflicts which may exist in some areas between management and labor have no need to exist in this field. In my humble opinion neither labor nor management are yet in a position where additional brains and skills would not be useful.

"We must attain, and not at a snail's pace, the participation of all people each according to his individual ability, in our productive and distributive economy."

Mann was lauded by Carey for his outstanding work in combating discrimination on a community level.

"I can think of no greater contribution that anyone can make to society than to help achieve dignity and justice to all regardless of racial origin, creed or color," Mann replied.

Because Dr. Johnson had to attend the opening of the annual Race Relations Institute at Fisk University, his award was presented in absentia by George L. P. Weaver, Committee director.

Pres. Williard S. Townsend, CIO Transport Service Employes and committee secretary was Toastmaster and Lester B. Granger of the Urban League was a guest speaker of the evening.

HEALTH BILL WOULD SAFEGUARD U. S.; U

Aid To Nation

By JAMES B. CAREY
Secretary-Treasurer, CIO

(Excerpts from testimony on the Natl. Health Insurance Bill, presented to the Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare).

WE DO NOT believe that the needs of the American people, the most self-respecting and self-reliant people on earth, can be met or should be met with charity measures. We believe that the health of the people can best be safeguarded by themselves, acting in their own behalf through the orderly process of government to which they rightfully look for protection against their general welfare.

The National Health Insurance and Public Health Act of 1947 (S. 1320) would enable them to achieve the end they seek by affording them an orderly system, financed jointly by themselves and their employers, to meet their needs in the field of health insurance and health of the community.

At the present moment, our nation appears to be in a wave of hysteria regarding this sacrosanct thing we call industrial production. Many, many speeches have been made about the need for production by spokesmen of the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers and similar groups of employers.

Seek Production

According to these gentlemen, production and more production is the be-all and end-all of our national life. Their pronouncements have been echoed by a great many members of Congress, including a number of widely publicized senators.

We have even had legislation imposed upon the American worker recently by the Congress, designed to prevent loss of production through work stoppages, strikes, lockouts, and too much union activity under the democratic process; and those in Congress who urged this legislation and voted for it were quite frank in saying that they were interested in nothing but production, more production, endless production of industrial goods.

If industrial production for its own sake is to be the high objective of our national existence, it seems to us that the Congress and your committee might well turn their attention to the necessity of building the health of all the American people so that we can produce more, and attain this maximum production about which we hear so much with no preventible delays that could be charged to ill health, disease or even the common cold.

SHE'S LUCKY. Yvonne, a little girl from St. Louis, is one of the lucky few who gets decent medical care through the CIO Retail & Wholesale Union co-op health clinic. But thousands of other kids aren't so fortunate. That's why CIO is pushing for National Health Insurance Bill. GOP majority in Congress is unenthusiastic about the proposition.

Spokesmen for organized labor have testified repeatedly before Congressional committees that they too are interested in production, and in such things as full employment at the guaranteed annual wage which would assure continuity of production.

We believe there should be a job for every willing and able worker in this country. We believe that enforced idleness of willing and able workers through limitation of production by industrial management is a national crime.

We are likewise of the firm opinion, and we will assume that the Congress agrees with us, that all willing workers should be able to work, that is they should be possessed of the good health and well-being that will enable them to perform the jobs assigned to them.

We even believe that production is important so long as it is production for the use of all of the people. That is one of our material reasons for supporting Senate Bill 1320 and opposing the charity dole proposed in Senate Bill 545 (the Taft bill).

I do not see how anyone could possibly reconcile a statement made one day that all employed workers must be kept on the job, even if the courts are to be drafted to make them stay on the job, and then announce on the next day that idleness induced by sickness of a worker or some member of his family is not so important after all.

It is our view that the federal government has a duty to subsidize the health of the people when the people themselves cannot protect their own well-being under the rugged individualism that has been carried out with a vengeance in the field of health.

Denunciation of subsidies, of course, is a pet political device. Those who denounce subsidies pretend not to see the record of our government and its people. The government has spent vast sums, sums far in excess of the combined cost of all our wars including World War II, to subsidize various activities of the people.

The CIO does not criticize subsidies; it takes an honest view of them. It does not criticize, for example, expenditure by the federal government of the vast sums that have gone into the building of highways throughout the country. These highways were necessary for the development of our huge automotive manufacturing facilities. Without them, our huge automotive manufactories would not now be in existence.

Commercial aviation likewise has been subsidized with vast sums in this country through the building of airfields and terminals which our commercial airlines could not possibly have financed by themselves.

Approves Subsidies

The lumber producers have been subsidized through forestry conservation; the farmers have been subsidized, not by gifts of money but by the adoption and carrying out of over-all programs that would aid them in producing more and better crops, more and better livestock, and more and better fibers for the manufacture of clothing. We approve of all of these subsidies.

We do not indulge in hypocrisy when subsidies are mentioned. We consider any opposition to health subsidies of the American people rank hypocrisy. We consider our American people the greatest resource the country has.

We are of the opinion that S-1320, the National Health Insurance and Public Health Bill, presents a positive and constructive program. Its principles are in accordance with those that have repeatedly been endorsed by conventions of the CIO, by our affiliated international unions, and by our state, country and city industrial union councils.

You can rest assured that the expressions of these various meetings, held in the open under the watchful eye of the American press, were expressing the view of the individual CIO member and his dependents.

The bill which we support would cover the cost of medical care for all employed and self-employed persons and those receiving old age or survivors benefits. Needy persons who could not be insured by their own earnings for one reason or another could be insured by public agencies, not as charity cases but as Americans who deserve health protection and good health because they are Americans.

Payments would be made out of the insurance fund for services by a family physician, a specialist, a hospital or a laboratory. Everyone would have free choice of these services from among the doctors and hospitals who chose to take part in the program.

A HEALTHY FUTURE? This wide-eyed tot may get proper medical care, if her dad's paycheck is big enough and doctor bills are small enough. But wartime statistics showed 30% of all draftees were rejected on health grounds—in a high proportion of cases because of poor medical care. Health insurance would protect the wallet from dents of high doctor bills.

Calls UMT Step On Road to War

By KERMIT EBY
CIO Director of Research & Education

(Excerpts of testimony before the House Armed Services Committee on proposals for Universal Military Training)

THE report [of the President's Commission on Universal Military Training] is not only a plea for universal training. It is virtually a call to arms.

It is an acceptance of war as inevitable and a plea for a permanent war economy for the nation. It is an inconsistent statement that peace can be maintained, and the United Nations strengthened as a force for peace, only as our entire nation is militarized so it might win a war.

Moreover, it is our opinion that the attitude of the Commission was biased from the very beginning. No opponents of conscription were placed on the Commission. Farm and labor organizations which are virtually unanimously against UMT were not represented. Individuals from the educational and religious fields on the Commission are not representative of their groups which are practically unanimously opposed to conscription.

War Not Certain

The CIO rejects the basic implications of the Committee's thinking. We do not regard war as inevitable. We do not believe that the nation's strength is primarily to be measured in military terms. We do not think war has ever been, or can be, averted by "preparedness" and particularly by that form of "preparedness" called universal military training.

We feel that peacetime militarization of the United States would destroy the social values that have made this nation since its birth a beacon for humanity. Above all we feel that it is the wrong road. It cannot fail to lead toward an armament race ending in a war suicidal to civilization.

Vast sums would be spent not only for UMT—from $3 to 5 billion yearly for direct costs alone, according to Hanson Baldwin, military analyst of the "New York Times"—but for equipment that would be junked rapidly as it became obsolete. This equipment would be needed for the regular armed services as well as for the UMT corps. After a few years, huge vested interests in military production would be formed.

With a million young men each year indoctrinated in the thesis that our might makes right, the population would become militarized. This means not that the people would come to like war, but that they would come to accept it as inevitable.

The permanent war economy proposed by the Commission will further lower our standard of living, already weakened by inflation. It will increase our taxes; use up large quantities of irreplaceable raw materials like iron ore, oil and lumber; and lead ultimately to war to solve the economic problems it caused.

Is this the way to make our people healthy, educated and prosperous, which the Commission suggests are requisite to security? Are we urging conscription and a war economy as a means of solving unemployment?

Is conscription a device to keep labor in its place? Why, if conscription is for military necessity, are boys not fit for military duty trained? Are these men to be used as conscript labor, as was proposed during the war? Will UMT be a means of strikebreaking and of keeping down public discontent in the depression that seemingly lies ahead?

A major factor in the recurrent warfare of Europe was the militarization of the European nations. The making of arms was a principal industry whose cost weighed heavily upon their economies. Their WPA was the armaments industry.

It was like giving morphine to a drug addict. The temporary effect was stimulating. The tremendous expenditures for war kept the economies going. But the cure was worse than the disease. The aftermath of war was devastation and intensification of the problems Europe had gone to war to solve.

Why don't we take the other road? Why don't we devote as much money, time, and loyalty to positive measures for peace as the Commission urges for action that can only bring war?

We spent 1½% of our budget last year for education and 34% for military purposes. We spent over a billion dollars for the pay of officers alone.

The Commission says UMT will cost $1 ¾ billions. That is gross under-estimate, according to Baldwin's figures of 3-5 billions. But even the Commission's figure, as Dr. Compton said in his testimony, is more than the value of the property and endowments of all the colleges and universities in the nation.

WE spend 1½% of our budget on education as compared to 3% in Great Britain and 7% in totalitarian Russia. Surely improved educational facilities for our people will add to the stability and security of the nation.

UNESCO (United Nations Education, Scientific & Cultural Organization) has a budget of only $6 billion, U. N. one of $27,740,000. If we were as serious about waging peace as waging war, why shouldn't we give UNESCO and the United Nations the funds they need to do a real job?

Social Needs

Thing of what $1¾ billions—not to mention $3-5 billions—could do to build health centers, hospitals, and supply doctors, nurses, dentists and medicine that would fundamentally improve the health of our people.

Again, $1¾ billions spent for housing would go far to solve that most exasperating and heartbreaking national problem. Decent housing is high on the list of things we need to create a happier, healthier, more secure nation.

These suggestions we have made would do far more to produce healthy, educated, loyal citizens than the militarily useless system of UMT.

We think the most important single factor in world peace is a prosperous United States, with full employment of its citizens at socially beneficial, productive enterprise. Peace largely depends on our keeping out of depression.

Abroad, we must cooperate in economic measures designed to bring relief and rehabilitation to the war-torn nations.

There must be ardent participation in all of the agencies of U. N. to get the fullest possible international cooperation in every field.

But, above all, a stop must be made in the suicidal arms race. Universal disarmament is the first requisite for reversing the tide of hate and mistrust that now poisons international relations.

The burden of armaments must be removed from the backs of the peoples of the world if there is to be any hope of economic recovery. Without this there can be no lasting peace. How is peace possible with 19,000,000 men under arms throughout the world and $27,000,000,000 spent for armaments?

CROWDED CLASS ROOMS: (Above) Compulsory peacetime draft would cost up to five billion a year—while school systems beg for badly needed funds. Educators say cost of the draft in any peacetime would build a modern 10-room school in every county in the nation, and at the same time, strengthen our democratic institutions.

SHIPYARD STRIKERS FIRM IN 3RD WEEK

VIRTUALLY every major shipyard and repair yard between Quincy, Mass., and Mobile, Ala., remained shut tight this week as the CIO Marine & Shipbuilding Workers' strike entered its third week with 70,000 members fighting to protect their wage standards, working conditions and union.

At all 19 of the yards involved, only token picket lines were being maintained and morale of the strikers remained high.

The union was rejecting any settlement that was less than the basic formula stipulated by the national wage policy committee—a 13½c hourly raise, six paid holidays, elimination of inequities, vacations and several other demands. However, negotiations were continuing with several employers who had made wage offers and with whom contracts are still in effect.

The major employer with whom negotiations are still continuing is Todd Shipyards, whose contract expires July 23.

The walkout developed at Bethlehem after 42 days of fruitless negotiations, during which the Company tried to write into the Atlantic Coast Master Agreement provisions which would have slashed earnings, impaired such conditions as seniority and would have so hamstrung the union as to turn it into a more dues-collecting agency.

In the two weeks since the walkout began, a number of efforts to mediate the dispute have been made by a special three-man panel of the U.S. Conciliation Service, which has met with the Union and company representatives both separately and together.

Pres. John Green of the IUMSWA indicated that settlement hinged on the wage increase. He said that if a basic agreement could be reached, the Bethlehem Atlantic Coast Committee of the Union would then resume negotiations.

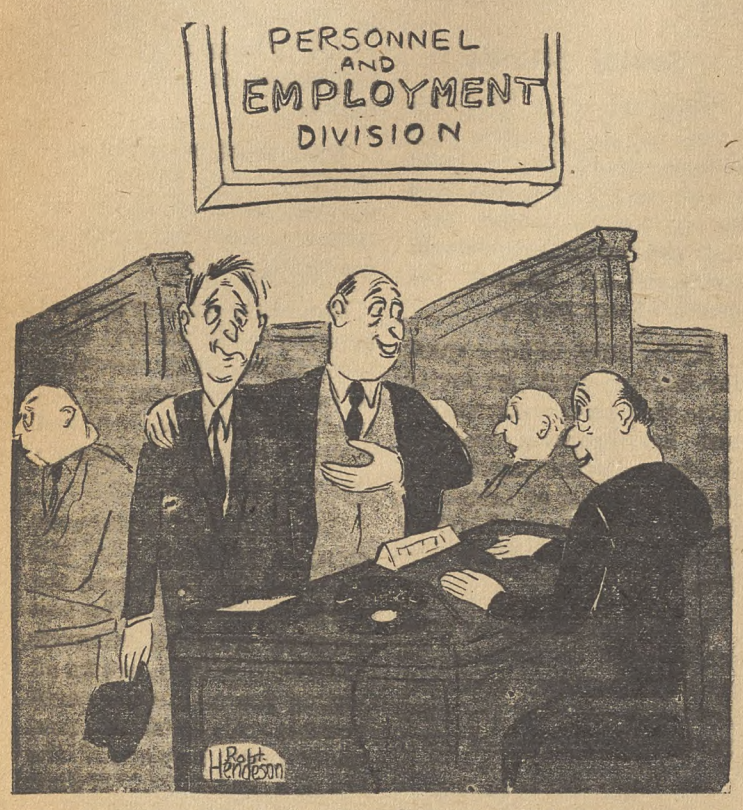
Glass Union Wins Hike

SOME 1,000 workers at 10 plants of the Pittsburgh Plate Glass and the Libby-Owens-Ford companies will get around $1,000,000 in back pay under an industry-wide agreement negotiated this week in Washington by the CIO Glass Workers and the two firms.

The 8c an hour increase, together with increases involved in a number of fringe issues such as vacation pay, overtime and bonuses will bring the pay raise up to about 18c an hour, union officials estimate. A 3c hourly increase had been granted last February.

The 8c boost will be retroactive to last Feb. 1. Agreement was also reached on a welfare plan to be set up by a joint commission representing both the union and the companies.

The agreement covers 6 PPG plants in Ford City and Creighton, Pa., Crystal City, Mo.; Henryetta, Okla.; Mt. Vernon, Ohio, and 4 L-O-F plants in Toledo, Ohio; Ottawa, Ill.; Charleston, W. Va., and Shreveport, La.



"He has excellent qualifications—says he will work long hours for little salary, will do anything, and will break his back provided we give him a free brace."

STOCKHOLDERS SUE RAND OFFICIALS AS 16,000 STRIKE

AS 16,000 Remington-Rand workers march picketlines in a half dozen cities, the after-effects of another strike which boss James Rand, Jr., provoked 10 years ago have come home to roost.

The strikers, with the exception of the Elmira workers, are members of the CIO Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers.

The New York court of appeals has just cleared the way for trial of a complaint by minority stockholders that Rand and his co-officials squandered more than $1 million in fighting a 10-month strike at Ilion, N. Y., in 1936-37, which was finally broken with the use of Rand's notorious Mohawk Valley Formula.

Rand and other company leaders are charged in the suit with adopting a policy of "recklessly provoking strikes . . . by refusing to bargain" and "of intimidating, coercing and threatening employes."

While this case heads for the courts, Rand is continuing his anti-union attitude, which led to a walkout by production workers at all Remington-Rand plants in Ilion, Tonawanda, Syracuse and Elmira, N. Y., and Benton Harbor, Mich., June 18.

The strike came after the company rejected the union's demand for the 15c national wage raise pattern. Instead it insisted that the workers agree to an over-all lowering of their working conditions before offering a 7c hourly increase and six paid holidays with more strings attached than there are keys on a Rem-Rand typewriter. As the strike deadline neared, every attempt to settle peacefully was turned down by Rand. Offers of help from the U. S. Conciliation Service were rebuffed.

BITTNER NAMES THREE TO STAFF

Three appointments to the staff of the CIO Organizing Committee were announced last week by Director Van A. Bittner.

Ed Stone of New Orleans has been named public relations director of the Committee to succeed Allan L. Swim, recently named publicity director of the national CIO and editor of the CIO NEWS.

Stone, a native of Florida, has for the past three years been public relations representative in the New Orleans regional office of CIO. He previously worked for United Press, the Miami Herald the Miami Daily News, the Fort Lauderdale Daily News and other Florida newspapers.

Ray Warwick of Atlanta has been named assistant director of public relations. He has been public relations director of the Southern Regional Council for the past two years, and prior to that was on the Atlanta staff of the Associated Press for 2½ years.

Walter H. Harris, CIO State Director for Arkansas, has been appointed an assistant director of the CIO Organizing Committtee. Before coming South to work with the committee Harris served as regional director for the CIO in Chicago.

ORGANIZING

BY ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

IN THE TELEPHONE FIELD: The American Union of Telephone Workers(long-lines) has completed its referendum vote for affiliation with the Telephone Workers Organizing Committee, CIO. This group has bargaining rights for approximately 24,000 members. Pres. John Moran, Vice President Robert Creasy and Board Member Norma Naughton of AUTW visited all of their locals throughout the nation where every member was given an opportunity to vote.

The CIO came out with a splendid victory of about a two-to-one majority. Congratulations to President Moran and the executive board and members of that organization. This act is an inspiration to other telephone groups, two of which have already voted to affiliate with the TWOC-CIO—the Accounting Organization of Pennsylvania, Telephone Employes, Western Division in Pittsburgh headed by E. D. Barry and the Federation of Telephone Clerks of Illinois, headed by Richard W. Long.

The Assn. of Communication Equipment Workers at its board meeting held recently in Chicago voted overwhelmingly to recommend to its membership affiliation with the TWOC-CIO and is now preparing to submit it to a referendum vote.

Every member of the ACEW Executive Board, led by Pres. Ernest Weaver, has pledged to support the act of the overwhelming majority of the board.

At a meeting of the Western Electric Employes Assn. in New Jersey its Executive Board voted 17 to 3 to recommend affiliation with the TWOC-CIO. That union hopes within the very near future to hold a referendum. At the present time the workers are taking their vacations.

Many other groups are likewise in the process of preparing to take votes on affiliation with TWOC-CIO.

Paul E. Miley, UAW-CIO Reg. Dir., announces a 4-to-1 victory at the Republic Brass Co., Cleveland, Ohio. On the ballot opposing the UAW was the IWW who had held the bargaining rights for the past 11 years. The Republic Brass Co. has recently become a part of the Briggs Mfg. Co. Michael Chesik was in charge of this drive, assisted by a local committee consisting of Gertrude Buras, John Wiedner, Joseph Metz, Thomas Virgin and Albert Harding.

CIO Sub-Reg. Dir. Ralph W. Tillotson, Erie, Pa., reports: West Hickory Tanning Co., West Hickory, Pa., CIO Fur & Leather Workers 62, no union 48.

Irwin L. DeShelter, CIO Reg. Dir., Los Angeles, advises: Ohio Rubber Co., Long Beach, Calif. CIO Rubber Workers 38, no union 22. URWA Dist. Dir. George Roberts was in charge, assisted by Field Rep. Floyd Gartrell.

CIO Reg. Dir. John B. Easton, W. Va., reports: Armour Branch House, Charleston, W. Va., CIO Packinghouse Workers completed negotiations securing an additional 6c per hour increase, retroactive to June 16th. This 6c in addition to 7½c secured in February makes a total of 13½c. At the Feb. conference other items were also negotiated which were equivalent to about 4c an hour.

Michael Livoda, CIO Reg. Dir., Denver, reports: Cudahy plant, Denver (office and clerical employes), UOPWA-CIO 16, no union 14. Eunice Dolan, Secy. of the City Council and also representative for the UOPWA, was in charge.

CIO Reg. Dir. Ben Henry, Des Moines, Iowa, reports: Packard Mfg. Co., Des Moines, CIO Clothing Workers 28, no union 2. Rep. Nelson Joseph was in charge.

A FEW WARNINGS ON BEACH PLAY

Sandplay on the beach is relaxing and healthful. It makes for independence and easy friendliness. A few warnings, however, are in order. Children should not be allowed too much sun at one time. Reflected from the water, it may produce painful burn. For a light burn, first aid with calomine lotion may be used. For severe burns or blisters call the doctor. Nor should children be allowed to become overfatigued or chilled. It is wise to keep a sweater and socks at hand to use in case of cold hands, feet or post-bathing shivers.

Women in the CIO

FLORENCE PETERSON'S STORY RECALLS SWEATSHOP DAYS

IS IT worth while for women workers to join the CIO? What do they get out of it? Well, here's the story of what it did for Mrs. Florence Peterson of Grand Rapids, Mich., as related by the Michigan CIO Education Dept. Mrs. Peterson is vice-president of the Kent County CIO Council and chairman of the education committee.

Born in Kent County and reared on a farm, Florence got her first job at a Grand Rapids brass company, and started learning her labor problems the hard way during two decades of sweatshop labor. Her pay on this first job was 25c an hour. She worked ten hours a day with no rest periods, under a foreman who rode herd on the help.

IN 1945, after doing a stint in several other plants, Florence went back to the same brass company where she had first worked. The change was startling. This time she was a seasoned union leader in a shop now paying women a minimum of $1.05 an hour.

"I went to work in the morning, transferred from the United Auto Workers to the Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers at noon, and met with management as a committeewoman after work," Florence recalls.

Within two months she was president of her local and was elected twice by acclamation. She served 18 months then gave up the job to build an education program for the CIO in Grand Rapids.

FLORENCE PETERSON

One of Florence Peterson's most exciting experiences as a CIO member happened in 1943 shortly after she went to work in a General Motors plant in Grand Rapids, where the UAW had just won an NLRB election. After 30 days as a rank and filer she was elected steward. Within a month she was on the shop committee and a delegate to the CIO Council.

Then a wildcat strike took place at the plant and she was fired. The CIO United Auto Workers carried her case right up to the GM umpire and lost. The case gave her so much prominence that she couldn't stay at a job for more than a few days before personnel spotted her, so she went to work as a full-time vice-president and Political Action Chairman for the Kent County CIO Council.

DURING the 1944 campaign Florence did a great job toward putting Michigan in the FDR column.

The clue to Florence Peterson's devotion to the CIO, comments the Michigan CIO Education Dept., is that "she remembers vividly the many things the union has put in Grand Rapids' past—sweatshop wages, long hours, insecurity."

Sprucing Up

BARELEGGED SUMMER

By HANNA SHERMAN

THOUSANDS of women are going stockingless this summer and are feeling cooler and more comfortable as a result. Thousands more who'd like to go barelegged are too timid to try. They don't like the look of bare legs, suntanned or not, and think that leg make-up is too much trouble to use. If you belong to this group do try using it this summer.

We've just experimented with the various types on the market and here's the story. We found that leg makeup that comes in a tube was fairly easy to apply but difficult to wash off the skin. It also rubbed off on our slip and the inside hem of our dress. We'd say leave this type alone.

Transparent liquid leg make-up achieved the look of naturally suntanned legs but did not cover marks or blemishes. If the skin on your legs is flawless you'll like this kind.

The leg make-up we prefer is an opaque dark liquid—it's effective and easy to apply. Most of the leg make-up on the market is of this type. For the best effect possible, learn the right way to apply it.

HERE'S the way the models do it and it takes them no time at all.

Before starting be sure your legs are hairfree and dry. Using a razor or depilatory will insure a smooth-working surface. Spread a piece of newspaper under your feet to keep the bathroom floor clean and you're ready to start. Work quickly for best results.

Pour a small amount of the lotion into the palm of your hand and smooth it onto your legs in long even strokes from the foot to above the knee. Spread the leg make-up as far as it will go and continue from that spot with another small quantity. Don't go over the part that is already covered. And be sure to fill in the hollows around the ankles, heel, knee, and your toes, too, if you are wearing open-toed shoes. When the entire leg is covered keep stroking it lightly until it is almost dry, and allow it to dry even more thoroughly before dressing. For a nylon sheen, finish the job by buffing your legs with your hand or with a soft cloth.

A FEW precautions. Leg make-up must be washed with soap and warm water before retiring. The best of them are not guaranteed against rubbing off on your sheets. If you are caught in a shower be very careful not to touch or rub the make-up while it is wet. It will not come off in the rain if you leave it alone.

Which brand of leg make-up to buy? Price in this case seems to have little to do with quality. Experiment with some of the products in the dime store until you find one you like. Or consider seriously the recommendations of a friend whose leg make-up looks smooth and attractive.

Prices vary from six to seventeen cents an ounce. This means that your illusory summer hose will cost you from two to six cents per pair or per wearing.

CAMPING AND DEMOCRACY are offered youngsters from eight to sixteen at Camp Robin Hood, a children's camp sponsored by labor in the Midwest. The camp, currently celebrating its tenth anniversary, is located in Geneva, Ohio and is sponsored by more than twenty labor unions, both CIO and AFL, and cultural and fraternal groups. Besides enjoying happy summer vacations, youngsters of all religious faiths, racial or cultural backgrounds learn democracy by working and playing together. Through songs, skits and camp activities, these youngsters learn to appreciate their fellow citizens.

Book Review

Secrets Americans Should Know

BY HOLLACE RANSDELL

WORKERS are fighting mad these days about the passage of the outrageously unfair anti-labor law. But they don't know half of it.

A recent book by Howard Ambruster, "Treason's Peace," tells a tale of official favoritism and toadying to certain rich and powerful persons guilty of delaying the nation's war program which will make any honest worker's blood boil. Especially when he remembers how American labor's all-out war effort and sacrifice has been rewarded by passage of the Taft-Hartley law snatching away many of the gains won by labor in recent years.

Not that Ambruster's book has anything in it about labor or trade unionism. It is the story of the evil worldwide plot of the notorious I. G. Farbenindustrie which played such a crucial role in bringing Hitler to power and in furnishing his armies with money and munitions; and of the part played in this conspiracy by some native and foreign-born American citizens.

The author is a chemical engineer who for more than 40 years has followed, through business, professional and official contacts, the tangled network of secret activities of the colossal I. G. Farben cartel and the "Big Six" dyestuff companies out of which it grew, as these activities emerged in the U. S. and South America.

He traces the pattern followed by I. G. Farben, showing how it remained essentially the same in World War II as in the first world war.

AMBRUSTER'S main concern is to warn that this Farben pattern which has aided in bringing on two world wars, may produce a third unless it is completely destroyed before it is too late.

He fears that American officials may continue to be duped, as they have been in the past, by Farben agents who have survived the military calamity which knocked out the Nazis, and are now working secretly and persistently to save enough to continue the Farben pattern and plunge the world into a third world war.

Ambruster's book is crammed full of low-down on all the main figures who worked either as dupes or knaves for the Farben spider-web in the periods of both World War I and II. "Viewed over a long period of years it appears as an interlocking design of propaganda, espionage, sabotage, and corruption," says the author. He names those concerned and gives documentary proof.

The main purpose of the book is to expose the designs of Farben interests working through underlings and legislative colleagues to revise a new framework to fit the new peace, for, says Ambruster, "there is no force which can restrain or turn men from folly save the lash of public indignation aroused by revelation of facts now hushed."

Much of the responsibility for the two tragic world wars, he maintains, "is upon those who for any reason have refrained from revealing such facts and their meaning to the people of this nation."

"Treason's Peace" is a startling book, full of terrible implications based upon documented facts, warning of what may happen if the greed of the monopoly interests working through the Farben pattern are permitted to go unchecked.

Treason's Peace by Howard Watson Ambruster; Beechhurst Press, 116 East 19th St., New York 3, N. Y., $3.75.

CIO Economic Outlook

MONOPOLIES AND MR. JONES

ALTHOUGH average Americans know little about monopolies, the subject is in fact one of the major economic issues of their lives. Why this is so is explained in the latest issue of the Economic Outlook, monthly bulletin issued by the CIO Dept. of Research & Education.

"The average working man engaged in earning a living for himself and his family has little time to think about the mysterious problems of international finance, economic statistics or patent pools," states the Outlook, in an article entitled "Growth of Monopolies Threatens Age of Plenty."

"His hours are crowded and his first concerns are the achievement of better opportunities for himself, of education for his children and of making his dollars stretch farther and farther, as prices go bouncing beyond his reach."

The feeling that monopolies are something vast, nebulous and remote from daily life has unfortunately held back the ordinary citizen from a full understanding of the effect these powerful combines on his and his family's welfare and future.

TO illustrate this, the Outlook follows an average American, Mr. Jones, in his daily life, to show how often and in what various and sometimes unknown ways he meets monopoly and its effects.

"From the time that he gets up in the morning until he goes to bed at night, Mr. Jones or some member of his family is face to face with monopoly in one of its many shapes," says the CIO bulletin.

The price of milk on the breakfast, the bottle it came in, the match he uses to light his cigarette, the morning paper he reads, the spectacles through which he may read it, are all monopoly-controlled, and the extent of monopoly concentration is growing.

"Monopoly controls and monopoly interests now have their octopus tentacles wrapped around every major segment of our American economy," states the Outlook. Here are some of the significant facts and figures revealing the tendency in recent years for big corporations to gain greater control of production facilities:

- Almost two-thirds of the manufacturing facilities of the country are controlled by 250 corporations.
- All the liquid assets of the 71,000 smaller manufacturing firms could be purchased with the liquid asset holdings of the 63 largest manufacturing corporations.
- Two-thirds of the one billion dollars spent during the war on federal research development went to 68 large corporations.
- One-tenth of one per cent of all American corporations own 52% of the total corporate assets.
- Less than four per cent of all manufacturing corporations earned 84% of all the net profits of manufacturing corporations.

TO illustrate how monopoly affects the everyday consumer of food, clothing and other merchandise, the Outlook uses the cigarette and the bread industries as simple examples to show how prices have been increased under monopoly operation.

CIO LEADERSHIP TRAINING

The CIO Department of Research & Education is head over heels in leadership training these days. Eight CIO regional training centers spotted throughout the country from Virginia to the Rocky Mountains have just concluded, are in progress, or are planned for later in the summer.

The four weeks' leadership training term attended by local CIO representatives from eight southern states at Highlander Folk School, Monteagle, Tenn., closed July 11. Next comes the school to be held at the University of Indiana, Bloomington, Ind., Aug. 10-16.

From Aug. 17-23, a course for union business agents from eastern states will be held at Hampton Institute, Virginia, followed on Aug. 24 by a one week's course for local union committee members and officers.

Speakers and discussion leaders at both the Hampton courses will include Brownie Lee Jones, Southern School for Workers; Dan Powell, PAC-CIO; John Edelman, Textile Workers Union; Esther Peterson, Amalgamated Clothing Workers; Stanley Ruttenberg, CIO, and Harry Roberts, U. S. Dept. of Labor.

From Aug. 17-23, CIO local representatives from New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania will attend a CIO summer school at Pendle Hill, Wallingford, Pa. Leaders will include Evelyn DuBrow and Marie Algor, New Jersey CIO; William L. Rafsky, Hosiery Workers; Robert Levin and H. S. Bookbinder, Clothing Workers, and others.

Leaders who will be at the term to be held at Danebck Folk School, Tyler, Minn., include Svend Godfredson and Lee Simon, Packinghouse Workers; Forrest Emerson, Farm Equipment Workers; Glen Talbott, North Dakota Farmers Union; and CIO Education Director Kermit Eby, Asst. General Counsel Eugene Cotton and Clifford McAvoy, PAC.

Dates for the school in the Rocky Mountain area school have been changed to the Labor Day weekend, Aug. 29-Sept. 1, place to be announced later.

Sept. 7-13 the last of the CIO summer schools will be held at Montebello Vacation Camp, St. Louis, Mo.

Students wishing to apply for any of these schools are urged to write or wire immediately to George Guernsey, asst. education director, CIO, 718 Jackson Pl., N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

65c BASE WAGE —OR PAY CUT?

A DECENT minimum wage of at least 65c an hour—or widespread pay cuts?

That question was placed squarely before Rep. Fred Hartley's House Labor Committee last week by John Edelman, legislative spokesman for the CIO Textile Workers Union.

Quoting from reports received by the union from its southern officials, Edelman warned that mill owners are toying with the idea of cutting pay on a "take it or leave it" basis.

Edelman quoted a talk by the general manager of the Oconee Textile Mills, Whitehall, Ga. As told to the Congressional committee, the company executive warned workers:

"The company will never pay you spinners $37 for 40 hours again. Now if you people don't want to go back to work, you won't hurt me or the owner of this mill.

"I can tell you one thing—if you don't go back to work, all of you poor people can get out of Whitehall. When you get hungry, don't ask me for any food, for I won't give any one of you a crumb of bread."

THE Textile Union spokesman told the Labor Committee that "this type of dangerous and utterly uncalled-for wage slashing would be halted to a very great extent before it got under way over a wide area" if Congress were to act promptly on the bill to lift minimum pay from 40c to 65c and eventually 75c an hour.

The Textile Union, he added, has found many mills where average wages are just above the present low minimum of 40c prescribed by the Wage-Hour law. The threat of these mills to decent pay standards is less serious during boom periods, Edelman said, but when sales and output fall, they can undermine the wage structure of the whole industry.

The Stonewall Cotton Mills, Stonewall, Miss.—a town "completely dominated and controlled by the employer"—paid an average wage of 41c an hour in 1947, he said. The Tobias Bag Co. in New Orleans pays a 47½c minimum to some groups of workers.

The Bonita Ribbon Mills moved from Pennsylvania, where it paid average wages of 90c an hour, to Alabama. Now its wages run between 40 and 50 cents each hour.

Edelman cited case after case of plants, both in the north and south, where wages are far below decent levels.

The House Committee has numerous minimum wage bills under study. The 65c-75c bill (HR 3766) has wide labor and liberal support. Some Republicans, however, are playing with the idea of a straight 60c minimum in the hope of buying off workers' anger at the Taft-Hartley bill and the crippling amendments to the wage-hour law.

Ask U. S. Aid For Farmers

UNDERSCORING the mutual interests of labor and the farmer, the CIO Electrical Workers twice last week went to bat for the farmer.

Russ Nixon and Bruce Waybur, UE Washington representatives, testifying before Senate committees considering agricultural appropriations and soil fertility, made it clear that improvement of farm incomes would result in heightened demand for industrial products.

Nixon urged passage of the soil fertility bill, which would provide for the creation of a government fertilizer plant to be operated by the Tennessee Valley Authority.

The bill aims at producing fertilizer at prices farmers can afford to pay. This is not now being done, Nixon claimed, "because the fertilizer industry is dominated by a powerful monopoly group which is more interested in its immediate profits than in preserving our nation's soil resources."

Waybur told members of a Senate sub-committee on agricultural appropriations that the proposed 29% cut in agricultural appropriations and loans would "materially undermine the ability of this nation to feed and clothe its own people."

Knutson Tells CIO:

'TEN MINUTES ON TAXES'

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

AN organization of six million industrial workers was given exactly 10 minutes last week to tell the House Ways and Means Committee its ideas on long-range tax policies for this country.

Two of the 10 minutes were consumed in argument over why the CIO was given the 10 minutes, rather than the minimum of 45 minutes originally promised.

Another two minutes were devoted to a miniature witch hunt, as Chairman Harold Knutson (R., Minn.) queried Stanley Ruttenberg, CIO assistant director of research, as to whether or not he is a Communist. The answer was "no."

Still another two minutes were wasted in a rambling monologue by a Ways and Means Committee member on general subjects.

In the remaining four minutes allotted, Ruttenberg made no effort to present testimony to the committee, which seemed obviously uninterested. He compared the abrupt treatment given CIO and other liberal organizations to the committee's close connections with two tax experts who go down the line 100% on a program of making life easy for the rich while placing the burden of taxes on low and medium income families.

The committee was gracious enough to permit the filing of a fact-studded document in which Ruttenberg set forth CIO's program for taxing to promote "full employment at a fair wage and full production."

The hearings are being conducted under the heavy direction of the burly Minnesota Congressman, himself the author of the "save the rich" tax bill vetoed once by Pres. Truman and apparently slated for passage a second time by Congress. Testimony is being sought—when Knutson permits it—from various organizations.

IN his prepared statement, Ruttenberg told the committee that a basic decision on tax policy must quickly be made. That decision, he said, is whether to go easy on the rich, on the theory that such a policy will lead to new investments and enterprise—or whether to encourage consumption and purchasing power by the great body of the public.

"Those who agree with our school of thought, that consumption and purchasing power must be encouraged, think that it does little good to promote new investments and new enterprise opportunities if the low income individuals who form the mass of American consumers do not have sufficient cash to buy the items produced by this new investment and new enterprise," he said.

"All the encouragement in the world to wealthy individuals and corporations through lowering their taxes is to no avail so long as the low income individuals of America pay such high taxes and receive such low wages that they are not able to buy many of the necessities of life.

"If Congress decides on tax revisions that give first priority to reducing taxes upon high income brackets and corporations, that is, tax relief generally to the wealthy, then we are in for a repetition of our experience of 1929."

THE guiding principle of a sound tax program, the CIO official said, must be "reduced taxes upon low income individuals." Such a policy, together with continued high wages, increases buying power "which in turn increases demand for the products of industry," the Congressional committee was told.

"This increased purchasing power and demand for products is greater encouragement and incentive for business to invest and expand production than any tax cut on high income individuals or corporations could possibly be."

Backing up the CIO position for lower taxes on low incomes were statistics to show that a smaller portion of the national income is being paid out in wages and salaries.

In 1944, the figures show, 70.2% of the total income went to wages and salaries. But in the first quarter of 1947 that share had dropped to 62.2%, the lowest in years.

But the share of the national income going into corporate profits jumped from 6.2% to 9.1% during the same period.

A FIVE-POINT program to produce a better, more just tax structure was offered by CIO. It called for:

1. An increase in personal exemptions on income taxes, rather than a cut in the tax rates.
2. Elimination of excise taxes added to the price of goods and services—except when such taxes are a method of regulation of sales.
3. Closing of loopholes in the tax structure, with relation to tax exempt securities, compulsory joint returns and low tax rates on capital gains.
4. More effective taxing of estates and big gifts, now often used as a tax evasion device.
5. Taxation of undistributed profits and excess profits of big companies.

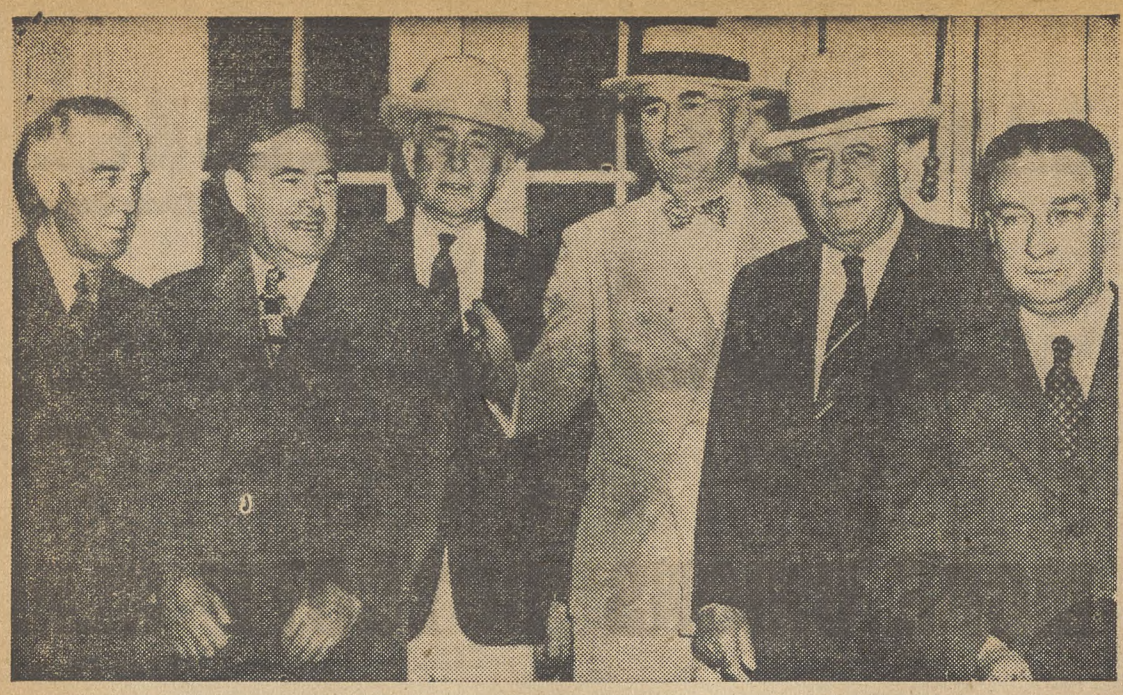
Ex-Marine Thomas Ahern attempted to solve his own housing problem by pitching a make-shift tent in Lafayette Park—across the street from the White House. Police soon chased him and his family away. This happened while Congress was completing plans to go home July 26—without making any real effort to solve the nation's critical housing problem. Ahern is shown holding his son, Timothy, 20 months. Mrs. Ahern, also a former Marine, holds Frederick, 3 months. In the center is Thomas, 3 years. Their dog, Queenie, shared their plight. (For story on unsolved problems still facing Congress, see Page 2.)



Congressional leaders leave the White House after it was decided not to call a special session this fall unless "unexpected contingencies" develop. Left to right: Sen. White (R. Me.), House Speaker Martin (R. Mass.), Sen. Barkley (D. Ky.), Sen Vandenberg (R. Mich.), Rep. Rayburn (D. Tex.) and Rep. Halleck (R. Ind.). Evidently peak prices, wrecked rent controls and the desperate housing shortage aren't serious enough to keep Congress at work. (Federated Pictures).

Homeward-Bound Congress Ignores Social Measures

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

THE GOP-controlled 80th Congress moves into the final week of its first session with a "no-action" list long enough to choke a campaign orator.

Vitually every piece of social welfare legislation sought by the CIO and other liberal groups is going to seed in the final days of the session.

On the other hand, Congress moved steadily on two major issues favored by big industrial lobbies—the Taft-Hartley law and the crippling amendments to the Wage-Hour law.

The Republican majority—aided by a substantial number of southern Democrats in almost every case—gave the country a rent control extension act that met in almost every respect the demands of the powerful real estate lobby.

Railroad lobbyists, seeking to move the transport system out from under possible anti-trust action, succeeded in getting the Reed-Bulwinkle bill passed in the Senate. House action is possible before adjournment date.

The GOP "economy bloc" wielded a sharp axe on the funds for government agencies. The resulting turmoil has delayed action on appropriations for many branches of the federal government, which are now running on a wish and a hope pending final approval of their funds.

In case after case, the economy drive—spearheaded by Rep. John Taber (R. N.Y.), head of the House Appropriations Committee—was directed at weakening those sections of government which help the general public or which must regulate or bargain with big business.

THUS, the Labor Dept. was given severe cuts in money for its principal divisions. The Dept. of Justice anti-trust divisions, its docket loaded with multi-million dollar cases against large corporations, has been operating on a shoestring, with little hope for future improvements.

The Agriculture Dept.'s school lunch, electrification, soil conservation and flood control programs were cut to the bone in the House, and Senate repair of the damage was not enough to meet the original recommendations of President Truman. Similar knife-sharpening was directed against the Interior Dept.'s reclamation service, which is of vital importance to western farmers and workers.

Only major defeat for the corporation lobby came on the twice-passed Knutson tax bill. It would have given small tax rebates to low and middle income earners, big savings to wealthiest families. Vetoed once by President Truman, GOP leadership pushed it through a second time in almost the same form with hopes of overriding a second veto.

As The CIO NEWS went to press, it seemed apparent that a new veto would be sustained in the Senate.

The big goose egg was reserved for the social welfare bills. Here's the score a week before adjournment—and there's little chance of much action in the next few days.

HOUSING: Taft-Wagner-Ellender housing bill, designed to provide federal assistance for long range slum clearance and construction of low rent dwelling units, has been buried in the Senate pigeonhole. Chance for passage in the Senate is slim, and Chairman Wolcott of the Housing Banking Committee long ago announced he would hold no hearings on the bill at least until Congress reconvenes in 1948.

HEALTH: Senate Labor Committee has conducted drawn-out hearings on health legislation. With labor and liberal groups favoring a national health insurance program, GOP has inclined to the Taft bill. That measure, drawn as a substitute for the stronger bill, is based firmly on a principle of charitable treatment of the poor.

ANTI - LYNCHING: Despite GOP's longtime pledges on this issue, a bill to make lynching a federal crime never reached the stage of a hearing in committee. Action is highly unlikely at this time.

ANTI - DISCRIMINATION: Ives-Chavez bill, less far-reaching than previous FEPC bills and modeled after the New York state law, has been subject of extended hearings. No action probable at this session.

SAYS BIG BIZ RAN THE SHOW

Among Congressmen it's big business three to one.

That was the point of a recent speech by Sen. Harley Kilgore (D.W.Va.), in which he reviewed activities of the 80th Congress.

Said Kilgore:

"Big business had its way in this Congress on virtually every issue.

"Big business, through its multi-million dollar propaganda machine, is opposed to broad social reforms and with its vast influence on this Congress, can block any legislation it does not like."

Citing victories of the industrialists' lobby, the real estate lobby and the railroad lobby, the West Virginia Senator told the public: "It is up to you to determine whether or not you approve this domestic program. It is up to you to decide whether or not your best interests are being served."

RENT 'CONTROL' LAW BACKFIRES

THE real estate lobby had predicted it would be easy as pie.

For months its propaganda theme had been: "Just let landlords and tenants get together to sign voluntary leases with a 15% rent increase. Make it a little easier for landlords to evict undesirable tenants. Decontrol hotels and motor courts and other such forms of housing. Then everybody will be happy."

But with the new rent control law in effect only two weeks, the big lobby, the real estate men, and the public were having their troubles. From every section of the country came reports of:

- Tenants getting sore at landlords who tried to blackjack them into "voluntary" increases.
- Landlords getting sore at tenants who were organizing against efforts to lift their rents.
- Government rent control and housing agencies being snowed under with requests for evictions and protests against evictions.
- Congressmen getting sore and demanding an investigation of the real estate lobby.

The story was much the same across the country.

In New York City, Mayor William O'Dwyer rushed through local rent control legislation after requests for evictions had jumped 82% over the levels prevailing before the new law came into effect.

The New York bill, freezing hotel and rooming house rents at June 30 levels, put a halt to thousands of projected rent increases, some of them running as high as 50%. An executive of the city's hotel association complained that the bill was a "staggering blow" to association members. New York hotels have been packed to the roofs since early in the war, but the hotel man said costs have risen 93%.

O'DWYER tangled at public hearings with Samuel Schacter, head of a big Gotham real estate association, who had admitted lobbying for looser rent controls and who felt New York should go along on higher rents.

The mayor snapped back: "When the same Congress lifted OPA controls, we told them what would happen. Did they listen? No.

"When they did this (revised the rent control law) we told them what would happen. Did they listen? No."

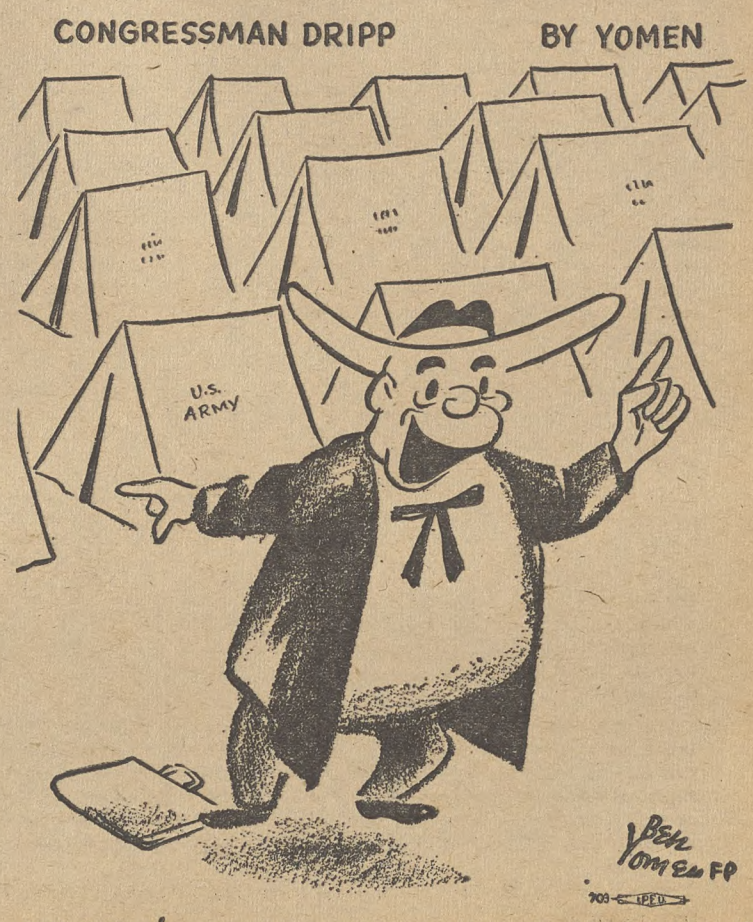
But the fireworks weren't confined to Manhattan. Federated Press, labor news service, reported a roar of protest in San Francisco when the board of supervisors passed a bill permitting hotels to charge permanent guests an additional 25%. The bill also allows the hotel to charge any rate they wish for rooms vacated by permanent guests.

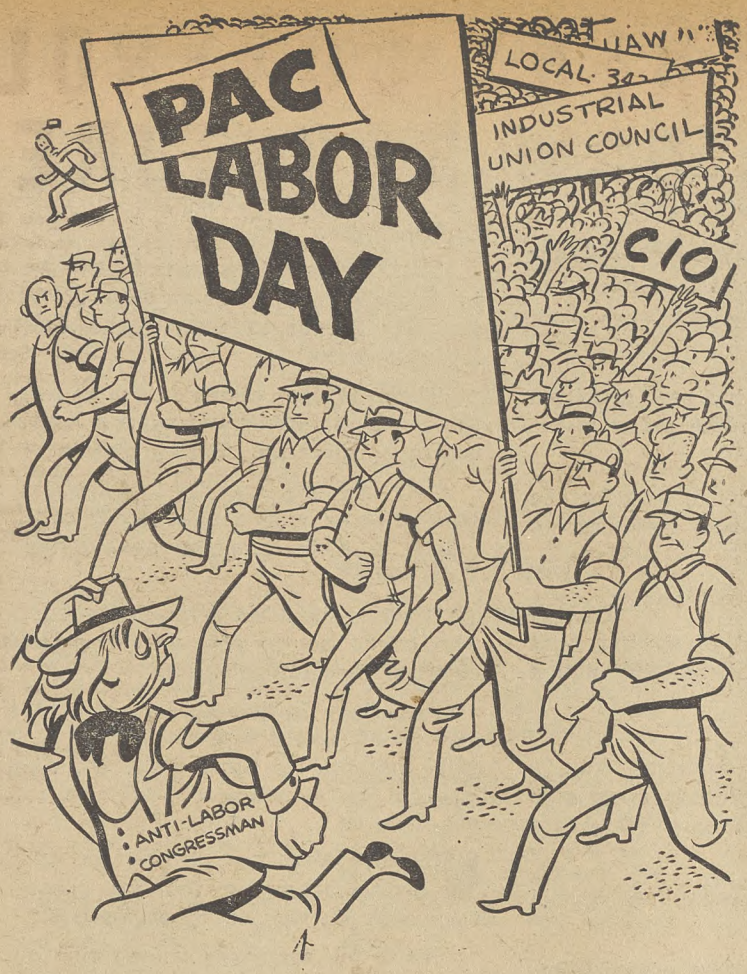
IN Boston, FP said that only 100 forms reporting the "voluntary" rent hikes had been reported, although thousands of the forms had been distributed on request, according to area rent director William Riley.

Cleveland was forced to assign two additional judges to the municipal court bench to handle a boom in eviction cases.

Chicago's CIO Council called upon Mayor Kennelly to secure a city ordinance freezing rents. Charging that 15% increases are unwarranted, the Council plans to work closely with citizens groups to keep dwelling costs down.

The St. Louis Post-Dispatch indicated in an editorial that it had had enough" and called for a Congressional probe of the real estate lobby.





Make Labor Day PAC Day, Urge Murray and Kroll

"MAKE 1947 Labor Day PAC Day to make 1948 Election Day Labor Day."

That was the theme of a call for intensified political action sent last week to all CIO Council and PAC groups by CIO President Philip Murray and PAC Director Jack Kroll.

Complete text of the letter follows:

"The CIO Political Action Committee Executive Board has announced a vigorous program of political action as an answer to the Taft-Hartley law and the disgraceful record of the 80th Congress. As our immediate objectives, the board called for a nation-wide registration drive and intensification of PAC's voluntary fund raising campaign. To stimulate increased activity along these lines, the board called upon all CIO groups to devote their 1947 Labor Day celebrations to political action, to dedicate Labor Day as PAC Day.

"Immediate attention should be given to these decisions and a Labor Day political action program prepared. We can not emphasize too much the importance of this occasion. Men and women of organized labor will convene in meetings, picnics, and other Labor Day celebrations in every section of the nation.

"While enjoying this national holiday they will be discussing the many important issues before labor and the American people. There is no better time to stir interest in the work of the CIO Political Action Committee than this Labor Day. With large crowds in attendance, these celebrations can also serve as an excellent spring board for collection of voluntary contributions. All such fund raising should be carried out in full cooperation with the international unions in your area.

"In planning your Labor Day programs, stress should be placed on the fact that it is the specific responsibility of every citizen to participate in the affairs of his government and that registration is the first essential to such participation. PAC needs one million men and women—citizen-volunteers—to carry the message of registration and voting into the blocks in which they live. A mass registration drive reaching into the homes of our members is based on the activity of these block workers.

"Both the registration and fund raising drives can be stimulated by reviewing the miserable record of the 80th Congress, by focusing attention on the Congress' failures in regard to price and rent control, housing, minimum wages, veterans needs, tax relief and the many other vital issues.

All of these points can be emphasized in your Labor Day speeches, radio programs, leaflets, and exhibits. Those councils sponsoring Labor Day parades should feature political action floats or exhibits.

The National PAC office is anxious to cooperate in this endeavor, and toward this end, will send you shortly a complete kit of materials which can be used in your Labor Day-PAC Day celebrations. Such materials as sample speeches, leaflets, posterettes and exhibits, voting records, radio recordings, and spot announcements will be contained in the kit.

We do not need to remind you of the serious situation which faces labor, or of the tremendous political action efforts necessary to erase the vicious Taft-Hartley law from the statute books. Political action—registration and the collection of voluntary contributions—on the part of every single CIO group is imperative. It must be pushed forward on all levels. It can be given great stimulus in your Labor Day celebrations.

"Remember, make 1947 Labor Day, PAC Day, to make 1948 Election Day, Labor Day."

CIO DEFY OF T-H LAW GOES UNCHALLENGED

CIO Pres. Philip Murray's "illegal" endorsement of the victorious candidate in Maryland's special Congressional election has placed Taft-Hartley sponsors and the Dept. of Justice in a deep state of confusion.

The endorsement, contained in a front-page statement in last week's issue of The CIO News, was designed to test in the courts that section of the new anti-labor law prohibiting unions from making expenditures "in connection with" federal elections, primaries and conventions.

Special copies of the official CIO organ were shipped into Baltimore for distribution just before the election in the 3rd Maryland district, and the endorsement itself constituted an "illegal" expenditure by the CIO.

● A week after President Murray's move to test the law, the Department of Justice was still telling news reporters: "No comment."

● A bill (S. 1613) to amend the Taft-Hartley law by repealing the section covering political expenditures was introduced by two Senators who had voted for the bill—Aiken (R., Vt.) and Hatch (D., N. M.).

● A bill (S. 1628) to repeal the T-H law, lock, stock and barrel, was introduced by 15 Senators who had opposed it throughout the long debate. A similar bill (HR 3945) was filed in the House by Rep. Lesinski (D., Mich.), leader of the House battle against the measure.

● Sen. Taft, in a complete turnabout from his earlier position, told reporters he might go along with plans to change the law to permit labor papers to enjoy normal freedom of the press in expressing their views on political matters.

TAFT said he'd never had any intention to limit such freedom, though the Congressional Record for June 5 and 6 carries column after column of debate in which the GOP bigwig made clear that he wanted the labor press to be sterilized.

Taft's sudden concern for the labor press was believed to have sprung from a New York Herald Tribune report that under the law any general newspaper would commit a technical violation each time it endorsed a candidate. That point had been made by the CIO and by many liberal Senators during debate on the T-H bill, but at that time Taft had brushed the arguments aside.

It was generally conceded in Washington that neither of the repeal bills—the Aiken-Hatch effort to permit political expenditures and the 15-man proposal to wipe the T-H bill off the books—has any chance of passage before the July 26 adjournment of Congress.

Senators sponsoring the repeal bill are 13 Democrats and 2 Republicans: Wagner (N. Y.), Johnson (Colo.), Murray (Mont.), Taylor (Ida.), Johnson (S. C.), Downey (Calif.), Magnuson (Wash.), McGrath and Green (R. I.), Myers (Pa.), Chavez (N. M.), Kilgore (W. Va.), Langer (R., N. D.) and Morse (R., Ore.).

The Aiken-Hatch expenditures-repeal bill touched off some lively Senate debate. Aiken, a Vermont Republican who has frequently voted on the liberal side, although he supported the T-H Bill, declared:

"This rider on the labor bill is, in my opinion, about the most foolish bit of legislation which has been accepted and adopted by the Congress at this session. It simply cannot work . . . I think it is the duty of Congress to correct at the earliest possible date this gross violation of the constitutional rights of the American people."

Sen. Hatch, equally strong on the point, said the expenditure section of the bill never should have been considered by Taft's Senate Labor Committee.

Sen. Morse, one of the trio of Republicans who fought the bill; derided claims that by banning political spending by both corporations and unions, justice had been done.

He pointed out that "very frequently contributions are made by corporations indirectly, in that officers of the corporation, being given very liberal expense accounts, are able to make the contributions out of the expense accounts."

These gifts, like the "hidden raincoat" in a traveling salesman's expense account, never show up on the books, Morse pointed out.

It is recalled that DuPont family children, ranging from 5 to 15, often dig down into their little pockets in election years to give the GOP $5,000 apiece—the maximum individual gift permitted by law.

Murray's endorsement of Judge Edward Garmatz in the Maryland 3rd District, brought nation-wide attention, as did a similar statement by UAW Pres. Walter Reuther which appeared in the Auto Worker, UAW official organ.

The next Congressional election in which the law may be tested is slated for early September. In Pennsylvania's 8th District, a CIO Newspaper Guild member—Philip Storch—is running for office with strong labor support.

CIO-BACKED MAN WINS

JUDGE Edward A. Garmatz of Baltimore, endorsed both by the Maryland PAC and by CIO Pres. Murray, romped home to an easy victory in the Maryland 3rd Congressional District special election on July 15.

Garmatz, a Democrat, polled 12,000 votes in the traditionally Democratic area to defeat by a sizeable majority both a Republican and an independent candidate.

The contest gained national attention as a result of the action by President Murray, which was designed to test the Taft-Hartley ban on political expenditures by labor unions. Garmatz succeeds former Rep. Thomas D'Alesandro, who resigned from Congress after his election a few weeks ago as mayor of Baltimore.

Despite interest in the election, the first since passage of the Taft-Hartley bill, only 31.4% of the registered voters in the district went to the polls.

Murray's indorsement of Garmatz brought from the GOP candidate, S. P. Jarosinski, a violent attack on the CIO Political Action Committee reminiscent of the 1944 and 1946 campaigns.

He sought to describe Garmatz as a "stooge of the discredited PAC," and claimed that the CIO President "did not speak for the rank-and-file voters of the Third District."

But when the votes were counted, Jarosinski had collected only 7,000 of the 23,000 cast ballots.

It Will Be Different

A "new" CIO News is in the making.

A number of the best features in the "old" News will be retained. New ones will be added during the next few weeks.

A new Page 1 masthead is being designed. Cartoonists are working on new ideas.

Use of colored ink will be eliminated, except possibly on special occasions.

Numerous innovations are being considered.

The "new" News should be available in a few weeks.

Kill 18 Anti-Labor Bills

By Federated Press

The Illinois legislature had a busy time introducing anti-labor legislation during its recent biennial session, but the CIO and AFL were just as busy and succeeded in knocking out or defeating every one of the 18 measures, including some local versions of the Taft-Hartley law.

Labor leaders pointed out that with the ending of the legislative session, not a single anti-labor bill submitted succeeded in passing either house. Illinois thus became one of the few states in the country which refrained from passing curbs of some sort on labor.

Among the defeated measures were proposals to nullify parts of the child labor law, give the commerce commission jurisdiction over all strikes and labor problems in utilities, prohibit picketing unless a strike is underway, outlaw the closed shop, to limit union membership to wage earners, to outlaw the secondary boycott and to require compulsory arbitration in public utilities.

New Editor Says:

I Intend To Call a Spade a Spade And Play It Right Down the Middle

THE CIO is good enough to stand on its own merits—strong enough to stand on its own solid foundation.

Had it been otherwise I wouldn't have accepted the editorship of the CIO News—because I'm an awfully poor liar.

A man's beliefs are soon reflected in any publication he edits—so, in time, the new policies of the CIO News will become apparent.

Meantime, I'm going to take advantage of a new editor's customary privilege of sticking his neck out and calling his shots before he makes them.

I intend to call a spade a spade so the public won't have to read between the lines to know what I'm talking about.

I'll do my best to follow CIO policy—right down the middle without veering to right or left to satisfy some personal whim or advance some pet project.

I'll do everything I can to provide readers with the best and most reliable labor newspaper it's possible to produce within the limitation of the finances and facilities available.

That's that.

Now as to the editor himself and some of his beliefs.

Politically he's a Democrat. Ideologically he's a right-winger.

He believes that in the trade union movement no ism should supercede unionism.

He believes it's more important to have a newspaper with integrity than merely to have one with wide circulation.

Yes, the new editor is an idealistic cuss—naively so at times. And it gets him in trouble occasionally!

How about the guy's weaknesses?

Those, too, will become apparent as time passes—but you can put it down in your little black book that he's a sucker for a hard-luck story, a bit of a glutton when there are thick steaks around and that he'll talk your arm off (if you let him) about his blonde, 12-year-old daughter.

But he keeps his union dues paid up.

Oh, That's Different!

MANY of the nation's newspapers gave scant attention to labor leaders' warnings that the Taft-Hartley Act would seriously infringe on freedom of the press.

They seemed to take the attitude that it made little difference, since it was the labor press that would be affected.

Then—after the act was passed—somebody seemed to discover that all papers commenting on certain phases of political activity would be at least technically guilty of violating the law.

Right now there's much confusion about just how far the act really goes—but one thing is certain:

The commercial press is finally giving the matter much more than scant attention!

TIME FOR FIGHTING --- NOT CRYING!

THE CIO is now playing with a new hand—one dealt from a stacked deck by Taft-Hartley, Inc., a subsidiary of the National Association of Manufacturers.

The National Labor Relations Board—which served as labor's ace-in-the-hole when employers became unreasonable—has been tossed into the discard.

The Wagner rule book has been rewritten by a group unfriendly to the union movement.

So it's time for the CIO to examine the cards it holds and determine how best to play them.

It's time for fighting—not crying.

It's time for the kind of fighting that built the CIO from a frail weakling into a mighty organization.

IT'S difficult, while still smarting from a hard blow, to chart carefully every step in a program made necessary by your enemies.

Two of the steps, however, are crystal clear.

One calls for stepping up organization.

The other calls for increased political action.

The first provides strength. The second permits the democratic exercise of strength.

Designers of the Taft-Hartley Bill knew this to be true—because their measure impedes organizational work and attempts to place curbs on political activity.

But Congress couldn't place restrictions on the fighting spirit that makes real unionists forge ahead when the going is the toughest.

THERE are some very good cards in the new hand that the CIO now holds.

There are the millions of men and women who make up the Congress of Industrial Organizations.

There is the indignation of those who see in the Taft-Hartley Act an effort to weaken seriously if not to destroy the American labor movement.

There is the valuable "know how" of those who organized unions and negotiated contracts before the NLRB was born.

There are the friends—in Congress and elsewhere — who fought along with the unions in their campaign against the new labor bill.

There is the fierce determination of those who intend not to give up the gains they obtained through unionism.

And there is that decent sense of right and wrong which sometimes goes to sleep while injustice is being done, but awakens later.

UNION leaders can provide the guidance for the tough job that lies ahead—but they can't do the job by themselves.

It's a job for every person who carries a union card—a job that will require time and effort and guts.

So, let's roll up our sleeves—clear up above the elbows—and get to work!

Sign up a new member—and another—and another.

Make a voter out of that fellow who thinks political action is just a phrase coined by a publicity man.

The chips are down. The stakes are high.

If we play it right there will be a new—and decent—set of rules before too long.

SEVEN ADDITIONAL CIO UNIONS JOIN T-H BOARD 'BOYCOTT'

THE big parade of CIO unions to stay as far away as possible from the Natl. Labor Relations Board gained new strength last week.

Following the lead of the CIO Executive Board, several affiliated unions—both large and small—have decided not to use the Board for elections or unfair practice cases.

During the past week Auto Workers, the Rubber Workers, the Lithographers, the Food & Tobacco Workers, the Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers; the Packinghouse Workers, and the Shoe Workers added their names to the "boycott" list.

Their action followed earlier decisions by the Steel, Electrical, Furniture, Office and other unions.

In Atlanta, Ga., meanwhile, Director Van A. Bittner of the CIO Organizing Committee, said the southern organizing drive would go back "to old fashioned methods" rather than trust its fortunes to the Board under the anti-labor provisions of the Taft-Hartley act.

The UAW said the union would not call upon the NLRB for "any assistance whatever." Issued by the union executive board, the statement added that the new law "imposes insurmountable obstacles in the path of all labor organizations which seek amicable adjustments of their industrial disputes through collective bargaining."

The UAW said that any effort to use the NLRB would be "fraught with delay fatal to our organizing efforts." It also directed the union to sign contracts only when they carry provisions absolving the organization of any legal liability for alleged contract violations.

PRES. L. S. Buckmaster of the United Rubber Workers announced a policy statement by that union's executive board which said:

"We denounce the new Taft-Hartley law and the proposed powers of the new Labor Board as instruments designed to oppress free trade unions, interfere with free collective bargaining and destroy living standards."

The union would be deceiving its members, the URWA said, "if it advised them that there is hope that the facilities of the new Labor Board would provide protection of workers seeking to organize and to exercise their rights to engage in collective bargaining."

Organizing Committee Director Bittner, in announicng his new policy in the South, declared:

"This doesn't mean that there will be any slow-up in our organizing drive in the South. "Quite the contrary is true.

"Our decision not to file petitions simply means that we're going back to the old-fashioned method of organizing.

"When we have a majority of workers in a plant signed up we will go to the employer and ask recognition for the union. If he grants recognition then and there, the union then will get ready for negotiations.

"If we can't obtain recognition in this manner we probably will attempt to work out with the employer some method of holding a democratic election of our own—one over which the Board has no supervision.

"We will meet as they arise the problems resulting from the action of employers who refuse to grant outright recognition and will not agree to joint management - union - conducted elections.

"It's well to remember that strong unions were established long before we had a Wagner Act."

THE Food, Tobacco & Agricultural Workers' national policy conference issued a statement accusing the new NLRB of being an employers' instrument through which "our members cannot hope for any solution of their problems of wages and living standards."

The union also decided not to include no-strike pledges in new contracts and to attempt to remove them from agreements which now have such a clause.

The Shoe Workers in rejecting the National Labor Relations Board blasted the Taft-Hartley law as a "deliberate design on the part of its sponsors to destroy a free trade union movement in America."

The Union's locals also will be advised to exclude no-strike provisions from future contracts.

THE Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers' executive group branded the Taft-Hartley act as the "most repressive anti-labor law in our history." It said that the T-H provisions would impose criminal penalties on unions "for exercising the basic right of citizenship — activity in politics. These provisions are in flagrant violation of the Constitution of the United States; they would change the very nature of our democracy."

Attempts to use the NLRB machinery, the union said, would enmesh the union in a web. Instead the MMSW said that problems formerly taken to the Labor Board will be "settled by direct negotiations with employers or by other means."

In St. Louis, the Intl. Council of the Amalgamated Lithographers said that resort to the NLRB would be "a futile gesture and an act of self-delusion.

"All of our hundreds of contracts contain closed shop or other union security provisions, which have served to stabilize our industry," the Lithographers declared.

"Under the provisions of this law, we would be forced to hundreds of elections for authority even to discuss union security clauses upon negotiations for renewals to these contracts. We will not submit our fundamental rights to such procedures."

NLRB's Funds To Be Doubled

The National Labor Relations Board will be in the gravy when it starts to administer the new Taft-Hartley Act.

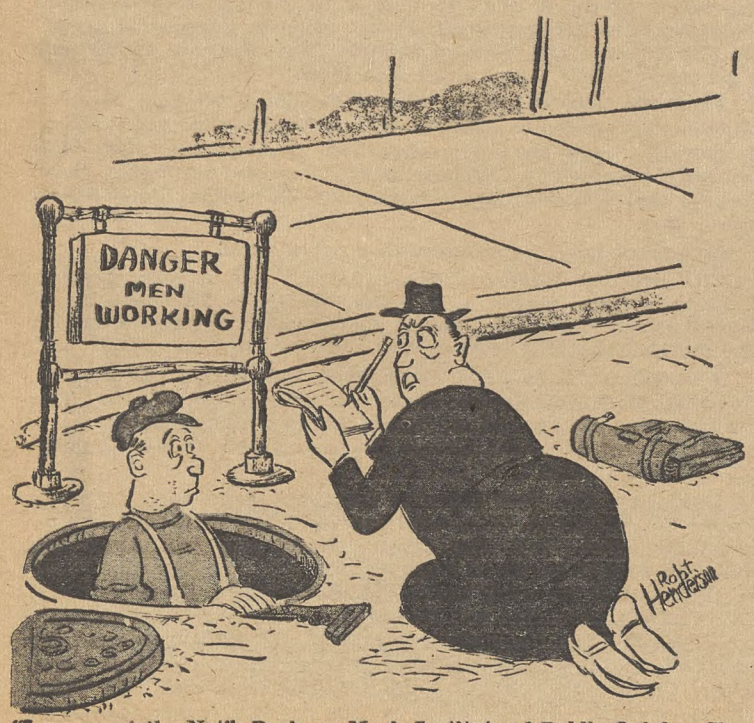
Congressional leaders say they will approve a budget of about $9 million for the NLRB during the coming year—the first time that the Board has served as an instrument that employers can use against unions.

The appropriation for the past government year was less than half that sum—about $4 million.

Resulting cuts in personnel reduced NLRB efficiency to the point where the backlog of cases piled up to record highs. Unions found it took months to get an election certification, and much longer to get a decision on unfair practice charges against employers.

Even at the peak of union organizing activities in the prewar period, the NLRB had never received more than about $5 million dollars for a year's operations.

Sen. Taft (R. O.) has made it clear that if the $9 million isn't enough, the Board won't suffer for lack of funds.



"I represent the Nat'l. Business Men's Institute of Public Opinion. You don't think that labor should organize, do you?"

WHAT'S IT MEAN? Rep. Fred Hartley (R- N. J.), left, and Sen. Robert Taft (R. Ohio) looked like cats fresh from a feast of canaries when this picture was taken right after passage of the anti-labor bill. But ever since they've been disagreeing on what the bill means. Some skeptics say they don't know what's in their own proposals.

TAFT, HARTLEY SQUABBLE OVER THEIR BRAINCHILD

OLD baseball fans can talk all they want to about that famous infield of Tinkers, Evers and Chance.

But Washingtonians who like a chuckle in a gloomy world say they prefer the new team of Taft and Hartley.

Although the you-know-what bill is supposed to be the product of their joint brain work as chairmen of the Senate and House Labor Committees, the pair just can't seem to get together on what it all means.

The new coal agreement was branded as a conspiracy by Hartley. To Taft it looked just fine —and, he said with a straight face, proved that the new law isn't anti-labor.

Taft is beginning to worry about the political expenditures provision, which might affect commercial papers as well as labor papers.

Hartley is against weakening the law; in fact, he's said on a number of occasions that it ought to be strengthened.

Capital observers are placing bets on when the duo will get together.

Name Three To NLRB Posts

President Truman last week sent to Congress his nominations for major new positions on the Natl. Labor Relations Board.

Under the Taft-Hartley Act, the board is expanded from three to five members, and the general counsel is given broad new powers free from direction of the NLRB itself.

Nominated as general counsel is Robert J. Denham, who has served as a Board trial examiner since 1938. He has been considered a cautious, conservative official who has sought continually to narrow the Board's broad interpretation of labor's rights under the Wagner Act.

Abe Murdock, former New Deal Senator from Utah, was appointed to a five-year term on the NLRB. Backed by labor, Murdock was defeated in the last election when he ran for Senator. Previous to 1941, he has served four terms in the House of Representatives.

J. Copeland Gray, a Buffalo industrial relations consultant for private business, was named to a two-year NLRB term. He has been closely connected with the Buffalo Chamber of Commerce. Gray was head of the Buffalo OPA ration board from 1943 to 1945, served on both the 2nd Regional War Labor Board and the Regional War Labor Board and the Regional Wage Stabilization Board, and in 1946-47 was a member of the Natl. Wage Stabilization Board.

CIO News Editor Assumes Post

Allan L. Swim, former public relations director for the CIO Organizing Committee, this week became CIO publicity director and editor of the CIO News. He succeeded Len De Caux, who resigned.

Swim announced the resignation of Fred d'Avila as an assistant editor of the CIO News, effective July 31. D'Avila, a member of the News staff for more than four years, did not make known his plans for the immediate future. His successor has not been named.

Resignation of Harry Gantt as of July 15 as advertising and circulation representative of the CIO News also was announced by Swim.

Richard E. Bauer, member of the national CIO staff for many years, was named circulation and business manager of the News. (The advertising post left vacant by Gantt's resignation was not filled immediately.)

Arthur Murray's dancing teachers, members of the CIO Office & Professional workers, were prepared to give him a rousing picket-sign sendoff at Laguardia airport as he was scheduled for California rather than face them across the bargaining table. He avoided them by slipping in a side door at the airport. Waiting for Murray above are, l. to r., Sonia Levy, Ann Forsythe and Margaret Erickson.

Electrical Storm:

Ask Dewey To Probe Remington Rand Tactics

GOV. Thomas E. Dewey of New York last week received a request to investigate Remington-Rand's alleged use of private detectives in a strike-breaking effort as CIO Electrical Workers began their fourth week on the picket lines.

Charging that the company was deliberately attempting to provoke violence on the picket lines, the wire, signed by Neil Brant, international representative of the union, read:

"Remington-Rand strike in New York State affecting 15,000 workers going into its 4th week. We have information that strike is now confronted by Company use of Burns Detective Agency operatives and operatives of other detective agencies in attempts to create violence on picket lines in attempt to break the strike . . .

"I am sure you are acquainted with Remington Rand tactics in 1936 when the infamous Mohawk Valley Plan was used to break strikes in the State of New York and civil liberties of New York citizens were flagrantly violated. Urge you request New York state attorney general to investigate any and all violations of law by Company."

The company was able to obtain an injunction from State Supreme Court Justice Raymond C. Vaughn restricting picketing at the Tonawanda and North Tonawanda plants. The order limits the number of pickets to three at the entrances to the plant, five at the main gate at Tonawanda and four at the main entrance at North Tonawanda. The pickets must remain 15 feet apart in order that non-strikers may be free to leave or enter the plant at will.

UE-struck plants are situated in Ilion, Syracuse, Tonawanda, and North Tonawanda, N. Y., and Benton Harbor, Mich.

The walkout was provoked by the Company's blunt refusal to negotiate union demands for a 15-cent hourly increase in accordance with the national wage pattern. Offers by the U. S. Conciliation Service also were rebuffed.

UAW Victor At Chalmers

LOCAL 248, CIO Auto Workers—the Allis Chalmers local at West Allis, Wis.—won a 2-to-1 victory over its nearest opponents in a Nat'l. Labor Relations Board bargaining election last week.

Outcome of the election is as follows: Local 248, UAW-CIO, 3,640; Independent union 1,913; UAW-AFL, 1,581; no union, 81; challenged votes 247.

In order to get a clear-cut majority, CIO required 92 of the 247 challenged ballots. Included among these are votes cast by the 91 union members arbitrarily discharged by company for their activities during strike.

R. J. Thomas, UAW-CIO Vice President, said tonight that the "2 to 1 victory of the CIO over its nearest opponent is labor's answer to the Taft-Hartley Act and the NAM."

Thomas said the vote "shows that despite the most vicious tactics, Allis Chalmers cannot stamp out legitimate, fighting unionism from the hearts and minds of its workers.

"Let the NAM take warning," Thomas concluded. "The Allis Chalmers workers have repudiated witch-hunting and union busting, and their victory will encourage organized labor throughout the country to intensify its political action campaign against the Taft-Hartley bill and other anti-labor legislation."

Bank Workers Also Picket

The first "white collar" walkout since passage of the Taft-Hartley Act occurred last week when 700 members of Financial Employees Guild Local 96 of the CIO Office & Professional Workers walked out of all 25 branches of the Brooklyn Trust Co.

Union officials said the strike was provoked by the company's dismissal of three union members—one a head teller who had seen 17 years' service with the company—immediately following enactment of the anti-labor law.

Three of the union's members were arrested after violence broke out on the picket line. The clash, in which police used clubs, broke out when 100 pickets arrived at the bank building to join 75 others who arrived earlier.

In addition to reinstatement of the three, the union is seeking raises of $15 a week or 30 percent—whichever is larger—withdrawal of "discriminatory transfers," job security and establishment of grievance machinery.

Bank officials also rejected efforts of Frederick Mullen, executive secretary of the State Mediation Board to bring the two sides together, the union had accepted.

Attorneys for the bank said they could not recommend attending the conference because "we know the overwhelming majority of the bank's employes are opposed to this union or the joining of any union."

ORGANIZING

BY ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

An asinine attempt to pose as holier than thou is contained in a letter published in the official organ of the Communication Workers of America, written by Pres. Dan W. Tracy, the AFL Int. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers.

Dan charges the CIO with raiding the telephone workers' unions—the charge of which he and his organization is guilty, having taken over several unions in the Chicago area already.

Those telephone workers affiliated with the CIO themselves and requested that we charter them and they are going back to their memberships for ratification.

The statement in Tracy's article that the CIO is raiding the telephone field is untrue and the one saying so knows this is so. As to the statements made by the CIO to the Memphis telephone meeting, these are based on the report of the telephone workers' own committee which favored CIO affiliation, dated April 25, 1946, in which it is clearly stated:

"Mr. Haywood, Director of Organization, informed us that several groups of telephone workers had approached him with the idea of investigating the possibility of affiliation. Some of these groups were small fragments of local unions within the NFTW."

—"He stated that since overtures by the NFTW had been made, he had notified these groups that the CIO would take no action on their request AT THIS TIME."

It was on the basis of this, that the statements were made to the meeting in Memphis. No definite assurance was given that CIO would not enter the field if and when a substantial number of groups so desired.

The IBEW have made bids for any telephone group they could get a hearing with, to take them away from CWA. This places Tracy and his organization in a position of being guilty of the charge he so wildly makes.

He goes further on to mention the light and power field. Tracy says the IBEW made the Utility Workers organization "stagnant." It must be remembered that it was Tracy's group which signed a back-door agreement with Consolidated Edison in New York several years ago.

The workers finally revolted and formed an independent union which later voted to affiliate withe the CIO. The representative of the IBEW appeared before the War Labor Board supporting the company in abrogating the agreement with the independent group because they had voted for CIO. But in the labor board election that followed, the Utility Workers Union of the CIO was overwhelmingly victorious involving some 25,000 workers.

Tracy goes on to complain about the charges that IBEW gives Class B membership. Their representative in appearing before the Telephone Committee on affiliation as set forth in the report dated April 25, 1946, stated and I quote: "CLASS B membership only could be afforded many telephone locals with its resultant restriction of only one vote per 100 members." That's what the committee reported.

Then Tracy, contradicting himself, points out that since the telephone workers affiliation committee met with the IBEW more than a year ago, they had made some important changes in their constitution. He goes on to explain that telephone workers now can be known as BA. So now we have an offer of CLASS A membership, CLASS BA membership and CLASS B membership!

According to Tracy's thinking, hundreds of thousands of telephone workers would not be capable of protecting and governing themselves if they are in a solid organization of their own in which every member would have full citizenship affiliated with a national body.

Of course, Tracy is entitled to his own opinion on these questions but he shouldn't live in a glass house and throw stones. That he and his organization are out to raid telephone workers everywhere they can is proved by the fact that in the Chicago area they have taken over the "Chicago Plant group," "Illinois Commercial group" and "Hawthorne Park Western Electric," and they are endeavoring to get several other groups to go with them.

Surely the Southern Federation of Telephone Workers have not forgotten the position of IBEW in that territory during the problems of some two years ago when official orders were given the IBEW members to ignore the telephone picket lines and go through them. Someone said something about treason, the Southern Federation can answer that.

Enough of this. Consistency, thou art a jewel!

Among the 8 employes of the Power House the stationary engineers of the AFL secured the majority and in a third election for employes of the Tool Room, neither CIO nor the IAM were able to secure a majority. No Union will be certified. GM attempted to stall off this election for about 8 months, making it necessary to hold a hearing.

As members of the CIO Marine & Shipbuilding workers remain solid in their strike against major ship companies, mass picketing has stopped in many places with token pickets doing the job. SHIP STRIKE EXTENDS TO DELAWARE YARDS

Some 3,000 Wilmington, Del., shipyard workers last week walked out of the Dravo Corp. yard to join their 70,000 union brothers in a nationwide strike.

Members of the CIO Marine & Shipbuilding Workers, the strikers are seeking a 13c hourly increase, six paid holidays, vacations and elimination of several inequities.

The Wilmington local delayed in joining the national strike to comply with the state's "little Taft-Hartley" law.

Six repair yards along the Delaware River have signed agreements with the union, most recent of which are the Beacon Engineering Co., the Delaware Welding Co. and the Camden Boiler Cleaning & Maintenance Co.

These contracts provided a 13c-an-hour raise retroactive to June 23, six paid holidays and a liberalized vacation plan.

Scheduled to join the strikers' ranks this week if negotiations do not bring a settlement are workers at Todd shipyards, whose contract expires July 23.

PINEAPPLE TRUCE

A strike by 20,000 pineapple workers in Hawaii ended last week when eight pineapple producers accepted an agreement to continue wage negotiations while terms of the old agreement remained in force.

The workers, members of the CIO Longshoremen & Warehousemen, walked out of the fields and canneries at the height of the season after the companies balked at union demands for a 10-cent hourly increase retroactive to February 1. The union originally asked for 23½c.

Efforts to achieve settlement are being made by Nathan Feinsinger, special Labor Dept. conciliator, who spent two days in secret conferences with both parties to the dispute. ILWU Pres. Harry Bridges is in Hawaii to assist in negotiations.

The six-day old strike was beginning to show signs of growing violence. At the plantation of Wahiawa, 20 miles from Honolulu, three strikers were wounded by the shotgun fire of a field supervisor aiming from a window, the union reported. Ninety-six pickets were arrested for "obstructing the highway when scores of "volunteers" arrived to pick the pineapple.

The interim agreement provided that the 20,000 workers would return to their jobs without suffering punitive measures for participating in the strike.

AUXILIARIES THRIVE

Helen Blanchard, director of organization the CIO Congress of Women's Auxiliaries who recently returned from a two-week field trip in Michigan, reports that she visited a number of thriving auxiliaries of Steelworkers' locals, and attended the Michigan State Auxiliary convention. The membership of the Michigan group has tripled and has five new national affiliates to the State Council, Mrs. Blanchard said.

Battle Linoleum King:

ARMSTRONG LOCAL ASKS STRIKE AID

THIRTY-EIGHT hundred employes of the Armstrong Cork Co., Lancaster, Pa., last week issued an appeal for help to all CIO local unions and councils in Pennsylvania.

Members of Local 285 of the CIO Rubber Workers, the workers are now in their eighth strike week and are up against "the world king in Linoleum production."

The President of the company, Henning W. Prentis, Jr., is described by the Union as having "far flung reactionary connections." He is a former president of the Nationl Assn. of Manufacturers and the local charges he had a hand in formulating the Taft-Hartley Law.

"He made numerous speeches in many sections of the nation always showing contempt for democracy and making statements to the effect that some form of dictatorship may be necessary if the rights of "free enterprise" are to be preserved," Earl L. Hagelgans, acting president of the local, commented.

The workers walked out when the company refused to conform to the national wage pattern and insisted on having free rein in the matter of lay-offs, rehiring and promotions.

The strikers' hardships have been increased by recent passage by the state legislature of a bill to deny unemployment compensation to striking workers. Hagelgans expressed fear that hunger would weigh heavily on the side of the employer unless financial assistance was forthcoming from other unions.

Hagelgans requested that contributions be forwarded to Raymond Miller, Treasurer, Committee for Relief of Armstrong Strikers, Local 285, CIO Rubber Workers, 38 South Queen Street, Lancaster, Pa.

Union Rejects FE-UAW Merger

A proposed merger of the CIO Farm Equipment workers with the CIO Auto workers was turned down last week by the UAW membership.

The merger, which would have increased UAW membership by 45,000, was originally recommended by the National CIO in 1945. The proposal was again made this year by the UAW executive board. Unity would have obviated a number of jurisdictional disputes in the farm equipment industry and would have increased the strength of the union, the board contended.

International president of the union Walter Reuther opposed the merger on the grounds that its proponents were prompted by political interests.

Consumers Organize

CIO AUXILIARIES TO JOIN MEAT STRIKE IN TEN CITIES

Consumers in 10 major cities put their collective foot down this week (July 18 to 25) and refused to buy meat.

In addition they circulated petitions calling for a Congressional investigation of the giant meat packers.

Source of irritation: Price of meat has risen 75% since price controls were lifted in June of last year; jumped 10-20c per pound at the beginning of June of this year.

Participating in the "Don't Buy Meat Week" are numerous veterans, women's, labor, religious and consumer organizations — among them the CIO's Congress of Women's Auxiliaries. Cities included in the campaign are Washington, Detroit, San Francisco, Buffalo, Los Angeles, Omaha, Chicago, Cleveland, Cincinnati and New York.

In a letter to several CIO councils urging cooperation with the "Don't Buy High" campaign, John Brophy, national director of CIO Industrial Union Councils, stated:

"There is no reason whatever for an increase now. The farmer is not getting enough more to warrant any increase in retail prices; the retailer has actually cut his margins because he cannot pass all of it on to the consumer; the export of meat is below quota; supply is good."

Spokesmen for the "Don't Buy" groups said their sites are turned on the meat packers, not the farmers, livestock growers or retailers. Petitions to Congress calling for Congressional investigation of the meat packers are being circulated in all participating cities. The petition reads:

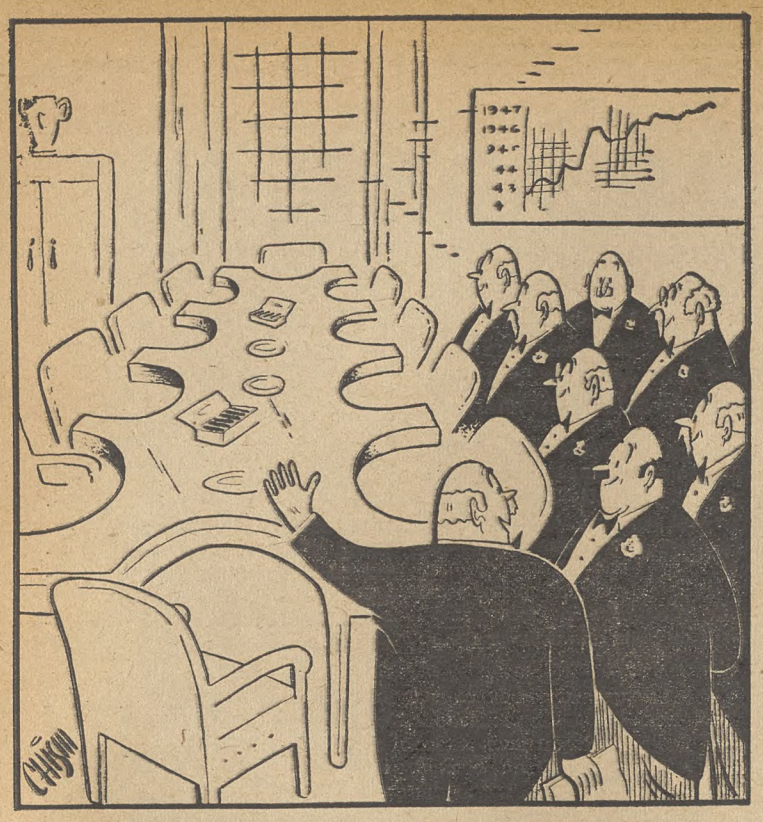
"Meat prices are too high; too many people are unable to buy enough meat for their families. We were promised that if price controls were lifted, supply and demand would bring prices down. But meat today costs 75% more than a year ago.

"We urge you to make a thorough investigation of the meat packing industry now."

Win Insurance, Better Hours

Full operations are rapidly being resumed at the big Celanese plant at Cumberland, Md., where 8,700 members of the CIO Textile Workers emerged from a three-week strike with a flat 3c hourly increase across-the-board, some departments receiving an additional 5c.

More important were gains in hours and insurance provisions. The company agreed that the greatest possible number of people will work a normal Monday to Friday week. Life and accident insurance, for which the worker formerly paid $2 per month, is now paid by the company, while sick benefits have been raised from a maximum of $20 to $24.50 per week.



"Our new Board table, gentlemen—designed to make our meetings just a little bit chummier."

FTA Flays House Probe

THE House Unamerican activities Committee launches its first expedition into the affairs of organized labor on July 23, when it opens hearings on alleged Communist activities in Local 22 of the CIO, Food, Tobacco & Agricultural Workers at Winston-Salem, N. C.

The Committee, which often has been accused of serving as a sounding board for crack-pots and foes of real democracy, has steered clear of unions on its previous probes. The committee is headed by Rep. J. Parnell Thomas (R. N. J.) and includes Congressmen who have voted against almost every labor and social welfare bill in the last two sessions of Congress.

The FTA Executive Board, meeting in Philadelphia last weekend, sharply criticized the committee's planned "investigation." It charged that under the leadership of Martin Dies, Rep. John Rankin (D. Miss.) and Thomas, the Committee "has a long history of helping employers against unions."

The Board charged that "employer-inspired agents" of the committee acted against the union some two months ago during a strike at R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., makers of Camel cigarettes. "This attack was inspired" by the company, the union said.

Two former employes of Local 22 subpeonaed to testify against the union, the FTA statement said, "showed their true colors when they refused to work for the union after a unanimous decision was passed by all union officials and employes to serve without pay during the course of the dispute." The third witness was discharged by the union when "she failed to reveal the true reason for requesting a leave of absence," FTA declared.

A second hearing, involving Local 203 of the United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers in Bridgeport, Conn., is scheduled for July 24. The Committee subpoenaed the local president and business agent to testify.

NAME GOLDEN TO U. S. MISSION

Clinton S. Golden, former vice-president of the United Steelworkers, leaves for Greece early next month to act as chief labor adviser to Dwight Griswold, head of the U.S. mission to the Mediterranean country.

Golden resigned as vice-president of the USA-CIO last summer, and after serving for several months as a part-time special representative, severed his connections with the union earlier this year. He spent several months lecturing on labor relations problems at Harvard Graduate School of Business Administration.

He has also been active in the National Planning Assn., an independent economic research group which recently announced a plan for surveying the "causes of industrial peace" in selected factories throughout the country.

Although there have been no official announcements of U.S. plans for dealing with Greek labor, the Wall Street Journal reported recently that efforts would be made to establish "free trade unions" and to urge the Greek government to adopt a "Wagner Act" of its own.

Flood Victims Need Funds

Hundreds of CIO Packinghouse union members lost their homes and personal belongings in the recent Mississippi floods, CIO Pres. Philip Murray pointed out in an appeal for relief funds.

Murray asked that contributions be sent to Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey at CIO headquarters, 718 Jackson Place N. W., Washington, for forwarding to the flood sufferers.

In the area around Ottumwa, Fort Dodge and Des Moines, Ia., large numbers of Packinghouse Workers are jobless.

MURRAY SPELLS OUT UNITY PLAN

A four-point program for unity between CIO and AFL has been outlined by CIO Pres. Philip Murray in a letter to the New York news paper PM.

The formula set forth by the CIO president calls for:

1. Complete recognition of the principle of industrial unionism.

2. Protection of the autonomous rights of national unions in a new labor organization.

3. Provision for the creation of effective labor political action machinery.

4. Parallel action by committees of CIO and AFL unions operating in the same field to carry out the unity program among themselves.

Murray's letter was written in reply to a column by Fiorello La Guardia, former mayor of New York, which called for the formation of one big labor organization.

In an earlier series of letters, dated July 2, the CIO President called upon the AFL and several of the railroad brotherhoods to form a common front on pressing legislative and political matters.

"It is imperative that our organizations relegate to the background whatever minor differences we may entertain," the letter pointed out.

"We must have a common and unified program of policy and action on our part to protect the living standards of the American people and to assure effective political expression on the part of our membership.

"In this manner we can defeat the drive of reaction and succeed in the election of progressive representatives who will act and speak in the interests of the American people."

A reply from AFL Pres. Green, written two weeks later, renewed the AFL's suggestions—rejected by CIO at last May's unity talks—for immediate merger of the two big labor organizations.

THE CIO President's letter, published July 11 in PM, said the "CIO stands prepared to continue to work sincerely and tirelessly for a united labor movement." He added that the CIO proposals represent a "practical approach to this problem.

"We, however, make the sincere observation that labor unity cannot be built on the foundation of jurisdictional strife or on confusion and indecision with respect to the other principle trade union matters; nor can unity so constituted equip the American labor movement with the strength so essential to meet successfully the challenge that we face in 1947 and in the future."

Murray said that the four-point program served as the basis of CIO discussions during the unity talks last May. He noted that CIO has sought consistently to "achieve a working unity with the AFL" and that long prior to passage of the Taft-Hartley Act he had suggested joint meetings to develop a campaign of action against these attacks.

"We did not believe that the delays necessarily incident to a discussion of organic unity should prevent early joint action on the legislative front," he said.

"I have within the last few days, under direction from the Executive Board of the CIO, communicated again with President Green of the AFL and the heads of the Railroad Brotherhoods urging a joint meeting of representatives of these organizations for the purpose of preparing a program to assure the protection of the interests of our membership against the attack that can be anticipated from our common enemies."

SAY SUGAR QUOTA BILL WOULD WRECK CUBA'S ECONOMY

FOUR leaders of the Cuban Sugar Workers Union visited members of the Senate last week to warn against possible U. S. action which would spell quick and certain depression for the nation's island neighbor.

Headed by Jesus Menendez, the Cuban unionists warned that passage of a new sugar quota bill (S. 1584) would sharply cut sugar imports from Cuba. They predicted that this would automatically curb American sales to Cuba—over a quarter-million dollars last year—and so disrupt the Cuban economy that it would take years to recover.

The island unionists have strong support from the CIO Latin Affairs Committee, headed by Pres. Jacob Potofsky of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, and from the Latin-American Federation of Labor, of which Lombardo Toledano of Mexico is president.

The Cuban Sugar Workers noted, in a statement released in Washington, that Sec. of Agriculture Clinton Anderson earlier had promised a rise in the quota for sugar imports from Cuba.

But this bill, they said, "would break faith not only with Cuba but all of Latin-America. It would, in effect, constitute a repudiation of the U. S. Good Neighbor Policy."

"Why, Mr. Blopp! You know this isn't covered by our contract."

WORLD LABOR

THREE CIO UNION officials who paid a visit to the U.S. military cemetery at Castelfiorentino, near Florence, Italy, received a touching tribute from thousands of residents there.

The trio consisted of August Bellanca, Amalgamated Clothing Workers vice-president; Philine de Noveils of the Shoe Workers; and Bob Travis of the Auto Workers. They had been attending sessions of the convention on the Italian Confederation of Labor at Florence.

On the visit to the cemetery, they found thousands of Castlefiorentino citizens awaiting them in the town square. As the three Americans carried their green wreaths from the car and walked to the cemetery, the crowd fell silently in behind them.

As the men left the graves of the fallen GIs a shy, pretty little girl handed them a letter.

Addressed to American women of the town, it said: "We make pilgrimage to the grave of these your men. Your write us the birthday of your husband, brother, son and we bring flower so he be not longely in the soil so far from his home."

YUGOSLAVIA'S first comprehensive social security program has just gone into effect, according to an Allied Labor News report.

Pensions are provided for invalidism, old age, and for widows and dependent children. Size of the payments is determined by average monthly earnings of the insured persons, plus the length of employment and the type of work.

AUSTRIA'S important Steyr ball bearing works were closed down for a day when workers demanded increased food rations and wage boosts to help meet increasing prices.

Authorities offered to increase the ration of fat, but the workers turned down the suggestion and warned they wanted a really adequate solution of their difficulties.

SCHOOL LUNCH FUND: While Congress thoughtfully renewed a chunky subsidy for the Capitol restaurant to permit the restaurant to sell meals to senators and representatives at less than cost, it slashed the School Lunch Fund from $81,000,000 to $45,000,000, states the Congress of Women's Auxiliaries. It urges members to "let your Congressman hear about this!"

True Story

FROM RAGS—NOT TO RICHES, BUT TO UNION CONDITIONS

NOT so many years ago, a young mother with two children went to work in a cotton mill in Athens, Ga. Her husband's wages were $9.95 a week, not enough to get by on, so she had to work too to help feed the family.

She worked a 66-hour week—12 hours a day five days a week and six hours on Saturday—and like her husband was paid $9.95. But before getting this much, an employe sometimes had to work for three or four months without pay to learn the job.

The family lived in a shack in the mill village and bought groceries at the company store. There was no money left for shoes or clothing or a doctor. When one of the children got sick, mother or father went to the mill office to ask the boss to send a doctor.

Sometimes it would be three or four days before the doctor came. His bill was taken out of the weekly pay by the mill.

Money for absolutely necessary clothes was also deducted from the pay. The mother never had the pleasure of spending the pay herself. The mill did it for her.

THE YEARS passed, some less bad than others but all of them bad. There were six children by the time the depression of the 30's came along. Pay was raised under the NRA to $10.95 for a 40-hour week, but workers who got three days a week were lucky. Unemployment brought much suffering.

The mother could not feed her six children properly and at times they fainted in school from hunger. The boys had only one pair of overalls and one shirt. She made dresses for the girls out of waste sheeting from the mill. The only shoes the family had were bedroom slippers that she knitted with hairpins out of thread from the mill.

The mill house the family lived in had no water, no lights, no screens. It was a four room house for two families. Sometimes there would be as many as 12 children in this house.

LOOKING back on those days, the mother, who is Mrs. Edna Martin, now recording secretary of the CIO Textile Workers Union local in Athens, Ga., wonders how she ever stood the suffering she went through.

Her husband is now dead and her children are growing up. One son is in college, another is working and taking a business course at night. The three girls at home are all in school.

Thanks to the union, Mrs. Martin now earns $35.20 for a 40-hour week on the same job that once paid her $9.95 for a 66-hour week. She is buying her home, which has lights, screens, telephone and a bath. In the icebox is plenty of milk for the children, something the family never had a few years ago.

Mrs. Martin told the facts given in this story in a letter to John Edelman, legislative representative of the CIO Textile Workers Union. She wanted to make it very plain, by recalling the old days before the minimum wage law, why she feels so strongly in favor of increasing the minimum to the 65c now and 75c in two years as her union recommends.

CWA TO MEET

Plans for the sixth convention of the Congress of Women's Auxiliaries, expected to be the largest ever held, are getting under way. The CWA meets concurrently with the National CIO convention. Although final arrangements as to time and place have not yet been completed, the conventions will probably be held in Boston, Mass., in October.

TRAVELING WITH CHILDREN

Remember that old line about the flute player? "He blew it in so sweet and it came out so sour!" Parents and children usually anticipate journeying together—but because plans are not carefully made, trips often turn into bores and chores. Exploration of everything in sight and visiting with other passengers are natural, but if children are to be good travelling companions and not nuisances give them their own small suitcases chock full of books, games and busy work—children need activity and plenty of change. An occasional story or game with you will help. (Photo-Conreid-Monkmeyer).

Sprucing Up

IF THE SHOE FITS

By HANNA SHERMAN

WE sometimes wonder why we buy them . . . the shoes with the instep that cuts, the heel that slips, the pair with the shaky shanks, the ones we can't wear in the summer time. And the shoes we can't wear at all.

We've decided that from now on, our readers at least will be armed with sufficient knowledge to avoid the pitfalls encountered in the simple matter of selecting a pair of shoes. This information, plus a firm resolve to buy only shoes that really fit you, should save you a pretty penny.

For between us we might as well admit that it's the shoes we don't wear that are the most costly. We've just thrown the money out, that's all.

Where to place the blame? There's the manufacturer, the salesman, the recent shoe shortage, and our own vanity. Maybe we should have put vanity much higher on the list. Because the shoe size we think we wear has so little to do with the size shoes we should buy.

It's not at all strange because shoe sizes are not standardized. It isn't unusual to find that if you wear a size 6C in one shoe you can also be comfortablly fitted in a size 7A made on another last.

HOW can you tell whether a shoe is right for you? According to the experts, the widest part of your foot must coincide with the widest part of the shoe. When the ball of the foot is not properly balanced in the shoe serious foot strain can result.

This is tough on the shoes too. The tips will wear down and the uppers will lose their trim appearance. Be sure, too, to select a type of vamp that is best for your feet. Short or long vamps refer to the front part of the shoe extending from the instep to the tip. And vamp lengths in shoes may vary as much as an inch.

Know your feet before you buy shoes for them. If you never can be comfortably fitted, a podiatrist can help. But most of us can help ourselves. Use ordinary ruler to find out whether your foot is the long or short vamp type.

Measure from the tip of your big toe to the base of your instep. A short vamp will measure two to three inches, a long one four to six.

Usually one of our feet is larger than the other. Which one? If you're not sure, stand on a plain sheet of wrapping paper and outline each foot with a heavy black pencil. When you buy shoes fit your larger foot!

DON'T hope to break shoes in by wearing them. Feet are more apt to conform to shoes than shoes to feet. Do certain leathers stretch? Reptiles, calfskins, patent leather and fabrics won't Kid and suede do give a little, but will shrink back the first time they get wet.

By now you should know enough about your feet to be comfortably fitted. Remember to buy shoes that suit their function. Wear sturdy, well constructed shoes for walking, housework, or any work that keeps you on your feet. Get the best that you can afford.

Economize on dress shoes that you wear seldom. Very inexpensive shoes can be beautifully styled and here is where style counts. Do high heels cause foot troubles? They certainly do. Even you half pints should wear medium height or low heeled shoes as often as possible.

So make SURE the shoe fits—then wear it!

TEACHERS VISIT CIO

A GROUP of school superintendents and high school principals from Michigan visited Natl. CIO headquarters in Washington last week to learn about the CIO's present program and policies.

The visit to the CIO was part of the Michigan educators' 1947 field study of problems involving business, labor, government and schools, sponsored by the State Board of Control for Vocational Education, Lansing, Mich. The school officials came from 23 towns and cities in the state.

Kermit Eby, CIO Director of Research and Education who arranged the meeting, welcomed the visitors. Clinton S. Golden, former vice president of the United Steelworkers, and CIO Asst. General Counsel Frank Donner spoke.

Golden predicted that increasing "self-government in industry" will come gradually, as the time lag between complete recognition of the rights of workers to unite in trade unions catches up with the long recognized right of employers to organize.

Much of the present trouble in labor-management relations springs from this time lag, asserted Golden, who recently completed giving a lecture course at Harvard University on labor-management problems

"We are moving in America toward an increasing maturity in industrial relations," he said, and cited the study made by the National Planning Association into the "causes of industrial peace." The names of some 500 firms and unions which reported that they had achieved industrial peace, were sent in to the NPA, Golden stated.

Attorney Donner explained why labor is so bitterly opposed to the new Taft-Hartley law.

SUMMER SCHOOL MEMORIES

By JANE MANDEL

STUDENTS who attended fourth CIO term at Highlander Folk School have many memories they will never forget . . . the singing every evening with Zilphia Horton leading . . . The walks in Tennessee's beautiful woods . . . the swimming in mountain streams . . . the tug of war on the Fourth of July.

And above all, none of them will ever forget the hog calling at midnight!

The students all hated to leave Highlander when the one-month term closed July 12, but they were eager, as one student expressed it, "to put to work in my local what I've learned here."

Their heads are humming with the many things they learned at the school. They know now how and why workers have a right to bargain with their employers to get better wages, hours and working conditions.

They know the important duties of a shop steward. They know that PAC means helping elect Congressmen who will really represent working men and women.

They learned the need for better community relations and how to plan a program that will give other community groups the truth about organized labor and its aims. Now back home in towns scattered from North Carolina to Texas, they are ready to get busy applying what they learned in activities in their various locals, and they no longer will feel so alone.

One of them said, "We know now that other locals all across the country have problems like ours and are united with us in the fight for a better living."

THE STUDENTS took an active part in every class at Highlander. They acted out arbitration and grievance cases, ran union meetings, gave reports and speeches. They also helped run the school. The whole group joined together in the Student Council which elected a president and a steering committee.

Whenever anyone had a grievance about anything from courses to the need for a curfew, it was brought before the steering committee for settlement, and if necessary, before the Student Council.

In addition to regular courses, there were a number of special classes and talks by CIO leaders from Washington. These included Director of Research and Education Kermit Eby; Anthony W. Smith, asst. director of Industrial Union Councils; Asst. Counsel Eugene Cotton, Stanley Ruttenburg, asst. director of research; and George Guernsey, asst. education director.

CIO To House Farm Group:

'MILLIONAIRE JUST ANOTHER STOMACH'

THE HOUSE Agriculture Committee got a sure-fire formula last week for remembering that farm prosperity depends on the well-being of city workers.

Testifying before the House group, CIO Research Director Kermit Eby told the Congressmen:

"People who earn $10,000 a year do not eat any more ham and eggs than an $1,800 a year man would like too.

"Until millionaires learn to eat 500 plates of ham and eggs apiece for breakfast, a millionaire will be just another stomach to the farmer. There is not much farm future in a millionaire.

"Nor is there any farm future in the downswing of the business cycle and the mass unemployment which goes with it."

Eby, one of several witnesses appearing to discuss long range farm policies with the committee, stressed throughout the clear interest of CIO in working closely with farm groups for mutual prosperity.

"WE believe the security of the farmer reflects the security of the city worker and the properity of the city worker means the prosperity of the farmer; they will rise or fall together. We of the CIO want a full production, full employment program. We believe in conservation of our natural resources. We believe in breaking the power of monopolies.

"We believe in long term planning for more and better TVA's. We believe in family farms and farming as a way of life. Finally, we disapprove of the present policy of Congress in cutting appropriations."

The CIO official charged the "present budget trends in agriculture are pennywise and pound foolish." Taking note of projected budget cuts on government programs for conservation, school lunches, long-range financing of farms purchased by tenant farmers, and farm tenant mortgage insurance, Eby said:

" . . . Everything which helped the small farmer to secure a farm and to conserve his soil was cut. The CIO is opposed to such trends."

He asserted that the country "is suffering from the same short-sightedness" on flood controls as the Chinese government, and added that "our rivers have become our sorrow." He urged a program of dams, hydro-electrical plants and flood control not only on the Missouri River but on the Arkansas, Red River, Connecticut River and other similar valleys.

"We of the CIO recognize that such developments cost money," he said, "but we have no fear of such costs for we know that (1) it will cost, ultimately, more money if we tolerate the floods which are washing our topsoil into the sea; (2) a nation which affords 11 billion dollars for national defense can afford an adequate conservation program, if we are to be a secure and happy people utilizing our resources of soil and water . . .

"We of the CIO insist that the worker and the farmer, by pooling their resources, can plan for a better America. To be specific, they can produce food, machines and other essentials for a full production, full employment economy which will benefit us all."

Warning that "American agriculture cannot stand such a collapse of our agricultural economy as occurred after World War I and for 20 years thereafter," Eby predicted that farm prosperity will continue only so long as average consumers have sufficient buying power to maintain decent living standards.

Labor Votes Aid Farmers

MANY of the votes that produced anti-labor legislation came from spokesmen for country Congressional districts.

But the big, important farm bills during the past 10 years have received wide support from city Congressmen and Senators.

Testifying before the House Agriculture Committee, CIO Research Director Kermit Eby cited the statistics as evidence that city workers realize the need for friendship and cooperation with their country cousins.

He mentioned six key issues during the last decade: the 1936 Soil Conservation Act, the AAA Act of 1938, the 1943 Crop Insurance Act, the 1937 Farm Tenant Act, the 1938 rural electrification act, and the 1945 bill to continue the Commodity Credit Corp.

On five of the six issues, the percentage of city Congressmen favoring the bills ranged between 55.4% and 98.5%. On the REA loan bill, the percentage dropped to 29.4%, but the over-all average stands at 68.5% in favor of the farm bills.

SAY T-H ACT DOESN'T COVER ANNUAL WAGE

Although some employers may attempt to apply the "feather-bedding clause" of the Taft-Hartley Act in an effort to rule out the guaranteed annual wage, CIO research directors concluded last week that no "reasonable interpretation" would back them up.

Attending a meeting of the CIO Guaranteed Annual Wage Research Committee, the research heads emphasized that the caliber of the new appointees to the Nat'l. Labor Relations Board would determine the Board's interpretation of the provision which forbids payment for "services not performed."

HOUSE AUTHORIZES LOYALTY PROBE

IGNORING the traditional right of Americans to a trial by jury, the House this week approved a bill ordering a loyalty investigation of the more than two million federal employes and all applicants for federal jobs.

The measure, which outdistances President Truman's Loyalty Order of two months ago in severity, establishes a Federal Loyalty Review Board from which there is no appeal. Suspected subversives would be denied the right to confront and cross-examine their accusers and could be denied, subject to the Board's discretion, the right to know the source of information upon which the accusation was based.

The Attorney General alone would determine what groups are "disloyal." Any person who holds membership in or is sympathetic to such a group could be branded "subversive."

Biggest storm center during the debate was the absolute power placed in the hands of a single person, the Attorney General, in deciding what constitutes disloyalty. A similar situation existed two decades ago when the notorious "Palmer raids" were employed by Attorney General J. Mitchell Palmer as union-wrecking devices under guise of uprooting disloyalty.

A motion by Rep. Estes Kefauver (D., Tenn.) to send the bill back to committee for inclusion of the right to court appeal was defeated, 248 to 133. Vote on the motion was considered by many as significant of a growing disregard for traditional and constitutional rights in the U. S. Congress.

Estimated cost of the hunt for subversives is $15 million for the current fiscal year. Proponents of the measure estimated that 60,000 employes could be investigated a year. At this rate, it would take over 33 years to investigate employes now with the government, not taking into consideration the number of applicants to be checked as well.

Reports Dewey OK's T-H Law

Gov. Thomas Dewey of New York broke a long silence last week to comment that there's "nothing detrimental" about the Taft-Hartley anti-labor act, a young Republicans' group in Salt Lake City reports.

Dewey and Sen. Taft (R. Ohio) have been regarded as leading contenders for the GOP Presidential nomination, and many political writers have commented that Dewey has apparently relished keeping hands off national affairs while Taft takes the rap for unpopular legislation.

The New York governor reportedly said the country will realize "within a year" that there's nothing wrong with the T-H law. He was quoted as saying a "still better labor bill" would probably be under consideration during the next 12 months.

CIO President Philip Murray in April expressed alarm over the President's Loyalty Order 9835, which in principle is the same as the Bill.

VOL. 10 WASHINGTON, D. C., JULY 28, 1947 NO. 30

Going Up, Up, Up! Budget-conscious housewives the nation over are spending more money or buying less meat these days. Meat prices, the shoppers complain, have gotten completely out of hand. Some are meeting the problem by buying fish and fowl. Others are striking against the meat packers (See Page 3). Mrs. Kathleen Clift, a shoppers' league official who buys for a family of four, dramatized the meat price situation when she went to a Bethesda, Md., store with a CIO News photographer. She's shown (top) buying a single slice of ham for $1.22. Bottom photo shows the amount of ham $1.22 bought last July—before OPA was killed. The difference is three-fourths of a pound of meat.

CONGRESS WALKS OUT ON SOCIAL MEASURES

THE 80th Congress, with the Taft-Hartley bill under its belt, roared into adjournment tacking "no action" labels on important social welfare measures.

With adjournment scheduled for July 26—a day after The CIO News went to press—it was clear that nothing would happen on labor-supported minimum wage, health or housing bills.

CIO officials during the final week called for votes on these measures, on anti-lynch legislation and on the anti-discrimination bill. But Congress, piled up with appropriation measures and a mass of minor bills, paid little heed.

About the only "contribution" was a 3-1 vote in the House for the anti-poll tax bill (See story on page 12) and a half-hearted endorsement of the job discrimination proposal by a Senate labor sub-committee.

Meanwhile, GOP Leader Taft (R., Ohio), who led the fight against OPA last year, announced with a straight face that his joint Senate-House economic committee would send four groups of Congressmen around the country to find out about high prices.

Taft announced that the four sub-committees would visit at least 16 cities to hear "about high prices from businessmen, consumer groups and anyone else who wants to be heard."

As Taft made his announcement, the government's Bureau of Labor Statistics revealed an increase in living costs of almost 1% from May to June. Retail prices, the BLS revealed, are now 18% over June, 1946—the last month of full price control—and 59% over August, 1939, levels.

CIO's protest against inaction on important bills was led off with a statement by Pres. Jacob Potofsky of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers.

Quoting a statement by Rep. Hartley (R., N. J.) that no move would be made to lift base pay over the present 40c level until next January, Potofsky charged "callous disregard for the most underprivileged workers in the nation . . . This attitude must be interpreted only as an invitation to sweatshoppers to exploit their workers in any way they care to."

CIO PREPARING SCORE ON CONGRESS

A special 12-page supplement of The CIO News August 11 issue will contain voting records of all Senators and Congressmen on the most important labor votes of the 80th Congress.

The supplement, containing special illustrations and articles, is being prepared jointly by the CIO Legislative Dept., the CIO Political Action Committee and the CIO Publicity Dept.

Regular subscribers of The CIO News will receive the supplement with their August 11 issue of the paper. In addition, the supplement will be printed as a special "pamphlet." Prices for the supplement will be 5c a copy; 100 for $4; 500 for $15; 2,000 for $20.

Orders for the supplement may be sent now to the CIO Publicity Dept., 718 Jackson Place N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

He said the present 40c minimum is as outmoded as "the surrey with the fringe on top," and asserted that a rise to 65c is "necessary and in the national interest."

The Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America has described the minimum wage issue as a "moral one concerned with justice" and urged an increase to 65c-75c levels.

Failure to adopt the higher minimum would affect the children and wives of wage earners, the stability of family life, and the "health and usefulness of the future generation now being raised in today's homes" the council said.

CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey and Nathan Cowan, CIO legislative director, urged last-minute action on both the anti-lynching bill and the anti-discrimination bill—both of them lodged securely in Sen. Taft's Labor Committee.

Cowan also called upon Pres. Truman to veto HR 3997, a bill sponsored by newspaper publishers to remove newsboys from coverage of the social security act. The bill is designed to get around a Supreme Court decision upholding the newsies' security rights.

Failure of the Congress to pass an "as is" rent control extension, or to act upon the Taft-Wagner-Ellender bill to provide long-range low-rent homes, is apt to stir up popular wrath throughout the country, Washington observers predict.

Federal housing experts claim that some two million vets are living with relatives, or in trailers, basements, attics, converted chicken coops and other makeshift homes. Veterans organizations place the figure at a much higher level.

A census study in Washington, D. C., showed 40,000 married couples living with other families—a 66% rise from 1940.

Sen. Taft—himself attacked as a "socialist spearhead" by the real estate lobby because he sponsors the long-range housing bill—expressed regret that Congress had failed to develop a "definite housing program" and suggested it would be a main consideration at next session.

But while it was content to let the housing dog lie, GOP Labor Committee "experts" intend to hold the headlines during the recess. Chairman Hartley said three sub-committees would tour the country investigating union practices during the summer.

My brother is a disgrace to the family.... He insists upon working for a living...

SET STAGE FOR TOUGHER TAFT-HARTLEY LAW

CONGRESS, racing for adjournment July 26, was preparing to cross all the "t's" on the Taft-Hartley act in the final few days of the session.

- A permanent Congressional committee to keep a nervous eye on labor-management relations was named by House and Senate, and as Act I it elected Sen. Joseph Ball (R., Minn.) as chairman and Rep. Fred Hartley (R., N. J.) as the No. 2 man on the group.

- The Senate Labor Committee was preparing its recommendations, as The CIO News went to press, on confirmation of two Board members and the NLRB general counsel. The trio had been appointed a week before by Pres. Truman.

MAKE-UP of the new joint Congressional Committee left little doubt that it would serve as a convenient sounding board for even more drastic anti-labor legislation. Sen. Ball was a spearhead in the drive for restrictive laws, and his own bills went even further than the final T-H law. Hartley has indicated a constant desire for a ban on industry-wide bargaining and the break-up of national unions.

Committee members are:

GOP Senators Ball, Ives (N. Y.), Smith (N. J.) and Taft (Ohio); Democratic Senators Pepper (Fla.), Murray (Mont.) and Ellender (La.); GOP Representatives Hartley, Landis (Ind.), Hoffman (Mich.) and McCowen (Ohio); Democratic Representatives Lesinski (Mich.), Barden (N. C.) and Kelley (Pa.).

Of the group, Pepper and Murray in the Senate and Lesinski and Kelley in the House have been consistent fighters for labor's rights. All four took an active part in combatting the T-H bill and other anti-labor proposals.

On the other hand, all the GOP members were vocal supporters of the bill, and many showed obvious disappointment at minor modifications designed to snare middle-of-the-road Congressmen.

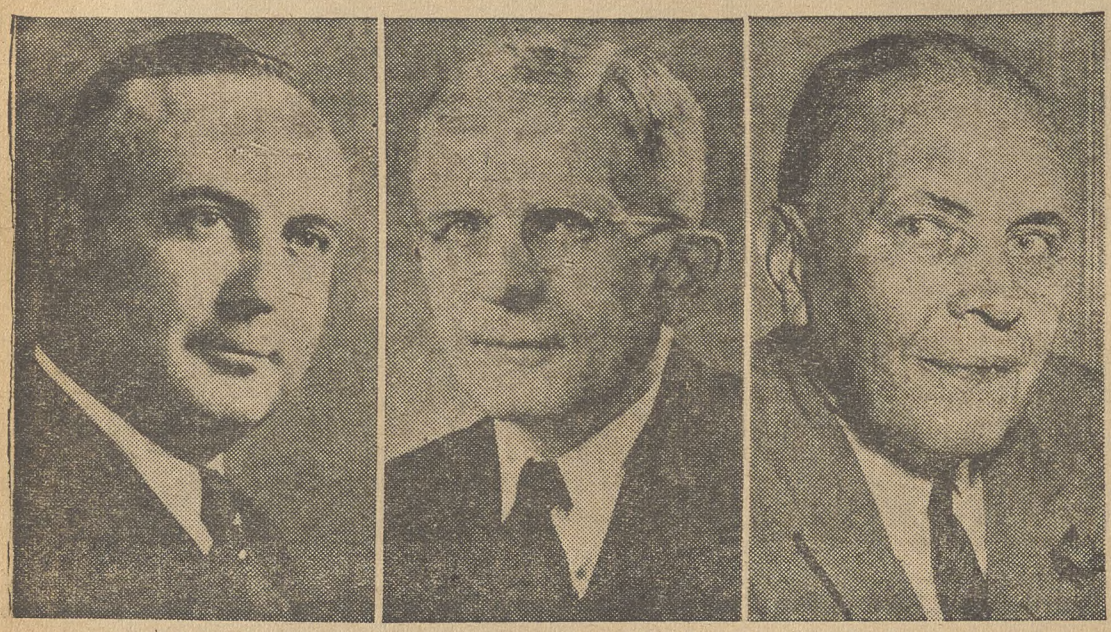
UNDER the T-H act, the 14-man committee has a charter to study the causes of unrest, administration of federal labor laws, productivity, collective bargaining and other industrial problems. Many observers predict that the committee will maintain a constant watch over the shoulder of the newly-named NLRB.

There was some question whether the Senate would back up Pres. Truman's appointment of ex-Sen. Abe Murdock of Utah, a New Dealer who opposed anti-labor legislation during his four terms in the House and his six years in the Senate.

Murdock was grilled on his "sympathies" for labor by his GOP successor, Sen. Watkins, and by Sen. Ball. Murdock explained that since it had been placed on the law books, it was entitled to his "respect and adherence." The quality of the law would finally be determined in its "every-day application to the people who are affected by it."

On the other hand, Robert Denham, the Board's newly-appointed general counsel, waxed enthusiastic at the Senate Labor Committee hearings considering his appointment.

He said it would be a privilege to work closely with the Congressional committee, and that no member of the NLRB's staff would be kept on the job who was not in sympathy with the law's objectives.



APPOINTED TO NLRB: L. to r., former Democratic Sen. Abe Murdock of Utah and J. C. Gray, Buffalo Republican, who have been appointed members of the NLRB, and Republican Robert N. Denham, a former trial examiner who has been named general counsel. They will help administer the board under the Taft-Hartley act. (Federated Pictures).

CIO Says Tackle Causes As

Truman Urges Cutting Prices

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

HOW long can good times continue?

• Well into the future, Pres. Truman told Congress last week in his semi-annual economic report—provided efforts are made to keep buying power up, and to hold prices and profits at reasonable levels.

• Prosperity can continue, said Emil Rieve, vice-chairman of the CIO Full Employment Committee, only if the President and the government are "prepared to grapple with some of the underlying causes that threaten unemployment and shrinking national income."

Rieve, head of the Textile Workers Union and a CIO vice-president, noted that Pres. Truman had pointed out last January the dangers of depression if buying power lags. Now, 6 months later, his latest report shows clearly that "business has continued to force up prices and profits to fantastic levels," he added.

Profit figures are soaring out of the top of the chart. The first half of 1947 shows a corporate profits before taxes at a yearly rate of $29 billion; net profits, after taxes, are running at a $17.4 billion annual rate.

"These levels are close to 50% higher than in 1946, and higher than was assumed in the much-attacked Nathan report" prepared for CIO last winter, Rieve said.

The CIO official pointed to monopoly as an ever-present danger to national prosperity. He declared:

"MANY of our most important industries are controlled by a few huge companies whose prices and production policies are set not by the free play of the market but by deliberate action of corporate officials."

But, he pointed out, anti-trust law enforcement is weak, and business goes on planning for scarce output and high prices. The steel industry, Rieve said, "still refuses to expand capacity because it is convinced that full employment will not last."

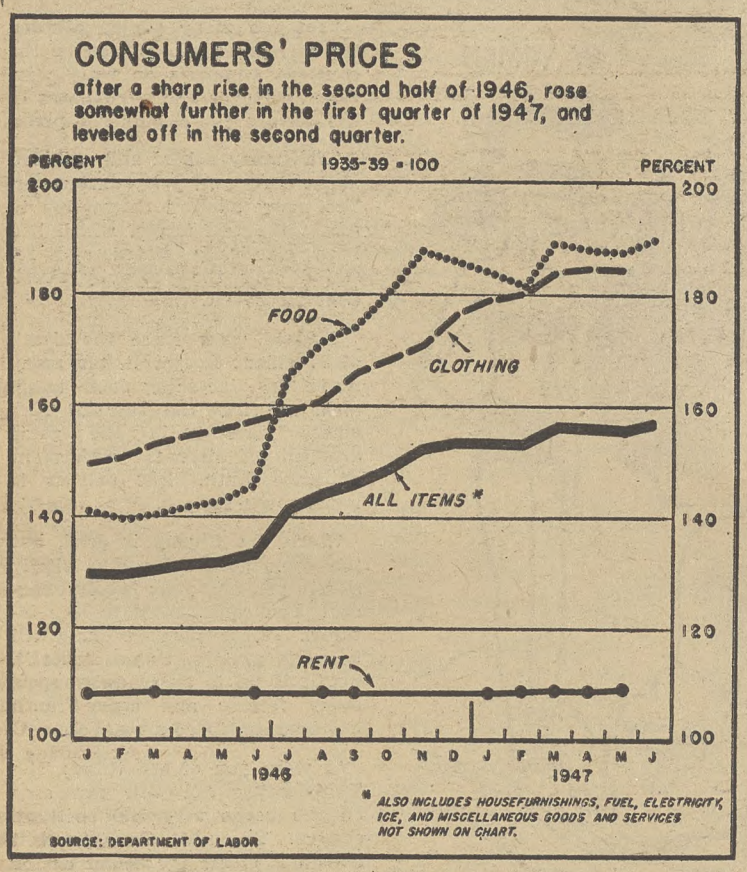
The result is that labor must look to its unions for defense.

"With prices still rising, our unions are forced to seek enough money to permit them to obtain decent levels of living for their families, and these efforts help to maintain the purchasing power without which depression would swiftly follow."

Rieve pointed out that on the day the report was released, 115,000 General Motors employes were on the streets because of a steel shortage, and that many auto workers have been working a short week.

PRES. TRUMAN'S report—largely prepared by the Council of Economic Advisers—called for price cuts in the "numerous instances where profit margins permit." Such action would help check the upward price spiral, help protect future profits and assure greater markets for production.

Present "unprecedented prosperity," the report said, won't last forever if so-called natural processes are allowed to dominate the scene.



GOING UP! Here's what happened to the prices you pay since the beginning of 1946. Note the immediate big jump in July '46—after OPA was killed—and the almost steady rise ever since. The chart, prepared by the Dept. of Labor, was contained in Pres. Truman's economic message to Congress.

Housewives Accuse Packers of Profiteering, Spurn Meat

By GLORIA CAPLAN

AMERICAN housewives, digging deeper and deeper into the family purse to buy meat, last week dug down into the book of facts and came up with a charge of "profiteering" against the meat packers.

Angered by meat prices that have been rising since the end of price controls a year ago, consumers in 10 major cities participated in a boycott of meat and signed petitions for a Congressional investigation of the situation.

Final "straw" in an already burdensome situation was the sharp rise meat took the first two weeks of June. Organized consumers—comprised of such groups as the CIO's Congress of Women's Auxiliaries, the National Assn. of Consumers, the American Veterans Committee and the Natl. Women's Trade Union League—did some investigating and found that during the two-week period:

• Prices paid packers and other wholesalers for beef rose 15 percentage points.

• Prices paid retailers for beef rose only 8 percentage points.

• Prices paid farmers for beef rose 3 percentage points.

Housewives were quick to point out that their accusations were not levelled against the retailer, who, caught in the packers' squeeze play, was unable to pass on the wholesale markup and was having to absorb a good part of it himself. In some cities the retailers were reported to have aided in circulating the petitions for a Congressional investigation of the packers—and then pushed the sale of fish and fowl during the boycott week.

Delving into facts, the consumers found:

• The "Big Four" packers' (Swift, Armour, Cudahy and Wilson) mark-up—that is, the margin between the price at which the livestock is bought and the price at which it is sold—jumped from 28% in the final days of OPA to 62% today. This represents an increase of 242% in the mark-up.

• During the same period the retailers' mark-up slumped—from 63% in 1946 down to 49%. (Here again the retailer was seen as being forced to absorb a large slice of the packers' mark-up.)

• Meat packers' net profits rose to unprecedented heights. Armour's profits, over $9 million in 1945, more than doubled in 1946 to reach over $20 million. Figures are not yet available for this year, but there is much evidence that profits are exceeding the 1946 pinnacles. Cudahy recently announced a 33⅓% quarterly dividend increase on common stock. Swift has announced increased dividends on its common stock and an "extra dividend" is anticipated later this year. Wilson has announced a 25% dividend increase on common stock.

Housewife Mary Christy, Washington, D. C., signs a petition asking for a Congressional investigation of the meat packers. Alice Lumer, CIO Auxiliary member, is getting the signature.

There's a Battle Ahead

IT MIGHT make us feel better if we used a lot of harsh words to damn the Republican-controlled Congress that wound up its session and went home the other day.

We have the words and know how to use them—but we think it would be better if we tried to point out ways of keeping some of the senators and congressmen permanently at home.

But first, just for the sake of the record:

Enemies of labor in Congress attempted to deal the unions a staggering blow by enacting the Taft-Hartley Act.

They killed price control prematurely, permitting prices to spiral upwards.

They made virtually no attempt to solve one of the country's most pressing problems—that of the acute housing shortage.

They thumbed their noses at most of the social legislation that labor supported—and they enacted numerous measures designed to aid business and industry.

There is only one way to reverse the recent trend in legislative action—and that is by electing a different group of legislators.

It's that simple in theory but much more difficult in practice. It's easy to state the theory, but a lot of hard work will be required to get results.

Call it political action. Call it exercising the voting franchie. Call it what you may, it all adds up to the same thing.

Real political action is not something that is carried out by a group of union leaders in Washington or elsewhere. The leaders can give advice and guidance. They can point out possible pitfalls.

But real political action—the kind that gets results—is that carried out by the men and women in the plants and mills throughout the country.

It's the kind of action that gets the voters to the polls on election day.

Organizing and political action go together like hot dogs and mustard, though they may be handled separately.

The first adds strength to a union. The second makes it possible for the union to translate desires into action at the ballot box.

It won't be necessary this time to look for campaign issues. They were created by Congress and they stick out like sore thumbs.

And they're issues that can be translated into terms of bread and milk, pork chops and rent.

Our lemon of the week goes to the well-cared-for individual who declared with considerable heat, "The only persons complaining about the housing situation are a bunch of radical malcontents."

Progress report: Many of the persons who originally opposed the 65-cent minimum wage are no longer against it—now that nearly everybody makes 65 cents an hour or more.

The fellow who first called it the Taft-Heartless Act obviously was a trade unionist.

Undesirable Things Can Happen Easily When Workers Go Jobless and Hungry

By ALLAN L. SWIM

Men who stare angrily—or hopelessly—at closed factory gates and "No Jobs Today" signs do not ordinarily sing the praises of the private enterprise system.

An empty stomach in a body that's willing to work does not create abiding faith in the "traditional American way."

High-sounding phrases are poor substitutes for good wages, decent housing, proper medical care and adequate educational facilities.

It would be well for those who are now attempting to chart the course of our economic affairs to remember these things—and to remember them well.

The old Model-T was a good car for an era now gone by. It had four wheels and a body and was powered by a gasoline engine.

The slick new jobs now rolling off the production lines have wheels and bodies and gasoline engines. But they're a far cry from the old tin lizzies.

Technically, industry has moved ahead rapidly during recent years—but a large portion of industry has placed more emphasis on mechanical improvements than on improvement of human relationships.

Those who would turn the clock back on management-labor relations—would turn it back to the "dog-eat-dog" days — should remember that most of us would rebel if we had to go back to the old hand-crank cars.

Slick operators have sold the public many "gold bricks"—but our substantial buildings, the ones which stand the test of time, were erected of bricks made from clay.

The ordinary clay brick is a dependable building block—but it will shatter and crumble if subjected to too much stress and strain.

Man's belief in the things which he traditionally considers solid and substantial will weaken, and sometimes crumble, if subjected to too much of the wrong kind of strain.

This should be remembered by those who would change our political and economic structure so as to place too much of a burden on the "little" man.

The meek may eventually inherit the earth but, meantime, the strong and the greedy will rule it if they can.

Many of those who built huge fortunes during the war will try to double and treble them during the period of war-created shortages.

Those who gained power, be it little power or great power, will seek to become stronger.

And many who are weak will be trod underfoot.

Those who would seek to understand labor's deep concern over the Taft-Hartley Act and other anti-union measures should remember this.

Labor is now charting a new course under a set of rules designed by an unfriendly Congress.

These rules take away certain things the unions and their members had come to regard as fundamental rights—and they give to management powers which can be easily abused.

Men who find themselves with new whips in their hands sometimes use them unmercifully.

There is no way of telling what reaction to expect from those who suffer the whip lash. Usually they attempt to retaliate.

Those who are working out industry's interpretation of the new rules should remember this.

Numerous subjects are mentioned here because they are related to the economic and political future of the nation.

The CIO would like for that future to provide more of the good things of life for more people.

Most of us in the CIO, however, can see a trend toward much for the few and little for the many.

And in that direction lies eventual depression and the fears and heartaches that go with privation.

Another depression like the last could easily cause political upheavals that would destroy the things which make most of us believe the United States is a pretty good place in which to live.

That's why none of us can afford to forget that the last depression proved that even the rich become paupers when too many ordinary bellies become empty.

"I'M FREE NOW UNTIL THE NAM CALLS ON ME AGAIN."

So They Say

ANSWERING letters praising him for his 8-hour speech made in an effort to postpone as long as possible the Senate vote on overriding the President's veto of the Taft-Hartley Law, Sen. Glen H. Taylor (D. Idaho) wrote:

"I think that the great mistake of the fight against this repressive law was that labor's magnificent response was badly timed. The bill could have been fought much more effectively in November, 1946, than in June, 1947. After last year's Case bill, labor had every reason to know what it could expect from a Republican Congress.

"Yet too many people allowed themselves to be confused by the constant emphasis on petty wartime shortages and annoyances in the always pro-Republican press.

"Too many sulked and quibbled about their own petty differences. Too many allowed themselves to forget the real issues, which had been classically stated and restated over the years by President Roosevelt.

"Indeed, ever since the death of President Roosevelt, too many Americans, including some union men, are like the baseball fans whose interest in the game dropped off after the retirement of Babe Ruth. But politics is much more serious.

"Sure, the Champ is dead, but the game goes on, and it vitally affects you and your family every day. You can't afford to lose interest. The Democratic Party will be as progressive as you make it, but it is up to every union man, every farmer and every small businessman to do a real job.

"I warn you of one thing: The Taft-Hartley Act will not stay on the books very long without change. The next Congress will amend it either for better or for worse. Which way the tide turns depends largely upon your activity and your vote at registration, primary and general - election time."

Unhappy Story of 'Happy Valley'

BEAUTY and ugliness mingle freely and clash frequently along the banks of the muddy Chattahoochee near the Alabama-Georgia state line.

Here lies "Happy Valley," with its pretty, twisting, tree-shaded roads, its impressive textile industry and its hard-working people.

The valley is the home of the West Point Manufacturing Co., with its string of mills and its dominance over hundreds of workers.

And the valley is where a group of CIO organizers last year learned the true meaning of the term "company town."

THE BIG bleachery at Lanett, Ala., was chosen as the best place in the valley to start an organizing drive.

Those who went in to lay the groundwork tried to rent an office. Months later they were still looking for one. Offices simply weren't being rented to the CIO.

Organizers started hunting for a meeting place. Months later they were still hunting. The campaign ended without their achieving success on this score.

A hotel at West Point, Ga., across the state line from Lanett, made two rooms available to the CIO—and during the last few days of the drive a dozen men slept in them.

NEAT, well-painted houses line the principal streets of Lanett and textile mill officials point to them with pride. However, they don't mention the rickety shacks that are hidden away on the fringes of town. These are symbolic of the ugliness that underlies the veneer of beauty that "Happy Valley" wears.

They are symbolic, too, of the treatment given to those who saw in the CIO an opportunity for greater economic security and a measure of liberty they had never known.

The treatment was simple, direct. Local leaders of the union movement were fired.

THE NEWSPAPERS and most of the merchants openly joined a "Don't Vote CIO" campaign. A "Valley Citizens' Committee" put on a vigorous anti-union drive.

Intimidation reached a high peak. Workers quit speaking to organizers on the street for fear doing so might mean loss of their jobs.

A druggist from whom the organizers bought cold drinks and cigarettes came to work one morning and found his plate glass window had been shattered by a brick on which was printed "Vote No CIO."

And some of those fired were blacklisted.

IT WAS OBVIOUS near the end that the CIO couldn't win at the polls unless a miracle occurred—and none occurred.

It was obvious, too, that an election had to be held. Here, the "boys" told themselves, they'd get an even break. They'd at least have the election held on "neutral" property—at some place not dominated by the textile mill interests.

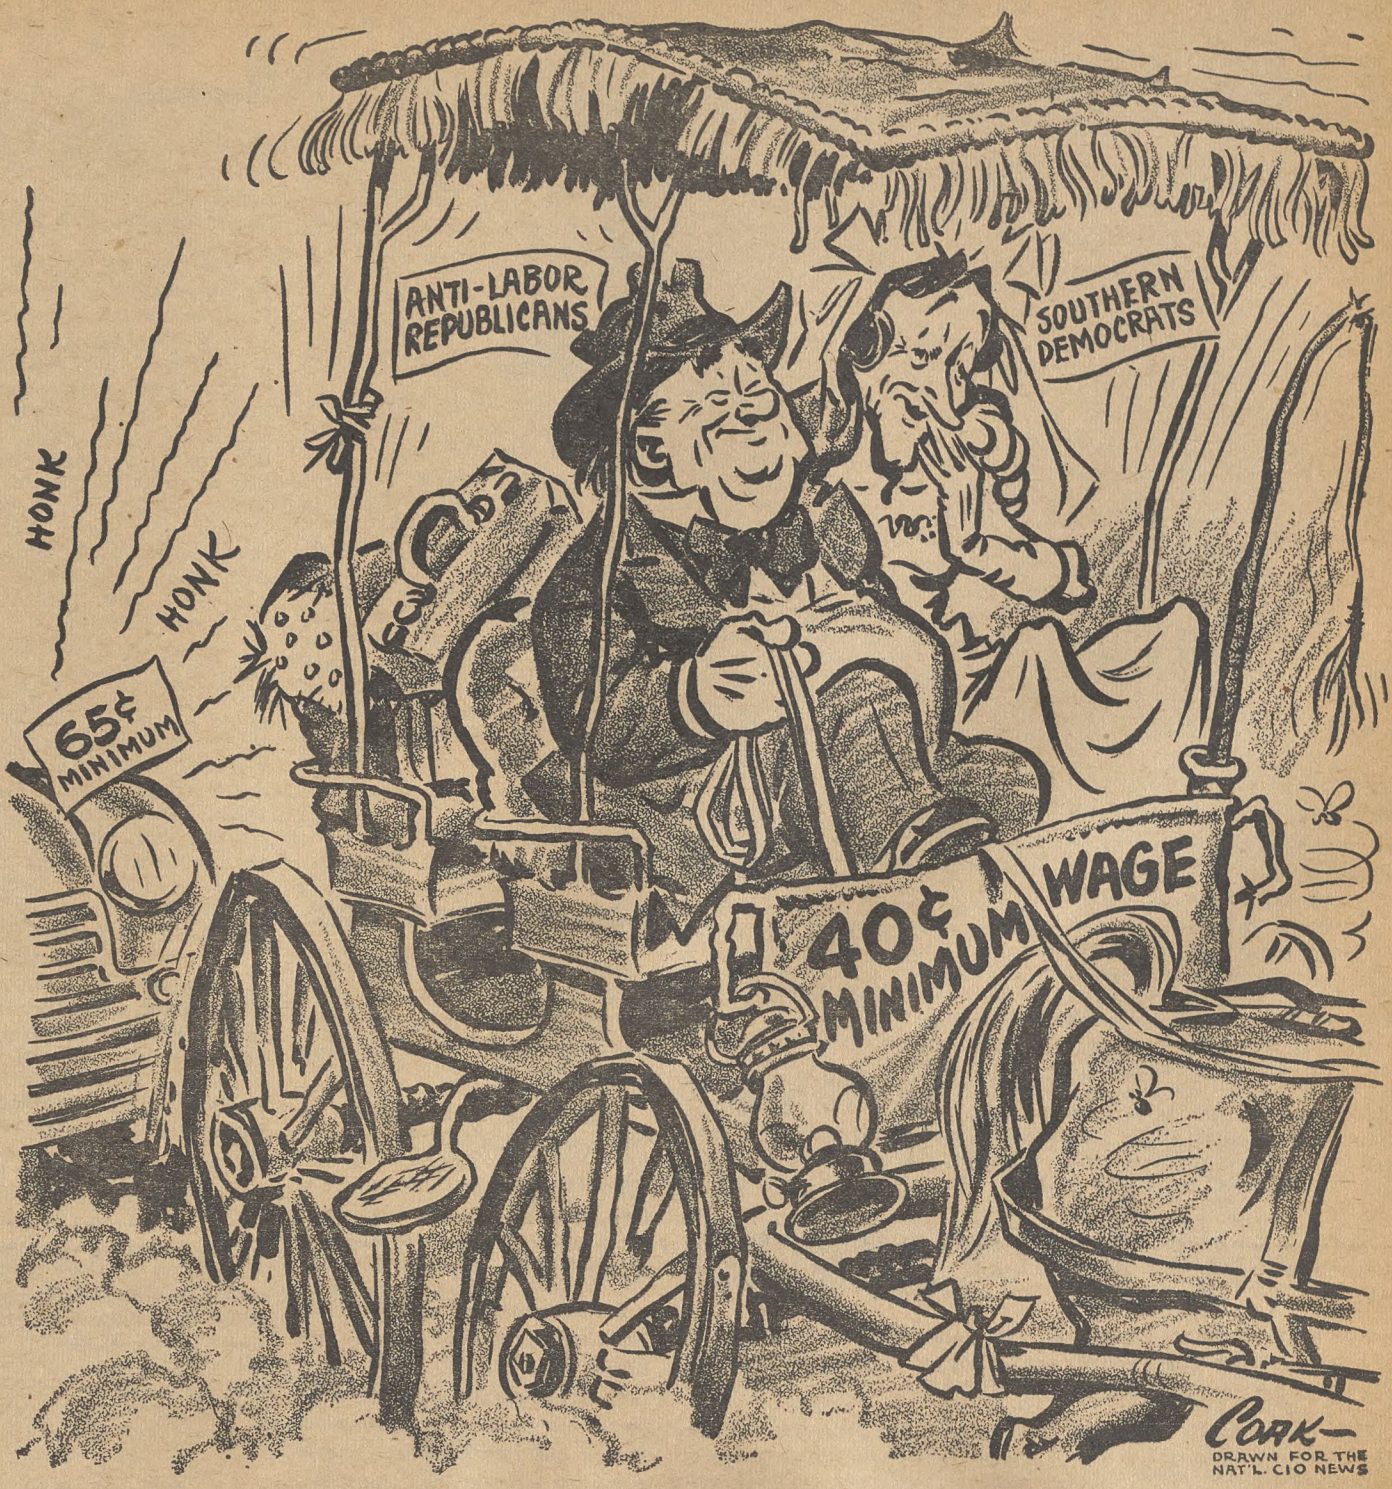
The railway station was selected as the polling place.

This caused some elation—but it was short-lived.

Somebody investigated—and found that even the valley's depot was owned by the textile mill!

The organizers say that they'll go back to "Happy Valley" some day. They'd like to try again to erase some of the ugliness of human behavior that caused them—and the mill workers—to lose an election.

HORSE AND BUGGY DAZE



Workers Check Up on Bosses! What's More--Get By With It

NOW comes a story with a different twist—a story of a union checking up on management's efficiency.

It's called "The Union That Dared to Be Different" and it's in the July 19 issue of Saturday Evening Post.

Written by Clarence Judd and William J. Miller, the article deals with the Bundy local of the CIO Auto Workers, in Detroit, which agreed to accept at management's suggestion, a scheme with the rather clumsy name of Cost Savings Sharing Plan. The crux of the plan is that workers receive a bonus of one-half of all wage cost savings.

It works like this. The company and union agreed that for every dollar in sales, 30c in wages would be a fair division to use in applying the plan. On this basis, when $30,000 in wages go toward producing $100,000 in sales, no bonus would be paid.

But if $30,000 in wages helps produce $150,000 in sales, this would mean that wage cost had been reduced from 30% to 20%, and the cost savings would be a 10% gain, half of which would go to the workers, and half to the company. The bonus going to workers on $150,000 in sales would amount to $7,500, with the same amount for the company.

THE first month after the plan was put into effect April 1, 1946, production went up 50% above the October-January average, and earned the workers a bonus of 24c an hour in addition to their regular hourly pay, the article states.

For the first three months the bonus averaged 22.4c an hour, and after the plan had hit its stride the last quarter of the year, the bonus reached 25.17c.

This was all fine, but then some "unexpected results" began to give the management concern. As the article explains it:

"The workers began to check up on the efficiency of management. In a sense they began to demand a voice in management. This is not to say that they tried to take over the bosses' jobs, but they did demand that each boss perform his own job just as efficiently as the workers did theirs. Seen in that light, their demand hardly seems unreasonable.

"Workers noticed that materials were not being fed in properly. They noticed that time was lost in inefficient coordination of departments. They began to complain when the maintenance department was slow in repairing machines or failed to keep them running at top capacity. Pretty soon they had the management men running themselves ragged to keep up with the new efficiency standards."

The workers also became "as fertile as shad in giving birth to new ideas for speeding up production," the article states.

These logical developments, it says, "other managements may ponder."

Not a bad idea?

Refreshing!

IT'S rare as snow in July when a multi-millionaire comes to Washington to testify in support of liberal legislation.

Last week, while the nation was suffering its first mid-summer "cold wave," Albert D. Lasker—a very rich advertising man—went down the line in support of the Natl. Health Insurance Bill and ripped into the charity proposal which Sen. Taft (R. Ohio) has been nurturing.

Testifying for the bill introduced by Senators Wagner (R. N. Y.), Murray (D. Mont.) and others, Lasker relied both on personal experience and on his business experience.

As a young man of "very modest means," he told the Senate Labor Committee, he had to take care of a gravely sick wife. "Within the first year of that illness, medical bills completely wiped out the small savings upon which we had so boldly ventured into matrimony. The blow was a staggering one . . ."

And, he recalled, the need for health insurance had been impressed upon him during his long and successful business career. He noted that we lose about 600 million man-days a year through sickness and added: "Certainly, if we worry about reducing the economic losses of strikes, we must worry quite as much if not more, about such staggering losses from sickness."

There's nothing very new—nor very radical—about such statements. But it's new and refreshing to hear them come from a businessman.

SHIPYARD WORKERS CLOSE THREE YARDS

THE ranks of the nation's striking CIO Shipbuilding workers swelled to 74,000 last week as employes of the Todd shipyard in Brooklyn and two Higgins yards in New Orleans joined the nation-wide walkout.

A tentative agreement, subject to ratification by the union membership involved, was reached between Todd officials and the union negotiating committee just six hours before the strike deadline.

The terms were acceptable to the Hoboken local, which remained on the job, but were rejected by the Brooklyn workers at a membership meeting. They stuck by their original demands of a 13c hourly increase retroactive to June 23.

The local also opposed the Todd proposal which would permit workers to do work other than that specified in their classification. The members contended that the plan would "do violence to present seniority rights."

Also vigorously opposed was the company's vacation pay offer, which called for 1,200 straight working hours a year before a man becomes eligible for a week's vacation. Time lost due to injuries would, according to the workers, break the continuity of hours and thus deprive injured men of their vacations.

Previous to the Brooklyn yard's rejection of the agreement, both company and union officials had expressed hope that the terms would set up a pattern of settlement for the 19 other shipyard companies which have been strike-bound for the past five weeks.

As the CIO News went to press, negotiations with U. S. Steel's Federal Shipbuilding & Drydock Co. at Kearny, N. J., were being resumed and there was indication that a meeting with Bethlehem Steel, which operates 9 of the struck shipyards, was in the offing.

Seek Textile Pay Hike

NEGOTIATIONS between the CIO Textile workers and New England cotton manufacturers halted temporarily last week as the union called a conference to reconsider an earlier decision not to ask for wage increases.

A conference of union delegates in May had hoped to encourage a drop in prices by refraining from seeking wage increases, and decided to concentrate instead on such fringe issues as seven paid holidays, increased vacations and improved insurance provisions.

With living costs continuing to skyrocket and the employers turning a cold shoulder even to the fringe issues, union spokesmen said they felt compelled to reverse the earlier policy by seeking wage increases for 30,000 members in New Bedford and Fall River cotton mills.

Agreement with the New Bedford manufacturers is expected to set the pattern for 60,000 other textile workers in New England.

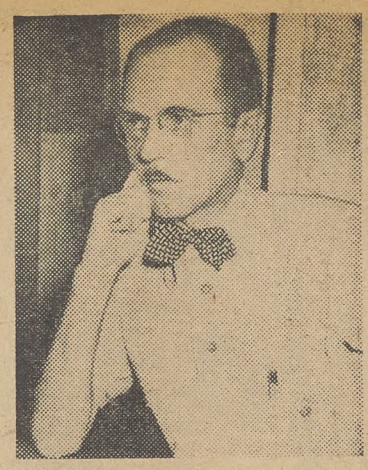
The textile industry is now enjoying record profits, union spokesmen said.

Firm's Attitude Causes Strike

Memphis, Tenn. — Employes of the Willard Storage Battery Co. of Memphis, Tenn., members of the CIO Auto Workers, struck recently when management refused to recognize their union or meet to discuss terms of a contract.

The walkout was 100%, Paul R. Christopher, CIO state director, reported.

All I know is that the front office says he is to retime some jobs....



NEW DIXIE PRD — Ed Stone (above) has taken over his new job as the CIO Organizing Committee's director of public relations. He succeeded Allan L. Swim, recently named CIO publicity director. Stone, native of Florida, had been CIO public relations representative at New Orleans for three years. He formerly worked for United Press and several newspapers in Florida. Ray Warwick of Atlanta, former public relations director of the Southern Regional Council, has been named Stone's assistant.

Wins CIO Post, Loses News Job

Does election of a Newspaper Guild member to a CIO city council post merit her being removed from her job as a news reporter?

Paul Block, Jr., publisher of the Toledo Blade, says "Yes."

The Newspaper Guild, the Toledo CIO Council, and a growing number of unions throughout northern Ohio say "No!"

Involved in the case is Pres. Eleanor Coakley of the Toledo Guild, who was removed from her reporter's job and assigned to another position after her election to the Council office. She is a former international vice-president of the Guild.

The Ohio-Pennsylvania District Council of the Guild charged that Block had violated his contract with the union and infringed upon Miss Coakley's personal freedom in ordering her off the news staff of his paper.

The Council accused Block of attempting to interfere with the operations of the Guild and the CIO, and of attempting to weaken the union. It added that his order was a "reflection upon the integrity of Guild members, by inferring without the slightest bit of evidence that they cannot be trusted as objective workers."

In preliminary meetings with the publisher the Guild has been unable to change Block's action.

Were They Surprised?

First afternoon of the CIO walking bosses strike against the Luckenbach Co., San Francisco, Calif., a big red truck carrying ship supplies drove up to the picketline.

Picket Capt. Herman Sick walked up to the truck and before he even looked at the driver, shouted; "Don't go through. This is a picketline."

"Okay, dad," replied the driver, backing up.

It was Sick's son, Robert, a member of the AFL Teamsters.

Plan Big Four Wage Review

The Big Four Section of the the CIO Rubber Workers will reopen the wage clause of an agreement with the "Big Four" rubber companies signed last March.

The agreement, which covers 100,000 employes of the Goodyear, Goodrich, U. S. Rubber and Firestone companies, provided for an 11½c an hour wage increase effective Feb. 2, 1947. It also provided for reopening of the wage issue four months after March 22, date of the pact. The union must serve 15 days notice before reopening.

The union will seek a wage increase sufficient to meet the rise in living costs between January, 1947, and the time an agreement is reached plus whatever is necessary to equal other wage patterns established in 1947.

Inventor Sees Failure

'MOHAWK' PLAN FAILS TO WORK

FIREHOSES, billy clubs and a squad of 50 policemen were loosed against Remington-Rand strikers at Benton Harbor, Mich., last week as the company's famous "Mohawk Valley Formula" went into operation.

The Benton Harbor outbreak failed to bring the effects desired by the company, resulting instead in a truce by which the company agreed to keep the plant closed. The union in turn agreed to temporarily suspend mass picketing. Both sides indicated that wage negotiations would get underway "in the very near future." The company had previously rejected all efforts of the union to negotiate.

The fracas began when company officials attempted to reopen the plant which had been shut down for 3 weeks. This tactic, followed by the company's urgent request for police intervention, is described by the striking union, the CIO Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, as part of the famous Mohawk Valley Formula, successfully used by the company in 1937 to break a strike. Similar strategy was being used at the Tonawanda and North Tonawanda, N. Y., plants, the union reported.

THE Mohawk Valley Formula, originated by James H. Rand, Jr., provides the following plan for breaking a strike, as described by the National Labor Relations Board:

1. Label the union leaders "agitators" to discredit them; form a Citizens Committee opposing the strike.

2. Raise the banner of "law and order," causing community to mass legal and police weapons against a wholly imagined violence.

3. Bring about the formation of a large armed police force by utilizing local and state police, vigilantes and deputies from other neighborhoods so that no personal relationships induce sympathy for the strikers.

4. Heighten the demoralizing effect by a "back to work" movement, operated by a group secretly organized by the employer. This causes the public to believe the strikers to be in the minority and the majority in favor of returning to work.

5. When sufficient applications are on hand, fix a date for a dramatic "opening" of the gates by massing squads of armed police around the plant.

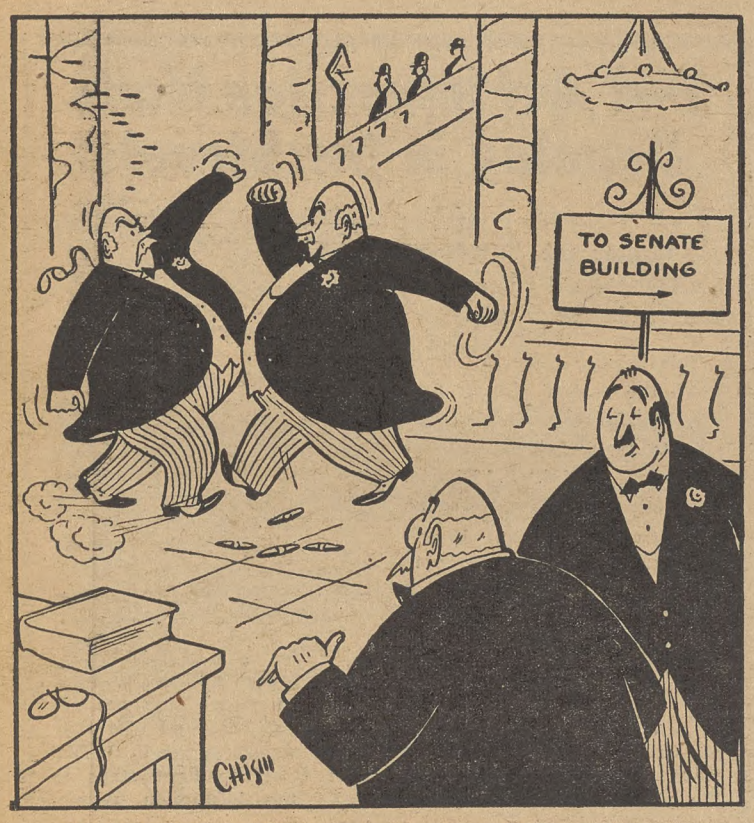
6. Turn the locality into a war-like camp through the declaration of a "state of emergency," closing the campaign on the theme that the plant is in full operation and the remaining strikers are "merely a minority attempting to interfere with the "right to work," of the majority.

The strikers are seeking a 15-cent hourly wage increase. Current profits of Remington-Rand are exceeding all previous years, according to the union. The union quoted the company's president as estimating net profits for the year ending March 31, 1947, at $15,528,000. This is about 2½ times the previous record of $6,541,139 in 1946.

Union Files Suit For $20,000 in Pay

The CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers in St. Louis, Mo., have filed a suit in circuit court against four leather goods manufacturers for $20,000 to be paid 375 employes for vacations and holidays.

The union charges that the companies failed to pay some workers for Christmas and New Year's Day and none were paid for Memorial Day even though the contracts provide for paid holidays.



"Oh let them fight it out, Senator. They can't get near enough to each other to do any harm!"

Reuther Blames

STEEL FIRMS FOR LAYOFFS

WALTER Reuther, UAW-CIO president, bluntly charged last week that the steel industry is following a policy of "low output, high profits."

Testifying before the Senate Small Business Committee, the auto union head said that the automobile industry is receiving a smaller proportion of total steel output than it did in 1940.

Thousands of General Motors employes were laid off in a recent shutdown due to steel shortages, and a short work-week has been a frequent practice throughout the industry as a result of insufficient metal.

Reuther blamed much of the situation on the steel industry's "planned scarcity calculated to enhance profits and to fortify their monopoly."

Auto producers are receiving 23% more steel than they did in 1940, he told the Senate group, but are getting a smaller cut of the total product than in the last pre-war year.

He warned that steel producers, by resisting expansion of their plants, are risking "a major depression within a very few years." He challenged the estimate of a steel industry spokesman who had appeared before the committee that steel output would be only 56 million tons in 1950. Current production is over 80 million tons.

"That would mean 35 or 40 million unemployed," Reuther warned, "and it would be the shortest way to commit national suicide since the atomic bomb was devised."

UNION SAYS FIRMS ON 'SIT-DOWN'

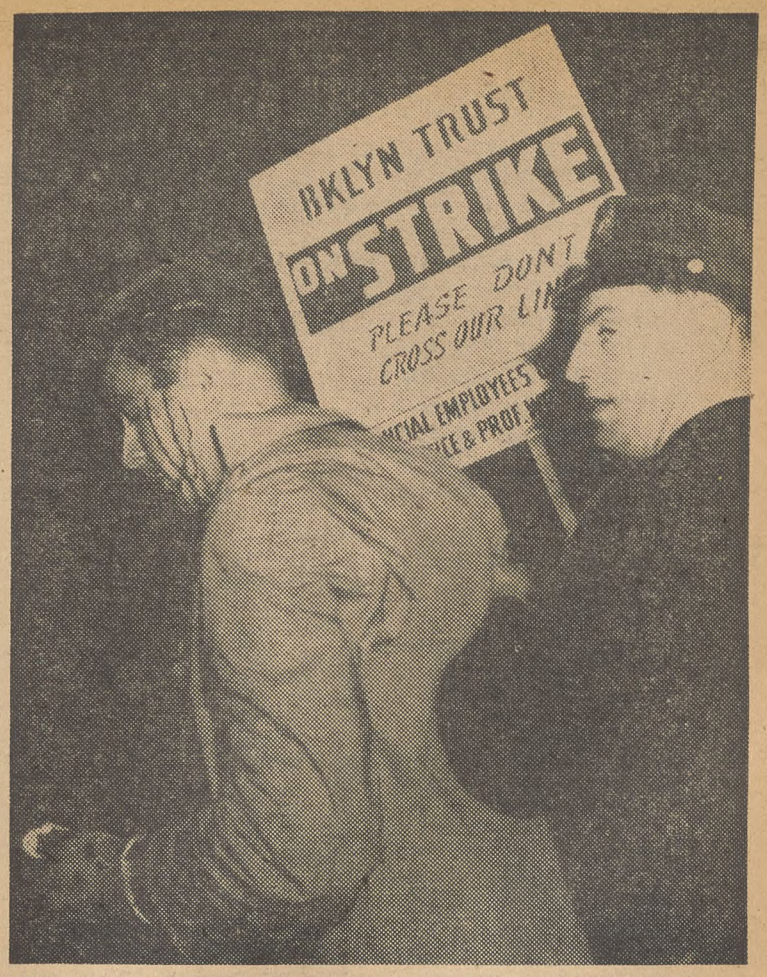
Describing as "shameful" a recent "sit-down strike" by the Matson Navigation Co. and its subsidiary, Oceanic Steamship Co., Pres. Hugh Bryson of the CIO Marine Cooks & Stewards demanded a Congressional investigation of the company.

Matson recently abandoned reconversion work on two luxury liners because, it claimed, of high costs.

"The real reason for the company's sit-down strike action," Bryson charged, "is to blackjack the U. S. Maritime Commission to grant them additional increases in passenger and freight rates on top of the 25% increase in Hawaiian rates granted in June, 1946."

Mortgages on homes increased from $19½ billion at the close of the war to $26 billion in the first quarter of 1947.

Civilian employment reached an all-time high of 60,055,000 in June.



Clubbed over the head with a nightstick when police tried to prevent mass picketing at Brooklyn Trust, Harvey Frankel mops his wounds as a cop leads him away. Frankel was aiding pickets belonging to the CIO Office & Professional workers, who were seeking reinstatement of fired fellow-workers and raises of $15 or 30%—whichever is greater.

Dixie Plant Manager Says:

TAKE $8 PAY CUT WEEKLY OR QUIT

REPORTS of wage cuts in non-union mills of the South are a preview of what unorganized workers may expect during "the so-called economic readjustment," Van A. Bittner, director of the CIO Organizing Committee, said last week.

The chief of the CIO organizing drive said he had been informed that in the Oconee textile mill in Whitehall, Ga., workers were notified that wages would be cut $8 per week. As soon as the shock wore off, he said, they walked out of the plant.

The manager of the mill, E. C. Getzman, called the workers into his office, and with a hard-boiled, take-it-or-leave-it attitude, told them they could accept the pay slash or "get the hell out of Whitehall."

The spinners' rate was cut from $36.37 to $28.14, the weavers were slashed from $37.50 to $29.40. In addition to the pay cut, a stretch-out was instituted. Doffers would have to doff six frames every 55 minutes instead of four. Weavers were ordered to run 30 looms instead of 20.

He concluded his talk by saying, "Now, all of you that don't want to report for work at the pay I offer, may get their pay and leave the mill. When you get hungry don't ask me for food, for I wouldn't give one of you a crumb of bread."

"That is an example of what unorganized workers may expect," Bittner observed.

Co-ops Theme Of CIO Pamphlet

American labor is re-discovering the consumers' cooperative movement in the search for a price program to go with its wage program, states a 32-page illustrated pamphlet, "Unions and Co-ops," just published by the CIO Dept. of Research & Education.

Explaining that "the modern cooperative movement actually grew from the organizing efforts of workers—weavers in the textile mills of England—and has always had the support of American workers," the pamphlet says that union members now make up the bulk of the membership in a number of consumer cooperatives in this country.

UNIONS AND CO-OPS may be obtained from the CIO Dept. of Research & Education, 718 Jackson Pl., Washington 6, D. C., price 15c a copy, 100 for $12.

Pressman Calls

TAFT BOARD DEVICE TO SUPPRESS LABOR

ANTI - LABOR employers will use the Taft-Hartley act to stall and delay collective bargaining as a means of beating down union demands, Lee Pressman, CIO general counsel, predicted last week at a meeting sponsored by the New York Trade & Commerce Bar Assn.

Pressman predicted that almost any corporation lawyer "can expect little difficutly under the new law in delaying any final results in a representation proceeding for a matter of years."

Delays can be achieved, he said, by contesting union demands for a certification election and for a union security election, and finally by filing unfair practice charges against the union when all other stalling devices fail.

Labor has reached the "carefully considered conclusion," Pressman pointed out, that the NLRB and the Labor Relations Act have been changed into institutions "which will function as devices primarily, if not solely, for the suppression of labor unions and the activities of their members." Unions, he told the group, would be "remiss" if they sought to "delude" their members into feeling that any good can come from the Board functioning under the T-H law.

The CIO attorney derided the T-H provision that a labor organization may bargain for union security only when it has received a mandate, through a special election majority of all employes in the bargaining unit.

Employers, he said, will try to keep people from voting, since an absent vote is a "no" vote in such a poll.

"The experience of public elections indicates that a similar rule applied to public elections would have barred from public office most of the members of Congress who cast their votes for this provision," Pressman asserted.

Meanwhile, first reports of employers seeking to take advantage of the new law began to appear throughout the country.

In New York, the first big damage suit in a federal court, was filed against the New York Furriers Joint Council, CIO, and the Fur Wholesalers Assn. The suit, amounting to half a million dollars, was placed by an independent manufacturers association which accused the union of participating in a secondary boycott.

Other T-H development during the week:

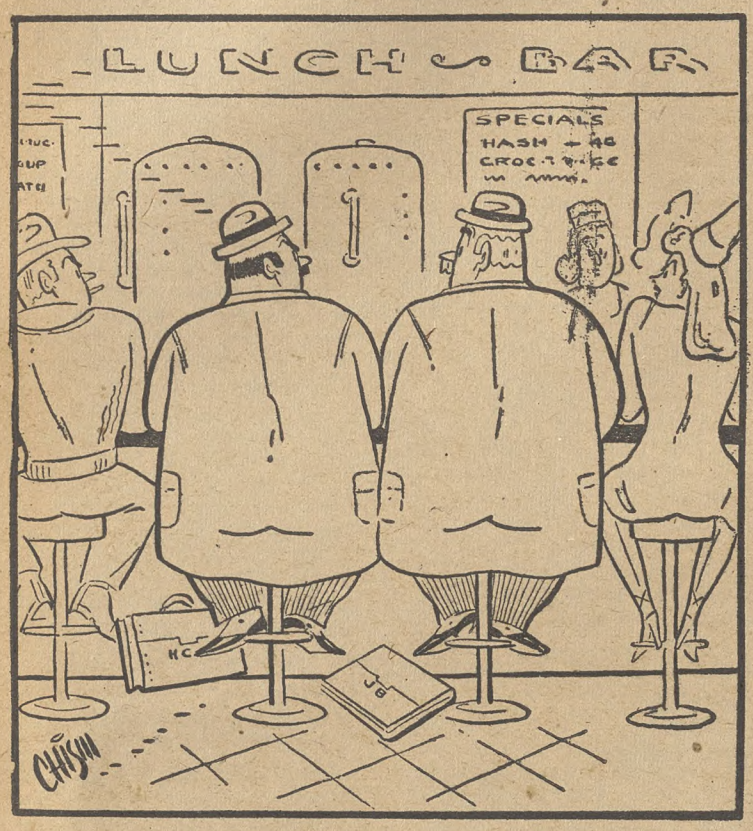
1. The Farm Equipment Workers joined a growing list of CIO affiliates by deciding "not to initiate or otherwise move to utilize the NLRB, which has been perverted into an official union-destroying agency."

The FE Executive Board told locals of the union to refer all cases of contact with the NLRB to the national headquarters in order to avoid being "hopelessly entangled . . . in endless litigations." The Board also recommended that every possible step be taken to insert strengthened union security provisions and eliminate "no strike" clauses from existing agreements.

2. UAW Pres. Walter Reuther suggested a series of national, state and local labor conferences among unions to "work out the broad framework for united action."

"The time to perfect practical working labor unity is right now," he said.

3. Edgar Warren, retiring head of the Dept. of Labor Conciliation Service, told a Washington audience that "labor-management relations problems cannot be properly handled by law, edict or regulation."



"They simply aren't built for us, Pemberton. It's like dining on a pogo stick!"

WORLD LABOR

PROTECTION of freedom of the press in Great Britain, through formation of a national press board, has been recommended to an investigating commission by the National Union of Journalists.

The press board, as suggested by the newsmen's unions, would include spokesmen for all groups in the publishing industry as well as the general public. The Royal Commission probing questions of British freedom of press was formed after the Journalists group charged the press was dominated by four monopoly groups whose top officials hand down orders on slanting of the news.

According to an Allied Labor News report, the union also urged creation of a public publishing corporation to provide premises and facilities for independent newspapers; a specific law barring monopolies in the newspaper field; a definite ration between space allotted to advertising and news; and compulsory publication of the names of newspaper owners and major stockholders.

THUMBS DOWN was the immediate reaction of Australian unions to a newspaper proposal that the island dominion adopt its own Taft-Hartley act.

The proposal was contained in an editorial in the Sydney Daily Telegraph.

Vice-Pres. Joseph Cranwell of the Australian Council of Trade Unions replied: "It is entirely a measure of repression. It would be fatal to industrial peace to try to introduce such a bill in Australia."

And Pres. Les Austen of the New South Wales Labor Council was reported by Allied Labor News as saying:

"The Council should repudiate the proposal lock, stock and barrel. I was amazed and astounded at the legislation carried by the U. S. Congress. It is akin to fascism."

Arthur Riordan, Philadelphia newspaper man for 21 years, has been named an assistant editor of the CIO News.

He will join the News staff Aug. 1, succeeding Fred d'Avila, who recently resigned.

Riordan has been active in local and national affairs of the American Newspaper Guild for many years.

Seek Communists

HOUSE GROUP OPENS PROBE OF CIO UNIONS

THE Un-American Activities Committee, which was condemned by the CIO at its 1946 convention, last week began delving into internal union affairs.

The Committee, headed by Rep. J. Parnell Thomas (R., N.J.), opened hearings on charges that Communists control Local 22 of the Food, Tobacco & Agricultural Workers at Winston-Salem, N. C., and seek to dominate locals of the United Electrical Workers at Bridgeport, Conn., and Schenectady, N. Y.

This brought bitter criticism from UE Pres. Albert Fitzgerald and FTA Pres. Donald Henderson.

Pres. Fitzgerald said the committee, whose members voted solidly for the Taft-Hartley Bill and crippling Wage-Hour Amendments, is seeking to weaken UE "so it may be less effective in its opposition to them at the polls next election day."

He also charged that the committee "is a willing agent of big business interests who want to weaken or destroy any organization that fights wage-cutting and the lowering of wage standards."

Henderson said the committee began its probe of Local 22 within a week after 8,000 members struck at R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. for an increase of more than the 5½c offered by the company.

TWO witnesses from the Bridgeport UE local—Pres. Michael Berescik and Business Agent Joseph Julianelle—accused five local and national union officials of being Communists but added they could not provide concrete proof.

Both men charged the national union had been seeking to remove the local charter since they "weeded out the Communists" and gained control of the local.

Berescik charged the national union had done "everything in its power" to prevent the removal of Communists from the Bridgeport local.

Julianelle said he and Berescik were elected last year on a platform calling for expulsion of Communists from their local.

He testified that the local's executive board refused to seat a "known Communist" and that the local itself later expelled 26 other union members believed to be Communists or Communist sympathizers.

UE Pres. Fitzgerald issued a statement saying Berescik and Julianelle were "completely discredited" in the eyes of UE members, that they had expelled 26 fellow unionists without a hearing and that they had been repudiated by the union's New England district.

A day earlier, members and a former office secretary of Local 22 took the stand.

Ann Matthews, the former secretary, testified a majority of the local's officers were Communists.

Gene Pratt, former chairman of the local, made a similar charge, but added that the recent Reynolds strike resulted from the wage issue and was not Communist inspired.

Henderson said two Local 22 business agents and the office secretary who made Communist charges at the hearing are "disgruntled former employes." He said Miss Matthews was discharged for refusing to reveal reasons for taking a leave of absence and that the other two refused to go along with other local employes in foregoing salaries for duration of the strike.

A third day of the hearing was scheduled for July 25, with two UE officials from Schenectady called to testify.

T-H Act Injunction Halts Dancing in the Streets

THE way some people interpret the Taft-Hartley law there'll be no more dancing in the streets.

This became clear last week when the Arthur Murray Studio, Washington, D. C., was able to convince Chief Justice Laws of the U. S. District Court that he should issue an injunction under the act to halt 13 pickets doing the congo in front of the studio.

The pickets were members of the CIO Office & Professional Workers, locked out by the Murray studio in New York City, and of Washington locals of CIO unions. When the marshal served the injunction the pickets were dancing and singing this ditty:

"One, two, three, kick,
Arthur Murray sign quick,
Two, four, six, eight,
Arthur Murray arbitrate,
Three, five, seven, nine,
Murray sign the dotted line."

The picket line was set up because the union charges that the Murray studio was being used to recruit scabs to take the place of 200 locked-out dancing instructors in New York City. The lockout occurrred when Murray refused to negotiate or even arbitrate after the CIO Office and Professional Workers won an election.

UOPWA attorneys said that they intended to prove that the Taft-Hartley act does not apply in this case and that they would appear in the U. S. District Court to fight steps to make the injunction permanent.

Sprucing Up

BUT I CAN'T WEAR IT

By HANNA SHERMAN

DO you scare easily? It's fine, if you don't, for it the fashion gals have their way, your last year's clothes are going to look definitely old hat when you take them out of the moth balls. The first major change in 20 years in fashion silhouette is under way. And the clothes you wore and liked for the last five years just won't rate.

The psychological warfare has begun. Here's what the editor of WOMEN'S WEAR, the trade publication of the fashion industry says: "Whether women like these styles or not, they'll wear them. Older women who are vain of their slim legs and men always against any fashion shift until it's accepted, will be the hardest to convince."

What about you and me? We're hard to convince, too. Maybe we're silly but we like the clothes we've been wearing. They make us look broad in the shoulders, slim thru the waist and they whittle down our hips. How's that for a silhouette? O.K. Suits us just fine. We're a healthy lot — growing taller—but still most of us are less than 5'3" tall.

Just ask the Dept. of Agriculture. They made a survey and found that while our figures are good we're not pin-up girls. The silhouette they're trying to sell us means narrow shoulders, wasp waists, (special girdles to produce this effect) padded hips. And skirts 12 inches from the ground!

THIS new silhouette originated in France where the women have always dressed in a manner most flattering to their figure. We didn't hear much about the great tradition of French dressmaking and design during the war years. They barely survived. Now with their industry somewhat recovered, they've made a great and valiant effort to regain their influence in world fashion.

We wish them much good luck. But they're designing clothes to flatter their women. Women who because of scarcity of food and the hardships they suffered during the war are probably the slimmest in all the world. The styles they're making and we're copying are wonderful for the too thin French figure. But not for us.

In a quiet way there has been a great deal of revolt against the new fashions. Customers have been shying away from the new styles—and we don't feel that there is too much to worry about.

HOLLYWOOD designers too, who have the greatest influence on American fashion, have been very cautious about accepting the new silhouette. They aim to make their stars look as glamorous as possible. Look at the clothes in the newest films. You'll find that your favorite movie star looks as slim as ever. And in clothes you'll recognize.

So it is with the clothes in the shops—most of them won't differ too radically from the clothes you've been wearing right along. One thing is certain. Hem lines are coming down, but we think it will be quite a while before American women will wear theirs shorter than 15" from the floor. After all we may not be the slimmest gals in the world but a much travelled ex-GI tells me we sure have the prettiest legs.

A CAMP FOR AMERICANS

In the mountains near Roscoe, N. Y., a children's private camp, co-educational and co-racial, was established more than 3 years ago in the belief that children and adults regardless of race and faith can live harmoniously together. Children have come there from many states. Among their parents have been social workers, nurses, clerks, lawyers, ministers, doctors, waitresses, artists. The children are learning how to live with and enjoy others who are different from themselves—something we must all learn if we are to live successfully in "One World."

Child Heroine Daughter Of CIO Member

A NEWS story about Daisy Sue Flinn, the 11-year-old girl in Festus, Mo., who jumped into a well to save her three-year-old brother, Larry, from drowning, received nation-wide publicity a few weeks ago. CIO'ers will be interested to know that Daisy Sue and Larry are the children of a CIO member.

Mrs. Leona Flinn, mother of the two children, belongs to Crystal City, Mo., Local 63, CIO Federation of Glass, Ceramic & Silica Sand Workers.

Since the story appeared in the papers, Daisy Sue has been receiving letters and gifts from all parts of the country and from several foreign countries, reports a Local 63 correspondent.

She was also invited to appear on the Columbia Broadcasting System's program, "We, the People," and offered a free trip to New York and an award of $1,000 for relating her experiences on the radio.

Daisy Sue showed her bravery when her brother, Larry, playing around the cistern, suddenly fell in. Although she could not swim, Daisy Sue jumped into the well without hesitation and held his head above water for nearly two hours while she clung desperately to the pump chain.

Neighbors finally heard her cries for help and rescued the children. When pulled out of the cistern, Larry was unconscious and Daisy Sue was suffering from exposure. Both recovered without ill effects.

'Lady Labor Leader'

PICTURE stories about good-looking girls are ever-popular old stuff in the slick paper magazines that load up the news stands weekly. But when the good-looker is a "Lady Labor Leader" it's something new.

This is the title of an excellent picture feature carried in the June 30th issue of Life. The "Lady Labor Leader" is Mrs. Caroline Davis of Elkhart, Ind., president of Local 704, CIO Auto Workers. She works in an auto-parts plant.

The feature takes Mrs. Davis through a typical day in her life. The handsome leading picture shows her operating a drill press at the plant.

Other photos show her at a bargaining session; presiding at a union meeting; listening to a woman worker's complaint; shopping after work, and finally relaxing at home with a book and her union paper, looking as glamorous as a movie star.

Too bad there aren't some photographers around the CIO who could shoot pictures as good as the "Lady Labor Leader" series for the labor press. There's plenty of swell material.

TRAINING LEADERS

A CIO sugar worker from Louisiana, Edward Sutton, (left) meets a CIO rubber worker from Tennessee, Bert D. Huddleston, at the CIO course held at Highlander Folk School.

A group of union members from locals of the Chemical and Sugar Workers gather on the lawn at Highlander to listen to Stuart Brock of the National CIO Dept. of Research & Education, who was a workshop leader at the one month's leadership training term sponsored by the CIO, June 15-July 12.

George Guernsey, asst. director of education for the National CIO is showing some unionists how to operate a film strip projector. Locals can obtain film strip kits, helpful in enlivening union meetings, from the National CIO.

Stanley Ruttenburg (left) asst. director of research for the CIO, is discussing some of the economic problems that effect labor with three members of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers. David Sigman, National Labor Service, (in chair) is listening in.

The Highlander library was a popular place for study, conferences and exchanging experiences with workers from other parts of the South. The group here are chemical workers from Louisiana, Tennessee and Georgia. Nine of the 22 students at the CIO school were chemical workers.

Gladys Dickason (second from left), vice-president, Amalgamated Clothing Workers, a week-end visitor and speaker at the CIO term, is talking with a group of members of her union.

Washington Conference

CALLS MISSOURI FLOOD UNNECESSARY

TVA has abolished floods throughout the Tennessee River Valley. TVA has brought cheap power, fertilizer, soil conservation and improved living standards to millions of people.

The same sort of project is needed for the big Missouri River Valley, a special conference in Washington decided last week.

Attended by Senators from several western states, by government officials, leaders of labor and farm organizations, engineers and economists, the meeting agreed that floods aren't necessary and can be prevented by effective government projects.

Such a project is outlined in S. 1156, a bill presented by liberal Sen. Murray (D. Mont.). The bill was ignored by the Republican-controlled Congress, many of whose members wish they could repeal the great dams of the TVA experiment.

A statement by Morris L. Cooke, noted engineer, sounded a note of warning at the Washington meeting.

"Floods rage uncontrolled," he said. "Life and property are destroyed. Rich croplands lose fertility as their topsoil washes away. Over wide areas, existing industries decline and new ones fail to come. Almost everywhere electric rates are exorbitant and electrical facilities grow more inadequate."

Yet, Cooke said, Congress is employing "false economy" on flood control, reclamation and development projects.

His views were backed up last week by CIO Pres. Philip Murray, who wrote to Pres. Truman that "unified planning" is necessary for each important river valley. Murray wrote:

"The problem of regulating the flow of our great rivers, in the Mississippi Valley and elsewhere, involves irrigation, hydro-electric power, soil conservation, reforestation, and mineral resource development—and not merely flood control and navigation."

Nothing less than a unified plan, Murray added, "will meet the needs of the people in the valleys and the national interest."

THE CIO president lashed out at the "Pick Plan" developed by the Army Engineers, as unsound, even for mere flood control work.

"Tinkering with half-way plans and squandering money on them is not in the interest of the people. The danger of many repetitions of the present great misfortune (of Missouri river floods) can be met only by the prompt development of a unified plan for all purposes."

At the Washington meeting, Benton J. Stong—a strong supporter of MVA—said that "assigning the U. S. Army Engineers to the job of controlling floods in a river is precisely like sending Typhoid Mary to stop a typhoid epidemic."

He said the Ohio River Valley has been fully developed by the Engineers and it is now the scene of "some of the nation's worst floods." The Missouri Valley has been only partly developed by the Army, Stong added, but "given time and a few more hundred million dollars, the Army doubtless can still all opposition to their stream-clogging boondoggles by the simple process of drowning out the population."

"The valley authority principle which we advocate is based upon the use of the river, its water and its power as the great natural engine which will set in motion soil programs, resources development, industrial growth and an expanding economy," Stong said.

"It contemplates that the river will be the dynamo for better human life, for higher incomes, for development of recreational facilities, abundant power and low-cost transportation.

"IF the river is committed to the Pick Plan strait-jacket then the mighty resources which could have been used to spark an expanding economy will have been wasted."

John Brophy, CIO councils director and chairman of CIO's Missouri Valley committee, was one of the sponsors of the two-day conference.

Keep Your Eye On Congress

BILL	WHAT IT DOES	FINAL STATUS
Taft-Hartley Anti-Labor Bill HR 3020	Places harsh restrictions on union activities.	Passed by Congress over Pres. Truman's veto.
Wage-Hour Amendments HR 2157	Makes sharp cuts in wage-hour enforcement power, bans portal-portal suit payments.	Passed by Congress and signed by Pres. Truman.
Knutson 'Spare-Rich' Tax Bill	Proposed big tax savings for wealthy, small savings for low income earners.	Passed twice by Congress; twice vetoed by Pres. Truman. Both vetoes were sustained.
'Swiss Cheese' Rent Control Bill	Extended rent control to March 31 '48—but provided "voluntary" increases, weaker enforcement, repeal of Vet Housing Act.	Passed by Congress and approved by Pres. Truman two days before old rent control law expired.
Taft-Hartley Repeal Bills S. 1628; HR 3945	Would repeal T-H Bill. Introduced in final weeks of session.	Referred to Senate & House Labor Committees—no action.
Aiken-Hatch Political Expenditures Repeal Bill S. 1613	Repeals ban on political expenditures by unions of corporations.	Referred to Senate & House Labor Committees—no action.
Taft-Wagner-Ellender Housing Bills S. 866; HR 2523	Provides long-range govt. aid for slum clearance, low-rent homes.	Approved by Senate Banking Committee—but pigeonholed in House & Senate.
65-75c Minimum Wage Bills S. 1404; HR 3764	Would lift present legal base pay from 40c to 65c, and to 75c in two years.	House Labor Comm. held hearings—but no action in House or Senate.
Natl. Health Insurance Bill S. 1320; HR 3548	Sets up natl. health insurance fund, like social security, based on 1½% payroll tax, to provide cash for medical bills.	Senate Labor Comm. held hearings—but no action in House or Senate.
Anti-bias bill S. 984; HR 2820	Sets up national agency to enforce no-discrimination hiring policies.	Senate Labor sub-committee reported favorably—but no action in House or Senate.
Anti-lynching bill S. 1352; HR 3488	Makes lynching a U. S. crime, with trials in federal courts.	No hearings—no action.
Anti-poll tax bill HR 7, 29	Outlaws tax as requirement for voting in U. S. elections in 7 southern states.	Passed suddenly in the House; no action in the Senate.

Kill Polltax Repeal Again

THE anti-polltax bill, suddenly pulled out of the Congressional hopper and passed in the House by almost a 3-1 vote, is resting securely in a Senate pigeonhole.

Called up by the GOP leadership, the bill to outlaw the tax on voting in federal elections in seven southern states, received a whopping 290-112 endorsement.

Republicans lined up almost solidly behind the bill, along with most of the northern Democrats. Some 14 Republicans and 98 Democrats, mostly from the Southern states, opposed the bill.

Passage was for the third time in 8 years in the House, but the Senate polltaxers have always used filibuster or threat of filibuster to send the measure to an oratorical graveyard.

No action on the measure in the Senate is possible until the next session convenes next January, and observers say it will require tremendous pressure to move the bill out of committee and on to the floor.

The Natl. Committee to Abolish the Poll Tax, which has been working for passage of the bill during the past several years, reported that Sen. Wherry (R., Nebr.), the GOP Senate "whip," predicted a "good chance" of enactment next year. He indicated support and hoped it would be brought up early at the next session.

SENATE GROUP SCOTCHES ALL-OUT 'WITCH-HUNT'

POSSIBILITY of a full-scale "Witch-hunt" among federal employees was scotched—for the time being at least—when the Senate Civil Service Committee cancelled hearings on the Rees "Loyalty" Bill.

The measure, passed by the House a week earlier, provided for a probe of Uncle Sam's two million employes. Under the bill, suspected subversions would be denied the right to cross-examine their accusers, and could be denied the right to know who had filed charges against them.

The bill further gave the Attorney-General power to brand any organization in the country as "subversive."

Faced with these propositions, the Civil Service Committee on the Senate side of the Capitol refused to rush in where the House had dared to tread. Sen. Langer (R., N. D.), committee chairman, said "a bill of this sort, which may take from employes their very existence, should not pass until it is digested thoroughly."

Earlier in the week CIO Legislative Director Nathan Cowan voiced strong objections to the Rees Bill and to the President's Executive Order 9835. This latter so-called Loyalty Order "contains most of the basic shortcomings of the Rees bill," Cowan noted.

"The CIO firmly believes that no person who is in fact disloyal to the U. S. government should be permitted to work for it," he said.

"It believes equally firmly that no government employe should be branded with the odious stigma of disloyalty without a full and impartial hearing in which he is given an opportunity to defend himself according to the true traditions of American justice.

"We believe the Rees bill contains provisions which would deny federal employes such opportunity."

The New York Times, whose editorial opinions rarely coincide with those of the CIO, also expressed strong opposition to the bill, which it described as "thoroughly bad."

"It lacks all the elements of a decent respect for democratic rights and the standards of fair play," the Times commented.

The House Appropriations Committee recommended an $11 million fund for loyalty checks of employes under the terms of the executive order.

ANTI-LYNCH BILL KISS-OFF SCORED

Sharp protests against pigeonholing of anti-lynching bills were forwarded by CIO to GOP Congressional leaders as the first session of the 80th Congress moved into the homestretch last week.

In the month since introduction of bills in the Senate and House, CIO Legislative Director Nathan Cowan pointed out, "Congress has made no move to bring about the enactment of these bills into law, and no mention is made of passing an anti-lynch law in the program of 'must' legislation set forth by Republican leaders in Congress."

Cowan's letter, addressed to Sen. Taft (R. Ohio) and Speaker of the House Joseph Martin (R. Mass.), charged that local law enforcement agencies have proved their inadequacy to the job of bringing lynchers to justice."

Charging that lynchings have risen in number since V-J Day, the CIO official declared:

"Failure of this session of Congress to pass a federal anti-lynching law will be interpreted as an indication of national indifference to this problem both by potential victims and by the inciters of race hatred and lynchings."

The bills introduced in House and Senate would make lynching a federal crime, with offenders brought into U. S. District Courts for trial. At present, such cases are heard in state courts.

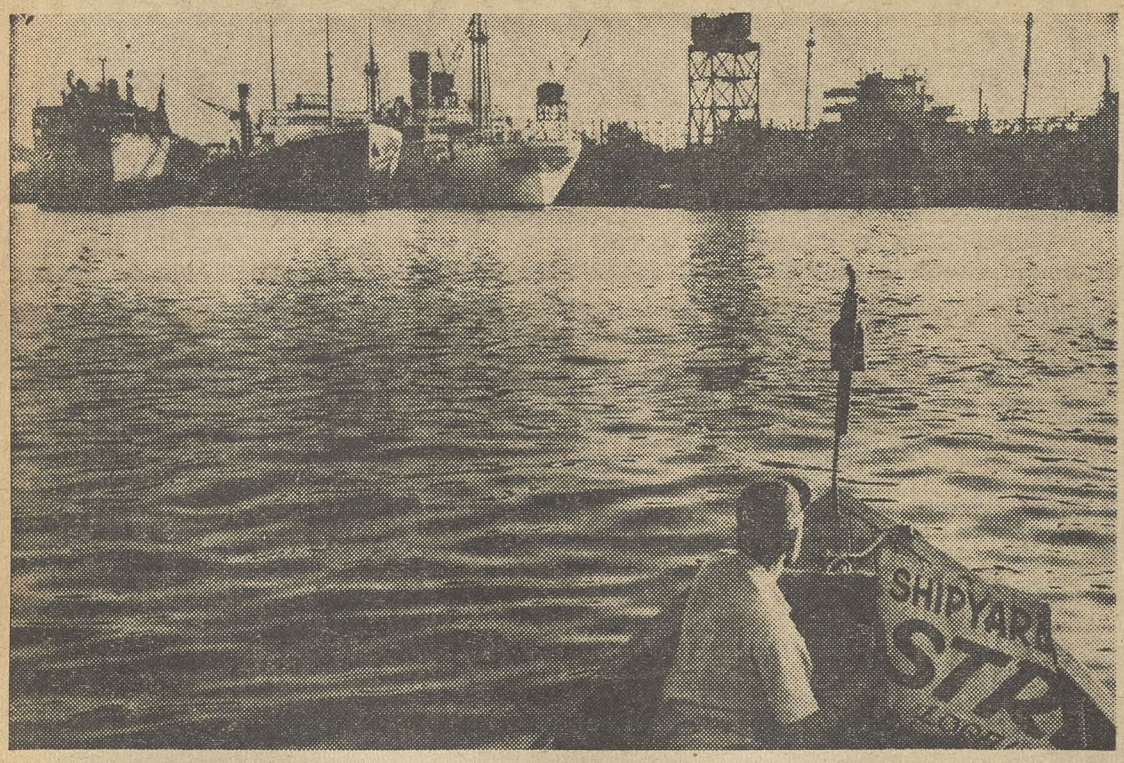
AMPHIBIOUS PICKETS



Ship unions, including two foreign crews, honor the CIO Shipbuilding Workers' picket line at Bethlehem Steel's Staten Island Yard. Here, Eddie Surko (you saw him on page one) patrols five American, a Canadian and a Swedish ship.

In addition to his other duties, Eddie Surko visits Tom Bell, who has a lonely vigil at an isolated gate.

A friendly merchant loans Local 12 part of his restaurant for picket duty headquarters. Handing out signs doesn't interfere with business.

Only a token picket line is needed on Staten Island, since everyone is out.

Militancy pays off as Todd Shipyard workers return to jobs, victorious. Affected are 23,000 in Brooklyn, Hoboken and New Orleans. Andrew Higgins' yards at New Orleans also have settled.

"Adams, I was completely mortified to learn that you went over my head about that raise! Why don't you let me be the first to refuse it?"

Murray at Memorial:

HILLMAN INSPIRES POLITICAL ACTIVITY

SIDNEY HILLMAN, late president of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers, was hailed as a "great American" and a "great labor statesman" at a big memorial meeting in his honor on July 30.

More than 2,000 union members and friends of labor attended the services at Carnegie Hall, New York City.

CIO Pres. Philip Murray, recalling the days when the CIO Political Action Committee was formed under the chairmanship of Hillman, told the audience that the work of the CIO-PAC would go on with ever increasing vigor.

"We cannot accept the physical absence of Sidney Hillman here tonight as evidence that his work is over and done," he said. In preparation for the 1948 elections, Murray asserted, a get-out-the-vote drive such as the country had never seen would be conducted.

A MESSAGE from President Truman presented at the meeting praised Sidney Hillman for his contributions to peaceful labor-management relations.

"He was a great labor statesman. He was a great humanitarian," the message read. "His life work bore testimony to the fundamental American principle of a close partnership among all segments of our national life."

Mayor O'Dwyer of New York City, like Murray, stressed the importance of strengthening labor's political power, as the most fitting memorial to Hillman. He urged labor to carry forward the work on which the late union leader had spent so much of his time and energy.

Jacob S. Potofsky, friend and union associate of Hillman for many years and his successor as president of the Amalgamated, told of Hillman's achievements in leading the men and women of the clothing industry out of the sweatshops "into the full sunlight of economic and political citizenship."

"Hillman's pioneering vision in the fields of labor-management relations, arbitration, cooperative housing and a comprehensive social security system for Amalgamated members stands as a living monument to his greatness," Potofsky said.

RABBI Stephen S. Wise, president of the American and World Jewish Congress, paid glowing tribute to the accomplishments of Hillman and mentioned as worth noting that "much of the legislation adopted by the Congress has been in little disguised reprisal against the memory of Franklin Delano Roosevelt, and in rejection of the New Deal."

He declared that the Taft-Hartley Bill was in effect "an attempt to desecrate" Roosevelt's grave, and "in this unholy task" he said, "Sidney Hillman is not overlooked or forgotten."

A message from the Most Rev. Francis J. Haas, bishop of the Grand Rapids (Mich.) diocese, praised Hillman as "a man to whom the labor movement in our country and even throughout the world can point with deepest feelings of its own achievements."

TWO MORE QUIT TAFT BOARD STAFF

Two key regional officials of the National Labor Relations Board have resigned as a result of the Taft-Hartley Act, which becomes law August 23.

They are Martin Wagner, regional director at Cincinnati, and Earl K. Shawe, for 10 years regional attorney at Baltimore. Their resignations follow those of Gerhard P. Van Arkel, general counsel, and Morris P. Glushien, associate general council, of the NLRB.

Wagner stated he felt he could not administer the new law.

Shawe declared: "I feel this is the logical time, inasmuch as the new Taft-Hartley Act is about to become effective and anyone succeeding me should begin his work at the inception of the act. There are many new and complex conceptions of labor relations involved and this will be a period of experimentation and exploration. A new man should be permitted to start from the very beginning."

Murray to Green:

AFL EXECUTIVE BOARD SABOTAGES UNITY

THE AFL's Executive Council is trying to prevent "working unity" between members of the CIO and AFL, Pres. Philip Murray charged last week in a letter to AFL Pres. William Green.

Murray's letter rejected the AFL's thesis that complete merger of CIO and AFL must be accomplished before effective joint action can be worked out.

"It now becomes apparent that it is the objective of the Executive Council of the AFL to prevent the members of organized labor from effectuating their keen desire to establish immediate working unity to defeat the drive of reaction on both economic and political fronts," Murray wrote.

"Your refusal to discuss this vital subject while insisting upon long drawn-out negotiations with reference to organizational unity must be viewed with alarm by all who appreciate the dangers which presently confront labor and the nation.

"It is undoubtedly this understanding which is presently prompting increasing numbers among the ranks of labor within the AFL and CIO to arrive at mutual agreements eliminating division or conflict and providing for joint action against our common enemy."

MURRAY said the CIO unity committee of five members will "hold itself in readiness" for further talks with the AFL when the AFL feels able to give "full consideration to our immediate problems as well as the objective of the establishment of a united labor movement."

The CIO president's letter was sent after he had conferred with the other members of the unity committee in New York. Present for the conference were Pres. Albert J. Fitzgerald of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers; Pres. Jacob Potofsky of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers; Pres. Walter Reuther of the Auto Workers; and Pres. Emil Rieve of the Textile Workers.

Murray said they had discussed Green's letter of July 16, which had called for immediate talks on absolute merger of the two organizations.

The CIO president said the committee felt the "position taken by you and the Executive Council of the AFL" in response to Murray's call on July 2 for joint action on immediate issues was "completely inconsistent with the joint statement adopted by the unity committees" of CIO and AFL when they met together in Washington early in May of this year.

THE joint statement, quoted by Pres. Murray, noted that organic unity should be established and that a united labor movement would best serve the economic, social and industrial interests of American workers. The joint statement had indicated that this and other mutual problems would be dealt with in future AFL-CIO meetings, and concluded with a pledge that "we shall devote our energies and purpose toward the realization of this common objective."

In his letter to Green, Murray said:

"It was distinctly our understanding that we had jointly recognized the imperative need for an immediate, common and unified program of policy and action on the part of organized labor to protect the living standards of the American people and to assure effective political expression on the part of our membership.

"We understood that future meetings between the CIO and AFL unity committees would evolve a program of joint action, in addition to opening the way for further discussions incidental to the formation and establishment of a strong, united labor movement in the United States."

CIO ASKS PERSONAL FREEDOM FOR REPORTER

CIO unions throughout northern Ohio are rallying to support Eleanor Coakley, former Newspaper Guild international vice-president, who was shifted out of a reporting job after election as Toledo CIO Council recording secretary.

Miss Coakley, a state news desk reporter on the Toledo Blade, was placed in a "research" position in the paper's clipping file department, on orders of Publisher Paul Block, Jr.

The Ohio-Pennsylvania District of the Guild called the publisher's action a contract violation and an infringement upon Miss Coakley's personal freedom.

ELEANOR COAKLEY

A delegation of Toledo CIO officials is preparing to discuss the matter fully with Block in the near future.

The Toledo Union Journal, published by the big Local 12 of the CIO Auto Workers, described the transfer of Miss Coakley as a contract violation and "an obvious attempt to break the union."

It said the paper's policy of seeking to keep its reporters outside all labor, business and political organizations is aimed at preventing any thoughts which do not "originate in the chemically pure brain of their would-be master."

Miss Coakley, reporter of long experience, had been assigned to the state desk on the paper's editorial staff before her election to the CIO council post.

The Guild bi-state council in turn asserted that the move was a reflection upon the integrity of Guild members, and said it inferred without a single bit of evidence that Guild members "cannot be trusted as objective workers."

Paul Schrader, managing editor of the Blade, told The CIO News that the action against Miss Coakley was in line with Publisher Block's desire to "have writers of news and opinion free from affiliation with organizations whereby bias might be charged."

SCHRADER said such a policy would not prevent the election of reporters or editorial writers to positions in the Guild. The city CIO council was a different type of case, he maintained, and election to one of its offices would presumably cause bias in the reporter's mind.

Schrader said that the transfer of Miss Coakley to a non-editorial job was in no sense a demotion. The paper, he said, had long been looking for someone with editorial background who would have expert knowledge of which old clippings should be retained in the files and which it was safe to chuck in the wastebasket.

BOARD OR CLUB?

THERE is convincing evidence that Taft-Hartley followers intended to change the National Labor Relations Board into a club with which to beat the advance of unionism.

Every man who has been in a fight has a healthy respect for a club. Consequently, he ducks automatically when he sees one being swung in his direction.

This should explain the action taken by many CIO unions. They decided that sticking their heads up and inviting industry to take a swing at them simply wasn't sound business.

Neither cowardice nor defiance prompted their decision to "boycott" the NLRB. They just didn't want to be standing in the path down which the club is likely to be swung.

After all, the guys who are trying to grab the swinging end of the club have demonstrated they don't like unions.

CASE OF THE GIRL REPORTER

IT seems to us that fundamental principles are involved in the Paul Block Jr.-Eleanor Coakley fiasco at Toledo.

Miss Coakley, president of the Toledo Newspaper Guild and a former Guild international vice president, accepted a city CIO council post.

As a result, Miss Coakley was relieved of her job as a reporter on the Toledo Blade and assigned to the reference library.

Publisher Block took the position that his paper was justified in making such a change. The Guild and other CIO groups disagreed sharply with him.

We could say a lot about personal freedom and the relationship of union affiliation to objective reporting, but we won't.

We'll just wonder out loud if Publisher Block would have taken similar action had Miss Coakley accepted an honorary post with the Chamber of Commerce.

Child, looking at labor cartoonist's drawing of Republican leader, asked, "Pop, does G. O. P. stand for Grumpy Old Plutocrat?"

Definition of union security: Fixing things up so you'll still have a union when you need it most.

It's a toss-up over whether the officeholders or the public needed a Congressional vacation worse.

Sideshow Creates the Headlines, But The Real Story Is Being Written Quietly

By ALLAN L. SWIM

CIO's membership campaign in the South at times has taken on the aspects of a three-ring circus.

At other times it has been as deadly serious as an important military maneuver.

Between these two extremes organizers have carried on the often dull day-by-day activities that build unions.

The drive at Oak Ridge, conducted within the framework of regulations issued by the Army, was nearly as fantastic as the atom bomb itself.

The campaigns that resulted in 20 organizers and local union leaders being physically assaulted illustrated the bitterness that sometimes comes with efforts to alter management-labor relationships.

The Oak Ridge-type ballyhoo, the bloody noses, the rough-and tumble tactics and the spectacular wins and losses made the headlines. They provided the sideshow that kept the public interested.

The reporters who wrote about the Southern drive generally ignored the important story—the one that is being written quietly in the "main tent."

DIXIE has made great strides in recent years—but dingy, upainted shacks still line the highways from Texas to Virginia and from Florida to Oklahoma.

Industral expansion below the Mason-Dixie Line since 1940 has been remarkable, yet thousands of men and women still work under poor conditions for substandard pay.

Southern states have become accustomed to spending a large portion of their total incomes for education, yet their schools generally are not on a par with those in other parts of the nation.

There has been a great growth of tolerance and understanding throughout the Southland, yet the region still has its Ku Klux Klan and its other "hate" groups.

Unionization has gained a firm foothold in many Southern cities, but the management-dominated company town still exists.

What the CIO is attempting to do about these things is the real story—the one that is being written gradually and quietly.

It's a story of a fight for economic and political independence.

It's a story that deals with the Bilbos and the Rankins and the thinking that motivates them.

A way of life—not just dollars and working conditions—is involved in most of the membership campaigns the CIO is conducting in the South.

There are a few fine houses in nearly every town that has an industrial plant. In these houses live men who dominate the life of the community.

They determine the wages and the working conditions at the plant. They exercise a great measure of control over local politics. They have powerful voices in the selection of school teachers and ministers.

Unorganized workers may not like the decisions the men in the fine houses make, but the smart ones keep their mouths shut or they leave town.

Or they decide to help organize a CIO union!

When the union comes it brings with it radical changes, because it permits men and women to have some voice in the affairs that make up their daily lives.

It gives them a new concept of economic and political freedom.

The mill owners know this—so they fight and they fight bitterly.

THE real story of the CIO's Southern drive is a story of a great effort to eliminate the North-South pay rate differential.

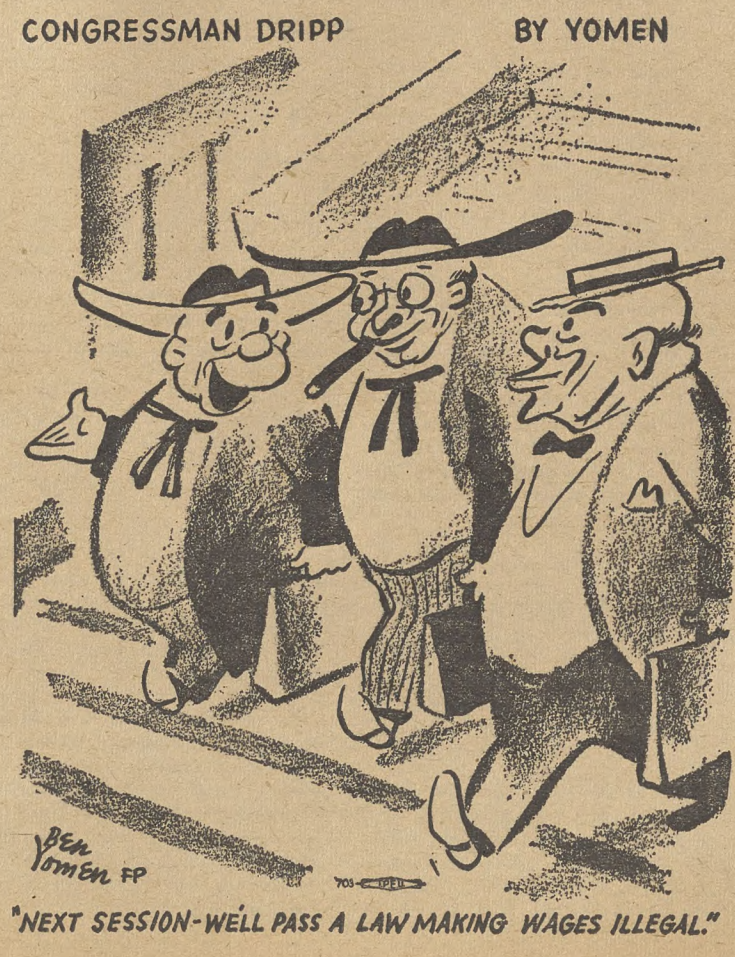
It is a story of an attempt to wipe out substandard living and working conditions.

It is a story of a fight to lift the South from its designation as the country's "Economic Problem No. 1."

Leaders of the CIO know that their organization cannot do the entire job that needs to be done. They know they can do part of it.

The real importance of the job is realized only by those who know that economic and political life throughout the nation will be greatly affected by the gains the CIO makes below the Mason-Dixon line.

It's a mistake to refer to the campaign as the "Southern CIO drive." Actually, it's the CIO's drive in the South to improve conditions throughout the country.



Pretty Brutal

"THEY don't want nobody now. Get out!"

"I don't wan'cha. Beat it."

This is the kind of greeting factory workers applying for jobs are most likely to receive, says Alex Walliston, a factory worker himself for the past 18 years who tells the story of his hiring, firing and other job experiences in the August issue of The Rotarian.

In an article entitled "A Worker Speaks Up!" Walliston tells some simple things that all workers know, but apparently few bosses are aware of, judging by their personnel policies.

Workers applying for jobs, he says, are customarily "received with no more decorum than is extended to a drove of hogs."

"Do you imagine, when such people are hired, that they are brimming over with a desire to give their all for dear old Rah Rah Manufacturing Company? Most workers are cynical and resentful before they even start their jobs, and the blame can be put squarely on the employer's shoulders."

Here's the account Walliston gives of applying for a job to which he was referred by the USES. Arriving at 7 in the morning, he found about 30 other men and women also waiting in "an unlighted, unheated corridor which led into the factory."

Finally at quarter to 10 an unshaven man wearing a dirty shirt slammed a window up.

"We don't want no girls here!" he said, in a petulant, high-pitched voice. "We don't want no girls! Go home, girls!"

The women filed out. The men waited. At quarter past 11 the same man slammed the same window up.

"We don't want no men neither!" he squeaked. "Get out, men!"

This says Walliston is no exception. It's what the average worker runs into whenever he's looking for a job.

Preacher Brown and the Textile Village

NOBODY would even mention the possibility of defeat—that is, not out loud.

Underneath there was considerable doubt There always is in an important election campaign, and this was no exception.

Much hinged on the outcome—perhaps the success or failure of the textile organizing drive in a wide area. Those in charge knew this.

They knew, too, that the opposition probably would become rugged as the date approached for the casting of ballots.

ORGANIZERS had wanted a peaceful, quiet campaign. They thought it would be a good idea to conduct their work in such a way that the textile workers could decide for or against the CIO on its merits alone.

They knew, of course, that it takes time to heal the wounds. Thus they sought to avoid a fight.

Management, however, couldn't see it that way. Its representatives refused even to talk with a committee that wanted to discuss the possibility of holding a consent election.

So the workers shut down the plant.

STRIKES are never pleasant—but this one gave CIO organizers at Rockingham, N. C., the information they needed.

Now they knew that employes of Safie Manufacturing Co. had the fighting spirit that builds unions.

With this knowledge and management's decision—after the strike began—to consent to an early election came the realization that the chips were down.

When this happens it's time to get ready for the fur to fly.

THE campaign moved into high gear, with both sides pulling back hard on the throttle.

The mimeograph ran late into the night, turning out leaflets. The publicity men moved into town. Advertising space and radio time were purchased.

The word battle was on in earnest. The union men felt they were getting a little the best of it, but there was something missing.

That's when Preacher Brown came in.

REV. NOAH BROWN, Baptist minister, is a man of strong convictions—a man who understands the trials and tribulations of the textile workers.

He doesn't believe in merely giving lip service to a good idea. He believes in getting right into the middle of a battle.

And that's what he did when he learned religious prejudice was being used in an effort to keep workers out of the CIO.

He didn't quibble about the part he was asked to play. He did what his conscience told him he should do.

PREACHER BROWN stepped up to a microphone in a Rockinghan radio station and began speaking.

He sharply condemned those who were "sowing seeds of discord" among the textile workers. He threw his support solidly behind the CIO.

A day or two later employes of Safie Manufacturing Co. went to the polling places set up by the National Labor Relations Board. They voted in favor of the Textile Workers Union of America.

Among those who rejoiced most was Rev. Noah Brown—for, after all, he had a personal interest in the outcome. His brother, Alex Brown, was president of the Safie CIO local.

NAM VERSION OF NEW NLRB

'Who Helped Kill OPA?' Taylor Asks As Taft, Wherry Urge Price Probe

THERE'S much to be said for being a Senator.

Elevators in the Capitol take you directly to the floor you want, and then, more leisurely, take care of other passengers. You get good haircuts cheap, and the Senate restaurant, by your order, carries its famous bean soup on the menu every day.

Also, Senate membership gives a person wonderful chances for some good oral infighting with such Republican stalwarts as Mr. Taft and Mr. Wherry.

Sen. Glen Taylor, an Idaho New Dealer, got in his licks late in the night of July 25 as the Senate was plowing through a mass of last-minute business.

Up for approval by the Congressional topside was a Taft proposal to investigate high prices of consumer goods. The proposal was on the unanimous consent calendar, where non-controversial measures are placed for quick, easy passage if no member objects.

As the Taft proposal came up, Taylor said: "I object."

He added, with a relish that any housewife would envy:

"This resolution reaches the ultimate in ridiculousness.

"We all know why prices are high.

"We have high prices because the distinguished senior Senator from Ohio (Mr. Taft) and the distinguished junior Senator from Nebraska (Mr. Wherry) tried to outdo each other in seeing who could scuttle most of the OPA the quicker.

"So what is the use of investigating unless we investigate the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from Nebraska, and why they did it?

". . . This business of investigating is getting to be a racket. In fact, it has gone to such lengths that a song has been written about it, whose title is: 'Who's Going to Investigate the Man That Investigates the Man that Investigates Me'?"

Next day Sen. Baldwin (R. Conn.) asked for reconsideration of the matter. Taylor, describing himself as "a rather soft-hearted person," said he wouldn't object.

But he couldn't resist one parting shot.

"If it is found that the Senator from Ohio (Mr. Taft) and the Senator from Nebraska (Mr. Wherry) are to blame for high prices, I hope the committee will make a finding to that effect. It is a little too much too expect, but I still cling to that hope," said Sen. Taylor amid laughter from his colleagues.

So, in the next couple of months, straight-faced gentlemen from Sen. Taft's Joint Committee on the Economic Report will be visiting a batch of cities to find out why your dollar doesn't stretch like it used to.

'Poll-Tax Charlie'

"WE could handle any ordinary organizer — but that cursed preacher . . ." said the president of the company where the Amalgamated Clothing Workers was conducting a drive several years ago.

He was referring to the Rev. Charles Webber, now president of the Virginia CIO State Council.

The incident is told in an article, "God's Labor Organizer" by Al Reitman, CIO-PAC publicity director, in the August issue of Magazine Digest. It's the story of how and why Mr. Webber, an ordained Methodist minister, became a labor organizer called "Poll-Tax Charlie" by friends and foes, and was appointed chaplain to organize labor by Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam of the Methodist Conference.

Mr. Webber, who regards himself as "just a natural-born missionary" objects to be spoken of as a "preacher turned labor leader."

"I haven't turned anything." he says. "I am following God as eagerly as I know how—but it so happens that I believe God is working in and through the labor movement, imperfect as it is, for the establishment of a religious, social and economic order."

Born on a farm near Ann Arbor, Mich., 55 years ago, Mr. Webber has had enough exciting things happen to him during the 26 years he has been actively interested in the labor movement to fill a book.

CIO Wins at Virginia Plant Without NLRB Poll

ERNEST B. Pugh has demonstrated that recognition elections can be conducted without NLRB supervision.

It happened recently at Harrisonburg, Va., where employes of the Daly Brothers shoe manufacturing plant voted 149 to 17 in favor of CIO Shoe Workers.

Pugh, Virginia director of the CIO Organizing Committee, was testing out the theory of Director Van A. Bittner of the Committee that unions can be established successfully without certification from the National Labor Relations Board.

Bittner termed the Harrisonburg election "an example of good labor-management relations without the NLRB and the new Taft-Hartley Act."

"This was a locally conducted consent election, without the supervision of NLRB," Bittner said.

"SIX representatives from the union and from the company conducted the election democratically and certified the reuslts. It is an example of how friendly and fair relations can be maintained between labor and management without the delays and technicalities of the new labor law."

Negotiations for a contract between company and union will begin at once, Bittner said. Lewis W. Haynie, field representative of the CIO Organizing Committee, said main points in the union's contract proposal would be a 15c hourly wage increase, an improved vacation plan, hospitalization and medical care provisions.

Bittner recently announced that because of the Taft-Hartley Act he was instructing his state directors not to file any more certification petition with NLRB.

"We built strong unions long before there was an NLRB to provide official certification," he said. "We can build strong unions under the Taft-Hartley Act — without turning to NLRB —if we work hard at our organizing tasks."

39,000 IN TEXTILE, UE WIN PAY GAINS

A TOTAL of 39,000 members of two CIO unions won pay increases and paid holidays last week.

Largest number benefiting were 30,000 members of the Textile Workers who received 5c hourly increases and 5 paid holidays.

After 51 days on the picket line 9,000 members of the Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers returned to their jobs with a wage increase of 8c an hour and 6 paid holidays.

Members of the Textile Union receiving the pay boosts are employed at New Bedford and Fall River, Mass., but TWUA Pres. Emil Rieve said that the gains are expected to establish a pattern for the rest of the New England cotton-rayon industry.

A conference of union delegates in May had hoped to encourage a drop in prices by refraining from seeking wage increases.

It was decided instead to seek paid holidays and other fringe issues, but to these demands the employers said no. When the costs of living continued to spiral, the union presented its demands for increases.

Also included in the new agreements is a clause which exempts the union from damage suits for "wild-cat" strikes. The clause states that the union is not to be held responsible for any strike unless authorized by the international president in writing.

During the Remington-Rand strike the union charged the company with employing strike-breaking tactics based on the Mohawk Valley Formula. which Remington-Rand originated 10 years ago.

Although the company succeeded in mobilizing the sheriff and the prosecutor against the union at Benton Harbor, Mich., in line with the formula, the tactic boomeranged when use of firehoses and police nightsticks helped to rally public opinion to the side of the union. The union accused the company of instigating "phony" back-to-work movements, designed to foment violence on the line and bring police intervention.

Following failure of the plan at all five of the company's struck plants company president, James H. Rand, on his yacht, communicated by radio phone with UE Pres. Alfred J. Fitzgerald to reach a settlement.

The American factory worker is producing 2% to 3% more than he did a year ago, but this week's pay envelope buys 4% less.

When moving gas cylinders by crane or derrick, use a suitable cradle or platform; never slings or an electric magnet. Valve protection caps, when provided for, should always be in place except when cylinders are connected for use.

Tenn. Elects New President

EARL A. CROWDER, national representative of the CIO Steelworkers at Memphis, Tenn., was unanimously elected president of the Tennessee CIO Council last week at the council's annual convention at Memphis.

Crowder succeeds W. A. Copeland, who declined to run for re-election. Copeland was elected a vice-president.

The 400 delegates attending the two-day meeting were addressed by CIO Vice-Pres. and Director of Organization Allan S. Haywood, Director Van A. Bittner of the CIO Organizing Committee and John Brophy, CIO Director of Industrial Union Councils. All three hit at and called for the repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act.

Haywood advised the delegates to defy the law "when it should be defied" and charged that Sen. Robert A. Taft and Rep. Fred Hartley had appointed themselves "business agents" for the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers.

Labor will not have to worry about the T-H law or other pieces of anti-labor legislation, Bittner said, after it has completed the job of organizing "because we will wipe them from the statute books."

Calling for the organization of CIO's political forces and financial support for the CIO Political Action Committee, Brophy urged CIO members to work for "remedial legislation" as well as for repeal of the T-H act.

STRIKE OF 108,000 LOOMS AT FORD

A strike by 108,000 Ford employes, members of the CIO Auto Workers, was a possibility as the CIO News went to press.

Denying the company's contention that the major point of conflict centered around inclusion of a "no-penalty" caluse in the union contract, UAW Vice-Pres. Richard Leonard claimed that the strike, if called, would be "because the company has failed to make good on the pension plan it promised."

During pension negotiations, the union requested inclusion of a clause releasing it from responsibility for "wild cat" strikes, for which the UAW would otherwise be liable under the Taft-Hartley Act.

CIO ORGANIZING COMMITTEE

Director Van A. Bittner advises that an election for bargaining rights was agreed upon and conducted by union and management without the NLRB and the Taft-Hartley Bill, in which the employes of Daly Brothers shoe manufacturing plant in Harrisonburg, Va., voted for United Shoe Workers, CIO, as its bargaining agent by a vote of 149 to 17.

At Reed Roller Bit plant, Houston, Tex., a smashing two-to-one victory was won by USA-CIO. The vote was CIO 908, IAM 460. This culminates almost two years of concentrated work at this plant which involved the combatting of vicious literature issued by the IAM. Congratulations to all participating in this wonderful victory for CIO!

Enthusiasm for CIO prevailed everywhere and a resolution was adopted to effectuate plans to intensify organizing activities.

Following the adjournment of the convention, a mass meeting was held and the hall was filled to capacity. An enthusiastic crowd heard Van A. Bittner, director, CIO Organizing Committee and Vice President, USA-CIO, deliver a splendid and inspiring address. Memphis is about the best organized city in the South today and the workers are proud of the fact that they are associated with CIO.

The writer then proceeded to St. Louis and addressed a meeting of representatives of all CIO affiliates in that area on the Taft-Hartley Bill and the necessity for united action on political action matters.

The writer attended the Tennessee State Convention in Memphis last week. This was the largest convention it had ever had.

AT&T CANCELS RECOGNITION

FOLLOWING the decision of the American Union of Telephone Workers (long lines) to affiliate with the CIO, the American Telephone and Telegraph Co., last week withdrew recognition of the union.

Condemned by union spokesmen as a "reprisal" against its transfer to the CIO, the company called for an NLRB election or other evidence that the union still represented a majority of the 23,000 workers.

The issue may stop pay increases retroactive to May 9 and due to begin August 21. The raises, averaging $4.40 a week, were won during the 7-week telephone strike last May.

HELLO, CIO SPEAKING

By GLORIA CAPLAN

WITH the formation last April of CIO's Telephone Workers Organizing Committee, CIO entered the telephone arena—and it's there to stay.

The move by telephone workers toward CIO is not new, although the TWOC is only two months old. As early as 1941 Jack Moran, president of the "long lines" telephone union, had approached CIO's organization director, Allan S. Haywood, for advice on how best to build a "real" union.

Haywood's advice at that time was, as it continues to be: "Work for unity within the telephone industry, then seek affiliation with the mainstream of the American labor movement."

Without making an open attempt to bring the telephone workers into its ranks, the CIO advised and worked in behalf of the telephone unions over the past six years.

CIO cooperation had been instrumental during the war in obtaining a telephone commission on the War Labor Board to handle the complex wage structures of the industry. Before the commission was established it had taken a New York operator 12 years to reach the maximum of $29 a week.

Strike Averted

In March, 1946, telephone workers faced a nationwide strike virtually unprepared. CIO advice again aided in a peaceful settlement and a nationwide wage pattern was established for the industry. Both the National Federation of Telephone Workers and the American Union of Telephone Workers (long lines) again acknowledged with thanks CIO's assistance.

But the NFTW, a federation of about 51 unions, still refused affiliation with either of the two major labor organizations. They paid the price of independence the following year.

In April of this year the nation's half million telephone workers tried to subdue a giant with slingshots. The giant—American Telephone and Telegraph—greatest holding company in the world—was almost unmoved and unscathed after seven weeks of conflict. The telephone unions went home to lick their wounds and to devise new weapons.

Unity Only at Top

There were those who attributed the poor showing to the lack of a close-knit organization. Indeed, the NFTW had been an attempt at unity, but had provided it only at the top.

Although the industry was a "natural" for industrial unionization, telephone workers had been divided into over 100 unions of all sizes and shapes, duplicating each other's efforts, working independently of each other and sometimes in opposition to each other in the same plant or the same town.

The telephone "house-divided" was made to order by the industry. In structure it is the continuation by the workers of the old Employe Representation Plans, more commonly known as "company unions" specifically designed to keep the employes' right hand from knowing what the left hand was doing. When the Wagner Act outlawed company unions, the workers retained the structure and thereafter, like Topsy, the unions in the industry "just growed."

The NFTW last November adopted a constitution for a new national organization which was supposed to provide the unity that NFTW had lacked. But the new organization — Communications Workers of America—turned out to be little more than another name for the same old thing. The organization was retained with one major difference. Affiliates of CWA were in effect forbidden by Article 26 of the constitution to withdraw from the organization —except by majority vote of the entire national membership. In contrast with this manner of counting ballots, CWA permitted entrance of new unions by a majority of those voting a customary democratic practice.

Many of those opposed to the CWA say that the independent telephone unions spent the past 10 years attending "president's conferences" while the CIO was organizing its mighty steel union. While their own wages were rapidly sinking to the bottom of the list in American industry, CIO-organized industries were surging to the top. They remember, too, that their president, Joseph Beirne, had been denied access to President Truman during one of this country's most crucial strikes.

Ill-paid public servants, "hello girls" keep the telephones going 24 hours every day. These operators are only 90% as well off as they were in 1939, according to the magazine U. S. News.

The "voice with a smile" takes time out to do some griping. First time out on a picket line for most of these telephone operators, they stuck it out for 7 weeks when 'phone employes staged their nationwide walkout last April.

In contrast, there was no record of the White House door ever having been closed to CIO's Philip Murray.

So telephone union leaders once again came to the CIO seeking advice—this time on how to affiliate with the CIO. The TWOC-CIO was the result.

First to vote affiliation with the CIO was the long-lines union, American Union of Telephone Workers, with about 20,000 members. Executive boards of other telephone unions have recommended affiliation and are preparing to conduct polls among their members. Two of the major groups in this category are the Assn. of Communications Equipment Workers and the Western Electric Employes Assn. at Kearny, N. J.

As TWOC-CIO and CWA got underway there was excitement and friction in the telephone unions.

CWA President Beirne incurred the severe criticism of some telephone union leaders when he sought to sidestep sentiment for affiliation by offering his services toward achieving a CIO-AFL merger. His official position is that CWA will affiliate only after such a merger.

Stating that she was weary of "independence" and stalling by union leadership, Ruth Wiencek, CWA's education director and one of the pioneers in the NFTW, resigned and started working for affiliation to CIO.

'Company Pattern'

"The CWA", she wrote her fellow union members, "in retaining its complex, expensive and wasteful Division organizational structure, follows an organizational pattern inherited from company union days. It cannot properly serve telephone workers . . .

Miss Wiencek in 1946 was a member of an NFTW Fact-Finding Committee on Affiliation which had strongly recommended affiliation to CIO.

The Committee had been favorably impressed by the CIO's offer of a national union of their own within CIO, by the fact that their representative would sit on the CIO Executive Board and in so doing would play a vital role in shaping policy. The AFL had offered Class B membership in an already existing union and could not guarantee a seat in the "upper chamber". Most of all industrial organization appealed to the committee members. They wanted switchboard operators, linesmen, clerical workers, engineers, installers, factory workers—all employes of the same company—in the same union.

Henry Mayer, counsel for many of the telephone unions began advocating affiliation with CIO. He referred to the CWA as "a booby trap for unsuspecting organizations." To the skeptical he told the story of an incident that occurred in Atlanta, Ga., during the strike.

Not Final Offer

The Southern Bell Telephone Co. submitted its "final" offer: a total of $4 million for white workers; nothing for the colored.

Mayer and his negotiating group adjourned the session. Then he announced to the press that the Southern union was planning to disband and poll its members on affiliation with CIO.

Immediately Southern Bell increased its "final" offer to $10 million for all employes.

"If a vengeful, vindictive employer like Southern Bell could have been scared into increasing its 'final' offer of $4 million by the mere threat of CIO affiliation, then CIO affiliation must be a good thing," Mayer concluded.

Management is reacting similarly throughout the industry. The Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co., for instance, appeared indifferent when its employes were being polled on affiliation with CWA. But when preparations were being made for a poll on CIO, a special letter went out from management to every employe, saying:

". . . I believe that the majority of the employes of the Traffic Department would prefer to have a local union rather than a national union."

"Just as we expected . . ." retorted the union's president.

—And just as the CIO expected.

CIO has a reputation for getting what it goes after; and right now it's going after a strong telephone union capable of coping with the world's biggest communications giant.

BUILD LABOR DAY FETES ON PAC, TAFT LAW FIGHT

IN keeping with the call of CIO and PAC to make "Labor Day PAC Day," CIO Councils are building their Labor Day parades around political action and the fight against the Taft-Hartley Law.

Some councils are planning floats urging the defeat of Senators and Congressmen who voted for the T-H Act. One council is planning a float carrying the slogan "X-out these anti-labor Congressmen." On the float will be workers carrying large stamps bearing an X symbol who will be constantly attacking a "Congressman" whose clothes, face and hat will be smeared with X marks.

Another suggestion is a pair of floats, one showing the attempt of workers to ward off the efforts of the NAM to smash the collective bargaining table with a huge ax labeled "Taft-Hartley Law." This float might well bear the slogan "Don't Smash Collective Bargaining, OR—"

The other float will carry a slogan completing the sentence: "Take the Consequences, Mr. Employer." NAM will be shown with his hat and clothing battered, his "Taft-Hartley Law" ax smashed and a picket line of workers in front of him and his factory, which appears as a backdrop.

THIS pair of floats might well be followed by a float depicting the CIO's determination to organize workers into strong industrial unions. On this float will be an organizer constantly telling the benefits of CIO unions.

This float should be constructed with steps so that workers who will be milling around it can walk onto it and off the other end, pausing long enough to sign CIO membership cards and passing through an arch bearing the inscription "We'll organize the unorganized."

Two floats are planned by one council to illustrate political action. On the first float will be a huge ballot box into which workers will deposit their ballots. Streamers will lead from the box to several marchers who will bear placards bearing such words as "housing," "65c-75c minimum wage," "health insurance," "Taft-Hartley repeal," "anti-bias bill," "anti-lynch bill," "anti-poll tax bill."

The next float will depict the various phases of PAC work, such as registering to vote, signing of petitions and the ringing of door bells and the distribution of literature. This float should bear an inscription such as "All These Steps are Necessary to Defeat Reaction in Congress."

KROLL CALLS SEN. TAFT 'LIABILITY' TO GOP

JACK Kroll, Director of the CIO Political Action Committee, has predicted that if Sen. Robert A. Taft becomes the Republican presidential nominee, "he will prove as great a liability as the party ever shouldered and that he will not even carrry his home state of Ohio."

Kroll issued his statement after Taft, in a speech, accused President Truman of being tied to "CIO Principles."

The text of Kroll's statement follows:

"It is clear that Taft is now an avowed candidate for the Republican nomination.

"The CIO-PAC is now engaged in sifting out the nefarious record of Taft as chairman of the Republican policy committee of the 80th Congress.

"PAC is particularly interested in the investigation into the present high cost of living to be conducted by subcommittees of the Joint Committee on the President's Economic Report of which Taft is also chairman.

"We cannot forget his generalship of the fight against the OPA, which he now seeks to disclaim, and the resulting increase in prices which have swollen the coffers of the corporations at the expense of millions of American consumers.

"We cannot forget his statement on July 1, 1946 during the course of his fight, in which he predicted: 'The President's figures on possible increases are a wild guess and for the most part dead wrong.' Today the price increase figures are the daily nightmare of the American housewife and she knows who was wrong.

"Nor can we forget his more recent cynical statement: 'You can buy meat if you can pay for it.'

"If Taft is really interested in what causes the high cost of living today he can sit at home and interview himself. He is the one primarily responsible for it.

"At this moment the PAC is engaged in a great campaign to make sure that all voters eligible to vote in the next election are registered. In Ohio, where union members are incensed over the infamous Taft-Hartley law, they are registering now at the unprecedented rate of one hundred a day in Hamilton County, Taft's home county.

"I confidently predict that if Taft is the Republican nominee he will prove as great a liability as the party ever shouldered and that he will not even carry his own home state of Ohio."

CHARGE SABOTAGE OF ANTI-BIAS BILL

Sabotage of an effective anti-discrimination bill was charged to Sen. Smith (R. N. J.) by the Natl. Council for A Permanent Fair Employment Practices Committee as the Congressional session ended.

Smith "opened the door to new appeasing amendments" of the Ives-Chavez bill, which has wide labor and liberal support, Council Chairman A. P. Randolph declared. The bill, under consideration by a Senate Labor sub-committee, was reported back to full committee in the closing days of the session.

He said the New Jersey Senator proposed an amendment excluding the penal provisions of the bill from taking effect in southern states, and charged that the device was planned as a means to "tear the bill apart."

"That would make the bill an empty and therefore insulting political gesture made in an election year to minority groups," the FEPC group said. The statement also claimed that "indifference" shown by Speaker of the House Martin (R. Mass.) and other leaders had prevented House committee hearings on the bill.

BETTER READ A ROAD MAP BEFORE TALKING, PICKETING

IS freedom of speech a matter of geography?

Chief Justice Bolitha J. Laws, of the U. S. District Court for the District of Columbia, thinks that may well be so. In an opinion granting a temporary injunction against CIO Office and Professional Workers' picketing of the Washington Arthur Murray Studios, Laws wrote:

"So far as the constitutional provision for freedom of speech is concerned, the controlling decisions of the Supreme Court (he didn't quote any decisions) seem to indicate that the defendant should be restricted so far as their freedom of speech is concerned to a point within a reasonable radius within which the labor dispute has arisen.

"In this case, the labor dispute is in New York City. The District of Columbia is not within a reasonable radius of this area." (Note: New York and D. C. are 228 miles apart.)

The injunction proceedings grew out of the new famous UOPWA "conga picket line" at the Washington Murray office. Local 16, UOPWA, is on strike against Murray's main office in New York. A picket line was set up in Washington, union officials said, because (a) the studios there were being used to recruit scabs for New York and (b) money received by Murray from the Washington studio helped him carry on his anti-labor activities in New York.

Joseph Forer, attorney for Local 16, said he is preparing to carry the case to the Court of Appeals soon. (A temporary injunction stays in effect until such time as the issuing judge sees fit to set a trial date.)

Forer said the company attorneys originally argued the injunction should be issued under the Taft-Hartley Act, but withdrew that contention later.

The issue now stands on two points:

1. Does Justice Laws' court have jurisdiction? Laws said he doubted the Norris-LaGuardia Act applies, but he hasn't had time to study precedents under that act. Therefore, he issued the injunction.

2. The union's constitutional right to picket, under freedom of speech.

The Washington Arthur Murray Studios are connected with the New York studio by a licensing, teacher-approval and reciprocal-teaching agreement. Ironically, the Washington Murray office at 1106 Connecticut Ave., N. W., is the former national headquarters of the CIO.

A total of 14,800,000 U. S. workers were covered by union agreements in 1946.

In 1946, 71% of U. S. rubber factories inspected were found to violate the federal wage-hour law.

Importance of Telling Children Why

By JANIE ELLIOT

MRS. GREEN had sprained her wrist, and so her friends, Mrs. Nestle and Mrs. Ives, each decided to send her a contribution from Saturday's baking. Both placed their gifts carefully in cardboard boxes.

Mrs. Nestle then called her eight-year-old son. "Roland," she said, "will you please take this to Mrs. Green's home? Carry it steadily, for it holds a lemon meringue pie." Roland picked up the boy by its cords. "Wait," added his mother, "I want to show it to you."

"Oh doesn't it look good!" exclaimed the boy when the cover of the box was lifted.

"Do you see how easy it would be to spoil the fluffy top if it were jolted or tipped even the least little bit?"

"Yes, Mother; and I'll be very careful," he answered.

HARDLY had he reached the sidewalk before he saw his friend, Claude Ives, crossing the street. Claude was also carrying a box.

"I'm going to Mrs. Green's," announced Roland.

"So am I," answered Claude.

"I have a pie in my box."

"I don't know whats in mine, but I think it's cookies," said Claude, "for Mother made some this morning."

"Hi there!" It was Duke Stone calling. He was swinging a basket by its handle so swiftly that it turned a somersault over his wrist. As he came near he said, "See, I have a package in there, but I swing the basket so fast that it doesn't fall out." Around went the basket again and again.

"Hm," said Roland. "Come on, Claude."

AS the two boys went along, Claude said, "I could do what Duke was doing."

"So could I," answered Roland, "but I'm not going to try it just now."

Claude said no more, but he began to swing his box gently by its cords. Each time it swung a little further. Finally it turned completely over. The "cookies" seemed to slide about, but by this time the boys had reached Mrs. Green's gate. In response to the ringing of the bell, Mrs. Green came to the door. Her arm was in a sling.

"We've brought you some good things to eat," said Claude.

"Our mothers baked them, added Roland when they were inside.

"How very, very kind," said Mrs. Green, "and both of your mothers are such good cooks! I can hardly wait to see what they have sent me. Won't you open the boxes and show me?"

ROLAND raised the lid of his box first and, lifting the waxed paper, displayed a perfect meringue pie.

Then it was Claude's turn. Off came his cover. Imagine his surprise when not a cookie was to be seen! There lay another lemon meringue pie. But what a difference! The swinging had made the fluffy part stick to the wrappings, so that when he lifted them up the whole top of the pie came off, too.

"It's my fault," said Claude, remorsefully. "I swung it over."

"Never mind," comforted Mrs. Green, "it will be delicious just the same."

That night Roland told his mother all about it. Said he, "Claude would have been careful if he had known why he needed to be." Then thoughtfully, "I like the way you do things, Mother."

A FEW HINTS TO THE WISE

We think of children playing out of doors all day long during the summer. But they need to alternate outdoor activity with indoor quiet play. With sufficient stock of materials on hand—clay, paints, soft broad crayons, manila and colored paper, paste, games to play, and special treats reserved for rainy or difficult days, children can be kept busy and happy. Along with materials, a reasonably frequent word of appreciation or, when interest lags, a suggestion of how to combine materials differently will help to keep play going to everyone's satisfaction.

Sprucing Up

I CAN'T SEW A STITCH!

By HANNA SHERMAN

IF you love good fabrics, clothes that really fit and flatter your figure you may well be discouraged by trying to buy new clothes this fall. Really beautiful clothes are hard to find. And they cost much too much, Sometimes it seems that they are made only for the ladies in the upper income brackets. There is one immediate solution to the problem and it's a fairly easy one. Make your own.

DON'T start by being too ambitious. Settle for a simple basic dress, skirt or blouse. Decide which of them you want to make and when and where you'll want to wear it. Occasion determines style and the season will determine the weight of the fabric. Why not make something new for fall right now?

Then consult the pattern books. Select your pattern for becomingness and simplicity. The easier your pattern, the soonor you'll finish the job, the more confidence you'll have for your next project. If you're not sure of what pattern to choose, ask the fabric stylist (most large department stores have one) to assist you. Do take her advice. Pattern sizes run much smaller than dress sizes, so don't be surprised if you need a size 16 pattern even though you always wear size 14 in ready-made clothes.

YOUR next step is to choose your fabric. Remember that stripes, prints and checks are difficult to match. So choose a plain colored fabric in a medium weight. Very sheer or very heavy materials need experienced handling. Purchase fairly good cloth. Not the best for your first attempt—and not the cheapest.

Judge the price you should pay this way. A dress costing $39.50 is usually made of fabric which sells at about $2.00 a yard. Three and a half yards makes the average dress.

Find out if your fabric is preshrunk. If it isn't, ask the salesman how to do it. This must be done before you cut into the material. Buy the yardage indicated on the back of your pattern for your size. Don't buy less. You've got to stick to the rules in the beginning.

FROM here on you're alone with your pattern and fabric. The accuracy with which you carry out instructions will make the difference between a professional looking garment and one unflatteringly labeled home-made. If you still don't feel able to tackle the problem there are excellent courses you can take in the local high schools and Y's. Also the sewing machine centers provide guidance.

These courses are very good but not essential. The diagrams and instructions with your pattern are all there in simple black and white for you to follow.

If you want to sew, just go ahead. Even if you've never sewn a stitch before in your life.

OUTDOOR SCHOOL—The group recently took part in one of a series of educational institutes for Southern CIO organizers, conducted by the Textile Workers Union of America and the CIO Organizing Committee. Shown on the lawn of Highlander Folk School at Monteagle, Tenn., (left to right) are Miss Pat Knight, TWUA Educational Department; Joel Leighton, TWUA representative in North Carolina; George Baldanzi, executive vice-president of TWUA; Paul Christopher, Tennessee CIO director; Myles Horton, head of Highland Folk; Carl Morrison, manager of the TWUA joint board at Memphis. Institutes were held in five states.

Books and Pamphlets

STORIES OF AN ARBITRATOR

AS a labor arbitrator for a number of year, Samuel R. Zack, author of a recent book, "Arbitration of Labor Disputes," has had many cases submitted to him.

The book contains some of the most interesting of these cases, told in narrative form. Full of human drama, comic moments and suspense, they read like short stories, while throwing light on the nature of grievances big and little, that arise between the boss and the workers.

Kindliness, common sense, human understanding and complete fairness to both sides are the guideposts Zack uses in his decisions. Some of the cases handled by Zack have been broadcast during the past six years over local stations in New York City and Washington.

Arbitration of Labor Disputes by Samuel R. Zack, 240 pp., Doniger & Raughley, Inc., Great Neck, N. Y., $2.50.

Union Directory

A new Directory of Labor Unions in the United States issued by the U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics lists nearly 200 national labor unions, CIO, AFL and independent or unaffiliated.

Included are names and addresses of principal officers of these unions together with officers of state-wide CIO and AFL organizations. A separate roster listing some 80 union research directors is also included.

The directory shows that national headquarters of unions are concentrated principally in a few large cities. Washington leads with a total of 38; New York has 30, and 20 are located in Chicago.

Single copies of the directory may be obtained by writing the Bureau of Labor Statistics, or orders may be placed, at 10c a copy, with the Superintendent of Documents, U. S. Govt. Printing Office, Washington 25, D. C.

Publicity Studies

The CIO's public relations activities are among the 30 case studies included in "Public Relations in Action," edited by Philip Lesly.

The studies were chosen from the first annual awards made in the competition of the American Public Relations Association. The chapter on the CIO gives the objectives, methods — CIO press, pamphlets and radio programs— and results obtained, particularly during the war period.

Public Relations in Action, edited by Philip Lesly, 280 pp., Ziff-Davis Publishing Co., New York, $4.50.

PAMPHLET: Your chances of living to a ripe old age are better today than ever before. This ought to be something to be happy about, but instead it's likely to be just another of life's worries for the many who are afraid of what's going to happen to them when they get old.

A new Public Affairs pamphlet, "When You Grow Older," by George Lawton and Maxwell Stewart, takes up the problems facing those who have passed the half-century milestone, and gives some suggestions on how to prepare for the age of retirement.

The pamphlet, No. 131 of a series, may be obtained from the Public Affairs Committee, Inc., 22 East 38th St., New York 16, N. Y., 20c a copy.

Doubling up of families is so great that for every three new houses built and occupied in a New York suburb, only one existing dwelling was vacated.

How To Use Welfare Plans

THROUGH lack of knowledge, many unions are missing out on public and private welfare services that can greatly benefit their members, the CIO Community Services Committee pointed out last week.

In a new pamphlet—"Community Services in Troubled Times" —the CIO group offers a guide "designed to tell you how you can bring the services of these agencies to your members now." Such services, the CSC declared, can supplement and increase the aid given by the union.

Copies of the pamphlet may be obtained from the CIO Community Services Committee, 1776 Broadway, New York 19, N. Y.

EDUCATION

CIO'S NEW SONG RECORDING TRIED OUT AT OHIO SCHOOL

THE CIO's new recording of ten labor songs, its first venture in this field, received an enthusiastic reception last week at the Ohio CIO Council's annual training course held at Antioch College, Yellow Springs, Ohio.

Another CIO summer school was held the same week at Clear Lake, Iowa, where the United Packinghouse Workers Leadership Institute was in progress.

George Guernsey, National CIO asst. director of education, who led discussions on visual education through use of films and sound strips, introduced the new CIO song recording at the Ohio Council's summer school to show how group singing could be led effectively without a song leader, by projecting the words of the songs on a screen while the record was playing.

Ten well - known labor songs sung by Tom Glazer are recorded on two sides of a 16 in. platter. Each song has a brief introduction telling how it started, who wrote it and its relationship to the labor movement.

The recording was made for the CIO Dept. of Research and Education to go in union filmstrip kits. A record may be obtained from the department for $7.50 or $5 each for orders of ten or more.

An interesting feature of the Ohio CIO Council summer school was a mock meeting of the Ohio Legislature.

Classes and discussions at the Packinghouse Workers institute were focused on the specific problems and issues involving the union and the meat packing industry. These included the history of unionism in the industry, structure and functions of the UPA, stewardship training and contracts and grievance procedure.

White Collar School Meets

Current trends in economic life and forces at work in their own communities as they affect white collar workers were discussed from all angles at the 15th session of the Summer School for Office Workers held on the campus of Lake Forest College, Illinois, July 12-26.

Students from 22 cities in the United States and one from Canada attended the school. CIO unions represented included the United Office & Professional Workers, Telephone Workers Organizing Committee, and United Public Workers.

Asst. Education Director George Guernsey of the Natl. CIO was a member of the faculty and CIO speakers included Pres. Willard S. Townsend, United Transport Workers; Harold Gibbons, Retail, Wholesale & Dept. Store employes Svend Godfredsen, Packinghouse Workers; and Morris Yanoff, UOPWA.

The school is sponsored by the American Labor Education Service, an independent organization supported by CIO, AFL and other union and community groups. Eleanor G. Coit is director.

Labor Contest

HOW'D you like to take a try at winning $300 without sending in any box tops or labels or coins or anything but a sheet of paper with a little work from the old noggin on it?

Here's how to go about it. Just pick out one of those days when you're feeling smarter than usual, sit down where nobody will bother you and write about 250 words on "Why I am Asking Members of Congress to Vote for the Labor Extension Bill, S. 1390."

Then send in the result to the Committee for the Extension of Labor Education, 2117 Pennsylvania Ave., N. W., Washington 7, D. C., not later than Oct. 15.

That's about all there is to it, except a few simple instructions about writing in ink on one side of the paper, and signing your name, address and union or other affiliation on a separate piece of paper. But if you want full details, or need some more information about the Labor Extension Bill, write to the committee.

The committee is offering 30 prizes for the best statements sent in—1st prize, $300; 2nd $100; 3rd $75, 4th $25, and 25 prizes of $10 each. The prize money was contributed for this special purpose and will not be taken from the committee's funds.

The bill for which the committee is trying to stir up interest and support would set up a Labor Extension Service in the U. S. Dept. of Labor to extend to some 42 million wage and salary earners a program similar to that carried on by the Agricultural Extension Service for six million farm families. The bill is backed by the CIO, AFL and other labor groups.

JIM! JIM BARRY! WAIT!

HUH!

PEGGY! WHAT ARE YOU DOING HERE? I THOUGHT—

I CAN IMAGINE WHAT YOU THOUGHT, JIM BARRY. BUT I CAME TO GET YOU BACK TO THE CITY AS FAST AS MY CAR CAN TRAVEL.

YOU AND WOODY PACK YOUR THINGS FAST — I'VE GOT MY CAR HERE AND WE'LL BE BACK IN THE CITY BEFORE TOMORROW...

HEY! HOLD ON, PEG, OLD GIRL! WHAT'S UP?

I DON'T KNOW WHAT'S THE MATTER ... EXACTLY. BUT I THINK YOU'RE GOING TO BE VERY MAD...

WHAT ABOUT?

A MAN NAMED CHARLIE BENTLEY CAME INTO YOUR OFFICE A FEW DAYS AGO AND SAID HE HAD SOME IMPORTANT INFORMATION FOR YOU...

LET'S HAVE IT.

I HAVEN'T GOT THE INFORMATION... BUT HE SAID THAT SOMETHING FISHY WAS GOING ON AT THE HAMKER MANUFACTURING COMPANY.

THERE'S ALWAYS SOMETHING FISHY GOING ON. YOU MEAN TO SAY YOU RUSHED OUT HERE JUST TO TELL ME—

JUST TO TELL YOU THAT BENTLEY LATER HAD AN ACCIDENT...

PEGGY, I'M AFRAID YOU'RE CATCHING THE DISEASE... THINKING JUST BECAUSE I SOLVED A CASE OR TWO THAT I'M THE GREAT LABOR DETECTIVE WOODY IS ALWAYS TRYING TO MAKE ME...

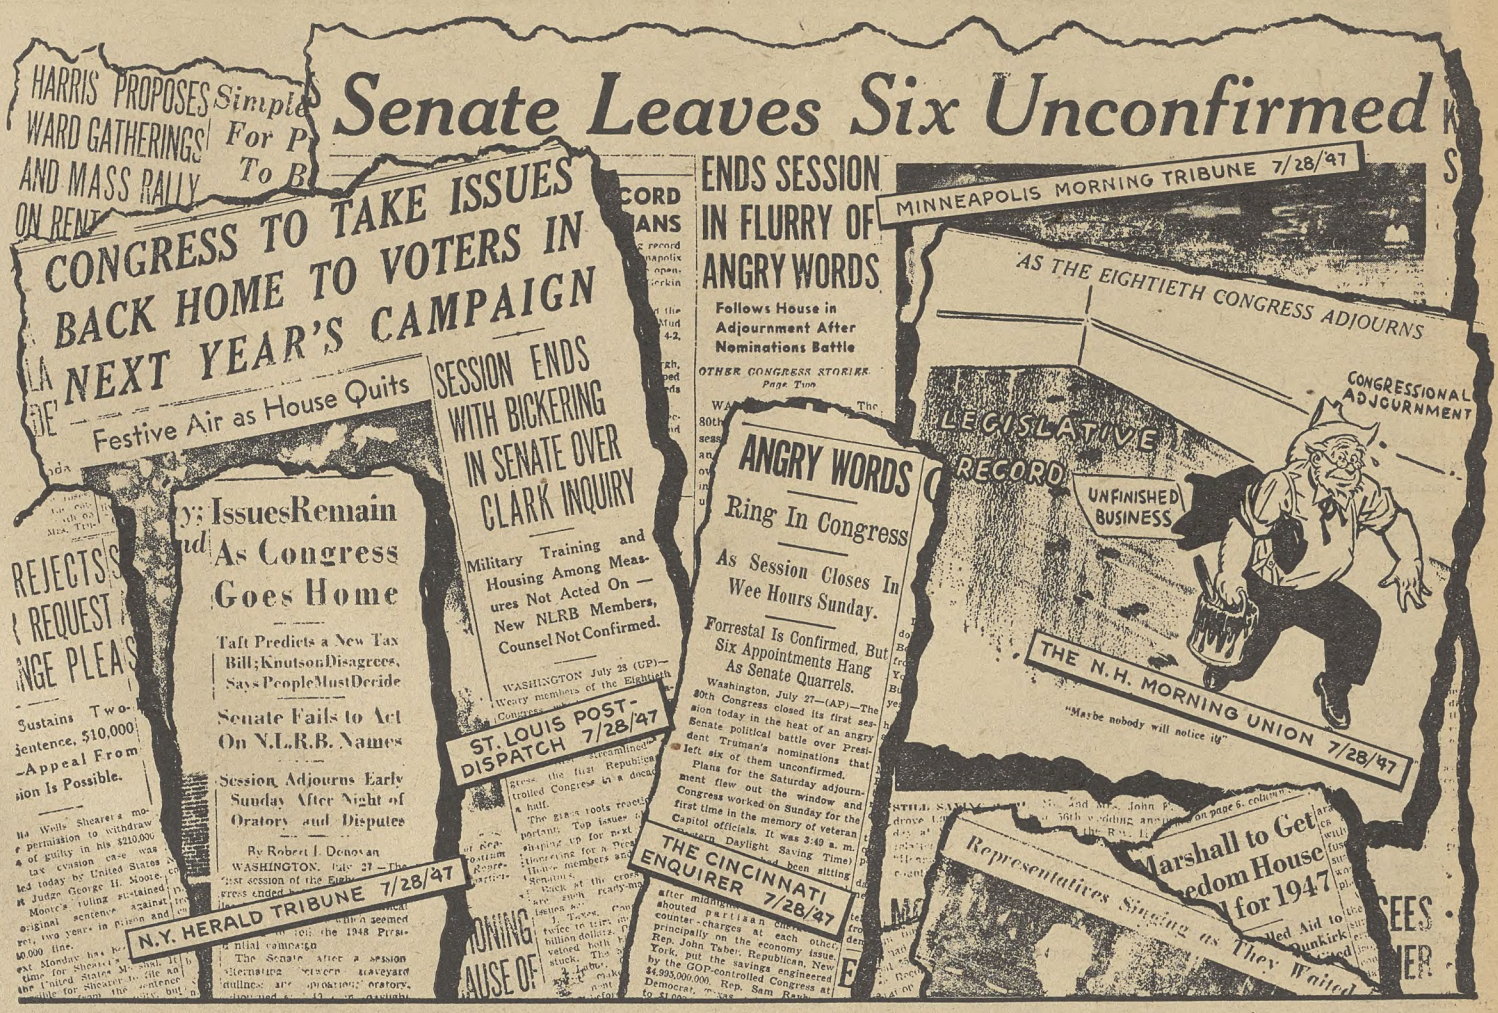
UNFINISHED BUSINESS

TO the right, you will find headlines from five newspapers published just after Congress adjourned.

The papers are the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, liberal, and these which generally are designated either Republican or Independent Republican: New York Herald Tribune, Cincinnati Enquirer, Minneapolis Morning Tribune and the New Hampshire Morning Union of Manchester, N. H.

The headlines all agree that Congress adjourned either with much business unfinished or in an angry mood.

Washington observers believe the headlines reflect the disappointment of Republican Party spokesmen over the 80th Congress' record.



Carey Likens WFTU To UN

THE World Federation of Trade Unions "is simply a forum of common peoples" built along lines parallel to those of the United Nations, and CIO intends to continue playing an important role in its operations, Sec.-Treas. Jas. B. Carey declared in a speech prepared for delivery last week at a Catholic University forum in Washington.

Recently returned from WFTU executive sessions in Prague, Czechoslovakia, Carey rapped the "pretty well disseminated view that the WFTU is somehow or another a subversive organization."

The world labor organization, of which CIO is a charter member, is neither a "great band of shining white knights" nor a "creeping loathsome thing gnawing at the foundations of human freedom," he said.

The WFTU has the "same misunderstandings, the same pressures" as the United Nations, Carey continued, but it is not "hampered by traditional protocol or diplomatic double talk.

"Workers fortunately are not handicapped by the social niceties that have in the past utterly failed to prevent wars. The talk within the WFTU is straight talk. I might also add in passing that the WFTU has no veto provisions. Anyone who wants to take his marbles and go home is at liberty to do so; he is not encouraged to stay around and break up the game."

CIO has in "no case retreated from the American democratic principles on which our organization is founded," in its WFTU activities, Carey said. "We don't aim our shafts of principle against anyone. The actions we take are calculated to preserve and extend the democracy which we hold to be good."

CIO is playing for "high stakes," Carey told the Washington audience, to aid the workers in the labor movements of France, Belgium, the Netherlands, Italy, Austria, Germany and all other countries to oppose "the forced evolution of those European unions into political institutions."

CIO's international program, Carey said, is based not on any "subversive" cunning or "political trickery" but on "justice and charity."

Rep. Hartley To Fade Out

The 81st Congress, to be elected in the fall of '48, will not have the services of Rep. Fred Hartley (R. N. J.), co-author of the Taft-Hartley Act.

The Jersey Congressman announced that he would stand by earlier announcements of his intention not to run for re-election from his north Jersey district.

Hartley indicated at the same time that the T-H Act is still "inadequate in many respects—particularly in regard to industry-wide bargaining." Stating pride in his work on the bill, he said he'd devote his effort to "remedying this defect" when Congress reconvenes in January.

NLRB Business Toboggans

BUSINESS is slack at the National Labor Relations Board.

One month after adoption of the Taft-Hartley law, the Board has had an 80% drop in the number of new cases filed for consideration.

With a large number of CIO unions "boycotting" the Board, with others holding off action pending future developments, and with many AFL unions taking a similar position, the NLRB is having its quietest period since the Wagner Act was passed in 1935.

During July, only 200 new cases appeared on the NLRB docket.

About 1,000 new cases a month, on an average, were filed during the past two years.

All activity at the NLRB was stalled pending appointment of two additional Board members and a general counsel with vastly increased powers. Pres. Truman's original appointments were not acted upon by the Senate during its hectic closing days—either because of the mass of bills up for consideration or because of hidden GOP strategy.

PRES. Truman last week named his three original appointees on an interim, rather than permanent, basis. Their names will have to be submitted to Congress when it reconvenes in January.

The GOP Congressional bloc is believed to have some doubts about the appointment of former New Deal Sen. Abe Murdock (D. Utah) to the Board, but observers say it will undoubtedly favor the appointment of J. C. Gray to the NLRB and of Robert Denham to be general counsel.

In Chicago, meanwhile, the first of what may prove to be a "big parade" of damage suits against labor unions under T-H Act provisions was filed against the United Steelworkers, CIO.

The Globe Co. filed the suit in U. S. District Court against both the national union and its local 3838. The suit alleged a strike in violation of contract, and asked damages of $75,000 for the period July 14-30, and $30,000 a week for so long as the strike continues.

The suit was filed under that section of the T-H Act permitting unions to be sued in federal courts for losses from "illegal" strikes.

EARLIER, CIO Pres. Philip Murray had told a big Lorain, O., CIO picnic that the T-H Act is a "legal monstrosity." Repeating earlier charges that the anti-labor law is a "first step toward fascism," Murray said that labor hadn't done a good enough job at the 1946 elections.

"Many of you did not go to the polls, and as a result you got the Taft-Hartley Act because you shirked your duties on election day."

To avoid damage suits from employers, the Textile Workers Union executive council decided that no future TWUA contract will contain a "no strike clause."

Pres. Emil Rieve said the grievance and arbitration machinery is sufficient to take care of all disputes, and that indiscriminate filing of T-H damage suits would only hinder peaceful bargaining. He attacked the law as one-sided, and said it is filled with clauses "which are specifically intended to prevent unions from fulfilling their function as protectors of workers' living standards."

The TWUA council made no decision as to whether the union would use the reorganized NLRB machinery in the future. The union will continue organizing activities as in the past and base final policy on the experience of the next few months.

Meanwhile the daily press, which generally had ignored CIO warnings that the T-H ban on political expenditures could be used to muzzle daily papers during election campaigns, appeared increasingly uneasy about the bill.

EDITOR & Publisher, newspaper trade paper, called for immediate adoption of an amendment to exempt papers of all kinds "in their editorial comment on political matters.

"Even if the members of Congress did not intend the law to do what the labor press says it does, there is enough doubt among them on the subject to predict an unfavorable Supreme Court decision," the magazine commented.

The CIO Publicity Dept. wrote last June to the American Newspaper Publishers Assn. requesting support in the fight against the section of the bill which would bar unions—or corporations—from spending any money for papers, leaflets, radio time or halls in connection with federal political campaigns.

The ANPA at that time apparently was unmoved by the danger to feerdom of the Press, and replied that the matter would be taken up at some future time at a directors' meeting. Newspapers which had played down the CIO warning of dangers to press freedom have now swung around to expresson of fear that the act could be used against all papers—not only those published by unions.

That's No Joke, Lady!—Housewife Zelda Fichandler looks understandably puzzled as she surveys a blackboard which highlights the Government's official estimate that your dollar isn't worth a dollar any more—and hasn't been for a long, long time. According to Bureau of Labor Statistics, the average American with a wife and two children made a take-home pay of $47 (after withholding tax and Social Security) in May, 1947. But, for the first time, BLS estimated the real value of the dollar, as compared with the dollar in 1939, last pre-war year. Daddy now brings home $47 each week, but BLS estimates that $47 is worth only $29.99 in 1939 dollars. No wonder Mrs. Fichandler, a member of the CIO Public Workers' Auxiliary, is puzzled about how to make ends meet today. (See Story on Page 5)

SLAP AT DEMOCRACY!

MISSISSIPPI, home of Bilbo and Rankin, destroyed another leaf of the Rule Book of Democracy before permitting its people to cast ballots in the state's Democratic primary last week.

The Mississippi Legislature, at a special session in March, 1947, enacted a law decreeing that voters must certify agreement with party principles as set forth by the State Democratic Executive Committee.

The Executive Committee decided that these principles should include opposition to Federal anti-lynch laws, anti-poll tax legislation and the Fair Employment Practices Commission.

The direct effect of this action was to ask prospective Negro voters to openly express disapproval of measures which they believe are designed to aid them.

Those who refused to do so were denied a voice in the selection of officeholders.

Those unfamiliar with the South probably will say that this disgraceful performance was just another step in the Bilbo "white supremacy" program. It was that—and more, too.

It was a continuance of the old practice (not confined to the South) of trying to win elections by means fair or foul.

Boss Ed Crump of Memphis—just a few miles from the Mississippi line—doesn't follow the Bilbo-Rankin technique. He believes that Negroes should be permitted to vote, over and over and over again in the election—just as long as they vote for Crump-picked candidates.

It would be easy to say that the Mississippi election fiasco involved only a race issue—but that wouldn't be honest.

Those in the political saddle intend to stay there if they can. They would apply their shary spurs to any group—Negro or white—that attempted to unseat them.

In this instance the Negro was made the scapegoat. In another instance it may be the "politically undesirable" white man.

The CIO has more than an indirect interest in Mississippi, because it's a state in which the CIO is conducting a successful membership drive—a drive that has drawn the wrath of Bilbo-Rankin, Inc.

It is a state which has a law saying that those who vote in the Democratic primary must approve the "time-honored and cherished traditions of the South."

One of the most cherished traditions of the South has been operation of the non-union shop.

Could those who favor unionism be denied the right to vote in the primary? We doubt it, but——

Judging by the resignations, the Taft-Hartley Bill has knocked the "L" out of the NLRB.

The C. of C. boasts that the 80th Congress listened to business; labor plans to give the 80th Congress the business in 1948.

Industry Built Doghouse During the War; Congressmen Merely Shoved Labor Into It

By ALLAN L. SWIM

AMERICAN industrialists designed and built some unusual things during the war.

One of their handiest gadgets—from their point of view—was a doghouse for organized labor.

They built it carefully, though not always cautiously. They fashioned it principally out of propaganda and political pressure. Working closely with them on this project were a number of newspapers which have never been known for their friendship to the unions.

The doghouse was nearly completed by the time fighting on the world's battlefronts ended. The finishing touches were added quickly and it was ready for occupancy.

Labor wasn't ready to move in, however. It had fought for many years to get out of the pre-Wagner Act doghouse and wasn't having any more of it of its own accord.

Then the industrialists delivered their Sunday punch to labor's most vulnerable spot—to its political breadbasket.

THE set-up was nearly perfect, from industry's point of view.

The nation was war-weary and its people were a bit fed up with governmental control. They were tired of rationing and shortages. They wanted to get rid of those things which reminded them most of war.

The dough rolled in and the propaganda rolled out. "Had enough?" became the slogan of the Republican party.

Liberal Democrats were blamed for nearly every unpleasant thing that resulted from the war. The Liberals were the darlings of the unions. The unions and the Liberals were to blame. So the story went.

The nation had a Congress that was reasonably friendly to labor. Then there was an election . . . and the G.O.P. took over.

Soon labor was headed toward the doghouse. It fought every step of the way. It fought hard, but it waged a losing battle.

Premature killing of OPA was one of the first major blows. Passage of the Taft-Hartley Act was the last.

So industry was all smiles when Congress folded up its tents and went home recently.

THAT'S the story—told in simple terms.

It makes little difference whether the N.A.M. or Taft and Hartley wrote the Taft-Hartley Act.

There's nothing to be gained by moaning about the way some Democrats lined up with the Republicans.

But there's a valuable lesson to be learned from what has gone on—a lesson labor must learn if it is to kick the doghouse to pieces.

It is that labor can lose almost overnight on the political front gains that it has achieved over the years at the bargaining table.

All of us should know by now that it's impossible to separate political action from the other functions of labor unions.

Industry wouldn't let us, even if we should want to do so.

This was made crystal clear during the session of Congress just ended.

INDUSTRY has been in politics up to its ears almost since the first factory was built. Through legislation it obtained many benefits and safeguards.

It designed and brought about the passage of many measures aimed at preventing the growth of unionism.

Many industrialists came to think of the political field as their own private playgrounds. That's why they screamed to high Heaven when labor decided to play in the same arena.

A number of newspapers, closely allied with industry, began pulling their editorial hair when the CIO Political Action Committee came into being.

Sidney Hillman was smeared unmercifully—and "smeared" is a good word for it.

Local union members who had been known as good, solid citizens for years suddenly became "dangerous radicals" when they accepted PAC posts.

More or less "neutral" newspapers, impressed by the noise of their colleagues, started viewing with alarm and questioning the right of working men and women to have a political organization of their own.

IT'S apparent now that PAC made more of an impression on industry than it did on a large portion of the nation's working men and women.

Industry listened to what PAC said—and went right on fashioning its doghouse.

Workers listened, too — and many of them went right on through election day without bothering to cast ballots.

We're paying now for that oversight. We don't yet know how big the bill will be, but it won't be small.

There's only one way we can get a rebate—and that's by going to the polls at the proper time in the future and voting for friends of labor.

CONGRESSMAN DRIPP BY YOMEN

"HE'S FRUSTRATED, HE WANTS TO JAIL ALL THE UNION LEADERS BUT CANT FIGURE OUT HOW."

Remember?

VICTORY AT POLLS: Nine years ago this week the big story was the defeat at the primaries of "strike-breaking" Gov. Martin Davey of Ohio after a strong campaign against him by labor.

STATE COUNCILS: Plans were announced to form CIO State Councils at conventions to be held in Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, California and Washington.

TOM GIRDLER, Republic Steel boss (the one who said he'd dig potatoes before he'd recognize the CIO and later had to eat—not potatoes but his words) was sweating it out before the LaFollette Civil Liberties Committee, trying to deny that he knew about the shot guns and rifles carried by guards in his plant.

GOV. ELMER A. BENSON, Minnesota Farmer-Laborite, called upon the LaFollette Civil Liberties Committee to investigate the activities of the "Associated Farmers, Inc." in his state, Benson said that AF was directing its activities against organized labor.

Free Enterprise and the Communists

PHIL HOPKINS, a husky fellow with a gift of gab, was sweating—not from the heat of the Texas sun but as a result of the questions the reporter was shooting at him.

He was, figuratively speaking, strictly over the barrel!

The reporter had just placed on Hopkins' desk a photostatic copy of what was supposed to have been a secret document.

"Wasn't this put out by your organization?" the reporter asked.

Hopkins started hedging—then he admitted it was. He said it was part of his organization's campaign "to drive the Communists out of the CIO in Texas."

The reporter commented that the document was "most interesting."

HOPKINS had explained in great detail that his outfit, "Fight for Free Enterprise," wasn't opposed to organized labor —and wasn't really strongly opposed to the CIO.

It was the Communists in the CIO that "Fight for Free Enterprise" was after. Yes, most emphatically! Not the CIO in Texas, just the Commies who had moved into it.

A "worthy" fight like that, of course, and naturally FFE had to solicit funds. The cash, Hopkins said, came from many sources—but there were no rich [illegible] of funds.

Oh, sure, FFE did some lobbying for anti-labor bills in the legislature. Yes, FFE did propose a measure which would require labor organizers to wear hats of certain colors—with red hats for the CIO men.

THE reporter said something about the "secret document" proposing rather rough action—such as sabotaging machinery of newspapers which refused to go along with "Fight for Free Enterprise."

He said it appeared to him that FFE planned to turn peaceful strikes into riots, if it could.

He asked about FFE's connection with organizations like that headed by rabble-rousing Gerald L. K. Smith.

He wanted to know if FFE didn't use some rather high-pressure methods in soliciting funds.

Hopkins always came up with an answer —usually an unsatisfactory one.

Then he told the reporter he would give him a big scoop in the near future. (This turned out to be FFE's abortive move to form The Congress of Industrial Organizations, Inc., of Texas in an attempt to embarrass the CIO.)

HOPKINS said that his partner, William Walker, head of FFE, had had no close connection with hate-mongering Joseph Kamp.

He would say little about Walker, who had run into difficulties with the Houston Better Business Bureau before he moved to San Antonio.

The time had arrived for the reporter to pin Hopkins down, to try to make him deliver the goods—if he had any.

"Mr. Hopkins, you keep talking about not fighting the CIO in Texas—that you're just fighting the Communists in the CIO," the reporter said. "That's very interesting. Now suppose you tell me who some of the Communists are."

Hopkins hesitated, squirmed around in his chair, then mentioned one name. Only one.

Later the reporter left Hopkins' office chuckling. He didn't know whether the man Hopkins had named was a Communist or not.

But he knew the man WAS NOT connected with the CIO.

U. S. Aims To Help Greeks Help Selves---Murray

"HIGH HOPES and confidence" in the U. S. mission to Greece were expressed last week by CIO Pres. Philip Murray in a statement which lauded the appointment of Clinton S. Golden, former steel union vice-president, as chief labor adviser to Administrator Dwight Griswold.

Text of Pres. Murray's message:

"The CIO has high hope and confidence in the American Mission for Aid to Greece. We are fully aware of the tremendous difficulty that confronts the AMAG. The mission will have to develop new techniques to attain its major objective.

"In a large measure, the AMAG is an event in history, because it reflects the determined effort of a mighty people here in America to aid the people of another country to develop their own economic capabilities.

"Fortunately, the United States is not hampered with a tradition of developing limited political programs in other countries. And that is why the AMAG has such tremendous historical significance.

"We do have in our American tradition, of course, the case of the Philippine Islands. While that venture, which has paid tremendous dividends to both the Filipino and the American peoples, might be cited as an example of American colonial policy, the Philippines similarly were a trail-blazing experiment.

"While the experience gained will be of value to the American Mission for Aid to Greece, the AMAG emerges out of a different background, a struggle of the whole world to preserve democracy.

"In plain language, the objective of AMAG is to help the Greek people help themselves through their own efforts.

"IN this plan, political considerations become less important in the sense that the American people do not consider the political view the only view. A people that is in a position to make its own economic determinations can be relied upon, when the time comes, to make the proper political decision.

"In Greece today, because of economic chaos, the Greek people are confronted with extreme political solutions of the left or right. Extremist choices of that sort are not possible in a real democracy, and a real democracy is not possible in a state of economic chaos.

"The Greek people must be helped to devise for themselves development of their own resources, orderly systems of law enforcement, sound fiscal policies, especially in the realm of progressive taxation, a sound and honest internal police force that will insure community tranquility and integrity in local government.

"Above all, the Greek people must have the opportunity to form their own organizations of workers, of businessmen, of professional men and all the voluntary organizations that are imperative to the working of a successful democracy.

"The American Mission for Aid to Greece is well constituted for the job that lies ahead of it. From our point of view, not only the protection, but also the advancement of the Greek worker to his proper place in the economy of his country takes on a tremendous potential because of the presence on the mission of Mr. Clinton Golden, who will serve as chief labor adviser to Mission Chief Dwight Griswold and his other colleagues.

"Mr. Golden was appointed on the mission with the approval of the whole American labor movement. He carries with him, not only his own distinguished record, but the confidence of all American workers."

Wet Paint!

VICTOR RIESEL'S column recently carried this item:

"Dixie Doodle—There's an AFL crowd down in Asheville, N. C., which won't picket jails or courthouses again before it counts noses in its own unions. It all began when the AFL chiefs there decided to embarrass Southern CIO leader Van Bittner by throwing a picket line around a courthouse in which he and his lieutenants had scheduled an important strategy session. The AFL charged that prison labor had been used to repaint the courthouse.

"Some 400 CIO leaders walked through the AFL's lines, but were furious at having to do so. Then one bright CIO publicity man decided to check with the Buncombe County sheriff—and was told that 18 professional painters had been used. Seventeen of them were members of the regional AFL painters' union. They had landed in the clink on various minor charges. So the sheriff had put them to work. And now the CIO is laughing . . ."

LABOR, NEGRO GROUPS UNITE TO SCORE GAINS IN VIRGINIA AS U. S. EYES MISS. PRIMARY

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

IN MISSISSIPPI, aides of U. S. Attorney General Clark obtained copies of state rules governing voting by Negroes, despite a threat by a Mississippi official that he'd better stay out.

In Virginia, Negroes lined up with a joint labor committee to back several winning candidates and throw a scare into the Byrd machine.

In Pennsylvania, Pres. Philip Murray urged United Steelworkers to vote for Democrat Philip Storch in a special Congressional election. It was Murray's second test of the Taft-Hartley political restrictions.

Mississippi

ATTORNEY GENERAL Tom Clark and his Criminal Division were studying the Bilbo-Rankin machine's latest attempts to disenfranchise Negro voters. He moved in the face of a threat by one Mississippi official that "he'd better come down here armed."

While Clark's office was acting, a white man was slain in Laurel, Miss., in an argument among four white men over the right of Negroes to vote. Laurel has a strong CIO membership.

A short time before Mississippi's primary, Negroes were informed they could be required to swear they are opposed to an anti-lynching law and to a permanent FEPC. The requirement had been approved by the State Legislature.

According to election officials in Laurel, Ellis Gerald and his brother, Walter, were in the midst of demanding that Ransom and Otis Phillips, polls officials and also brothers, allow Negroes to vote.

Shooting began and Ransom fell, mortally wounded from pistol shots. Otis, severely wounded, was taken to a hospital. Police held Ellis Gerald in connection with the shooting, but had filed no charges when the CIO News went to press.

Lamar Puryear, a Hinds County Democratic official, informed that Clark might act in the Mississippi situation, declared: "We don't want any meddling. We run our elections like Democrats and are going to keep it that way. It's a Southern custom to tend to our own business and we expect other people to do the same." (Clark is from Texas.)

Chairman A. Philip Randolph, of the National Council for a Permanent FEPC, urged Clark to prosecute anyone attempting to enforce the Mississippi rules on Negro voting.

Virginia

For the first time, Negro organizations in many sections of Virginia joined with a joint CIO-AFL-Railroad Brotherhood committee to indorse legislative candidates against the Byrd machine in the Democratic primary.

In Richmond, a Negro came within 188 votes of winning nomination to the State House of Delegates (lower house). He is Oliver Hill, an attorney. He ran eighth in a field of 18 candidates seeking the seven nominations. Hill received 6,310 votes.

A labor and Negro-indorsed candidate, W. H. C. Murray, Typographical Union member and president of the Richmond Central Labor Union, ran seventh with 6,502 votes.

Two candidates backed by the liberal coalition were victorious in Richmond's State Senatorial primary. The victors were Charles W. Crowder, an attorney, and James E. Gardner, businessman. There were only three seats at stake.

In a number of other sections of Virginia, such as Suffolk, Nasemond County, Danville, Covington, Norfolk City, Norfolk County and Lynchburg, joint labor committees, backed by Negroes, made favorable showings.

Rev. Charles Webber, Virginia CIO-PAC director, commenting on the results, called the showing "encouraging" for 1948, when nine members of the U. S. House of Representatives and the seat of U. S. Senator Willis Robertson will be at stake. Webber was warm in his praise of the support given by Negro voters. He foresaw closer ties in the future.

Pennsylvania

The current issue of Steel Labor, official organ of the CIO United Steel Workers of America, carries an indorsement by Pres. Philip Murray of Philip Storch, Democratic candidate for Congress in a special election for Lehigh-Bucks Counties, Pa.

Storch, a charter member of the CIO Newspaper Guild, is president and one of the founders of the Lehigh Valley Guild, Local 49.

On July 14, the CIO president indorsed the candidacy of Judge Ed Garmatz in a special Baltimore election for the House of Representatives. Garmatz won.

Of Storch, Murray said: "I am advised by member and leaders of our union in the Congressional District that he is a man of integrity and of sound and progressive viewpoint."

The Garmatz and Storch indorsements were taken as a test of the freedom of press sections of the Taft-Hartley Bill.

Storch, who is married and the father of two children, enlisted in the Marines in 1943 and did combat duty in the Pacific.

His candidacy has been indorsed by Pennsylvania labor under the banner of the CIO, AFL and Railroad Brotherhoods. Storch also is backed by veterans' groups, teachers, college professors and many community agencies. The election will be held September 9. CIO Auto Workers' Pres. Walter Reuther recently indorsed Storch.

The Lehigh-Bucks District is normally Republican.

Murray Record For Labor Day

A special political action message for Labor Day-PAC Day celebrations has been recorded by CIO Pres. Philip Murray and is now available for use in the field, the CIO Political Action Committee announces. There is no charge for the record.

The seven-minute address by President Murray emphasizes the need for promoting PAC's mass registration and voluntary contribution campaigns, and can be effectively tied into Labor Day meetings, the PAC said. It is recorded at radio speed so that CIO councils and other local CIO groups can present it to the community via the radio.

All requests should be addressed to the CIO Political Action Committee, 728 17th Street, Washington 6, D. C.

CIO WINS REINSTATEMENT IN 'LOYALTY' FIRING

VIGOROUS action by the Dayton, Ohio, CIO has brought about the reinstatement of an Air Forces chemical engineer at Wright Field who had been fired for "disloyalty" because he had once been a union member.

The Montgomery County CIO Council retained lawyers and led a militant fight to preserve the job of Karl Scheller, onetime member of United Public Workers Local 22, disbanded for several years.

Scheller was given a statement July 7 by counter-intelligence officers that he could no longer see confidential or secret papers since he was a former CIO member. The same day, he was told he was being discharged for having been a member of a "subversive" organization.

The action was taken under Pres. Truman's Executive Order on "Loyalty" which CIO Pres. Murray and others have attacked as depriving government workers of basic civil rights and due process of law.

The CIO council helped Scheller retain a lawyer, sent protests to government officials and to Sen. Langer, head of the Senate Civil Service Committee. At a later hearing July 17, the pressure paid off when Scheller was cleared and reinstated.

"There goes poor old Sutton and here comes his replacement."

Rosenblum Asks Better U. S. Policy in Europe

AMERICAN policy in Europe is operating on such a conservative basis that millions of European democrats are being driven towards Communist policies, CIO Vice-Pres. Frank Rosenblum reported on return from a 9-week survey tour.

Rosenblum, secretary-treasurer of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers and a vice-president of the World Federation of Trade Unions, declared in New York:

"The feeling is growing everywhere I visited in Europe that we are afraid of some aspects of democratic socialism in Europe. Wall Street, I was repeatedly told, thinks England under the Labor Government dangerous and a menace to our economic system."

U. S. foreign policy is opposing all forms of nationalization of industry, since "any move in western Europe to nationalize a moribund industry or public utility is regarded as a real threat to our form of capitalism," the CIO officer asserted.

Rosenblum spoke highly of the Prague meetings of the World Federation of Trade Unions, where he with Sec.-Treas. James Carey and Intl. Affairs Director Michael Ross represented the CIO.

Despite European conflicts of governments and ideologies, a "way of life" has been found within the WFTU which "we hope will have some bearing on the peace of the world."

JUST THE kiss OF THE HOPS

THE BEER THAT MADE MILWAUKEE FAMOUS

JOS. SCHLITZ BREWING CO., MILWAUKEE, WIS.

YOUR UNCLE SAM SAYS A $ AIN'T A $ ANY MORE

AVERAGE weekly earnings in the U. S. hit an all-time high of $48.46 in May—but that pay of $48.46 was worth only $29.99 for a man with a wife and two children when expressed in 1939 dollars.

This estimate comes not from your union but from an ultra-cautious Government agency, the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the U. S. Department of Labor.

BLS last week for the first time issued statistics showing what it considered is the real value of today's dollar. It added a computation of "net spendable weekly earnings" to its monthly report. The BLS bulletin said:

"Net spendable weekly earnings are obtained by deducting from gross weekly earnings social security and Federal income taxes for which the specified worker is liable. Net spendable weekly earnings expressed in terms of 1939 dollars are obtained by deflating net spendable weekly earnings by the changes in the Bureau's Consumers' Price Index."

BLS used two examples in its table. One was for a worker with no dependents; the other for one with three dependents.

The no-dependent man had a weekly take home pay of $41.52 (if he worked in an area or state where there is a wage or local income tax law, then he is even worse off). Expressed in 1939 dollars, BLS said his $41.52 was worth $26.49.

THE three-dependent man had a weekly take-home pay of $47.00 (again, not including any local taxes), which BLS says gave him his 1939 dollar value of $29.99.

To make it even clearer, suppose the three-dependent man had a weekly take-home of $50 even. His 1939 dollar value, when he spent his money, would be between $30 and $31.

Thus, BLS has given the public—and the public's unions—proof positive of labor's oft-repeated assertion that the dollar is receding in value.

And, though BLS did not explore the matter further, there is every indication that, unless price trends are checked by some miracle, the 1939 value of the 1947 dollar may go even lower.

For, BLS last week also announced that retail food prices in large cities rose 1.5 between May 15 and June 15 for a new record high in the retail food price index. During the period stated, the index rose to 190.5% of the 1935-39 average.

That index was 31% above mid-June, 1946, last month of extensive OPA control. Biggest rise was in red meats, up 8%. Fats and oils showed the best decline, 6%.

BLS also issued a preliminary estimate of average hourly earnings for June. The average weekly gross earnings, before deductions, were $48.91. BLS did not include an estimate of the net spendable value, reserving that for the bulletin issued when the final estimate is made.

Resignations Grow at NLRB

TWO veteran officials of the Natl. Labor Relations Board have resigned their jobs, announcing that the Taft-Hartley Bill has abolished their functions.

They are Oscar S. Smith, Field Division director, and his associate, John P. Chapman. Smith joined the NLRB staff in 1937 as a field examiner in Chicago.

For 5 years he served in various capacities, including directorship of the Atlanta and Cleveland offices and assistant director of the Field Division. In 1942, he was named field director. Chapman also joined the staff in 1937.

The two resignations follow those of General Counsel Gerhard P. Van Arkel, Associate Counsel Morris P. Glushien, Cincinnati Regional Director Martin Wagner and Baltimore Regional Attorney Earl K. Shawe.

The Field Service, under the Wagner Act, was in charge of the regional NLRB offices. Under the Taft-Hartley Bill, the field staff is directed by the general counsel. The new counsel is Robert M. Denham, sworn in last week.

Despite Truman's Warning

'Surge of Price Inflation' Set Off By Steel Industry

By GLORIA CAPLAN

THE new "surge of price inflation" about which President Truman warned last month is upon us.

The surge began with an average $5.90 per ton increase in the price of steel two months ago. Close on its heels came some large auto companies, which slapped an additional $60 to $200 on passenger cars. Housewives saw home appliances getting ready to travel the same route.

Rises in steel prices would soon worm their way into railroad cars and steel rails, then into freight to cover the increased cost to the railroads, then into foods and other goods to cover freight costs. Buyers or renters of new homes, too, would soon have to absorb the steel rise.

Against a background of the biggest profits in its history, U. S. Steel's chairman, Irving S. Olds, assured the press that there would be no difficulty making the public absorb the increases. "Because of the great demand for products into which steel goes, I question if any consumer resistance will be engendered at this time," he remarked.

To the public, both steel and auto explained: "High wages."

BOTH industries, nonetheless, had managed to reap the highest net profits of any period in their history—even while the latest wage increases were in effect.

U. S. Steel's report to the U. S. Treasury for the first half of this year will show a net profit of $81 million—almost as much as the $88 million cleared in the entire year of 1946.

General Motors' $82 million net profit for the second quarter of the year represented, according to CIO Auto Workers' Pres. Walter Reuther, a 21% return on its investment. (Six to 8% is generally considered a good return.)

Hitting at what he called the "unrestrained greed of GM and its fellow-profiteers," Reuther said: "Had the corporation been willing to accept an 8% return, it could, during the second quarter, have reduced the retail prices of cars then selling for $1,500 by from $125 to $250 . . ."

To defray increased costs of raw materials and anticipated wage rises which took effect in April, both the steel and auto industries boosted prices in January.

"Consumers are being charged twice for the same wage increases—increases which should have been absorbed by industry's overly lush profits in the first place," commented CIO Steelworkers' Research Director Otis Brubaker. "Having looked forward and covered an anticipated wage expenditure with a price rise in January, they now look in retrospect and cover the same wage increase again."

A DETAILED analysis made for the CIO News by Brubaker found it "impossible to justify the increases."

Although Olds denied that recently enlarged coal costs were even included in the new price rise, other industry spokesmen described the coal wage settlement as the major factor in the move.

The industry is generally estimating the increased coal cost at $1.50 per ton of finished steel, by which amount Olds hinted U. S. Steel may further increase its price. Brubaker contends that coal costs, including direct wage increases and indirect effects of the increase, could only increase the cost of producing a ton of steel by a maximum of 75c instead of the $1.50 claimed by the industry.

U. S. Steel even included the higher price of palm oil as a reason for the increase. "This is the first indication any of us has had that palm oil is an important cost factor in steel production," Brubaker retorted.

Jones & Laughlin included the necessity for taking care of "expanding needs of the industry" as one of the causes for the price rise. It failed, however, as has every other steel company, to announce a program for such expansion, even though the acute shortage of steel is stymying auto production, throwing thousands out of work, forcing many small manufacturers to close.

AS the backlog of steel orders rose higher and higher, Wilfred Sikes, president of Inland Steel, said: "Our present productive capacity would seem to be ample for our future needs for many years to come."

And a New York Times headline on August 1 read: "Grace (Chairman of Bethlehem Steel) Urges Curb on Steel Capacity."

Steel companies were refusing to expand their capacity, Reuther and others charged, because, operating on planned scarcity, they could keep prices skyrocketing without running the risk of investment for expansion.

If the U. S. produces only the 80 million tons of steel annually, described by Sikes as our "real" capacity, it will mean 14 million Americans unemployed, Reuther warned. It means the stymying of industry, charged Henry Kaiser, auto manufacturer, and Sen. James Murray (D. Mont.).

It means that a ravaged Europe will have to wait longer and pay higher to rebuild, others pointed out.

Meanwhile, steel prices and profits continue onward and upward.

CLOTHING WORKERS TO SEEK TAFT-HARTLEY ACT REPEAL

THE executive board of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers last week denounced the passage of the Taft-Hartley law "as the blackest act in the black record" of the 80th Congress and called on its members to help elect a Congress pledged to repeal the measure.

The board in a resolution declared that the "No. 1 political tasks" of ACW members were to give full support to PAC in its efforts to register all CIO members as voters and to contribute voluntarily to the committee.

The board was confident that a Congress "responsive to the needs of the people and not to the selfish interests of big business" could be elected next year.

ACW Pres. Jacob Potofsky declared that his union did not favor creation of a third party, which he believed would split the progressive vote and assure the election of Republican candidates. He indicated that the union's main effort would be to influence the Democratic party along pro-labor lines.

The ACW board met at Rochester, N. Y.

Women at Work

Working women are mighty busy these days, judging by government statistics. Total number now in the nation's labor force has passed the 18 million mark. During May and June over a million more women were added to the labor force,

"HE'S BEEN LIKE THAT EVER SINCE HIS WORKERS WON A PAY RAISE."

DOES SCOLDING HARM CHILDREN?

Even in the best regulated families, mischief difficulties, scoldings are bound to occur. If parents feel "hate-full" when they scold, children are hurt. But held within limits and scolded only occasionally by parents consistently fair and loving, children can take it, and feel more secure than if left to run wild. Voices can be stern but must not be frightening. Storms past, a reassuring pat or embrace will help children understand the world as it is—an up and down place—good, bad, tough, difficult, wonderful. Sprucing Up

AN OUNCE OF PREVENTION

By HANNA SHERMAN

LONGER skirts are the outstanding feature of the new fall and winter fashions.

Not as long as was predicted but definitely longer than we've been wearing. In fact their average length is 14 to 16 inches from the floor. We think that women under 5 feet 3 inches look best in the 14 to 15-inch length. So do women on the plump side. Taller gals can wear their skirts a little shorter.

Consult your full length mirror with a critical eye and decide on the best length for you. When you buy a new dress you'll certainly want it in this length. Then you should lengthen the rest of your wardrobe to match.

There's nothing to lengthening a skirt with a nice deep hem. All you need do is press out the crease made by the old hem (use one of those chemically treated presscloths) and then turn up your new hem. If light colored fabrics show soil at the old hemline have them dry cleaned or laundered (with the hem let down, of course) before attempting to lengthen them.

Putting in a false hem is another easy way to achieve those extra inches. There is a new, very inexpensive hem facing on the market. You simply sew it into the bottom of your skirt and then turn it up.

NO HEM to let down? You've a much more difficult job ahead but it can be done. Just try an ounce of invention. If it's a dress, see if you have enough fabric at the waistline to lower it at that point. Sometimes you can get as much as an extra inch that way. Ease the hipline at the same time to make the dress fit smoothly. Then wear a wider belt, or your own belt just above the newly dropped seam at the waistline.

Adding a self hem is another simple way to skirt length. If you have no fabric, try using the fabric belt or cutting your sleeves shorter to make the hem. The piecing won't show if you conceal the joining by multiple rows of stitching. The rows of stitching are a nice style detail and help to conceal the piecing. Repeat the same rows of stitching on your belt, collar or cuffs. That's good design.

INSERTED bands of fabric in the same color as your dress will give it new length and look very smart indeed. Contrasting textures make for an interesting effect. Velvet, grosgrain, satin are all good on most afternoon dresses or suits. Fabric bands in a contrasting color are interesting, too. Of course, you'll repeat the color or fabric on another part of the dress. This for accent.

What to do about your best suit skirt when there is no hem in it to drop? Lengthen it in any of the ways we've mentioned. But do remember to repeat the detail of stitching or contrasting fabric somewhere on your jacket as well.

And another last suggestion for that suit skirt. Cut it off an inch or two below the waistband and attach to a rayon crepe or silk bodice that comes just to the top of your hips.

These are just a few ways to achieve that 1948 look without going broke. If you have any ideas we haven't mentioned—and we're sure you do—send them to SPRUCING UP. We know other readers will want to hear about them.

Eby Says:

Strike News Overplayed

BY playing up news of strike and work stoppages far out of proportion to their importance in the industrial scene, the daily press has misled the public into believing that conflict is typical of industrial relations.

This is a totally false conclusion, says National CIO Research & Education director Kermit Eby in an article on "Christian Industrial Relations" in the July 16 issue of The Christian Century. In reality, he says, it can be demonstrated that "industrial warfare is becoming more and more exceptional."

Eby points out that this false emphasis on strikes causes the public to overlook the fact that there are now more than 50,000 separate agreements in force between employers and unions, and that out of an average of 1,000 contracts which expire each week, more than 900 are being peacefully renegotiated.

Eby suggests that Christian members of the community can aid in enlightening public opinion on labor-management relations by forming or joining committees, study groups, forums and meetings to discuss health insurance, unemployment, and other labor problems.

CIO WOMEN TO CONVENE

OFFICERS of the CIO Congress of Women's Auxiliaries last week issued a call from national headquarters in Cleveland to the organization's sixth annual convention to be held Oct. 13-16, at the Hotel Bradford, Boston, Mass.

Auxiliaries throughout the country were urged to send the largest possible representation to the convention in view of the important problems facing CIO families in the crucial year ahead.

"We must be organized behind the CIO program to support issues which affect the family welfare," stated the call signed by Pres. Faye Stephenson and National Director Helen Blanchard.

"We must lay the cornerstone for our future activities that will determine the strength for the crucial year of 1948."

Works 40 Years For Mine, Mill

Forty years' service for the union is the record of Miss Fannie Petersen who has just retired as head bookkeeper at the national office of the CIO Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers in Chicago. The union's executive board voted to grant her a pension of $150 a month.

Miss Petersen went to work for the international union, then known as the Western Federation of Miners, in 1907, in Denver, Colo., and has been a secretary and bookkeeper during her 40 years' service. She plans to return to Denver.

Education

CIO Aids Negro Colleges

THE National CIO has contributed $1,000 again this year to the United Negro College Fund, announces George L-P Weaver, director of the CIO's Committee to Abolish Racial Discrimination.

This year's goal of the annual drive to help finance the current operations of 33 Negro Colleges is $1,300,000. Last year $935,000 was raised. The United Negro College Fund is the "educational community chest" that helps finance the operation of these colleges.

Greatly increased postwar enrollments and costs have placed a heavy burden on the colleges, the Fund states. Since the average Negro college student is able to pay only 30% of the cost of his education, the need for more educational facilities for Negro students is great.

CIO Pres. Philip Murray, a member of the National Campaign Advisory Committee of the Fund, has urged CIO unions and councils to aid the drive.

Pendle Hill

More than 200 CIO and AFL leaders and rank and filers turned out for the fifth annual conference of the Labor Education Association of Philadelphia last week-end at Pendle Hill, adult education school near Media, Pa., conducted by the Society of Friends.

Speakers included M. H. Goldstein and Thomas L. Personnet, labor attorneys, who discussed the effects of the Taft-Hartley Act; Michael Ross, CIO director of International Affairs, and Alice Hanson Cook,

the ADVENTURES of JIM BARRY

The story, characters, incidents and scenes mentioned here are entirely imaginary and fictitious, and have no identification with actual persons, living or dead.

IN THE MIDST OF THE VICTORY CELEBRATION OF THE WARREN-TOWN MILLS... PEGGY ALLEN, JIM'S GIRL FRIEND, ARRIVES WITH STARTLING NEWS!

I'M SURE THERE'S A CONNECTION BETWEEN CHARLIE BENTLEY'S TRYING TO TELL YOU SOMETHING, JIM... AND... AND HIS BEING FOUND IN THE RIVER WITH A CAKE OF CEMENT AROUND HIS FEET.

WHAT DID HE WANT TO TELL ME? COULD IT HAVE BEEN SO IMPORTANT...?

IT MUST HAVE BEEN — IF SOMEBODY WENT TO THE TROUBLE OF KILLING HIM FOR IT!

YOU AND WOODY BETTER TOSS YOUR THINGS INTO A BAG AND COME BACK...

PEGGY'S RIGHT, JIM! YOU'RE NEEDED AT HOME — AND SO...

I'LL SAY "GOOD-BY" TO YOU HERE AND NOW!

AND HOW!

COME ON! I BETTER GET YOU OUT OF HERE — BEFORE I LOSE MY BEST BOY FRIEND!

HALF HOUR LATER...

YOU DRIVE, JIM.

OKAY... AND ON THE WAY, YOU AND DAD GIVE THE WHOLE STORY.

WELL, JIM... I'VE KNOWN CHARLIE BENTLEY FOR A GOOD MANY YEARS... EVER SINCE WE FIRST ORGANIZED THE UNION AT THE HAMKER COMPANY. ME AND CHARLIE ARE ABOUT THE OLDEST UNION MEMBERS THERE...

WELL, THERE WAS NO TROUBLE UNTIL MR. HAMKER CAME TO THE PRESIDENT OF OUR LOCAL — THAT'S FRANK IRWIN — AND TOLD HIM THAT THE COMPANY WAS ON THE ROCKS... AND UNLESS THE MEN TOOK A VOLUNTEER WAGE-CUT, THE COMPANY WAS GOING TO FOLD AND —

THAT'S ENOUGH, DAD! YOU BETTER HOLD OFF ON THE REST UNTIL WE'RE SAFE IN JIM'S OFFICE! HE KEEPS TURNING HIS HEAD TO LOOK AT YOU... AND WE'RE LIABLE TO RUN SMACK INTO SOMETHING!

BESIDES, IF JIM KEEPS TURNING AROUND TO LOOK AT YOU I CAN'T KEEP MY HEAD ON HIS SHOULDER — AND I'VE GOT A LOT OF DREAMS TO CATCH UP TO RIGHT NOW!

CIO General Counsel Says:

DAMAGE SUIT BAN NO EVASION OF T-H ACT

By LEE PRESSMAN
CIO General Counsel

THERE has been a great deal of misunderstanding and confusion concerning the policy adopted by many CIO unions with respect to protecting the union against damage suits under the Taft-Hartley Act.

Various CIO unions have adopted the policy of including in collective bargaining agreements specific clauses which would prevent the employer from securing huge money damages against the union. A typical example of such a protective clause is that recommended by the United Steelworkers of America, which reads as follows:

"It is understood and agreed that in the event of any strike, work stoppage, or interruption or impeding of work on the part of any employes during the life of this agreement, or of any alleged violation of the agreement, there shall be no liability on the part of the international union, local union, or any of their officers, agents or members. The sole recourse and exclusive remedy for the employer in such event shall be to impose disciplinary measures upon the employes involved in accordance with the provisions of this agreement."

The sole purpose of this and related types of provisions is to maintain the liability of the parties to the collective bargaining agreement upon the same basis as it was prior to the passage of the Taft-Hartley Act.

IT is wildly inaccurate to suggest that there is anything in this clause which has as its purpose the evasion of the law. Prior to the passage of the Taft-Hartley Act, it was the general understanding of the parties to collective bargaining agreements that the exclusive remedy of the employer for any alleged violation such as a stoppage of work was the discharge or discipline of the offending employes.

The provision here in question requests of the employer the assurance that this type of procedure, worked out through collective bargaining, will continue to prevail. Obviously employers who reject such a clause have in mind a punitive damage suit as a device for harassing the union.

It is obvious that CIO unions would never have granted no-strike clauses if such clauses were to furnish the basis for law suits or the imposition of financial penalties on the local or international union.

Employers who reject the request of the union that protective clauses be included in existing or in future contracts are seeking indirectly to include in the contract a penalty clause. Penalty clauses have consistently been rejected by CIO unions.

Instead there has been a recognition that, in the event of the breach of the contract, where an individual employe violated the no-strike pledge he could be disciplined in accordance with the provisions of the contract.

By refusing to include a clause protecting the union against harassing damage suits the employer is seeking to expose the union to the very type of penalty clause which as a result of collective bargaining was excluded from the agreement.

THE reasonableness of a protective clause, as well as the questionable motives of employers who reject it, is emphasized by the new rules of liability laid down in the Taft-Hartley Act.

It will be recalled that under Section 6 of the Norris-LaGuardia Act liability could not be imputed to a labor organization for the unlawful acts of individual officers, members or agents, in the absence of clear proof of actual participation in such acts or actual authorization of such acts or ratification of such acts after actual knowledge thereof.

The Taft-Hartley Act repeals Section 6 of the Norris-LaGuardia Act and expressly exposes labor organizations to liability regardless of "whether the specific acts performed were actually authorized or subsequently ratified."

The Taft-Hartley Act exposes unions to a new type of liability for an additional reason. Formerly it was possible under union security clauses for the union to discipline or obtain the discharge of employes who violated the collective bargaining agreement. Under the Taft-Hartley Act this is specifically forbidden.

A union security clause obtained under the Taft-Hartley Act permits a union to seek the discharge of an employe who has lost his good standing in the union for the sole reason that he has failed to pay his dues.

This means that a union no longer may impose disciplinary measures upon its members where they engage in wildcat strikes and yet at the same time employers are demanding that the union assume an obligation with respect to wildcat strikes or unauthorized stoppages of work.

It is merely a smokescreen to charge, as many employers are now doing, that a union's request for a protective clause is an attempt to evade the law.

This smokescreen seeks to conceal the fact that the employer would prefer to wreck the union through law suits rather than to adjust disputes through collective bargaining and that he is determined to do so even under circumstances when the union never authorized or ratified the act in question.

UAW Achieves Ford Waiver

SIX hours before 107,000 Ford production workers were scheduled to strike, CIO Auto Workers' leaders and Ford officials reached an agreement concerning damage suits under the Taft-Hartley Bill.

Under the agreement which sets back the strike threat indefinitely, the company waived all right to sue the union, its officers and members for damage resulting from unsanctioned strikes for a period of 12 months, during which time UAW and Ford will attempt to work out a stipulated, permanent procedure.

Ford and UAW negotiators then started new conferences in an attempt to get together on language of the pension plan, which had been agreed upon in principle.

The day after the agreement over a no-penalty clause, Ford announced a temporary layoff of 51,000 workers, blaming the UAW strike against the Murray Corp., which supplies car bodies and parts to Ford and other auto manufacturers. The UAW local at Murray is striking for a no-penalty agreement similar to that achieved with Ford.

The Boss Is Our Leader!

You can't scare Preston Tucker, he's sticking to the union!

Tucker, whose new car is reported to be revolutionary in design, had an invitation showing of the car last week at Chicago's huge indoor Stadium. Instead of inviting the usual big shots, Tucker invited only union members.

And, his own employes, members of Local 83, CIO Auto Workers, picketed the Stadium — not with signs saying the boss was unfair, but with placards praising his good relations with labor. Tucker, who has announced the new cars will cost $1,845, expects to employ 35,000 at full capacity. He has had considerable financing opposition from the rest of the auto industry.

How You File For Leave Pay

Veterans were reminded last week by Meyer Bernstein, CIO veterans' representative, that the Terminal Leave Law not only permits cashing of bonds already received, but also extends for one year the date by which time application for terminal leave must be made.

Here's the way to file claims:

1. Call at a U. S. Post Office and ask for form, "Claim for Settlement of Unused Leave."

2. Fill out this form in accordance with the instructions therein contained.

3. Have the form notarized.

4. Put it in an envelope, together with a photostat or certified copy of a discharge certificate. Mail them to your Paying Officer as listed in the form.

TELEPHONE WORKERS' ORGANIZING COMMITTEE

The American Tel and Tel, controlling power of all telephone services in the Nation, has shown its colors when faced with the matter of dealing with a bona-fide, truly representative trade union.

Learning that the vote among the American Union of Telephone Workers (Long Lines) favored CIO affiliation, the company adopted a policy, typical of such institutions, of attempting to abrogate the workers' contract, in an effort to dictate what national affiliation employes should or should not have. AT&T is for the workers provided it can control them! Where a union is free and the membership permitted to exercise its God-given rights, AT&T seeks to put legal obstacles in the way of the employes choosing a proper bona-fide representative.

The CIO, knowing what this company has done over a period of years in establishing company-controlled unions, anticipated this step. Like other great corporations AT&T will be met fully and exposed—and the workers of the union will be supported by CIO.

In Maryland, the company sent out a letter to the telephone employes urging them to remain independent of CIO. The workers know that they need a well-knit strong union, affiliated with CIO, in order to force respect for their rights as citizens and union men and women. The corporation will find CIO will not let up until they are required to respect the laws of decency and the rights of human beings who render such valuable services to the people of our nation as do those engaged in the telephone industry.

TO THE TELEPHONE WORKERS EVERYWHERE:

Your brothers and sisters in CIO will stand shoulder to shoulder with you in your fight for the basic principle of selecting your own national affiliation without interference on the part of any sheltered and protected corporation.

I am confident that when its reprehensible actions are brought to the attention of the public and to the members of CIO particularly, this corporation will be required to respect the laws of fairness and the rights of telephone workers everywhere.

CONGRESS' RECORD ON MAJOR ISSUES

The CIO News

WASHINGTON, D. C., AUGUST 11, 1947 32

1947 VOTING GUIDE

"We propose to exercise our political rights for the purpose of mobilizing the American people for the repudiation not only of the Taft-Hartley Bill but of the entire reactionary program of which it is a part . . . to work for a repeal of the law and for the defeat of those forces in our political life which have sponsored it and worked for its passage."

—From CIO Executive Board Statement, June 1947

Big Business Was In The Saddle:

They Knifed Your Union

MOST of the trouble started last November 5.

Millions of people decided the 80th Congress couldn't be much worse than the 79th Congress. Events proved them wrong.

They decided that the 79th, having killed price control, had gone about as far as Congress could possibly go. They'd noticed that too many Democrats were talking like conservative Republicans, and that too many Democratic Congressmen had voted just like Republican Congressmen.

So, swarms of people didn't bother to register to vote; and millions of others who were registered didn't see much point in voting.

On Election Day last year, those millions of stay-at-homes accomplished only one thing—they proved the old political adage that a small vote means a conservative Congress.

In 1940, when Franklin Roosevelt was running for a third term, almost 50 million Americans had voted. In 1946, only 35 million—of a potential 90 million eligible—went to the polls.

That lack of interest swept dozens of proven liberals out of office. In their place came men who claimed they had a "mandate from the people" to do a job on labor unions. They had no such mandate. All they had was a blank check signed by the millions of voters who couldn't be bothered, who didn't think there were any issues, who said "what difference does my one vote make?"

But the "get labor" crowd saw its opportunity—and in the first session of the 80th Congress they made the best of it. The moral for 1948 is clear.

Behind the T-H Scene

THE drive to pass anti-labor legislation was moving at high speed within a few days after Congress convened last January. Bills poured into the hopper from "experts" and from representatives of agricultural districts who wouldn't recognize a union if they saw one.

The proposals came from old anti-union fanatics like Clare Hoffman, the Republican from Michigan, and W. Lee O'Daniel, the Democrat from Texas—both of whom had always been "agin" every forward advance by workers. But this time they were joined by the conservative smoothies, who sometimes talk like liberals out of the corner of their mouths.

Joe Ball, the man from Minnesota whom Minnesota CIO Newspaper Guild members recall as the onetime unionist who seriously proposed the use of violence against a local publisher's property, offered a spate of bills. They were designed to protect union members from their leaders, he claimed.

Irving Ives, Tom Dewey's No. 1 ambassador to Washington, was a leading member of the group. He talked like a liberal. Throughout the long months of preparation of the Taft-Hartley bill, he posed as a friend of the unions, who wouldn't approve any destructive proposals.

But when the showdown came, Ives helped construct the final version of the T-H bill, gave it his "liberal" blessings, and rounded up the votes of on-the-fence members of the Senate.

And through it all, Robert Taft assured the press that the most drastic anti-labor legislation in the country's history was a mild, moderate proposal to which no reasonable man might offer objections.

S. 1628

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

JULY 14 (legislative day, JULY 10), 1947

PEPPER (for himself, Mr. WAGNER, Mr. MURRAY, Mr. TAYLOR, Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina, Mr. MORSE, Mr. LANGER, Mr. DOWNEY, Mr. MAGNUSON, Mr. MCGRATH, Mr. GREEN, Mr. MYERS, Mr. CHAVEZ, Mr. KILGORE, and Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado) introduced the following bill; which was read twice and referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare

A BILL

To repeal the Taft-Hartley Act.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress as-

PRIME OBJECTIVE—Repeal of the Taft-Hartley Bill.

The 'Brain Trust'

THIS trio of Senators—and friends in the House like Fred Hartley of New Jersey, and Richard Nixon of California, and Charles Kersten of Wisconsin—were the "front men" in the drive against labor.

The ideas, the language of the bills, the innocent-appearing traps all came from a special bevy of corporation lawyers and lobbyists.

Gerard Reilly, a discredited ex-member of the Natl. Labor Relations Board who had turned Washington corporation representative, went on the staff of the Senate Labor Committee as a "special consultant." Those who worked with him recognize his words and his pet peeves written all over the 67-page bill.

Offices of the House Labor Committee looked like a Natl. Association of Manufacturers clubhouse. The boys in the back room wrote the House version of the bill.

William Ingles, a lobbyist for Inland Steel, was in the select group. It was no surprise when the T-H bill included a special clause aimed to rescue Inland from an unfavorable court decision. Jerry Morgan, another Washington company lobbyist, did his share. So did Theodore Iserman, a top attorney for Chrysler who had been making anti-union speeches for years.

They wrote the bill to please those big corporations that don't want to get along with labor unions. And the Taft-Ball-Ives-Hartley junta pushed it through Congress on three separate votes, despite the protests of millions of workers and the sharp criticism voiced in the veto message of President Truman.

Axe on Wage-Hour Law

UNDERSTANDABLY, the Taft-Hartley bill captured most of the attention. But it was only one part of the pay-off to big business voted by the first session of the 80th Congress.

Item No. 2 was the approval of a series of amendments that make enforcement of the Wage-Hour law all but impossible.

Few Americans even realized that Congress was monkeying with the Wage-Hour Act, passed in 1938 as a basic part of Franklin Roosevelt's New Deal. Congress—and the press—talked only of outlawing portal-to-portal wage claim suits, which had been filed in considerable number after a federal court ruling in the Mt. Clemens Pottery Co. case.

While the press ran daily box scores on the damages allegedly sought by workers for unpaid back wages, the smart boys on Capitol Hill dressed up their Trojan Horse proposals. Outlawing of the portal suits provided the cover; in the technical language of the bill were the words to give employers an easy out on any claim for wage-hour law violations.

You'll find out what the amendments mean when you try to file a wage-hour claim suit and find the boss relying his almost airtight defense on "ignorance" of the law, on claims of "good faith," on the fact that you waited too long to go to court, on the absence of facts which the Dept. of Labor used to collect in its periodic inspections of factories.

Thus, thanks to the 80th Congress, the Wage-Hour law is almost a dead letter—except for those employers who want to observe it. If hard times come, if sweatshoppers bring back their cut-throat competition, then few decent employers will be able to afford the luxury of paying attention to the Wage-Hour law.

Slashing Funds

PASSAGE of Wage-Hour amendments and of the Taft-Hartley Act—in effect changing the Wagner Act and making a dead letter of the Norris-LaGuardia Anti-Injunction Act—is a pretty big bill. But it wasn't enough to satisfy the leadership of the 80th Congress.

"Why give money to government agencies which can be of service to workers and their organizations?" these professional labor-baiters asked. Their answer was soon a-coming.

In the name of "economy," the axe swung swift and sharp on the Department of Labor. The Bureau of Labor Statistics, the Wage-Hour Division, the Conciliation Service, the Division of Labor Standards—which watches out for health and safety problems—the U. S. Employment Service, even the Children's Bureau, were deprived of badly-needed funds for the coming year.

Today the Dept. of Labor is a thin agency, with little power and insufficient personnel to give more than token assistance in the complex problem of working out labor-management relations.

They Want More

The record of anti-labor legislation is by no means a closed book. Rep. Hartley wants to see his ban on industry-wide bargaining hooked onto the T-H law. Sen. Taft has talked of necessary "improvements." Tom Dewey says much the same thing.

When Congress reconvenes, the pressure will mount again for new laws.

And the 81st Congress, which gets elected in 1948, will be even worse unless those millions of votes come out of hiding a year from November—votes which can restore sense and democracy to government labor laws.

This special supplement to The CIO News was prepared jointly by the CIO Legislative Department; the CIO Publicity Department; and the CIO Political Action Committee.

UNFINISHED BUSINESS

THE 530 members of the 80th Congress were convened in session for exactly 204 days between January 3 and July 26.

In that period the Republican leadership compiled an almost "perfect" record of refusing to pass public welfare bills which labor and liberal groups have been supporting.

As a result, the "unfinished business" agenda of the 80th Congress is long and imposing. No new legislation to help the people of the United States meet their economic problems was passed at the last session.

In fact, many bills already on the books lost effectiveness through weakening amendments or cutting of enforcement funds.

Apologists for the Republicans have a ready answer to this complaint. Just wait—these people say—until Congress meets in January. Then the GOP will rush through all sorts of measures to help John Public, when the timing is right for the Presidential election of 1948.

Perhaps—but so many leading figures in the 80th Congress have shown such appalling ignorance of the public's needs that most Washington observers doubt whether they are constitutionally capable of acting favorably on progressive bills favored by the common people.

Whatever the 80th Congress may do, it will have plenty of bills from which to choose. Here's a list of some of the principal items on the "unfinished business" list on which CIO and other organizations have demanded action:

MINIMUM WAGES: Bills to increase the minimum pay rate in interstate industry from 40c an hour—

the figure set in 1940—to 65c and 75c fell by the wayside. Pres. Truman had asked for higher minimums when the weakening Wage-Hour amendments became law, but the GOP leadership showed lack of interest.

CIO pointed out that rising living costs had made the 40c minimum meaningless and demanded passage of S. 1404 and HR 3764. House Labor Committee by 4-4 vote decided to hold the issue over until January.

MONOPOLY: The Reed-Bulwinkle bill to free the railroads from anti-trust suits passed the House and is apt to be passed by the Senate early in the next session. On the other hand, the Kefauver-O'Mahoney anti-monopoly proposals (S. 104, HR 515) were never reported out of committee. This CIO-endorsed measure would prevent companies from gaining monopolistic control by buying out the assets of another.

Other bills to free gas and electric power firms from anti-trust prosecution are still in committee, though they have wide conservative support.

MISSOURI VALLEY: Sen. Murray (D. Mont.) to create a Missouri Valley Authority, along the lines of the highly successful TVA, are still in committee. No action was recorded during the session.

CIVIL LIBERTIES: A CIO Legislative sub-committee reported that the 80th Congress has "acted to jeopardize constitutional liberties which even during the war years had been jealously safeguarded." It noted the menace to free speech, press and assembly in Taft-Hartley provisions; threats that government workers would be arbitrarily fired on suspicion of disloyalty without the right to appeal their case; and the smear campaigns against unions and liberal organizations contemplated by the House Labor and un-American committees.

The Rees "Loyalty" Bill passed the House, carrying even fewer safeguards for the rights of individuals than the President's Executive Order on the same subject.

MINORITY RIGHTS: Neither the Ives-Chavez bill (S. 984, HR 2820) to curb discrimination in hiring, nor the anti-lynching bill (S. 1352, HR 3488) came close to action.

The bill to end job discrimination, because of race, color or creed, was milder in many ways than previous FEPC proposals. It was based on the New York state law enacted two or three years ago. After long hearings, a Senate sub-committee finally filed a favorable report late in the session—but the Natl. Committee for a Permanent FEPC charged that the way had been paved for sabotaging amendments by the full Senate Labor Committee. The House Labor Committee never considered the measure.

The anti-lynch bill, introduced as the toll of lynchings grew steadily higher, was not even given a public hearing by Senate or House committees. The bill would make lynching a federal crime, with violators standing trial in U.S. court.

NATIONAL HEALTH INSURANCE: This proposal (S. 1320, HR 3548) was sponsored by Senators Murray (D. Mont.), Wagner (D. N.Y.) and other liberals in both House and Senate. It proposes a 1½% payroll tax to create a national insurance fund to protect persons from the blows of staggering, sudden doctor bills.

The American Medical Assn. lobby calls this "socialism" (it isn't), and is throwing its support to the Taft-Ball-Smith substitute (S. 545)—a weak charity scheme. Senate committee held hearings on both bills but issued no report, and the bills failed to appear on either the Senate or House voting calendars.

ANTI-POLL TAX BILL: Bills to outlaw the poll tax prerequisite for voting in U. S. elections in seven southern states were introduced on the first day of the session (HR 7, 29). The GOP leadership waited until the final week of Congress before calling up the bill in the House. Although passed by a big margin, the long delay voided any chance of action by the Senate this year.

U. S. AID TO SCHOOLS: Principal bill to give Federal financial help to state school systems (S. 472, HR 2953) failed to reach the floor of either House or Senate. The bills would have permitted states with least financial resources to improve education facilities and give better breaks to its kids. Senate bill reached the calendar but was not acted on; in the House, the Labor & Education Committee never reported it out.

WOMEN'S RIGHTS: Bills to give women equal status under the law with men (S.J.R. 67, HR 1972) and to outlaw wage differentials based on sex (S. 1556, HR 4273) were kept in Congressional pigeonholes despite pressure from CIO and other organizations.

The Equal Status bill is an improvement over the time-worn Equal Rights Amendment to the Constitution, which would actually endanger many bills to protect women workers. The bill, supported by CIO, would outlaw unfair practices of discrimination against women.

LOW-RENT HOUSING: The Taft-Wagner-Ellender Bill (S. 866, HR 2523) would provide government assistance in financing and constructing a long-range housing and slum clearance program for the nation. The Natl. Assn. of Real Estate Boards screamed bloody murder, called Sen. Taft a "socialist" (he isn't), and effectively prevented action. CIO veterans organizations and hundreds of liberal and housing groups support the bill.

Sen. Tobey (R. N.H.) a strong backer of the T-W-E bill, managed to get a favorable 7-6 vote in committee, but it never reached the floor for action. Rep. Jesse Wolcott (R. Mich.) flatly refused to permit his House Banking Committee even to hold hearings on the proposal.

VETERANS: Congress unanimously passed a bill to allow vets to cash in their World War II terminal leave bonds—but failed to take action on the Morse-Kearney proposals to increase government allowances for GI's in the on-the-job training program.

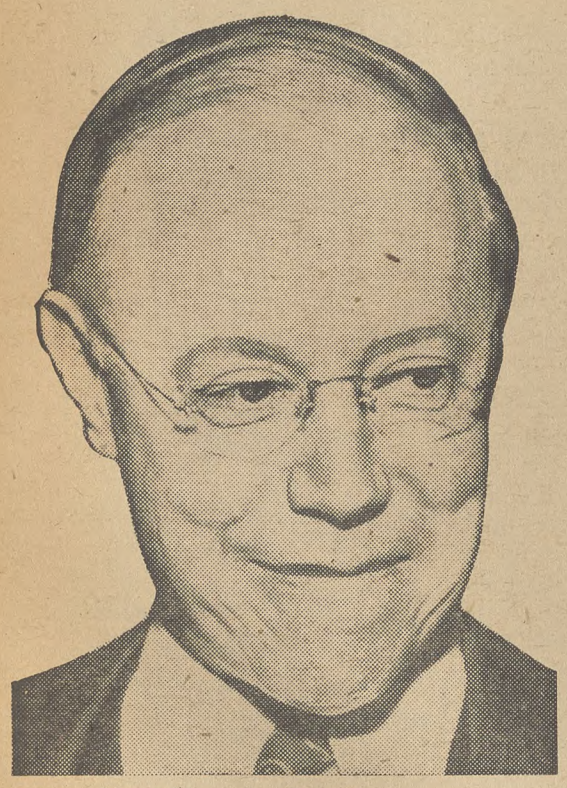
THE SENATE RECORD



SEN. ROBERT A. TAFT

"This (Taft-Hartley) bill is a perfectly reasonable bill in every respect. Strikes have largely been brought about by unreasonable demands..."

For Your Information . . .

THIS is the record of the 80th Congress on a number of vital domestic issues.

It passed the Taft-Hartley Bill. It weakened almost to the vanishing point the effectiveness of Wage-Hour Law enforcement. It failed to pass—or even to vote upon—a great variety of issues on which the American people want action. The 80th was an "NAM" Congress.

Because of this "do nothing" policy, this voting record cannot show the whole picture in all its perspective. It does not show the position of Senators and Congressmen on the dozen important measures that were left in Congressional pigeonholes.

There's no voting record, for instance, on the important Taft-Ellender-Wagner long-range housing bill; on the national health insurance bill strongly supported by labor and liberal organizations; on anti-lynch and anti-discrimination measures; on a 65c-75c minimum wage; on federal aid to education or the development of a labor education extension service; on proposals to halt the march of economic royalists towards increasing monopoly control of industry.

This long "no action" list is a key to the backward attitudes of the vast majority of the 80th Congress. The votes recorded in these pages, however, are the best possible indicator of how your representatives stand in the constant struggle between the people and the big economic interests.

THE CIO voting guide does not constitute a "black list" or a list of endorsed candidates. Labor's political action comes from the people in each district and state; they are the ones who in next year's election will make final judgment on each candidate for office. The record in the 80th Congress will be a major—though not necessarily binding—factor in these selections.

If you want further information on your Senator or Congressman, get in touch with the legislative or political action department of your local or international union; or with Nathan Cowan, CIO Legislative Director, 718 Jackson Place N.W., Washington 6, D. C.; or with CIO-PAC, 728 17th Street N.W., Washington 6, D. C.

ISSUES IN THE SENATE

Here's an explanation of the important domestic issues selected for the voting record printed on the opposite page. Read these summaries to understand why each issue was significant—then see how your Senators stood up to be counted.

1. TAFT-HARTLEY BILL—SENATE VERSION. This was the original Senate proposal for anti-labor legislation. It was based upon bills and suggestions offered by Senators Taft (O.), Ball (Minn.), Ives (N. Y.), Smith (N. J.) and others, with the help of a bevy of corporation lawyers and lobbyists. Opposed by CIO. Passed May 13, 68-24. Votes for are marked W; votes against are marked R.

2. TAFT-HARTLEY BILL—CONFERENCE REPORT. This version of the T-H Bill was product of joint Senate-House conference, and adopted many sections of original bill passed by the House. Nevertheless, supporters used wide-scale propaganda to argue that it was a "mild" bill. Opposed by CIO. Passed June 6, 54-17. Votes for are marked W; votes against are marked R.

3. TAFT-HARTLEY BILL—VOTE ON VETO. This was the vote to sustain or over-ride President Truman's sharp veto of the T-H Bill. It was the final test on the bill, and followed an unprecedented labor education program of mail, meetings and visits to Washington. Taft-Hartley bill became law as result of this vote. Sustaining of veto was supported by CIO. Senate over-rode veto June 23 by 68-25 vote. Votes to over-ride are marked W; votes to sustain are marked R.

4. WAGE-HOUR AMENDMENTS (PORTAL PAY BILL). This bill seriously weakened enforcement of the Wage-Hour Act. It reduced time for workers to file back-pay suits, offered numerous "outs" to employers to evade back-pay claims based on violation of law, and placed ban on all portal-portal wage suits. Opposed by CIO. Passed on March 20, 64-24 vote, and soon became law. Votes for are marked W; votes against are marked R.

5. RENT CONTROL — 'AS IS' EXTENSION Vote was on amendment of Sen. Taylor (D. Ida.) to continue rent control act for full year on "as is" basis. It was offered as substitude for Buck-Wolcott bill permitting 15% increases and weaker enforcement. Amendment was only clear-cut test vote on real rent control in the Senate. "As is" extension was supported by CIO. Proposal was defeated on June 2, by 58-16 vote, and the weak rent act was passed later. Votes against the Taylor amendment are marked W; votes for the amendment are marked R.

6. TAXES—VOTE ON SECOND VETO. This measure, supported by the GOP leadership, would have given whopping tax cuts to the wealthy and only small reductions on low incomes. Republicans, having failed to over-ride Pres. Truman's veto on the first test of the bill, passed it a second time—changing it only to make the benefits for the wealthy start next year. Bill was opposed both times by CIO; and CIO favored sustaining the veto. Veto was sustained July 18 by 57-36 margin. Votes to sustain the veto are marked R; votes to over-ride are marked W.

7. ANTI-TRUST LAW—REED-BULWINKLE BILL. This bill, supported strongly by the big-business lobby, would have freed the nation's railroads from the anti-trust laws. Such action would weaken all efforts to control big monopolies. Bill was opposed by CIO. Passed by Senate on June 18, by 60-27 vote; but House did not act on the bill during last session. Votes for the bill are marked W; votes against are marked R.

8. SEATING OF SEN. BILBO. This was a vote on a question of parliamentary procedure to bar the seating of Theodore Bilbo (D. Miss.), after charges of corruption and threats of violence against Negroes who wished to cast ballots in the Mississippi Democratic primary. CIO supported effort to bar Bilbo. The parliamentary point was adopted January 3 by a 38-20 vote. Votes for are marked R; against W. (Most of the 32 Senators elected in 1946 had not been sworn in when the Bilbo issue arose, and hence could not vote.)

9. CONFIRMATION OF LILIENTHAL. Appointment of David Lilienthal, former head of TVA, as chairman of the U. S. Atomic Energy Commission, was opposed by many Republicans and polltax Democrats. Their attack was directed against civilian—rather than military—control of atomic energy development, and against TVA's low-price power and general service to the nation. CIO supported confirmation of Lilienthal. Senate confirmed his appointment on April 9 by 50-31 vote. Votes for confirmation are marked by R; votes against, W.

10. VETERANS' JOB TRAINING PAY. This was a bill to increase the total income allowance for vets in on-the-job training program to meet rising living costs. Maximum for single vets would have been lifted from $175 a month to $200, and for married vets from $200 to $250. The test vote came on a motion by Sen. Taft to send the bill back to committee and let it die. CIO supported the bill and opposed Taft's motion. The motion to send the bill back to committee was defeated on July 25 by a 57-20 vote, and the Senate later passed the bill. The House has not acted. Votes to bury the bill in committee are marked W; votes against returning it are marked R.

READING THE SENATE RECORD

The symbol R in this voting record means a right vote from the progressive point of view of the CIO.

The symbol W means wrong vote.

The letters NV indicates the Senator did not vote.

The letters PR or PW indicate the Senator did not vote but had arranged a pair with a Senator from the opposite side.

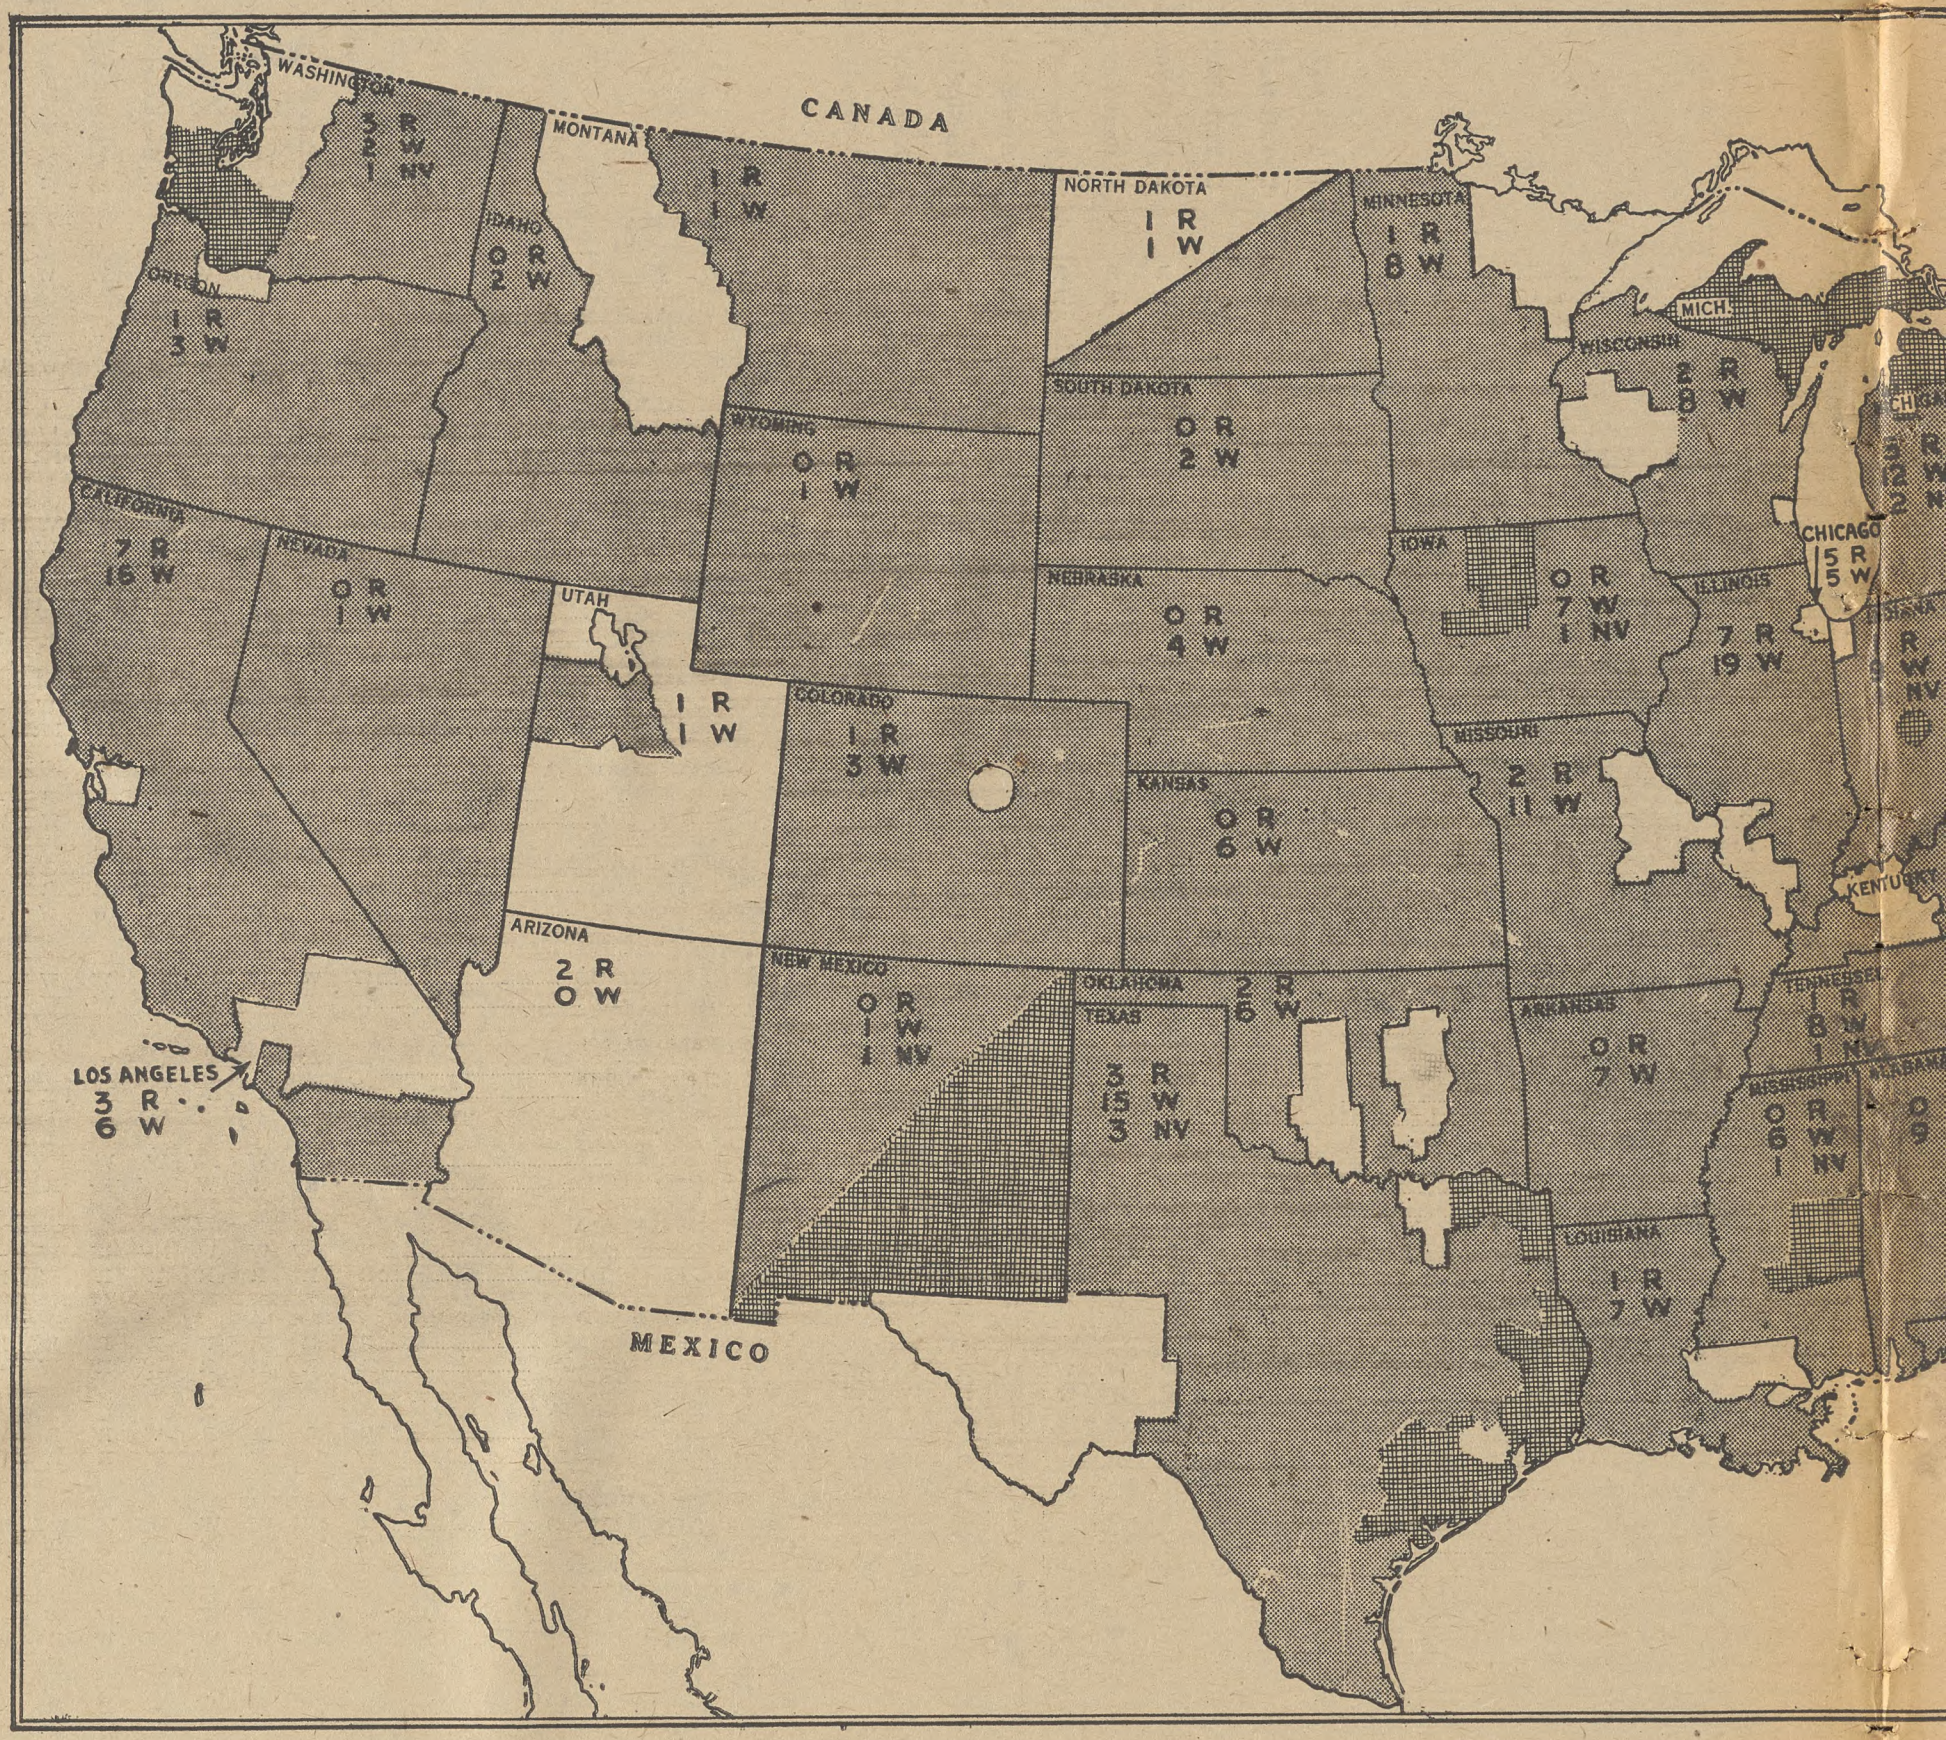
WORKERS LOST TAFT-HARTLEY



HOW TO READ THIS MAP

THIS map, prepared exclusively for The CIO News Voting Guide, shows how members of the House voted on sustaining Pres. Truman's veto of the Taft-Hartley Bill.

White areas are represented by Congressmen who voted to sustain the veto.

Gray areas are represented by Congressmen who voted to over-ride the veto and make the T-H bill law.

Cross-hatched areas are represented by Congressmen who did not vote on the issue.

Figures in each state show votes that were right (R) in sustaining the veto, and wrong (W) in over-riding it. NV represents non-voters on the issue. Figures for principal large cities are shown in the margin.

See how your Congressman stood up on this major issue of labor's rights and then make your plans accordingly for the 1948 election.

When People Vote, NAM Crowd Loses

By JACK KROLL

Director, CIO Political Action Committee

THE Taft-Hartley bill is law today because Congressmen representing many industrial areas voted for it and then voted to over-ride the President's veto. The failure of labor to register and vote in the 1946 elections is chiefly responsible for the passage of the Taft-Hartley law.

This fact points up more sharply than ever the fundamental necessity of CIO to organize its forces politically and to enter into political affairs with the same verve and spirit evidenced when it began its mighty and successful organizing drives to bring new economic freedom to the workers of this country. If CIO members do not want to see all of their rights swept away—as a matter of self-preservation—they must begin to take their politics seriously and must immediately organize their strength for the crucial political battle of 1948.

JACK KROLL

In the recent session of Congress we exerted ourselves through letters, telegrams and other forms of action to insure decent, progressive legislation. Such activity is obviously important but it does not alter the basic truth that anti-labor Congressmen will respond mainly to the interests they represent. The time to insure good legislation is before Congressmen get to Congress—by electing Congressmen who will represent the interests of labor and of all the people.

The election of such Congressmen will be insured by getting people registered and urging them to make a voluntary contribution to PAC. Enlisting a mighty army of a million citizen volunteers who will work on each block of every city will push this drive forward.

THE combined efforts of our CIO shop stewards, and local union officials and our million "self-starters," talking about the issues, distributing literature and urging people to register and vote and give to PAC, cannot fail to produce results.

The CIO is determined to secure repeal of the Taft-Hartley law. We will accomplish this goal only when the members of the CIO are fully aroused to the need for political action, understand their responsibility to register and vote, and organize to change the present Congress into a truly progressive one that will repeal the Taft-Hartley law.

THE HOUSE RECORD

Here's an explanation of the key domestic issues selected for the voting record printed on the opposite page. Read these summaries to understand the importance of each issue—then see how your Congressman voted.

1. TAFT-HARTLEY BILL—HOUSE VERSION. This was the original House proposal for anti-labor legislation. It sprang from Rep. Hartley (R. N. J.) and the House GOP leadership. Hartley announced it was purposely "tough"—including ban on industry-wide bargaining—to insure a "tough" compromise with the Senate. Opposed by CIO. Passed April 17, 308-107. Votes for the bill are marked W; those against R.

2. TAFT-HARTLEY BILL—CONFERENCE REPORT. This version of the T-H Bill was product of joint Senate-House conference, and included many sections of original bill passed by House. Nevertheless, supporters used wide-scale propaganda to argue that it was a "mild" bill. Opposed by CIO. Passed June 4, by 320-79 margin. Votes for are marked W; votes against are marked R.

3. TAFT-HARTLEY BILL—VOTE ON VETO. This was the vote to sustain or over-ride Pres. Truman's sharp veto of the T-H Bill. It was the final test on the bill, and followed unprecedented labor education program of mail, meetings and visits to Washington. As result of this vote and similar vote in Senate, the T-H Bill became law. Sustaining of the veto was supported by CIO. House over-rode veto June 20 by 331-83. Votes to over-ride are marked W; to sustain, R.

4. WAGE-HOUR AMENDMENTS (PORTAL PAY BILL). This bill seriously weakened enforcement of the Wage-Hour Act. It reduced time for workers to file back-pay suits, offered numerous "outs" to employers to evade back-pay claims based on law violations, and placed ban on all portal-portal wage suits. Opposed by CIO. Passed on Feb. 28, by 345-56, and later became law. Votes for are marked W; votes against, R.

5. LABOR DEPARTMENT FUNDS. The Appropriation Bill for the Dept. of Labor stripped that agency of essential operating funds for bureaus serving the nation's workers. Cuts ordered by the House hit the effectiveness and number of reports issued by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, which are widely used in collective bargaining; the Bureau of Labor Standards, dealing with safety and health conditions in industry; the Children's Bureau, which keeps an eye on violation of child labor laws; the U. S. Employment Service; and—before passage of the T-H Bill—of the Labor Dept. Conciliation Service and the Natl. Labor Relations Board. Some of the more drastic cuts were later restored in part by the Senate, but many of the agencies still suffer for lack of money. Cuts in Labor Dept. budget were opposed by CIO. House approved the reductions on March 25, by 343-39 vote. Votes for the cut are marked W; against, R.

6. RENT CONTROL—ENFORCEMENT FUNDS. There was no clear-cut vote in the House on extension of "as is" rent control legislation. Most significant test of sentiment came on a vote to cut OPA rent control funds by $9 million—a proposal contained in the 2nd Deficiency Appropriation Bill. Senate later reduced the amount of the cut, but provided only enough money to wind up OPA's activities. Later, Congressmen had no choice but to vote for the 15% increase formula or else to end all controls. CIO favored "as is" rent control action, and fought the move to cut OPA's operating funds. The House voted the $9 million cut on Feb. 18 by a vote of 319-25. Votes for the cut are marked W; against the cut, R.

7. HOME LOANS FOR GIs. Supporters of veterans housing tried to increase the number of home loans available to vets by permitting the government's RFC to buy such notes from commercial banks. Had such a move been successful, banks could have been more liberal in granting home loans to ex-GI purchasers. Supporters of vet housing sought to send the RFC bill back to committee to include this provision. The move to send it back was supported by CIO. The proposal was defeated June 24, by a 192-54 vote. Votes to recommit the bill are marked R; those cast against sending it back are marked W.

8. TAXES—VOTE ON SECOND VETO. This measure, supported by GOP leadership, would have given whopping tax cuts to the wealthy and only small reductions on low incomes. Republicans, having failed to override Pres. Truman's veto on the first test of the bill, passed it a second time—changing it only to make the benefits for the wealthy start next year. Bill was opposed both times by CIO, and CIO favored sustaining the veto. Veto was over-ridden July 18 by a 299-108 vote—more than the necessary two-thirds, but was later sustained in the Senate. Votes to sustain the President's veto are marked R; votes to over-ride are marked W.

REP. FRED HARTLEY

The Taft-Hartley Act is still "inadequate in many respects—particularly in regard to industry-wide bargaining."

9. AGRICULTURE APPROPRIATION. House Appropriations Committee proposed sharp, crippling cuts in funds for school lunch program, for soil conservation, for farm tenant loans, and for rural electrification projects. The proposed cut in funds would have left all four programs functioning on only one cylinder. Vote came on a motion to send the bill back to committee to force an increase in money allotted to the four social welfare programs. CIO supported the effort to increase the funds. The motion was defeated May 28 by a 180-174 vote. Votes for the motion to recommit are marked R; votes against the motion, and in effect to keep the funds low, are marked W.

10. LAND RECLAMATION FUNDS. Interior Dept. Appropriations Bill contained sizeable cuts in land reclamation projects connected with such big western river dams as Bonneville and Central Valley, and the Columbia and Missouri river basins. Projects would aid farmers and industrial workers throughout many western states. Supporters of the reclamation projects tried to send the Interior Dept. bill back to committee to secure additional, needed money. CIO supported this move to increase reclamation funds. The proposal to send the bill back to committee was defeated April 25 by a 197-140 vote. Votes to recommit the bill are marked R.; votes against recommitting and thus keep the funds lows, are marked W.

11. ANTI-POLLTAX BILL. This bill aims to eliminate payment of polltax as a qualification for voting in federal primaries and elections in seven southern states. Through effects of polltax, large numbers of southern reactionary Democrats have achieved status of entrenched power in Congress—on the votes of small minorities of total citizens in their districts. Anti-polltax bill was supported by CIO. It was passed suddenly late in session—on July 21—by 290-112. Senate took no action on measure. Votes for the bill are marked R; votes against bill are marked W.

12. REES 'LOYALTY' BILL. This vote came on a motion to send the so-called loyalty bill back to committee with instructions to provide machinery for allowing appeal to the courts on findings of the Loyalty Board set up in the bill. CIO and a host of other organizations had protested that accused government workers would be deprived of basic Constitutional rights, could be discharged without chance of appealing their case or confronting their accusers. CIO supported the move to send the bill back to committee to get additional safeguards. The motion was defeated July 15, by a 248-133, and the bill was passed later in the House. The Senate did not act on the bill. Votes to recommit the bill are marked R.; votes against recommitting are marked W.

READING THE HOUSE RECORD

The symbol R in this voting record means a right vote from the progressive point of view of the CIO.

The symbol W means a wrong vote.

The letters NV indicate the Representative did not vote.

The letters PR or PW indicate the Representative did not vote but had arranged a pair with a Representative from the opposite side.

A MEMO TO YOU from
PHILIP MURRAY

Congress of Industrial Organizations

CIO

718 Jackson Place, N. W. • Washington 6, D. C.

Office of
THE PRESIDENT

EXecutive 5581

The 80th Congress, adjourning its first session, leaves unfinished more measures for the people's welfare than any Congress in recent years. And when it has acted, it has hurt some or all of the American people.

This supplement of The CIO News sets forth the record of the first session of the 80th Congress. This record tells the American people that their Congress has failed them. In the face of rising prices, falling incomes, and housing shortages, the Congress struck at collective bargaining between labor and industry, destroyed rent control, made housing for veterans and others more unattainable, victimized the working farmer, and tried, although unsuccessfully, to favor the wealthy in tax reduction. Health, welfare, veterans, and civil rights issues were sidetracked.

To make the next session of Congress benefit the majority of the people, we must go, individually and in delegations, to tell our representatives, while they are home, just what we think of their past record and what we expect them to do next January.

We must organize now -- in our local unions, in our wards and precincts, our cities, and states -- to get the people registered and to raise the funds to support this drive to make citizenship effective. By knowing these issues, the people can create a political action movement by which in 1948 they can sweep out of office the Congressmen and Senators who voted against the people, and make the 81st Congress one of which the nation can be proud.

This is a tremendous job, but we can do it -- if we use this record, not only in our unions, but with friends, neighbors, and non-labor organizations in our communities.

Let the record speak.

Philip Murray

President.

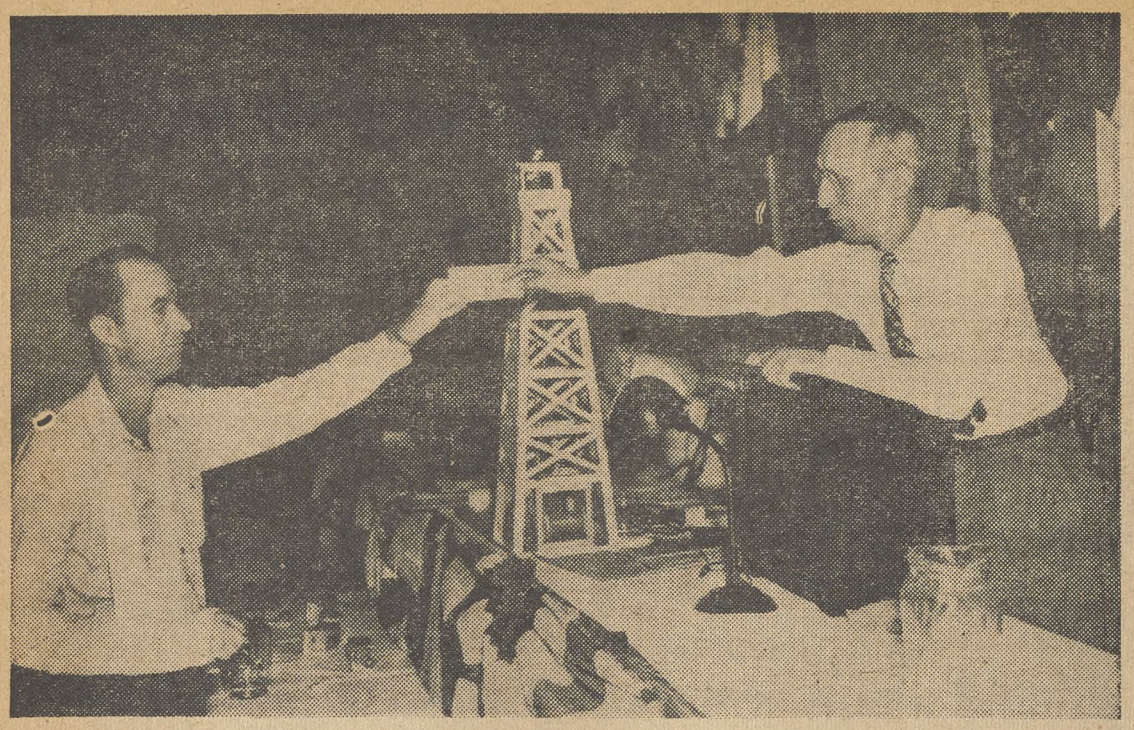
Philip Murray Warns Voters: You've Got A Polls Date in '48

(Story on Page 2)



O. A. Knight, president of the CIO Oil Workers, hands a campaign contribution to J. Curtis Trahan, a member of the union, who is running for Congress in the 9th Texas district. The scene, taken at the union's convention in Kansas City, is symbolic of the Oil Workers' determination to test the Taft-Hartley law's restrictions on political action. Trahan, mayor of Texas City, was injured while performing heroic work during his city's recent disaster. Knight led the 400 delegates in contributing $5 each to Trahan's campaign fund. The collection followed a speech by CIO Secy-Treas. Carey, who characterized the reactionary 80th Congress as the "best money could buy." Carey denounced the Taft-Hartley law, but declared it, like any law, can be dealt with through the Supreme Court. "These challenges of democracy," he said, "even though they may be termed deliberate violations of the law, are the only way in which we can establish the lagging failure of democracy to meet the needs of the people. I intend to violate the Taft-Hartley law at every opportunity." The convention was also addressed by CIO Steelworkers' Secy-Treas. David McDonald, who called for "throwing out the rascals who fostered the Taft-Hartley law." See story on Page 7.

MURRAY OPENS PAC CAMPAIGN

LABOR has begun its campaign to make 1948 a year to remember.

CIO Pres. Philip Murray sparked the crusade at a meeting of 520 members of the CIO Steelworkers' staff. He told the Pittsburgh gathering that CIO "would welcome" a test of labor's political activities under the Taft-Hartley Law.

He recalled that he had twice sought a test of the law. The first test was in the Baltimore Congressional by-election. The second is in the Pennsylvania Congressional by-election, set for Sept. 9, in which Murray, in the name of the Steelworkers, indorsed Democratic candidate Philip Storch.

Walter Reuther, head of the CIO Auto Workers, and Emil Rieve, president of the CIO Textile Workers, also backed Storch. The two unions, like Steel, have large locals in the Pennsylvania district.

Murray announced formally that Steel's campaign, tied in with PAC, would be aimed at electing Representatives and Senators pledged to repeal of the T-H Law and other reactionary legislation.

SO FAR, Murray said, the CIO has not heard from the Attorney General, although "we would welcome a test" of the T-H Act.

The constitutionality of the act on the political grounds, he said, would be questioned under the premise of free speech and expression.

Those who attended the Steel meeting included top international officers, directors of 34 USA districts and staff representatives from all districts.

Murray outlined the deplorable record of the 80th Congress in patterning a legislative program aimed to help the greedy "at the expense of the needy."

"If the present Congress has its way or a similar Congress is elected in 1948, America is in for very bad times," he declared.

"THE trade union movement—which has always been a barrier against rapacity and greed—must stand up and fight or this country will go down into vast unemployment and poverty and debt that trails in the wake of depression.

"Our people must be aware of the terrible dangers that confront them. Senator Taft and his kind have challenged your union. He has challenged the poor and downtrodden.

"We must not fight a defensive fight, but an offensive fight, because that is the only kind of fight that can be won. And how do we do it? By work—hard work. By knocking at our neighbor's door, asking him to register, asking him to vote, attending our meetings, getting our dollar-drive collection agencies at work.

"This PAC dollar is an investment every one of our members and friends can make in the welfare of this nation. It is an investment in the welfare of its people and the welfare of this union."

EQUAL PAY BILL SIDETRACKED

No hearings were held during the first session of the 80th Congress on the new equal pay bill, S. 1556, which was introduced by Senators Claude Pepper and Wayne Morse, and referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

The bill prohibits employers from paying lower wage rates to women than to men (1) for work of comparable character or jobs requiring comparable skills; (2) for comparable quality and quantity of work on the same or similar operations.

STARS FOR STORCH

KEYNOTED by support of the CIO, the Congressional campaign of Philip Storch in Pennsylvania's 8th District was heading into the final stretch last week.

Well aware they must overcome a substantial Republican majority in the traditionally GOP Lehigh-Bucks area, Storch's campaign committee, which represents a cross-section of the citizenry, is not missing a single angle.

Storch's opponent is the Republicans' best vote-getter, Franklin H. Lichtenwalder, Speaker of the State House. Independent political analysts say that Lichtenwalder, in his eight years at Harrisburg, has voted "wrong" 62 times and right only three times on measures affecting the welfare of the people. He is blamed for defeat of a State FEPC, which was backed by many leaders of all parties.

STORCH, president of the Lehigh Valley local of the CIO Newspaper Guild, is making an extensive speaking tour. Lehigh County, highly industrialized, has a number of clothing, textile, auto and steel plants.

Bucks is almost completely agricultural. Bucks also is the home of Joseph Grundy, longtime state GOP boss, former U. S. Senator and ex-head of the Pennsylvania Manufacturers' Association. The county is famed for its literary, art and theatrical colony.

Storch's campaign committee is headed by Daniel Hamm, retired principal of Allentown High School, and includes:

Ella Logan, star of the Broadway smash, "Finnian's Rainbow"; Actress Kitty Carlisle; Helen Papashvily, co-author of "Anything Can Happen"; Mrs. Jerome Chodorov, Frank Roth, head of the Soil Conservation Association; Walter Teller and Henry Chapin, opponents in the 1946 Democratic Congressional primary; heads of veterans, teachers' and civic groups, and several prominent Republicans.

A Labor Day rally for Storch will be held at Central Park, near Allentown. He has been indorsed by CIO Pres. Philip Murray.

In addition to the Storch election, six other Congressional seats will be filled in the near future. They include: the 11th Michigan District, where PAC has indorsed Republican Charles Potter, 7th Army hero who lost both legs in action; the 9th Texas, where PAC is backing J. Curtis Trahan, a member of the CIO Oil Workers and heroic mayor of Texas City during the recent disaster; the 16th Texas, the 14th New York, the 4th Ohio, and the Illinois 21st.

Sees Aged Hit By GOP Plan

Manley Wilson, Democratic member of the Oregon Legislature and editor of the CIO Woodworkers' newspaper, has accused the Oregon Republicans of deliberate suppression of relief measures in order to lay the basis for passage of a sales tax.

Wilson, urging defeat of the sales tax proposal in the vote October, 7 declared Oregon's income tax was the third largest in America, but that the State's aged get "starvation dole" averaging less than $38 a month.

Arrest 4 in Strike

Two union organizers and two striking women were arrested last week on charges of "disorderly conduct" and "molesting nonstrikers" as employes of the Lord-Mott Canning Co., members of the CIO Food & Tobacco workers, went on strike.

The union is seeking a 15c hourly increase.

S.F. LABOR UNITES

TAKING a tip from the success of a joint labor committee in the recent election in Oakland, just across the Bay, San Francisco's CIO and AFL have joined in political action.

Co-chairmen of the new group are Paul Schnur, secretary of the S.F. CIO Council and John F. Shelley, president of the AFL Central Labor Union.

A 12-man executive committee was set up which will consider candidates for labor backing in the city's November election, when a mayor and six supervisors will be chosen.

The committee marks the first time in 10 years that S.F. labor has met together. The session was set off by the passage in the Board of Supervisors of a city sales tax.

BIBLE HELPS UNION WIN ELECTION

Quincy Beltram, president of the Intl. Edge Tool Co. at Newark, N. J., said he began to receive messages from the Lord after firing 11 of his 17 employes for wanting to organize a union.

Beltram said he had acted in accordance with the Biblical quotation: "Cast out the scorner and the strife shall cease" when his employes began picketing his factory.

But the pickets, schooled in Beltram's Bible classes during work hours, retorted with an excerpt from Colossians: "Masters, give unto your workers that which is just and equal."

He had acted without sufficient reflection, Beltram confessed; if he had it to do over again, he would "refrain" from the wholesale dismissals.

The New Jersey State Mediation Board gathered together 15 of the 17 employes for an immediate election. The CIO won.

CIO, U.S. OPEN WAR ON PRICES

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

The CIO and the U. S. Dept. of Justice have launched simultaneous attacks on soaring prices.

Emil Rieve, administrative chairman of the CIO Full Employment Committee, declaring that speculators have had a field day in raising prices to near all-time highs, called upon Pres. Truman to summon a conference of industrial, labor and agricultural leaders to develop a voluntary program for price reductions.

The Full Employment Committee, composed of the presidents of the CIO Steel, Auto, Clothing, Textile and Electrical unions, further urged that the President and the Republican majority "agree immediately, upon the re-convening of Congress, to meet these inflationary threats to our economic security by enacting legislation permitting the establishment of price and rationing controls on speculative commodities."

Two days after he made his proposal public, Rieve received unwelcome testimony that the time for action was here. The U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics announced that prices had set a record high for the fourth week in a row. This time, BLS bluntly said the end is not in sight. Prices were 18% above June, 1946, last month of extensive OPA regulations, and 59% above the August, 1939, level.

Just after Rieve spoke, Atty. Gen. Tom C. Clark announced his Antitrust Division would prosecute criminally those who conspire to increase prices of food, clothing or housing.

Truman View

Pres. Truman, commenting at his press conference on Atty. Gen. Clark's probe, said he doubted that the investigation would actually bring many prices down. But, he said, it would expose those who are charging unwarranted high prices.

RIEVE's statement, issued at a full-dress press conference, was followed or preceded by these developments:

1. Sen. Robert A. Taft (R., O.), opponent of OPA and co-author of the Taft-Hartley Law, announced the make-up of Congressional subcommittees which will look into price increases in the East and Mid-West. Later, the Far West will be studied. He made the choices in his capacity as chairman of the joint Senate-House Committee on the Economic Report.

2. BLS also showed that a married man with two children made an average weekly pay of $48.46 in May, 1947, an all-time high, but that, after taxes and Social Security, this father's take-home pay of $47 was worth only $29.99 in 1939 dollars.

3. Rieve said following Clark's announcement that he felt that though CIO welcomes Clark's probe, "many prices are set by large monopolies and monopolies do not necessarily fall under the criminal law and under Clark's investigation. For example, in the automobile industry, General Motors controls probably 60% of the business and therefore is able to dictate prices."

AT his press conference, Rieve had recalled that 14 months ago the NAM carried on a nation-wide advertising campaign in which it pledged:

"If OPA is promptly discontinued, production of goods will mount rapidly and through free competition prices will quickly adjust themselves to levels that consumers are willing to pay."

He also recalled that Taft at the same time made similar predictions.

But, Rieve declared, prices have not gone down with the rise in production. Speculators have driven the wholesale price of meat up 85% while increasing slaughtering 150% since June, 1946, he said.

Profits are at an all-time high, he asserted, and, if the trend continues in the second half of this year, will be almost four and one-half times greater than the monies earned by American corporations in the pre-war years and 70% greater than in the peak wartime year of 1943.

Rieve declared such profits refute industry's claims that it must have increased prices because of wage rises. He pointed to recent price increases in coal and steel as examples.

"This is a time for action," he said. "The Congressional committee has announced it will hold hearings in 20 cities to get the story on prices.

"We shall cooperate with this inquiry. But the facts are widely known. Is this an investigation to forestall action? If so, a great deception is being played on the American people . . .

"Economic sanctity and responsible conduct on the part of our industrial leaders is imperative. Never have we witnessed a period when they have exhibited less statesmanship and less concern for the American public . . .

"Before we are catapulted into a new period of price rises and curtailed production aimed at creating even higher profits than the historically high levels which are now being enjoyed, we must stop these price rises.

"Industry is not doing it freely as a matter of daily routine. Legislation must be enacted giving the President control over prices and the right to institute rationing."

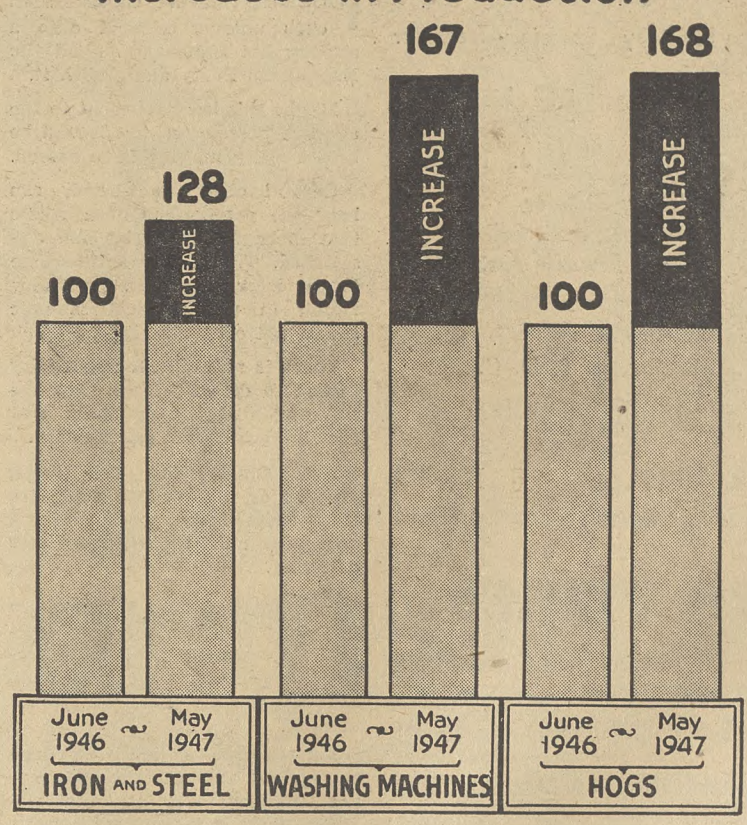
Rieve's proposal was attacked by the National Grange. Albert S. Gross, Grange Master, declared "selfish interests" were planning to break down farm prices as they were broken after World War I and in 1930-31.

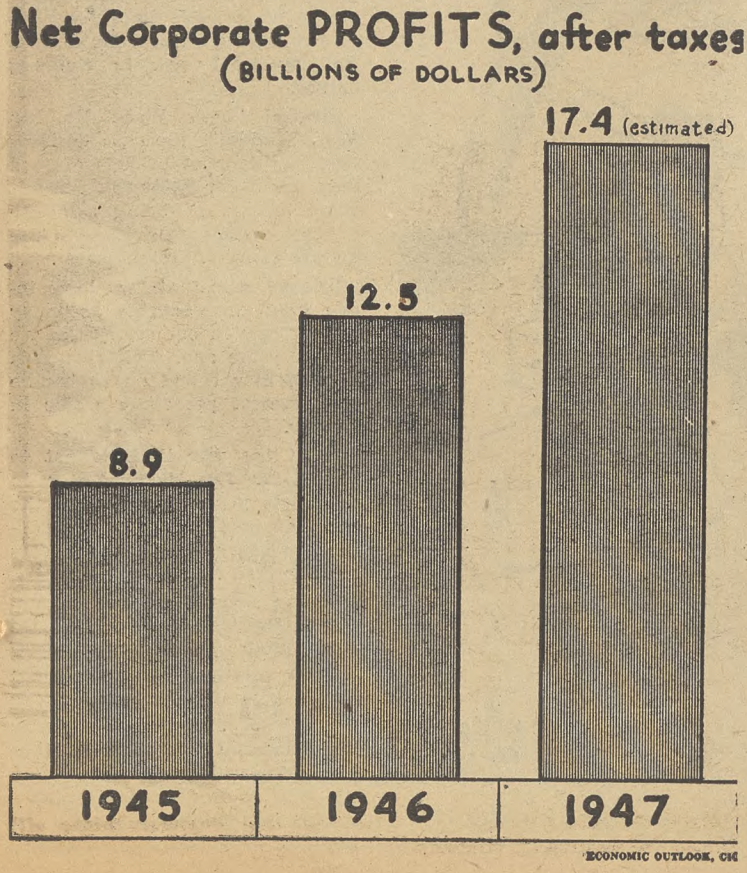
Taft's subcommittees on the Economic Report include:

Eastern: Sens. Flanders (R. Vt.), chairman; Baldwin (R. Conn.) and Myers (D. Pa.) and Reps. Rich (R. Pa.), Kilburn (R. N. Y.) and Hart (D. N. J.).

Midwest: Reps. Bender (R. O.), chairman; Talle (R. Ia.) and Huber (D. O.) and Sens. Ball (R. Minn.), Kem (R. Mo.) and Sparkman (D. Ala.).

The Far West Committee will be headed by Sen. Watkins (R. Utah). The other committee members have not been named.





Clark May Sue Trusts

ATTY. Gen. Tom C. Clark, launching a drive last week against conspiracies to maintain or increase prices in food, clothing and housing, recalled that Pres. Truman's State of the Union message pointed out "one of the gravest threats to our welfare lay in the increasing concentration of power in the hands of a small number of giant organizations."

Clark's action was immediately denounced by the National Assn. of Manufacturers.

Clark declared that the Antitrust Division of the Dept. of Justice will prosecute price conspirators criminally. Upon conviction, he declared, the department will recommend jail sentences for individuals and maximum fines for corporations.

The attorney general indicated that a new and more vigorous approach to anti-trust violations.

The following day, Clark said he would also prosecute unions if they are "found violating the anti-trust laws by conspiring with industry to fix prices."

He declined to say whether he had in mind any particular union, but the New York Herald Tribune said it recalled that Rep. Hartley (R., N. J.) accused large steel and coal companies of collusion with the United Mine Workers in recent negotiations.

The NAM straight-facedly admitted that some prices were out of line, but only in "isolated" cases. It said Clark's probe would be a blow to all industry and would harm the entire country.

BASKETSFUL OF MONEY DON'T APPEAL TO RIEVE

EMIL RIEVE, administrative chairman of the CIO Full Employment Committee, made the following statements during a press conference in Washington:

"We do not like the prospect of our members carrying basketsful of money to pay for a loaf of bread."

"Look at steel—they took a rise in January before the wage increases in April and then another just recently for the same excuse."

"The textile manufacturers are making more money than is good for them and I have told that to the industry representatives."

"The NAM, Congress and the GOP are to blame for the price increases. I am not blaming NAM as such, but the industrialists who are backing it."

"People were told that they would get more (goods) if price control were abolished, that production would rise and that prices would reach their own level. Prices haven't reached their own level, and production has gone up. The people have had enough—enough of high prices and they would receive OPA more favorably."

"We must remember that at the time of the murder of OPA the NAM and the Republicans promised that prices would seek their own level and that production would rise. But when supply exceeded demand, the manufacturers shut down the mills—as in the case of textiles and radios last spring—rather than cut prices. Unemployment resulted, the supply came down, but not the prices."

A reporter put in: "But that was an artificial situation."

"Sure, it was an artificial situation," Rieve continued, "the whole thing is artificial, but you can't excuse the situation entirely by saying that it's artificial."

"Everybody is worried about the costs of the goods they buy but no one is worried about the cost of the goods they sell—that is, the prices they charge."

"The congressional price inquiry is a little too late. We don't have to have an investigation to know why prices are high."

"Inflation? We're into it up to our necks."

"If prices continue to rise, the CIO will be forced to ask for another round of wage increases."

THOSE HIGH PRICES

"IF OPA is promptly discontinued, production of goods will rise rapidly and through free competition prices will quickly adjust themselves to levels that consumers are willing to pay . . ."

That's what the National Association of Manufacturers said more than 14 months ago.

Our guess is that the NAM would like to forget about that statement—forget that it was even issued.

But the people won't forget. They remember every time they buy groceries, or clothing or appliances. They remember and they become angry and they ask themselves, "When is it going to end?"

Let's get one thing straight: The NAM and its spokesmen in Congress either didn't know what they were talking about or they deliberately misled the public.

So they must be condemned for bad judgment or for lying.

Now, let's take a look at recent developments.

A Congressional committee decided to go out through the country to "look into" the high prices situation.

Attorney General Tom Clark ordered the Justice Department to crack down on those engaged in conspiracies to "maintain or increase present prices in the food, clothing and housing fields."

The CIO, through its full Employment Committee, has sounded another warning that the nation is headed for an economic bust and will suffer a great depression before too long unless something specific is done about the price situation.

It's a very embarrassing situation, because those who jacked up prices are failing in their efforts to convince the public that the unions were manning the jack handle.

The 'Great Mandate'

A FEW weeks ago a group of senators and congressmen were galloping around Washington, talking about the "Great Mandate" they had received from the people last November.

The public, they said, not only wanted but demanded stringent curbs on organized labor.

There was no doubt about it, they said. The unions had been throwing their weight around too much and the public was fed up.

Yes, sir, they had a mandate—and it called for something just like the Taft-Hartley Act.

Now the scene shifts to the man who made Galluping pay—Dr. George Gallup of the public opinion poll.

He put his opinion probers to work, and they came up with some unusual statements:

Four out of each 10 persons polled said they had never heard of the Taft-Hartley Act.

A majority of those who claimed they were familiar with the Act said they opposed it.

Dr. Gallup's comment was, "Labor leaders were outstandingly successful in their efforts to persuade the public that the Taft-Hartley Act is a dangerous and harmful piece of legislation."

All of which makes us believe that the "Great Mandate" was a figment of G. O. P. imagination.

Industry Now Carrying the Ball -- So the Public Thinks

By ALLAN L. SWIM

INDUSTRY, in its eagerness to curb unions, climbed onto a sizzling hot spot—and pulled the Republican Party along with it.

Maybe this isn't apparent to the average person yet, but it will be before many months have passed.

Careful observers already can hear the grumblings of a public that is beginning to become dissatisfied. The noise will become louder later on unless those now riding in the political-economic saddle get off their high horse.

There is no indication that they intend to do so because they are applying their sharp spurs and are riding hell-bent for inflation.

And those who are being stepped on and pushed aside are those whose incomes won't stretch enough to meet the increased cost of living.

THE Wagner Act, designed to place labor on an even footing with management in collective bargaining, took a terrible beating in the field of public opinion.

The public was led to believe that under this act the unions—not industry—was running the show. So, when anything went wrong in management-labor relations, the unions and the Wagner Act were blamed.

Even those who had never taken the trouble to read the act made speeches damning it and holding it responsible for our economic ills.

Evetually the act, for all practical purposes, was tossed out the window and along with it went the public's false belief that labor was in control of the nation.

INDUSTRY said the "New Deal gang" had made a mess of things and that it wanted to run the show.

Its first major act, performed by its spokesmen in Congress, was to kill price control prematurely.

The public was assured that the death of OPA wouldn't be followed by skyrocketing prices. The public knows better now—and is angry about it.

Then came the drive to make unions weak and ineffective. The public was told that labor needed curbing and that the Taft-Hartley Act would be a fine thing to regulate management-labor relations.

The T-H Act is now law and, although its major provisions do not become effective until Aug. 22, the public already is becoming suspicious of it.

YES, industry is on a very hot spot—and so is the G. O. P.

Their plan to straighten out the price-wage situation "by the natural laws of economics" has been a tremendous flop.

They are being blamed for each new increase in prices, for each new economic pinch.

Before long the public will learn that the Taft-Hartley Act is a very bad piece of legislation and that it will not smooth the often rough course of management-labor relations.

Spokesmen for industry will attempt to place the blame for this on organized labor, but the public won't buy that bill of goods.

Absolutely not! Management is in the saddle now. Industry is running the show according to its own rules.

Those who run the show will be held responsible for the bad performances.

HERE'S TIP-OFF

David Lawrence's U. S. News, explaining last week its opinion of "Why Auto Prices Are Higher," showed these increased costs in things that go to make a car:

Steel, up 17 per cent; coal, up 22; tin, up 22; cotton, up 23; copper, up 26; iron, up 29; lead, up 43.

Labor costs, U. S. News said, had risen the least of all: 12 per cent.

"BITE @X@X!!X THAT'S CONTEMPT OF CONGRESS!"

So They Say

ONE of the big scandals of the war production years involved the fight between various rubber companies over secret formulas for making synthetic rubber. The battle is still on, according to The Wall Street Journal, with the public interest, as usual, of little concern.

"The men who manufacture rubber are eager to keep secrets from each other—and they're making their second attempt to gain government consent," the Journal reports.

A company is reluctant, the Journal says, to put its full resources into solving the "pay-off question: How to manufacture a synthetic rubber tire that's as good as an all-natural rubber tire so long as it is pledged to pool information on research and production methods with its rivals.

"The U. S. government must be consulted. It built and still owns the huge synthetic rubber plants. But it wants to sell them now. And federal officials concede it's going to be tough to conduct the sale until private concerns have been given incentive to develop a type of synthetic rubber that can hold its own in competition with crude rubber from the Far East.

"This yearning for privacy arises from terms of an agreement signed in December 1941, by the industry and the Office of Rubber Reserve, an agency of the Reconstruction Finance Corp. The pact provided that any discoveries made privately by the companies up to that time and any know-how gained in the future course of governmental ownership should be freely exchanged."

"IT is now apparent that Republicans lost no time in pulling aside the debt-checkered lace curtains which have shielded the free-spending New Deal in its 14 years' dominance of government," says the August issue of Republican News, the GOP's official paper.

Judging by the way the probe conducted by Senators Brewster and Ferguson backfired, maybe the GOP shouldn't have been in such a hurry.

CHARGES that agreements between railroads are deliberately slowing down many freight trains, holding back delivery of perishable food and other shipments were made in a full-page ad run by the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway last week in the big dailies.

Headed "Let's Wake Up Rip Van Winkle!" the ad declares that "millions of bushels of food may rot in our fields this harvest time, instead of being available to the world's markets—because we are short of freight cars . . ."

The ad says that "we have today only three-fourths as many freight cars in our country as we had 20 years ago. This shrunken fleet is now called on to handle the greatest peacetime traffic in history.

"And the war itself is not to blame for the shortage—for in no single year from 1925 to the start of hostilities did the railroad industry buy as many cars as it junked . . ."

Giving some examples that imply agreements between roads to deliberately slow down many freight trains, the ad demands:

"Is this free competition? Could it be that these schedules are fixed by agreement? That the trains which could be fastest are held back for the slowest—so that no road can have even the slightest competitive advantage?"

'You Wouldn't Do That To A Horse'

FEW persons in the CIO know that there is any connection between a Minnesota peanut stand and one of their pet projects—but there is.

Hogs and Spam and a comment about a horse are part of the story.

There are two heroes—a "little" guy who didn't like being pushed around and a wealthy man who was able to sympathize with him.

The "little" guy, whose name nobody seems to remember, merely planted an idea.

The wealthy man, whose products are sold throughout the nation, took the idea and transformed it into something revolutionary in management-labor relations.

Extension of the "revolutionary idea," that workers should receive a guaranteed minimum wage, became part of the CIO program.

THE story began a number of years when worker recruiters for the Hormel packing plant at Austin, Minn., were rounding up a crew.

One of the men hired had been operating a peanut stand in a small town. The wage offered by Hormel looked attractive, so he closed up his little business and went to Austin.

This man, the "little" guy who played such a big part, did a workmanlike job and his employer was satisfied with him.

The packing season came to an end, as it did periodically, and the layoff began.

Most of those who received notice that they were being removed from the payroll just put on their hats and left, grumbling a little.

The former peanut stand operator didn't like what was happening and decided to do something about it.

JAY C. HORMEL, head of the packing firm, was surprised when the "little" guy insisted on speaking with him, but he listened.

The man told about the little, independent business that he had left behind. He said he wasn't told that work at the plant would be seasonal.

Then he made a statement that Jay Hormel has repeated hundreds of times—a statement as simple and as down-to-earth as the "little" guy himself.

The man was put back to work—and Jay Hormel started mulling over an idea that had formed in his mind.

The idea bore startling fruit later.

SLOWLY and cautiously, Hormel put into effect what came to be known later as the Hormel Full Guaranteed Annual Wage.

Almost everybody was skeptical about the idea of paying men for a whole year whether they worked 12 months or not.

Hormel officials were afraid the idea might backfire. The packinghouse workers viewed it with suspicion.

Gradually the kinks were ironed out and department after department went under the plan.

The plant revamped its operations and spent many hours working out technical details with the United Packinghouse Workers before the scheme really started working successfully.

HERE'S the conversation that took place between Jay Hormel and the "little" guy:

"You can't do this to me."

"Can't do what?" Hormel asked.

"You can't turn me out in the street. You wouldn't do that to a horse."

Reactions of NAM and Chamber Of Commerce to 80th Congress

HERE are the reactions of the National Association of Manufacturers and the Chamber of Commerce of the U. S. to the recently-adjourned session of Congress:

NAM NEWS

"CONGRESS next winter is expected to become a battleground on which defenders of the free enterprise system and believers in economical government will be resisting onslaughts of various classes of collectivists."

". . . unions are now subject to unfair labor practice charges. Since most of the . . . practices in which unions may engage take place on an employer's premises, management is in a position to deal effectively with the perpetrators."

"There is a strong possibility that the White House will offer its own tax reduction program."

BUSINESS ACTION (C. of C.)

"CONGRESS wound up seven months hard work with a record of which it can be proud."

"From the business viewpoint, the most important achievement was the Taft-Hartley Bill. On the other hand, the poorest job Congress did probably was in expenditure control, although some deep cuts were made."

"The new labor law . . . is a good law, but it is not a cure-all."

"The first session of the 80th Congress heard the voice of business. That voice must be heard as members of Congress return home to commune with their constituents. It also must be heard in the second session."

Unions Hold Key to Democracy

JACOB S. POTOFSKY, president of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, is one of a number of organization heads who have been interviewed by the Christian Science Monitor as to activities by which their organizations are defending American principles.

Potofsky, interviewed by Robert M. Hallett, declared: "Unions, properly administered, hold within themselves a key to the furtherance and perfecting of democratic procedures in the United States."

The ACWA head declared the only way to abolish the poll tax in the South was to elevate the working conditions of both whites and Negroes by organization and thus, slowly, educate them to work together toward equality for all.

As "musts" for labor in the field of democratic action, Potofsky urged:

1. More effective political action; 2. an adequate minimum wage rate; 3. a national health program to bring a sense of security.

In The Neck

JERRY KLUTTZ'S "Federal Diary," in the Washington Post, last week carried this item:

"NLRB STORY: Paul Herzog, chairman of the National Labor Relations Board, is in a New York hospital with a chest infection. Westbrook Pegler, the columnist and NLRB critic, was in the same hospital and he asked to see Herzog. The chairman agreed.

"Pegler made his appearance as a nurse was about to give Herzog a shot of penicillin. The columnist apologized and started to walk away, but Herzog stopped him with this crack:

'"For years, Peg, you've wanted to see the NLRB chairman get it in the neck. Now's your chance—stay where you are and watch the performance.'"

Seeks New Minimum

ORGANIZED labor has urged New York State Industrial Commissioner Edward Corsi to approve a wage board's recommendation of a 21½-cent increase in the state's minimum wage law for the cleaning and dyeing industry.

The public and labor members of the board had voted for an increase from 36 cents an hour to 57½. The 36-cent minimum was established in 1939. Employer members of the board opposed the 57½-cent minimum, favoring 52½ cents.

Labor spokesmen included Vera Miller, researcher for the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers' Cleaning and Dyeing Division; Jack Cohen, the Division's general manager; Daniel Allen, Greater New York Industrial Union Council, and Rose Schneiderman of the Women's League.

Strong Labor Movement Will Benefit Citizens!

IT HAPPENED at Pulaski, Va.—down in Dixie where tradition dictates that the business man must join the industrialists in fighting the CIO.

The organizing drive was moving ahead under full steam. Workers at the Pulaski Veneer Division of the Radio Corporation of America had just selected United Electrical Workers as their bargaining agent.

Coleman Furniture Co. was next on the CIO list. Then local business men threw their support behind the union movement by sponsoring a newspaper advertisement.

The ad, bearing the signature of 36 business firms, said:

"The undersigned merchants and business men of this community greet the Coleman Furniture Workers and extend best wishes for their success in the Labor Board election . . .

"A victory for the union (CIO) will also mean a victory for the citizens of this community because organization of workers will bring higher wages and better working conditions. Naturally, wage increases will be reflected in the business life of the community.

"This is one reason why the undersigned hope that your victory will be overwhelmingly complete for the United Furniture Workers, CIO . . . We hope Coleman workers will join hands with RCA, Wallner, Acme and Virginia Maid workers to bring about a higher standard of living which means a more prosperous community . . .

"Organized workers always enjoy a better standard of living than workers who do not have the protection of a strong union. Management, business and professional people have their unions. Workers too should have a union.

"We support the United Furniture Workers of America, CIO, because: It is a union of, by and for furniture workers. Its record is unexcelled in winning wage increases and better working conditions for its members, particularly in the South. A strong labor movement in Pulaski will benefit the citizens of Pulaski."

Vote in the Coleman election was 272 for United Furniture Workers, 67 for "no union" and 5 for AFL.

The vote in the RCA election a week earlier was 793 for United Electrical Workers, 87 for "no union" and 3 for AFL.

TRUMAN AID SOUGHT TO END SHIP STRIKE

URGING presidential intervention to help break an 8-week shipyard strike, Pres. John Green of the CIO Shipyard Workers last week in a letter to President Truman declared that employers were attempting to "take from our members such protection and security that they have obtained in the past 13 years . . ."

Green also urged investigation of the dispute by Congress and the Dept. of Labor and called for a wage review by the Labor Dept.'s shipbuilding stabilization committee to settle the wage issue.

The appeal went out as 1,200 employes of the Sullivan Dry Dock & Repair Co. in New York prepared to resume work after accepting a 12c hourly increase.

Although the union is seeking 13c an hour, union officials indicated that the 12c pattern recently set by the Todd agreement would be acceptable if no union-weakening strings are attached.

In his letter to Truman, Green accused Bethlehem Steel Corp., Federal Shipbuilding & Drydock Corp. (a U. S. Steel subsidiary) and the New York Shipbuilding Corp. (closely connected with Republic Steel) of making settlement of the dispute impossible by presenting union negotiation committees with "outrageous demands."

These three companies had previously granted substantial increases to employes in their west coast yards who are members of another union.

Meanwhile negotiations with the Federal Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co. broke down after the company's refusal to include any union security provision in the contract. Union spokesmen said the company also wanted to exclude from recognition employes in classifications previously certified by the National Labor Relations Board, demanded reduced overtime pay provisions and institution of new shift hours which would "cause injuries and eliminate the paid supper period."

In addition the company sought to reduce vacation benefits, eliminate all vacations in 1948 and set up its own grievance procedure.

Negotiations with the Bethlehem Steel Co. continued last week with the assistance of H. Ross Colwell, regional director of the U. S. Conciliation Service. Bethlehem had previously offered a 12c increase accompanied by conditions which would have meant the loss of ten years' gains, the union said.

PLAN STRIKE FUND

Members of Local 65 of the CIO Wholesale & Warehouse Workers last week voted 5,574 to 2,697 to tax themselves a week's pay to build a $500,000 strike relief fund against "the potentially destructive effects" of the Taft-Hartley Act.

In addition the union ratified a $10 salary cut for its fifty officers and organizers.

Rand Causes Trouble Again

REMINGTON Rand employes at Tonawanda and North Tonawanda, N. Y., walked out again last week, just two weeks after settlement of a prolonged strike of Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers.

The union charged the company with failure to live up to provisions of a memorandum agreement under which the company promised to open negotiations within two weeks for the settlement of certain grievances and the appointment of an arbitrator for settlement of the wage issue.

A company spokesman said the company had not had time to draw up a proposed contract.

Although the walkout is a continuation of the strike which began June 18, according to the union, Remington Rand officials announced their intention to file suit against the Electrical Workers for allegedly breaking a "no-strike" clause in the agreement.

The strikers also are protesting the decision of a state unemployment insurance official who ruled that the workers must wait seven weeks before becoming eligible for unemployment benefits.

SHORT, BUT SIGNIFICANT

An agreement providing for a 10c hourly wage increase for Hawaiian pineapple workers was signed last week by representatives of the CIO Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's union.

Affecting about 8,000 regular workers and approximately twice that number of seasonal employes in 11 plantations and 9 canneries, the contract put to an end almost 8 months of turbulent negotiations during which a 5-day strike threatened the loss of the entire pineapple crop.

★ ★ ★

Following a threat by the American Union of Telephone & Telegraph Workers to sue the company for breach of contract, the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. last week agreed to extend recognition of the union for 60 days.

AT&T previously had endangered recognition of the union after its 23,000 long distance employes voted to affiliate with the CIO. Although the contract does not expire until next April, the union, in accordance with the Taft-Hartley Act, must submit dues deduction cards signed by a majority of the employes as proof that it represents a majority.

★ ★ ★

While efforts were being made to avert a walkout of 450 CIO Packinghouse workers in Chicago, 950 production employes of Wilson & Co. meat packers in Omaha, Neb., struck in protest against "a contract violation" by the company.

The union claimed that the company had refused payment for a half hour worked Friday by employes of the hog kill department.

B. F. GOODRICH OK's COMPANY BARGAINING ON STRIKE EVE

NARROWLY averting a strike by 21,000 CIO Rubber workers in 7 cities, the B. F. Goodrich Co. last week agreed to the union's demand for company - wide bargaining.

Officials of the company and the union were to begin negotiations this week in Cleveland, Ohio. Seven hundred striking workers in the Goodrich plant at Tuscaloosa, Ala., returned to work following Union President L. S. Buckmaster's request that Goodrich employes stay on the job.

When the contract with Goodrich is completed, the Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. will remain the only member of the "Big Four" rubber companies without a company-wide contract. The demand is expected to be made next spring when Firestone's local contracts expire.

Negotiations with the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. began last Thursday, while no date has as yet been set for contract talks with the U. S. Rubber Co.

The union won an industrywide 11½c hourly raise last winter. Under terms of the agreement either the company or the union was entitled to reopen the wage clause as of July 22. The Rubber Workers, who had accepted 3½c less than the national wage pattern at that time, exercised the option.

OIL UNION SETS WAGE GOAL

THE CIO Oil Workers' convention set as its goal in the coming year a 25-cent-an-hour increase and a Standard Oil organization drive.

The convention, held at Kansas City, devoted much of its time to political action, with the feature address by CIO Secy-Treas. Carey. A member of the union, Curtis Trahan, is seeking a Congressional seat in a special election. He is mayor of Texas City.

Assistant Secretary of Labor John W. Gibson, addressing the convention, assailed the Taft-Hartley law, declaring it might destroy collective bargaining. He also criticized Congress for stripping the Labor Dept. of "some functions, and, by slashing our budget requests, curtailing other functions which we consider essential for all of our people."

Gibson said Labor Secy. Schwellenbach was determined "to stay on the job to direct with all his influence and energy the fight to preserve free collective bargaining and free labor unions."

President O. A. Knight presided at the convention.

Palmer Weber, CIO-PAC research director; William A. Hanscom, the union's Washington representative; Lindsay P. Walden, its attorney, and E. S. Phelps, its research chief, presided at educational and public relations seminars.

BROOKLYN BANK STRIKERS LED BY PURPLE HEART VET

NOT many months ago, John J. (Jack) Hurley, when he thought at all of unions, didn't think they were for bank employes.

Today, Jack and fellow-strikers are pounding the pavements in front of Brooklyn Trust Co. and its 23 branches for the right of bank workers to organize.

Jack Hurley, the strike chairman, is 24, a Marine veteran with a Purple Heart, father of a two-month-old baby and a teller in the Sheepshead Bay branch of Brooklyn Trust.

Brooklyn Trust is one of the largest banks in the U. S. It owns or has mortgages on a big slice of Brooklyn real estate.

Police around the bank outnumber pickets as much as 40 to 1. The union accuses the bank of hiring goons and Pinkertons to escort scabs. (Lewis Gibbs, trustee of the bank, is also head of the Pinkerton agency.)

Arrests of pickets have been frequent and 7 cases arising from the strike are scheduled for hearing.

The strikers are asking for the reinstatement of three fired workers, decent salary increases, job security and grievance machinery.

JOHN J. HURLEY

He's speaking to a Brooklyn Trust strike rally.

"You can sum it all up," Jack Hurley, who makes $45 a week, says, "in one short phrase—the right to organize. We know thousands of underpaid bank employes and white-collar workers are watching our fight. The banks hoped the Taft-Hartley Act would stop us. They will find that bank employes, like other Americans, will fight for a decent life for themselves and their families."

"You understand, of course, Wilson, that this baseball game will cost you your job."

Ask U. S. Aid In Safie Strike

THE CIO Textile Workers last week urged the U. S. Dept. of Justice to investigate a strike situation in Rockingham, N. C., where they say state and county police have "usurped and violated the civil rights of peaceful residents and orderly strikers."

The 1,100 employes of the Safie Cotton Mill walked out 6 months ago when the company, ignoring an NLRB election which certified the Textile workers as bargaining agent, refused to recognize the union. The company then fired 16 active union members, threatening to extend the firings at a later date.

The union charges that upwards of 50 policemen swarm over the area in which the pickets, limited to 20 by an injunction, file by peacefully. "The effect of this array of force at the plant where a legal and orderly strike has been in progress," the Union's Washington representative, John Edelman, wrote the Dept. of Justice, "is to intimidate and terrorize peaceful workers and local residents generally.

"Several of the deputies have been carousing around the community and, by their boisterous, threatening and generally improper behavior, have created fear and terror among the local residents."

A number of the strikers reported hearing both state and county police threaten that "blood will run" before long in Rockingham.

Following an audience with Gov. Gregg Cherry, George Baldanzi, executive vice president of the union, expressed amazement at the Governor's misinformation in regard to the strike. "I found him completely ignorant of the facts," Baldanzi said. "He has been informed that violence on the picket line necessitated the presence of state troopers. Actually there has been no violence since June at which time a railroad superintendent rammed a locomotive through the picket line."

Two Units Formed In Iowa, Nebraska

THE Iowa-Nebraska CIO Council held its final annual convention last week. The Council by action of the three-day meeting, dissolved itself as a single entity in favor of separate state organizations.

Separate councils, officials said, were necessitated by the rapid growth of CIO membership in the area and would facilitate handling of problems peculiar to each state.

Elected president of the new Iowa organization was Ed Filliman. Kenneth Everhart, secretary-treasurer of the two-state council, was unopposed for the same post in the Iowa council.

Addressing the three-day convention, CIO Councils Director John Brophy told delegates that "prices are high—out of reach for millions of our people. Profits are beyond the needs of management and stockholders. These two factors—high prices and excessive profits—spell trouble in the not too distant future. A depression may be expected unless the present level of production can be maintained"

TEXTILE UNION ASKS INCREASES IN SOUTH

HAVING successfully completed contract negotiations with Northern cotton and rayon weaving mills which upped wages 5c an hour, the CIO Textile Workers will move to secure wage benefits for its 125,000 members in the Southern cotton and rayon industries.

Emil Rieve, TWUA president, said the exact amount of the wage raise to be requested in the South would be determined at a series of conferences in that area.

Rieve expressed a desire to wipe out the wage differential re-established by the Northern increases. "There is no reason for the existence of such a differential," he said.

"Cotton textile wages in all parts of the country are still too low. Sharp increases in the costs of food and other necessities and the removal of effective rent control make it all the more necessary for a wage increase at this time."

The union head said that textile profits, hitting an all-time high, made it possible for the industry to easily increase wages and at the same time lower prices.

CIO Textile workers in the South won a 9c increase in February, bringing average hourly earnings in the region to 95c.

UAW Strike May Spread

EFFORTS of a three-man federal conciliation panel continued last week without results as the CIO Auto Workers local at the Murray Corp. in Detroit threatened to extend the month-old strike to other Murray plants.

The 7,000 employes who produce auto parts mostly for Ford and Studebaker walked out as a result of the company's refusal to include a "no-penalty" clause in the contract. The clause would prohibit damage suits against the union for wildcat strikes. Penalties other than damage suits, which the Auto Workers claim could wreck the union, are imposed by the contract.

The disputed clause provides that "the company will be able to avail itself of all other remedies provided in the contract in the case of strikes or work stoppages."

Representatives of the union said they began to suspect the company of bad faith when Murray negotiators tossed in a long list of supposed abuses committed by the union as evidence of the union's irresponsibility.

Included among the list of past grievances was a stoppage at a Murray plant in Pennsylvania, where the Detroit-Ecorse local has no jurisdiction, a sitdown strike in 1937 before the union had been recognized, union members' attendance at Cadillac Square mass meetings, which had been privately authorized by the company to avoid bad relations with General Motors and Ford, where permission had been withheld.

Stoppages, the union contended, average 3 minutes per worker per year over a 10-year period.

Company President Clarence W. Avery accused the union of fomenting chaos and secretly wanting wildcat strikes.

An estimated 70,000 workers have been made idle in the automotive industry due to lack of the parts produced by the Murray employes.

T-H RESTRICTIONS EMASCULATE WAGNER ACT

THE major portions of the Taft-Hartley Law become effective Friday, Aug. 22.

Already in effect have been some of the law's provisions, including those affecting political action (twice tested by CIO Pres. Philip Murray), but Friday, these portions of the act emasculating the Wagner Labor Act become the law of the land:

Ban on the closed shop, union unfair labor practices, cooling off and notice provisions prior to strikes, injunctions against unions, craft amendments, rules making it virtually impossible for supervisors to win union coverage, etc.

In effect, the Wagner Act becomes not even a 20th carbon of its former self.

While many repercussions are expected beginning Friday, numerous developments possibly affecting its future have occurred since passage over Pres. Truman's veto. The developments include:

1. Political action: The CIO has pledged itself to "exercise our political rghts for the purpose of mobilizing the American people for the repudiation not only of the Taft-Hartley Bill but of the entire reactionary program of which it is a part." Joint CIO-AFL-Brotherhood political action groups began to spring up in many areas.

2. NLRB proceedings: The CIO advised its constituent unions to avoid the NLRB under T-H, relying on economic strength and collective bargaining strength to win recognition.

3. NLRB resignations: Many key officials of the NLRB resigned, saying the new law was unworkable.

4. Freedom of Press: Two tests of this provision by Pres. Murray were followed by Congressional moves to repeal this portion.

5. "Mandate of the People." Many Congressmen claimed they backed T-H because of a mandate in the 1946 election. But, a Gallup poll, taken after passage of the law, showed that a good majority of Americans considered it unfair.

6. Truman warning: Truman admonished the new NLRB (it becomes five instead of three members) that NLRB is part of the Executive Branch of the Government and therefore is responsible to him and not to members of Congress.

(Last week, Oscar Smith, who resigned his post as NLRB Field Director because the new law eliminates his duties, told the CIO News that the practice of consulting members of Congress was a new NLRB practice.)

7. Penalty clauses: Several unions, notably the CIO Auto Workers with Ford, won clauses waiving penalties under the T-H Law.

THE latest no-penalty clauses signed by UAW were with Ainsworth, Keystone and Hettche, all Detroit concerns.

In Detroit, Rep. Hartley (R. N. J.), co-author of the T-H Law, made an address before the International Apple Association in which he assailed "big business leaders who are attempting to by-pass the law because they are more interested in the almighty dollar than in good government."

(In the CIO News of August 11, CIO General Counsel Pressman said that the Ford and similar no-penalty agreements were not evasions of the T-H Law.)

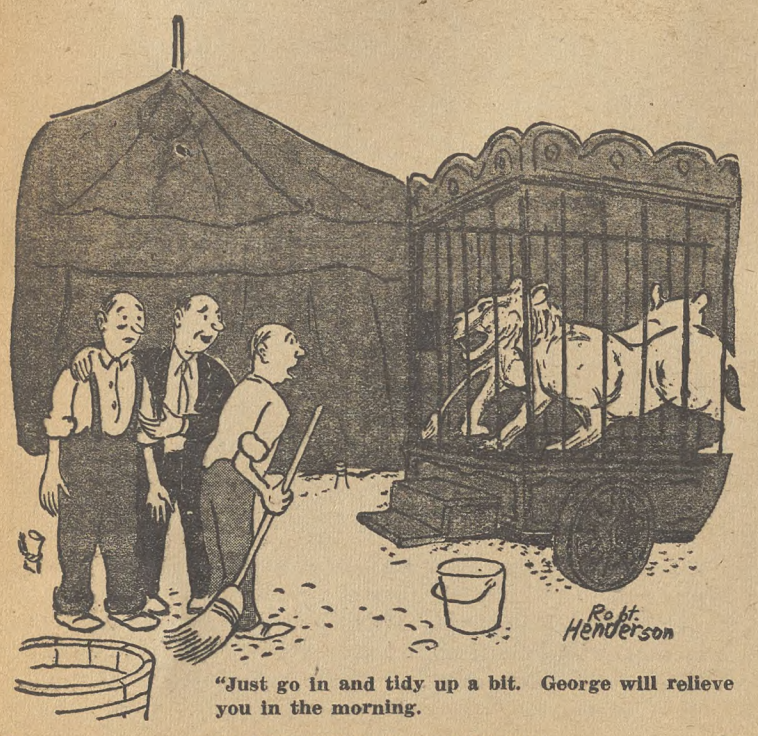
FIELD MERGES TWO PAPERS

Two liberal Chicago newspapers —The Sun and the Times—have been merged under the ownership of Marshall Field, III.

Field, owner of The Sun, purchased a majority of the 88,977 Times shares for a reported price of $5,338,000. The Sun, a morning paper, will be changed to a tabloid. The tabloid Evening Times will continue to be issued in that format.

The two Sunday papers, the Sun and the Times, will become the Sun-Times. The two syndicates operated by the papers will be known as the Sun-Times Syndicate. Richard J. Finnegan, editor and publisher of the Times, will continue in that capacity. Both papers have editorial contracts with the CIO Newspaper Guild.

Field, heir to the department store fortune, is also owner of New York's PM, the Southern Farmer and other interests.



"Just go in and tidy up a bit. George will relieve you in the morning.

Law Log

THESE are your important future and past dates under the Taft-Hartley Law:

AUGUST 22, 1947

Title 1, containing new rules on union unfair labor practices.

JUNE 23, 1947

These portions went into effect immediately upon passage of the bill over Pres. Truman's veto:

1. Section 304, purporting to tie hands of unions in political action. This includes the now-famous "freedom of press" gag, twice tested by Pres. Philip Murray.

2. Opening of courts to damage suits against unions, including those concerning wildcat strikes.

FUTURE CHANGES

1. Checkoffs and health and welfare funds face restrictions on expiration of contracts or July 1, 1948, whichever is earlier.

2. Union shops or maintenance of membership clauses face restrictions at contract expiration or one year, whichever is earlier. Contractual closed shops die.

UAW WINS TWO DISPUTES

ISSUES which almost provoked a strike at the Ford Motor Co. a week ago were reported to have been resolved late last week as the company agreed to "no-penalty" and pension provisions sought by the CIO Auto Workers.

Under the proposed contract workers will receive an 8c an hour increase, a pension plan and a promise from the company not to bring suit for "wildcat" strikes.

CIO Auto Workers at the Clinton (Mich.) Machine Co., were scheduled to return to their jobs this week following a stormy strike which resulted in a 10c hourly wage increase and production bonuses.

The strike followed the company's rejection of the union's demand for a 15c increase.

Earlier in the week fists, clubs, and bricks began to fly as company president Donald Thomas led a flying wedge of strikebreakers through the picket line behind an American flag.

Prior to the "back-to-work" march, Thomas, according to the United Press, had urged his 200 followers to attack the pickets. As they stormed through the picket line, the union's president, W. H. Whitlock, was trampled and knocked unconscious.

Prepare Drive —Off Golf Tee

Michigan CIO members on Sept. 6-7 will take their minds off raising wages and concentrate on lowering golf scores.

On those days, the State CIO and the Auto Workers will stage the first annual CIO golf tournament at Cascades Club, Jackson, Mich.

Entry fees are: $4 for each four-man team representing local unions; $1 per entry in men's and women's championships; $1 for each twosome in the mixed championships; 25 cents apiece for special events. There'll also be a golf party Saturday night.

"Good morning, Hopkins, you're fired."

Bite on You

Dun and Bradstreet's Index for Aug. 12 showed that wholesale food prices continued to move upwards. The index was $6.59, compared to $5.30 a year ago.

2,584,000 Are Jobless

U. S. employment climbed to a new all-time high of 60,079,000 jobs in July but at the same time unemployment hit a postwar record of 2,584,000, the Census Bureau reported last week.

Employment jumped 2,239,000 since last year while unemployment rose approximately 300,000, the report showed.

It was the second month in which the nation's employment topped the postwar goal of "60,000,000 jobs." The Bureau found that one significant difference in the unemployment situation compared with a year ago was that workers 14 to 19 years of age now represent about 28% of the jobless.

Union Nines Set For Games

An intersectional CIO sports contest will be staged at Toledo, O., Sept. 7.

The softball team of the St. Louis Joint Board of the Retail, Wholesale and Department Store Union will play the team of the Toledo Joint Board of the same union.

In 1948, the Toledo team will go to St. Louis for a return game.

Pete Saffo, St. Louis Joint Board member of sports, said he is working with Vice-President Martin Kyne of RWDSU in an effort to arrange an intersectional tournament of the International next year. He said the following cities have ample material to put teams into a RWDSU intersectional sports event: Atlanta, Birmingham, Memphis, Dallas, Kansas City, New Orleans, St. Louis, Chicago, Los Angeles, Detroit, Toledo, Grand Rapids, Pittsburgh, Baltimore, Philadelphia, New York, Providence and Boston.

Strikebreaker Bergoff Dies

PEARL L. BERGOFF, self-styled "King of the Strike Breakers," is dead.

Bergoff boasted often that he had made $10,000,000 in strike-breaking activities in the U. S., Canada and Cuba. His clients included some of the nation's largest concerns, including Remington Rand (in 1936), steamship lines in longshoremen's strikes, the Postal Telegraph Co., the City of New York during a street sweepers' strike, and others.

His "finks," "nobles" and "missionaries" called him "the General" and were always ready to head for the scene of a strike at a moment's notice. But, occasionally, they fell out with the General, several suing him for alleged wages unpaid.

Bergoff also carried on campaigns against union organizing drives and potential strikes by placing labor spies, called "key agents," in many plants. The "missionaries" worked on the families of strikers, trying to persuade them to work in turn on the union members.

Bergoff claimed his "best" strike was that in 1909 against the Press Steel Car Corporation of McKees Rock, Pa. A nine-day clash between his agents and strikers left 22 dead and 216 wounded.

Bergoff retired in 1942 after losing his detective agency license. He was once tried, along with James Rand, under the Byrnes law on charges of transporting strikebreakers across state lines, but both were acquitted.

Fishermen Join CIO In Louisiana

The CIO in Louisiana gained some 1,200 new members last week when the fishermen of the Morgan City, La., area voted to affiliate, Fred C. Pieper, state CIO director, announced.

Harvey Lewis, president of the Gulf Coast Sea Food Producers and Trappers Assn., Inc., said the affiliation of his membership with the CIO does not in any way change the structure of the local organization. Under the terms of the affiliation, the local group remains fully autonomous. It will become a CIO industrial union.

Children Should Wash Before Eating to Avoid Polio

Parents should see that children wash hands thoroughly before eating as one precaution against polio, particularly during the summer epidemic season, according to the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis.

The National Foundation through its local chapters is issuing a series of six simple health rules that should be observed during the summer to help combat the disease.

Scientific studies, financed by March of Dimes funds, indicate that the hands may be a means of spreading the virus infection through contamination of food, drinks or objects carried to the mouth.

For this reason, a high standard or personal cleanliness should be maintained especially during the polio danger months—late June through September, the National Foundation cautions, adding that fresh fruit and vegetables should be washed well before eating.

It's the housewife who pays and pays and pays and pays and pays and pays and pays and pays and pays and pays and pays and pays and pays and pays and pays and pays.

Like Father, Like Son?

By LAURA GRAY

"WHAT do you think she will be when she grows up?" I asked, gazing at my three-months-old granddaughter who lay in her crib —the sleeping image of my matter-of-fact son.

"A writer," responded her imaginative young mother with assurance. "I've always wanted to be one, but I've never had the necessary time."

We must remember that though the child is his parents' offspring, he is not a repetition of either of his parents, but is an entirely new individual, with something of many of the ancestors of both his father and his mother in his make-up.

He is himself, and the parents' own frustrations and desires should not influence anyone's expectations or treatment of him.

To expect a son to follow naturally in his father's footsteps is not right. Even if the boy seems personally cut out for his father's occupation, no pressure should be exerted; the decision should be made by him alone.

HOW can we guide our children toward choosing a life work wisely? First study the child from his infancy and be sure that his time is filled with interests. Provide opportunities for him to know about many callings.

Perhaps, as the years fly past, he will keep returning to one line of activity. He may show a love for making things, a delight in music, or an outstanding desire to understand machinery.

Youngsters often follow one urge and then another—each being of more or less short duration. Today it may be planes, then radio or photography may take the spotlight. A trip to the country may make the work on a farm crowd out other interests.

At one time a boy may feel that a sailor's is the only life. However, if he returns again and again to one of these occupations, then we can try to help him to develop that one far enough to judge of its future prospects for him.

MANY young people show no special bent. Whether they do or not, we should encourage them to put forth their best effort into all that they attempt—not by scolding, but by showing them how the giving of oneself to a project brings deep satisfaction.

The search for talent can be made both at home and at school. At home, we should talk to our youngsters about many callings and let them see the activities that they embrace.

Also, we should familiarize ourselves with the new occupations that appear daily in this changing world. In our talks we should emphasize the joy of service rather than the idea of gain. Instead of "How much money can I make?" encourage the question, "What have I to give?" Becoming conscious of a great need will sometimes call out latent talents.

THE young are idealists, and once fired with a purpose will often surprise their elders with their enthusiasm and ability.

By studying these precious ones entrusted to our care, knowing their hearts, constantly supplying interests, we parents gain a competence to guide in the choice of a vocation as no one else can.

Tomorrow's Citizens • By Rose H. Alschuler

ARE YOU AS PATIENT AS SHE IS?

By ROSE H. ALSCHULER

To a child of three, buckling a shoe is a real feat. It takes concentration, several tries, and time. This is true of any effort at self help. Let's try to be as patient as the youngsters. Let's resist the temptation to do for them the things that they want to do for themselves. We will if we remember that self help in the little homely details of dressing and feeding themselves are the foundations of independence. Dressed by an adult during the third year, many children definitely resist helping themselves at four when they think they have more important things to do and think about.

UAW KIDS AT CAMP

HUNDREDS of children whose parents are members of the CIO United Automobile Workers are learning democratic principles along with their swimming, singing and handicrafts work at camps sponsored this summer by the UAW-CIO.

The union hopes to have four to five thousand kids in UAW camps next summer, as local union committees get organized.

The UAW children's camp program was initiated June 28 on a 23-acre area at Sand Lake, Mich. The camp was sponsored by the union's Toledo Local 12.

The first group, boys 9 to 15 years old, stayed a month and were followed by a similar group of girls. Children were accepted without regard to race, creed or nationality.

Another children's camp opened July 6, at the FDR-CIO Labor Center, Port Huron, Mich., with some 400 children sent by the Michigan CIO Council and the UAW. Most of them were youngsters of UAW parents. The camp ran in two sessions of one week each.

The children gained an average of three pounds each during the first week, camp supervisors reported. The UAW Medical Health Center provided medical supervision in case of accidents or sickness, but except for a bumped head, no one turned up on sick call.

STEEL APPOINTS PAC WORKERS

The CIO Steelworkers have named 10 regional assistants to the union's National Political Action Director John J. Mullen.

The appointments were:

George Pennington — Central and eastern Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Maryland; Mike Petrak—Western Pennsylvania and Youngstown, O.; Phil Scheiding—West Virginia and southwestern Ohio; F. N. Hoffman—Ohio, Indiana, parts of Illinois, Missouri, Kansas, Iowa, Nebraska, Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas.

Frank Annunzio—Northern Indiana, northern Illinois and Wisconsin; Earl Bestor—Northern Michigan and Minnesota; Ben Gage—Southeastern United States; G. J. Conway—West Coast states and Colorado, and John Thornton—National Negro Division with offices in Washington.

A Movie Proves:

'RACE HATE, LIKE A GUN, CAN KILL SOMEBODY'

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

IT ISN'T often that a Hollywood movie can be recommended for dramatizing an issue that is related to an important CIO policy. When the movie is also a murder mystery, and a darn exciting one that will keep you sitting on the edge of your seat clear to the end, it is still more unusual.

"Crossfire," newly released RKO-Radio picture co-starring Robert Young, Robert Mitchum and Robert Ryan, is such a movie. It's the first picture Hollywood has produced that deals openly and frankly with anti-semitism.

But don't let the serious subject mislead you into believing that the picture is preachy. The message it carries arises naturally out of the realistic story and the actions of the life-like characters portrayed, and lets you draw your own conclusions.

The suspense is sustained so skillfully that you won't guess what leads to the solution of the murder until Robert Young, as the police captain, Finley, in charge of the investigation, tells you.

THE story deals with the murder of Joseph Samuels, a Jewish war veteran, played by Sam Levene, who creates a convincing character in the few short scenes before he is mysteriously murdered.

Robert Ryan, as Monty, the GI with the storm trooper's mind, is the handsome and prejudice-riddled villain in the piece, and Robert Michum plays the mixed-up soldier suspected of the murder. Paul Kelly as a loving but unloved husband futilely injects his own unhappy story into the murder drama.

Gloria Grahame, as the bitter dance-hall dame, and Jacqueline White, as the young wife who sticks by her suspected soldier husband, play the lead feminine roles.

THE case against race hatred is summed up simply in a few short speeches by Robert Young, who does a fine piece of acting as the keen, intelligent and quiet-mannered Captain Finley. At one point he says, for instance:

"This business of hating Jews comes in a lot of different sizes. There's the 'you-can't-join-our-country-club' kind . . . and 'you-can't-live-around-here' kind . . . and 'you-can't-work-here' kind." And because we stand for all these, we get Monty's kind. You know we have a law against carrying a gun, because a gun is dangerous. Well, hate is like a gun. If you carry it around with you, it can go off and kill somebody."

To a GI whom he is trying to persuade to aid him in exposing the killer, the captain tells this story:

"ABOUT a hundred years ago in Ireland, the potato crop failed. It was serious. A lot of the Irish came over here. Immigrants. Their talk was different. Their religion was different. They were Catholics, most of them. They settled down in different places. They liked it here.

"One of them I knew about stayed in Philadelphia. He worked and saved to buy some land. He thought of himself as just another man living in America. But suddenly one day he looked around and saw that something had happened. It frightened him. Fear and hatred of all Irish Catholics had developed and spread like a terrible disease.

"He saw that he wasn't an American any more. He was a dirty Irish Mick! A priest-lover! A spy from Rome! A foreigner trying to rob men of jobs. He didn't understand. He didn't know what to do. He didn't do much of anything—he couldn't.

"But one day when a bunch of men attacked his parish priest, he waded in to help the priest. That night on his way home from work he stopped off for a beer. When he left the bar two men followed him, carrying empty bottles. They didn't mean to kill him . . . they were just going to rough him up a bit. They didn't start out to kill. They just started out hating. But 20 minutes later my grandfather was dead . . .

"Thomas Finley was killed in 1849 just because he was an Irishman and a Catholic . . . and last night Joseph Samuels was killed just because he was a Jew . . .

"Hating is always the same, always senseless. One day it kills Irish Catholics, the next day Jews, the next day Protestants, the next day Quakers . . . it's hard to stop. It can end up killing men who wear striped neck ties, or people from Tennessee.

CURTAIL STEEL

In the midst of an acute shortage of steel supplies in auto and other industries, the Iron and Steel Institute announced last week that operations were scheduled to decline 1.7 points to 93.2 of capacity.

In Washington, a Senate Small Business Subcommittee announced it would ask Big Steel for an explanation of the steel shortage. The subcommittee is headed by Sen. Martin (R., Pa.). The probe was ordered at about the same time Industrialist Henry Kaiser urged Congress to investigate Big Steel's distribution systems.

Radio

Packing Union's Program

THE CIO United Packinghouse Workers will go on the air in a series of radio programs to be broadcast three times a week for a year beginning Sept. 3, announces A. T. Stephens, director of the union's Dist. 3 Council in Des Moines, Iowa.

The programs will be heard in Iowa, Nebraska and Colorado over the Tall Corn Network, Wednesday and Friday nights at 7:15 and Sundays at 1:30 p. m. The Rev. John Harley Telfer of Ottuma will be commentator.

Stephens described the program as "the most ambitious use of radio time yet made by any labor organization." The one sponsored by the CIO United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, he pointed out, is heard only once a week.

WASHINGTON THEATER CLINGS TO BAN ON NEGROES

THE National Theater, Washington's only show place for legitimate stage productions, is still clinging stubbornly to its outworn policy of banning Negroes, despite the fact that this may mean the nation's capital will be a "playless" city.

Actors' Equity, the union which has been fighting the ban, was backed up recently by 37 Broadway producers, including Oscar Hammerstein, Ruth Gordon and Herman Shumlin, who announced that they would sign contracts banning appearances in Washington until the National Theater lifts its boycott on Negroes.

The actors' union wants a clause, effective June 1, 1948, included in its new contract providing that no actor shall be required to play in any theater in Washington which does not admit Negroes. The union's present contract expires Aug. 31.

Reason given by National Theater management for refusal to change its policy of discrimination against Negroes is "local practice." An editorial in the Washington Post says that in making such a claim, the theater is "clinging to a myth."

"With its monopoly on professional stage productions here," said the Post, "the National sets whatever pattern there is."

Paul Dulzell, Equity's executive secretary, denouncing the National's present policy as based on "an old, outworn, pre-Civil War pattern," said that "the citizens of Washington have appealed to us for our help. We believe that the public will support Equity's position on this great moral issue."

EDUCATION

THREE NATL. CIO SCHOOLS IN SESSION THIS WEEK

THREE CIO regional schools sponsored by the National CIO Dept. of Education & Research are scheduled to meet this week with some 100 CIO members in attendance.

These leadership training courses for local union members in nearby states are being conducted at Danebod Folk School, Tyler, Minn.; Pendle Hill, Wallingford, Pa., and at Hampton Institute, Va. Sunday, Aug. 17, is opening date for all three schools.

The school at Hampton Institute, a leading Negro institution of higher education, is planned especially for business agents and local union presidents.

Three other CIO Leadership Training Schools for CIO members will be held later in the summer and fall:

Hampton Institute, Aug. 24-30 This course will be for local officers and committeemen from Virginia, West Virginia, and Maryland.

Estes Park, Colo., Aug. 29 Sept. 1, for members from Colorado, Wyoming, Montana and Utah.

Montebello Vacation Camp, near St. Louis, Mo., Sept. 7-13, for members from Missouri, Kansas and southern Illinois.

CIO unions wishing to send delegates to these schools should send applications at once to Asst. Education Director George Guernsey, CIO National Office, 718 Jackson Place, N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

Indiana CIO Summer School

The Indiana CIO Council's summer school held at the University of Indiana, Bloomington, concluded Aug. 16.

The school was jointly sponsored this year for the first time by the Indiana Council and the National CIO Dept. of Education & Research. Instructors from the National CIO staff included Director Kermit Eby and Asst. Directors George Guernsey and Stanley Ruttenberg from the CIO Dept. of Education & Research, and Eugene Cotton, CIO assistant general counsel.

Textile Union Institutes

The first of two training institutes sponsored by the CIO Textile Workers Union of America was held at Hudson Shore Labor School the week of Aug. 10. Attending were 45 textile workers from the middle Atlantic area. The second group was scheduled to arrive Sunday, Aug. 17.

Larry Rogin, TWUA publicity and education director, opened the first session. Other scheduled speakers included Sol. Stetin, TWUA New Jersey director; John Edelman, the union's Washington representative, and TWUA Sec.-Treas. William Pollock.

A guest student at the institute will be Annie Caire, member of the British textile workers union from Rochdale, Lancashire, England.

This is the sixth year for the TWUA summer training institutes. Eight one and two-week sessions have been or will be held to reach union members in every part of the country. Institutes already concluded were held at the Univ. of Wisconsin, Univ. of North Carolina, Springfield (Mass.) College and Rhode Island State College. Future sessions will be held at Lake Junaluska, N. C.

CSC Director In Europe

Leo Perlis, director of the National CIO Community Services Committee, is in Europe on a special mission for the United Nations Appeal for Children. He will confer with governments and voluntary organizations in England, France, Belgium, Holland, Denmark, Norway, Sweden, Finland, Poland, Czechoslovakia, Switzerland and several other countries.

the ADVENTURES of JIM BARRY

PEGGY ALLEN'S INFORMATION ABOUT THE MURDER OF CHARLIE BENTLEY — IMMEDIATELY AFTER HE VISITS JIM BARRY'S OFFICE — BRINGS JIM AND WOODY RUSHING BACK FROM WARRENTOWN! TOWARDS EVENING...

OKAY, LET'S GET UPSTAIRS AND HEAR THE REST OF THE STORY.

I'LL BRING UP THE BAGS, JIM.

WE'LL WASH UP AND HAVE DINNER LATER...

THERE'S NOT MUCH MORE TO TELL, JIM... NO CLUES TO CHARLIE BENTLEY'S MURDER, IF THAT'S WHAT YOU'RE HOPING FOR.

UNITED LABOR PRESS

LIKE I SAID... MR. HAMKER CAME TO THE UNION AND TOLD US THAT IF WE DON'T TAKE A WAGE-CUT — VOLUNTARY, OF COURSE — THE COMPANY WAS GOING TO FOLD UP.

HOW DO THE MEN FEEL ABOUT IT.

WELL, I'D SAY ABOUT EVEN-STEVEN! CHARLIE BENTLEY AND A COUPLE OF OTHERS WERE DEAD-SET AGAINST IT!.. SOME WERE FOR IT...

I GUESS MOST OF THE MEN ARE ALL MIXED UP... HAVEN'T MADE UP THEIR MINDS ONE WAY OR THE OTHER, YET.

SO THEY'RE STILL DISCUSSING IT... HMMM...

THAT'S ABOUT IT. LOCAL'S EXECUTIVE BOARD IS GOING TO TAKE IT UP AT THE NEXT MEETING... THEN THERE'LL BE A GENERAL MEMBERSHIP TO VOTE...

LET'S RUN OVER THE FACTS.. FIRST, CHARLIE BENTLEY COMES HERE WITH SOME IMPORTANT INFORMATION... SECOND, BENTLEY IS ALSO ONE OF THE LEADERS AGAINST THE VOLUNTARY WAGE-CUT THE COMPANY ASKED FOR...

THREE — BENTLEY IS FOUND DEAD IN THE RIVER... OBVIOUSLY MURDERED! THEY ALL SEEM TO TIE UP MORE THAN JUST A COINCIDENCE!

... AND FOUR — I'LL BET DOLLARS TO DOUGHNUTS CHARLIE BENTLEY TALKED PRETTY LOUD ABOUT HAVING PROOF THAT THE COMPANY WAS TRYING TO PUT OVER A PHONY DEAL.

OH, SURE... HE SAID HE COULD—

BUT HOW DID YOU KNOW THAT!

INDICT AFL AIDE IN MAIL FRAUD

A Federal Grand Jury has indicted an AFL official accused of mailing copies of a fraudulent letter which implied the CIO Textile Workers' Union of America is a Communist organization.

The official, Lloyd Klenert, of Chillum, Md., international secretary of the AFL United Textile Workers of America, was charged in the indictment with "defrauding the United States, and mail fraud."

On Jan. 15, 1947, employes of the Jamestown Worsted Co., Jamestown, N. Y., received a letter in the mail. The letter was printed on a letter-head that was a reproduction of the TWUA letterhead, except that the union label was missing. The employes were to vote the following day in an NLBR election on whether to affiliate with TWUA or UTW.

The text was over what was purported to be the signature of Jack Rubenstein, vice president of TWUA. It started "Dear Fellow Worker" and went on to say: ". . . It's no secret I joined the Communist Party many years ago because I believed in Communism and that we Communists should control the United States . . . Now is the time for the workers of Jamestown to forget everything, even their religion . . . Again I say, religion is not important. The Communist Party . . . is more important than your church . . . Vote CIO and strike a blow for working class control . . ."

Copies of the letter were mailed to a number of Catholic priests.

Aroused pro-CIO workers in the Jamestown plant, knowing Rubenstein was not a Communist, immediately brought the letters to the attenion of TWUA officers. So did priests who know the TWUA's record. A protest logged immediately with Federal authorities led to the indictment.

(The CIO union won the Jamestown NLRB election, 579 to 44).

Plan Changes In Labor Dept.

Pres. Truman has announced he will "rebuild" the Labor Department.

He told his press conference the department had been torn up by the GOP-controlled Congress, despite the Republican campaign pledge to enhance the department's importance.

He said it was planned to transfer the Unemployment Compensation Division to the Labor Department.

Labor Chaplain Loses Title

By Federated Press

The appointment of Rev. Charles C. Webber as chaplain to organized labor in Virginia has been withdrawn by Bishop G. Bramley Oxnam of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

Webber, who is president of the Virginia CIO Council, retains his labor post but without the official designation as chaplain.

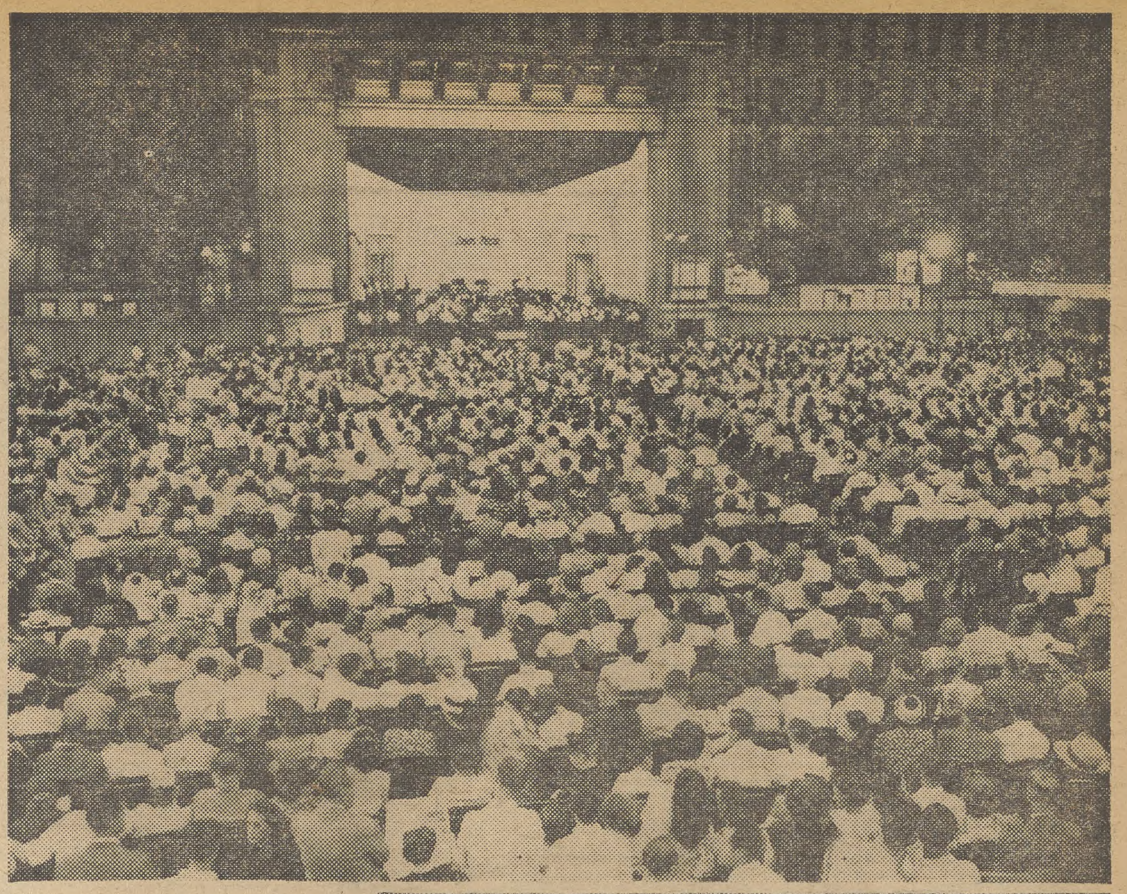
Loyalty Order Protested

Pres. Abram Flaxer of the CIO Public Workers last week released copies of a letter sent to President Truman by the Intl. Federation of Unions of Employes in Public and Civil Services, sharply protesting Truman's loyalty order.

The letter calls the order "a threat to fundamental democratic principles."

The letter was sent to President Truman on Aug. 1 by M. C. Bolle, General Secretary of the Federation, which represents more than 2,000,000 civil service workers.

Unions of civil service and public service employes in the following countries are members of the organization: England, France, United States, Sweden, Norway, Denmark, Holland, Belgium, Austria, Switzerland and Czechoslovakia.



Philadelphia Labor has joined to give the Quaker City's citizens some fun, as the pictures above and at the right show. Above is a typical crowd at the evening concerts held in Philadelphia's Labor Plaza, which was erected during the war on Reyburn Plaza, just opposite City Hall. Wartime dance and entertainment for soldiers have been replaced by concerts, sponsored by CIO, AFL, the Community Chest and the City.

Advocate Bureau Of Foundaries

Creation of a Federal Bureau of Foundries, with power to inspect and enforce health and safety provisions, was urged upon Dept. of Labor officials recently by a CIO Auto Workers delegation.

Headed by UAW Vice-Pres. R. J. Thomas, the delegation told Asst. Sec. of Labor John Gibson and others that "foundry workers in our industry consider the fight for Federal health and safety legislation literally a fight for their lives."

State enforcement of foundry safety codes has been "scandalously weak," Thomas told the federal officials. "Only federal action can save the lives of tens of thousands of workers" and make the industry attractive enough to bring in the labor force it needs, Thomas said.

Beg Pardon

Two unfortunate typographical errors, one due to the Congressional Record, occurred in the 1947 Voting Guide, published in The CIO News.

Both Rep. John A. Carroll (D. Colo.) and Rep. John J. Rooney (D. N. Y.) were listed as voting wrong on Roll Call No. 6, Rent Control—Cut in Funds. Both voted right, which voted right, which gave them 100% good voting records. The error in Rep. Rooney's vote is due to an improper listing in the Congressional Record. Rooney corrected the roll call later.

In answer to several queries, the symbol,—, in the Voting Guide Senate roll call on seating of Sen. Bilbo meant that the Senator so designated had not been sworn in at the time.

In City of Brotherly Love

LABOR WINS FRIENDS WITH SUMMER CONCERTS

UNITED labor in Philadelphia is making friends and influencing people by the thousands nightly, to the strains of sweet music.

In Philadelphia Labor Plaza, in the heart of the city, right across from City Hall, free concerts are heard five nights a week by an average of 5,000 persons, young and old. Saturday and Sunday nights the place is jammed, the crowd overflows into the Plaza itself and across the street to the City Hall sidewalks.

The concerts are a joint venture of the city, the CIO, the AFL, Community Chest, and the American Federation of Musicians. The city permitted the use of the outdoor center. The Community Chest provided administrative expenses, the CIO furnished equipment, and the Musicians' Union appropriated money for musicians' salaries.

Concerts are given Wednesday, Thursday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday. The place is shut Monday. Tuesday nights the Philadelphia Recreation Association presents "Philadelphia Sings."

Each concert night, at intermission time, Labor puts over its message, announcing that these free concerts are made possible by organized labor and the Community Chest.

THE attendance is a good cross-section of Philadelphia. There are youngsters and grandmothers, babies in arms, and papa and mama. The week's fare is varied enough to suit all tastes. In the first three weeks the attendance was 85,638. The series opened July 6 and ends September 1.

Reyburn Plaza was a desert of sand and gravel graced only by a band shell, until 1943. Urged by the CIO and AFL, the USO Council persuaded the mayor to permit erection of "a night club under the stars." In 10 days the place renamed USO Labor Plaza, was ready, and opened July 5, 1943. In four years the place played host to 2,500,000 men and women in uniform, and its fame spread all over the world.

Recognizing the need for an out-door recreation center in the heart of downtown Philadelphia, organized labor persuaded the City and the Community Chest to let the place remain open, for outdoor concerts during this summer.

Michael Harris, regional director of the Steelworkers and president of the Philadelphia CIO Council, is a vice-chairman. Herbert Moyer, IUC secretary; John Walsh, of Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers and Johannes Hoeber, CIO representative on the Community Chest, are on the executive committee for the concerts. An AFL man is director, and a CIO man is assistant director.

Soil Problem

Soil conservation, one of the South's prime urgencies, was the theme of a series of gathering conducted by the Georgia Workers Education Service, Atlanta, Ga. As a spur to discussion, each meeting opened with a showing of "The River," famous American documentary film which dramatizes the vast losses from soil erosion.

Eager To Register--These members of the CIO Textile Workers union are on their way to register at Louisville, Ky., on buses provided by the Jefferson County PAC. Five of every six who registered that day were members of the union, whose officials point out that the Louisville membership is fully aware that it must vote to change the anti-labor complexion of Congress.

Charles H. Gillman (right), Georgia Regional CIO director, is served a summons charging violation of a Cuthbert, Ga., ordinance requiring payment of a $1500 fee for union organizers. John Ramsey, Director of Community Relations, CIO, looks on.

CIO DIRECTOR SIGNS UP 30 ON WAY TO JAIL

CHARLES H. GILLMAN, Georgia CIO Regional Director, was fined $25 and sentenced to 10 days in jail after trial for violation of a Cuthbert, Ga., ordinance which was declared unconstitutional in Georgia more than two years ago.

Gillman immediately appealed the sentence through Attorney Jerome Cooper, and was released in $500 bond.

Trouble for the CIO organizing team in Cuthbert broke first about 4 weeks ago, when a mob of town hoodlums attempted to force their way to the organizers' hotel room. The mob was driven off by the hotel proprietor.

Following this incident, Gillman sent a crew of skilled organizers and a CIO public relations man into Cuthbert. The town answered with the adoption of an already-proved unconstitutional ordinance which would require a $1,500 license fee for organizers of labor unions working in the city. Cuthbert has 3447 inhabitants. Milledgeville, Ga., attempted to enforce a similar ordinance in 1945, and it was declared unconstitutional by the Superior Court. Texas and various other states have declared similar laws unconstitutional.

With passage of the law, Gillman decided to make the next organizing speech in Cuthbert, rather than to risk a jail term for one of his men. Upon release on bond, he said:

"There is little doubt that the Superior Court will declare this ordinance unconstitutional. I am only sorry that Mayor Vernon Phillips, who served as judge, sees fit to burden the city's tax payers with the cost of prosecuting this ridiculous charge for the benefit of a few saw mill operators."

In his column, Victor Riesel said: "Gillman was invited down off the stage (at an organization rally) by Police Chief Keaton who told the crowd that Gillman was being taken in for 'recruiting for a labor organization without a license,' but that the cops couldn't stop anyone from joining. Gillman shouted, as he went off to the local coop: 'Does anyone want to join?' and collected 30 members as he followed the sheriff down the aisle."

T-H RULINGS CONFUSING

TWO conflicting interpretations of the Taft-Hartley law were confusing the nation last week.

One interpretation was by Robert N. Denham, NLRB General Counsel. The other was by Thomas Shroyer, counsel for the Joint Congressional Committee, "watch-dog" of the T-H Law.

Denham ruled that "the chain must be complete from the top down" and that every officer of the CIO (or AFL), every officer of the international union and every local officer must sign a non-Communist affidavit before the local can be serviced by the NLRB. The term officer, he said, means those so designated under constitutions and by-laws. That would mean, that the 11 officers of the CIO (president, secretary-treasurer and nine vice-presidents) would have to sign. Denham estimated that there are 500,000 union officers in the U. S.

Shroyer disagreed with Denham, declaring it was not Congress' intention to require the officers of the two top labor bodies, CIO and AFL, to sign.

20 DAYS TO FILE ANTI-RED OATHS

Robert N. Denham, general counsel of the new NLRB, has announced that unions which have election cases pending in any of the board's 28 field offices were to be given 20 days' notice on August 22, effective date of the Taft-Hartley Law, to meet the registration and non-Communist affidavit requirements of that law.

If the data is not filed by the end of the 20-day period, no further action will be taken by NLRB on the cases. It is estimated that there are 3000 pending cases.

Haughton Quits

Ronald W. Haughton has resigned as special assistant to the director of the U. S. Counciliation Service. He will become head of the Labor-Management Relations Program at the University of California, Berkeley.

While Crowd Looked On

HOODLUMS BEAT UP ORGANIZER AND WIFE IN GEORGIA TOWN

WILBUR E. (Bill) Gupton, a member of the CIO's Southern Organizing Committee staff, was mercilessly beaten and his 110-pound wife, Doris, pummeled by hoodlums on the streets of LaGrange, Ga., last week, while a crowd leaving a motion picture theatre looked on.

Gupton, suffering from a fractured skull, was given first aid at a hospital in LaGrange, and is now confined to bed in Cedartown, Ga., where his mother resides.

Assigned to an organizing task in Hogansville, Ga., Gupton and his wife had visited LaGrange, less than 20 miles away, for dinner in a cafe and to attend a movie. At the close of the show, Gupton bent over to unlock his automobile when the assault occurred. He was struck on the head with a blackjack by one thug, while a second grabbed his wife and struck her.

Gupton told associates: "I know now that I was making progress in organizing. This would not have happened unless folks were joining the union.

"I just want to get well as quickly as possible, and then go back to organize Hogansville."

IN a stinging protest to Gov. M. E. Thompson, Charles H. Gillman, Georgia CIO Regional Director branded the assault as a disgrace to the State, and demanded an investigation by the Georgia Bureau of Investigation.

Men and women in labor circles remember that it was in LaGrange, in 1935, that several people were killed during unrest of workers in the city's mills, and that one man was beaten to death by two members of the Georgia National Guard.

Gupton and his wife were forced to rent a tourist camp shanty because the hotel in Hogansville refused to accommodate CIO people.

In his letter to the Governor, Gillman said: "We believe there is connivance between persons in Hogansville and LaGrange for several reasons. Gupton has been followed about wherever he went for the past two or three weeks. At the beginning of the organizing campaign last summer, being unable to find a meeting place for the union, one of the workers who lives out of town offered us the use of his yard for meetings. After the first meeting this man's garage was blown up by dynamite. Police said there was nothing they could do about it, but if the meeting continued it was probable that next time the man's house would be blown up. This from police officers!

"Our representative then stationed at Hogansville was Rubert Thrasher.

"We believe that an investigation will reveal that police have failed to enforce the law when thugs are used by private companies to defeat workers' efforts to organize. Indeed, we believe the police have been in active connivance in many such instances."

In New Jersey

CIO SCORES IN FIGHT FOR LABOR'S RIGHTS

LABOR has scored a partial victory for fundamental rights in the New Jersey Charter Convention.

The convention, meeting at New Brunswick, rejected 54-18, a motion to delete this guaranty from the Charter:

". . . The right of privately-employed labor to organize and bargain collectively and the right of publicly-employed labor to organize and present to and make known to the State or any of its political subdivisions their grievances and requests through representatives of their own choosing shall not be impaired."

The CIO, represented mainly by Carl Holderman, head of the State Council, fought to give publicly-employed workers (such as utility labor) the same rights as privately-employed labor. New Jersey last year adopted a stringent law governing collective bargaining and strikes by state employes.

EMPLOYER groups bitterly opposed inclusion of any guaranty for labor, but Mayor Frank Eggers, of Jersey City, supporting the guaranty, said:

"It has been made to appear that labor is seeking something special. We should not be afraid to say in the constitution what we memorialize the Legislatures to do." He spoke after each of the 81 delegates received a letter from the State Chamber of Commerce asking them to strike out the labor provisions entirely.

The convention also adopted a provision barring racial discrimination in the public schools and State Militia. No other State has such a provision.

Oliver Randolph, Essex, only Negro delegate to the convention, won his fight over the sharp protests of the C. of C., which declared the anti-discrimination clause of the Bill of Rights contained sufficient guaranty and that the proposed section would "be productive of far more harm than good." Randolph replied that courts have held segregation is not a denial of civil rights. He is the grandson of a Virginia slave.

The Charter is designed to replace the New Jersey Charter handed down from Revolutionary days with little changes. Labor is striving to make the new Charter one of the most liberal in the country.

HOLDERMAN appeared before several of the convention committees on numerous occasions, pointing out that the labor rights proposal was backed by nearly 30 other state-wide organizations.

He told the convention that the CIO, which in 1944 played a dominant role in defeating a new constitution drawn up by the legislature, would judge the new charter not only on its labor rights provision, but also on its clauses protecting minority rights and its provisions for future amendments.

In addition, CIO had asked for a section spelling out the particular rights—in employment, education, housing, public accommodations, etc.—that should be immune from discrimination.

CIO was also leading the fight for additional liberalization of the "death to progress" amendment clause in the present constitution, which requires that an amendment be passed by both houses of two successive sessions of the legislature, before it can be submitted to the people.

While the committee has recommended passage of a proposed amendment by a three-fifths majority of both houses of one session of the legislature, CIO is insisting that this be lowered to a simple majority.

PRICES GOING UP, UP, UP AND UP

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

THE word "prices" is on everyone's tongue.

The Federal Trade Commission accused the steel industry of illegal price-fixing . . . The rubber industry and color-films were similarly accused.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics wearily announced that wholesale prices had reached their fifth successive post-war peak . . .

In Boston, steaks were as high as $1.25 a pound . . . In New York, some stores charged $1.10 a pound for steaks and lamb chops . . .

In Washington, a large store chain remarked, in an ad, that "something must be done to place meat prices within the reach of all," since beef prices were "beyond the reach of many customers." The chain's solution: buy "U. S. Commercial Grade," next to lowest grade.

No one saw relief immediately, and another BLS survey, made for the joint Congressional Economic Committee, showed that family living costs had jumped an average of 20.7% in 34 cities within 15 months.

The bitter aftermath of June's flood's and the summer's hot, dry spell came with an Agriculture Dept. estimate that the 1947 corn crop will be the lowest in 11 years. If the estimate holds—or gets worse—we haven't seen anything yet on high prices for meats, poultry, eggs and dairy products . . .

A survey by the conservative New York National City Bank showed that industry's profits in the first half of 1947 had doubled those in the first half of 1946.

Production was far above pre-war levels.

REMEDIES: No one in Government made an official comment on the proposal of CIO that an immediate Labor-Industry-Agriculture conference be held to seek voluntary price cuts.

But, first fruit of Atty. Gen. Clark's drive against price conspiracies was an indictment by a New York federal grand jury of 20 firms and 53 officials on charges of conspiring to fix prices in the replacement brake linings and clutch facings industry.

In spite of all the howls about costs, NAM did not retreat from its position that prices were out of line only in "isolated cases." What it meant by "line," it did not say. NAM's stand was somewhat embarrassed by this statement of the Journal of Commerce, a leading organ of big business:

"U. S. Steel Chairman Olds said that the steel price boost would mean about $10 per auto and 50c for each refrigerator. That is not much in itself. But . . . let's be realistic about this: many companies probably have waited for some time for an opportune moment to raise their prices. All they needed was the dramatization of the rising cost trend in the form of the steel boost."

(In contrast with Olds' estimate that the steel boost would mean about $10 per auto and 50c for each refrigerator were the announcement of price increases in cars and refrigerators: most autos were up from $57 to $200 per car and at least one large refrigerator maker announced price rises of from $5 to 15.)

Lawrence: Don't Blame Wages

From David Lawrence's U. S. News:

"Inflation, still running quite strongly, is a price inflation. It isn't a wage inflation . . . a wage inflation came right after the war . . . Inflation took over in prices of goods after mid-1946. Food often is out of sight . . . Soap is being marked down. That's about all, though . . . Costs even now are near the breaking point for a good many families."

STEEL: Since the steel price increase (average $5.90 per ton) has been blamed for the recent round of price rises in many other items, most attention of a worried nation was on steel.

The FTC accusation against Big Steel followed almost immediately upon the heels of Clark's investigation. In blunt language, FTC charged price-fixing and restraint of trade against these steel groups and their subsidiaries:

American Iron & Steel Institute (100-odd members), U. S. Steel, Bethlehem, Republic, Youngstown, National, Inland, Jones & Laughlin, American and Wheeling. FTC pointed out that nine principal producers, with 17 subsidiaries, account for 80% of our total steel ingot producing capacity.

"Matching" of delivered price quotations through concurrent employment of a multiple basing point system of pricing is one of the principal practices cited by FTC charges, if proven, would be in violation of section 5 of the FTC Act.

FTC pointed out that iron and steel is "the basic industry of the country." It asserted that for many years the respondents have "collectively composed, published and announced prices" and "systematically" exchanged and interchanged information among themselves."

Specifically, the complaint continues, "the respondent producers entered into agreements and understandings that they would offer their respective products for sale on a basis of price quotations cooperatively and collectively provided for under a system of common basing points, common terms, and sales conditions determined by joint action." All these practices were designed to result in "identical delivered price quotations," the complaint states.

Olds dismissed the charges as old stuff and declared they have "no basis in fact or in law."

PRICES: The BLS weekly index of wholesale prices showed increases both for agricultural and non-agricultural products. Average primary market prices advanced 0.3% during the week ended August 16, 1947.

The index of commodity prices in primary markets reached 152.7 of the 1926 average, 1.6% above mid-July and 19% above a year earlier. Average price of food was up 0.7% in the week cited.

Sen. O'Mahoney (D., Wyo.) made public BLS's city-by-city bad news on prices. The average was 20.7% and the cities varied widely. Scranton, third largest city in Pennsylvania, showed that prices had risen 24.3% in the 15-month period ended June 15, 1947.

Chicago was closed behind with 23.7%. Smallest increase was in Seattle, Wash., with 18%. Key cities: New York, 18.7; Atlanta, 20.9; Boston, 19.6; Cleveland, 21.7; Detroit, 19.1; Denver, 20.9; New Orleans, 22.5; Philadelphia, 21.4; San Francisco, 19.2, Washington, 18.9.

It didn't look as if industry in general was in a mood to cooperate in lowering prices. Harry A. Bullis, president of General Mills, told his stockholders that "prices should be permitted to seek their proper relative levels."

He did not say what he considered a proper relative level. (Emil Rieve, administrative chairman of the CIO Full Employment Committee, said that prices should be rolled back to when OPA was at its heights.)

THE LAW: The Brake Lining Manufacturers' Association, New York, was indicated along with its 20 member-firms, Clark announced. The three indictments charged price conspiracies, illegal discounts, illegal classification of customers, terms and conditions of sales and other related practices designed to eliminate competition.

Clark said the alleged practices particularly affected federal, state and municipal governments and operators of large fleets of automotive equipment.

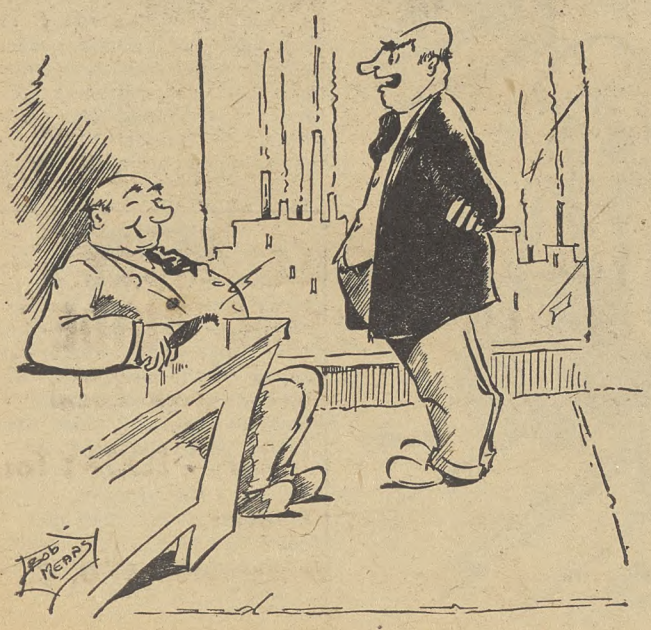
PROFITS: The National City Bank survey, taken among 451 leading corporations, showed aggregate profits of $1,590,774,000 for the first half of 1947 compared with $795,030,000 in the first six months last year and $1,370,296,000 in the second half.

Highest profit-makers were 19 oil companies which reported a net take of $349,248,000 as compared to a previous high of $263,363,000 in the last half of 1946.

Iron and steel industry, where the recent boost started a round of price rises, showed a profit of $198,918,000, more than double the first half of 1946. Autos, also a price-booster. listed 12 manufacturers with total profits of $172,298,000, compared with $120,291,000 in the last half of '46 and a claimed $19 million deficit in the first half.

The survey showed that labor productivity is higher now than it was last summer in more than 52% of the plants. Only 10% found that productivity is less. In fact, 68% expected productivity to rise further in coming months.

The Office of Business Economics stated that "in terms of current dollars, the rate of production is at a new high, exceeding by $4 million the wartime peak of $222 billion reached in the first quarter of 1945."



"I fired Hopkins." He came up with a formula to reduce production costs and lower prices.

GEORGIA BEATING

CIO Organizer Bill Gupton was beaten and his pretty young wife was slapped around last week at LaGrange, Ga.

Bill, a clean-cut fellow who had been working for months among Georgia textile workers, was the 21st person connected with the CIO's Southern membership drive to be physically assaulted.

There was nothing to indicate that he provoked the attack. He was not doing organizing work in LaGrange. He and his wife merely stopped there for a movie and a meal at a cafe.

Bill's bandages will come off and his wounds will heal, but in his mind he will carry an unpleasant memory—probably forever.

He will remember the actual beating, but details of it will fade as time passes. But Bill, if we know him as well as we think we do, will always be able to recall vividly the injustice and hypocrisy of events connected with the beating of CIO organizers.

The CIO's membership drive got under way at about the time the open campaign to kill the Wagner Act started.

Some editors were declaring that there no longer was need for the Act and that "industrialists now regard trade unions as an accepted part of our national life." It was at about this time that two CIO representatives in Alabama were shot at and their car set afire.

Speakers at luncheon meetings were saying that "there was a need for the Wagner Act when the unions were being pushed around—but the need no longer exists." It was at about this time that a Georgia textile mill superintendent attempted to run down a CIO organizer with his car.

As mistreatment of organizers and local union leaders increased, so did the clamor for abolition of the Wagner Act.

"Industry needs protection—not the unions," said the Taft-Hartleyites.

Bill Gupton will remember these things.

He will remember that he was No. 21 on a special roll of honor.

He and his wife will recall that they played a part in a battle to bring a better standard of living to and drive injustice from a region long dominated by textile manufacturers.

Men have died for less worthy causes.

A Priceless Slant On Prices

"LET'S be realistic about this: Many companies probably have waited for some time for an opportunity to raise their prices. All they needed was the dramatization of the rising cost trend in the form of the steel boost."

Those words weren't spoken by any CIO leader.

They come directly from the Journal of Commerce, leading spokesman for big business.

If there's one thing you can accuse the CIO News of, it's NAM-calling.

Congress is sending a joint committee over the U. S. to study causes of high prices. Stay home and look in the mirror, Bub.

'Typical Piece of Impudence' Must Have Irked GOP Chief

By ALLAN L. SWIM

CARROLL REECE aimed his political blunderbuss at the CIO the other day and cut loose with both barrels.

He hit the headlines—but little else.

Reece, chairman of the Republican National Committee, didn't like the CIO Voting Guide, and said so without mincing words.

The fact that the words shed more heat than light and bore only slight resemblance to truth seemed not to have bothered Reece at all.

He's out to keep the GOP in power in Congress, so a little thing like gross misrepresentation wouldn't bother him.

REECE called the Voting Guide "a typical piece of impudence." He hinted that we must have had some help from Moscow when we compiled it.

He topped off his little tirade by charging that publication of the Voting Guide was a "new attempt at dictatorship."

And he predicted, of course, that the Republican Party will remain in the saddle in Washington.

It made interesting reading, but it didn't make sense. It was consistent, however, with the type of political trips Reece has been trying to sell the public.

About the only thing he didn't say about the Voting Guide was whether he thought we were going to have to go to jail for publishing it.

The Taft-Hartley Law is supposed to prohibit such publication, you know.

IT was obvious that our Voting Guide irked the GOP chairman—and why not?

It wasn't designed with the specific view of increasing the Reece blood pressure, but to provide the public with a clear record of the bad behavior of a large portion of the 80th Congress.

We don't care whether it was by coincidence or design that the Guide hit at more Republicans than Democrats.

More Republicans voted "wrong," from the CIO's point of view. It was as simple as that.

LET'S examine our "typical piece of impudence" and see if we can find why it caused Reece to blow a verbal gasket.

The Voting Guide is a 12-page affair, printed on newsprint. It contains statements from CIO President Philip Murray and PAC Chairman Jack Kroll urging the people to sweep out of office in coming elections those who voted against the public's best interests.

There's nothing startling or dictatorial about that.

The major portion of the Guide is a factual report on activities of the 80th Congress. There is listed a dozen measures in which the CIO was particularly interested. The Guide tells whether senators and congressmen voted "right" or "wrong" from the CIO's standpoint.

CARROLL REECE would have been much more forthright if he had merely said:

"The political party of which I am chairman enacted legislation that permitted prices to skyrocket. It took good care of big business. It attempted to cut the foundation from under organized labor. It sponsored legislation designed to keep the CIO from telling the public about what we had done.

"The CIO refused to accept our gag on free speech and freedom of press. It spread our record out for all to see.

"We're going to do all we can to discredit the Voting Guide by charging that it is a dictatorial document. That's the way we play politics."

Beat Deadline

Approximately 65% of the 10,000 employers having contracts with CIO unions in the Greater New York City area renewed their contracts for another year before the Taft-Hartley Act became fully effective last week.

"UNFORTUNATELY HIS NAME IS TAFT. HE'S ALWAYS HERE FOR FIRST AID."

Now, Co-ops Are A Plot!

By GLORIA CAPLAN

CONGRATULATORY bouquets from all parts of the nation hailing the 10th anniversary of a New Deal housing development just outside Washington, D. C., got into the Republicans' hair last week.

Two weeks after the little town of Greenbelt, Md., population 8,000, got its name in all the papers as a model government-built village, Rep. Ploeser (R. Mo.) and his House Small Business Committee launched an "investigation."

Ploeser's probe was blasted by Rep. Wright Patman (D., Tex.) as a plot to "smear" cooperatives and to make a political attack on President Truman.

The committee head was particularly concerned about cooperatives at Greenbelt, which he said constitute a "monopoly". The investigation will be expanded into a probe of the whole consumer cooperative movement in the country, he announced.

From Greenbelt Consumer Services came the retort: "We have nothing to fear from an impartial investigation," but it charged that the committee had reached "adverse conclusions even before the investigation has started."

OF Greenbelt's 3,500 adults, 2,400 are members of the cooperative, GCS claims. Disregarding the town's 4,500 children, the committee had charged that "less than 2,000 of the 8,000 population at Greenbelt favor the cooperative movement."

The story of Greenbelt is the oft-told story of "government project makes good." It had begun as "Tugwelltown", named for Rexford Guy Tugwell, then head of the Resettlement Administration—and it had evoked a nationwide horselaugh as well as a blast of ridicule and ugly epithets. Not unlike other New Deal relief projects, it had been smeared as communistic, socialistic, anti-democratic.

But words hurled at Greenbelt haven't hurt it.

Greenbelt's 3,371 acres embrace 1,900 white brick housing units and an artificial lake covering 25 acres. All its commercial enterprises are owned by the people who patronize them. Samuel Ashelman, general manager of Greenbelt Consumer Service, Inc., describes the community as "the most complete cooperative set-up in the country."

NET result has been a citizenry of unusually kept civic pride and responsibility, a flock of happy, healthy well-cared-for children, 8,000 enthusiastic residents living in wholesome surroundings, they could not otherwise afford. Rents at Greenbelt are set according to income, the highest rent being $65 a month.

STUCK!

"Recently, I called off my buyer's strike," says a letter from a reader of the Washington Post, "and made the rounds of the men's shops and department stores, trying to find an old-time shirt that hadn't gone high-hat.

"Finally I bought a plain white short-sleeved sport shirt for $3.50. Bringing it home and taking out the pins, I discovered a small tag attached to a button. The tag read: 'OPA retail ceiling price, $2.60'."

(That's a 34.6% increase.)

He Strolled Along Main Streets Unafraid

THE mob caught him as he started to leave the courthouse.

He put up the best battle he could, but the odds were too great. He was unarmed. Members of the mob weren't.

It lasted only a few minutes—and when it was over the big, husky man who had been talking about unions was a battered, bleeding hulk.

He was taken to a hospital and patched up. As time passed most of his wounds healed completely. Most of them, but not all.

The memory of that terrible night remains, but the bitterness is gone.

It is gone because the man who was beaten returned to the scene later and found that peace and justice had replaced the brutality and terrorism of which he had been a victim.

THE man who was beaten doesn't like to talk about it. To him it's a closed chapter. He'd rather not have it mentioned.

But it will be mentioned—time and again—because it's a part of labor history, because it's part of the important story of what happens when management and labor work out methods of living and working together in peace and harmony.

The beating is as much of the story as the big CIO sign that was perforated by bullets. The sign, which says "CIO Local 2176," is kept as a momento of the bad days.

THINGS are different now in the town in which so much terror reigned only a few years ago.

The mayor obviously likes the CIO, because he issues statements such as:

"No meeting relating to the welfare of the community is ever held without the CIO being represented.

"The CIO made a splendid record here during the war. It was largely responsible for the excellent results obtained during the War Bond and Community Chest campaigns. Co-operation of the union members was 100 per cent.

"I know the top men of these locals. They are the finest type of men-level-headed and capable in their dealings with management."

THE man who was beaten after he spoke at the courthouse went back to the scene with a reporter not many months ago.

He strolled along the main streets at night—unafraid. He was welcome in the town and he knew it. Workers in the rubber, steel and textile plants who had never seen him before greeted him as if he were an old friend.

And he was. He was a friend—and something of a legendary figure. He was one of the men who led the fight for decency when the going was tough.

WORKERS brought him up to date on the latest union developments. They told him such things as:

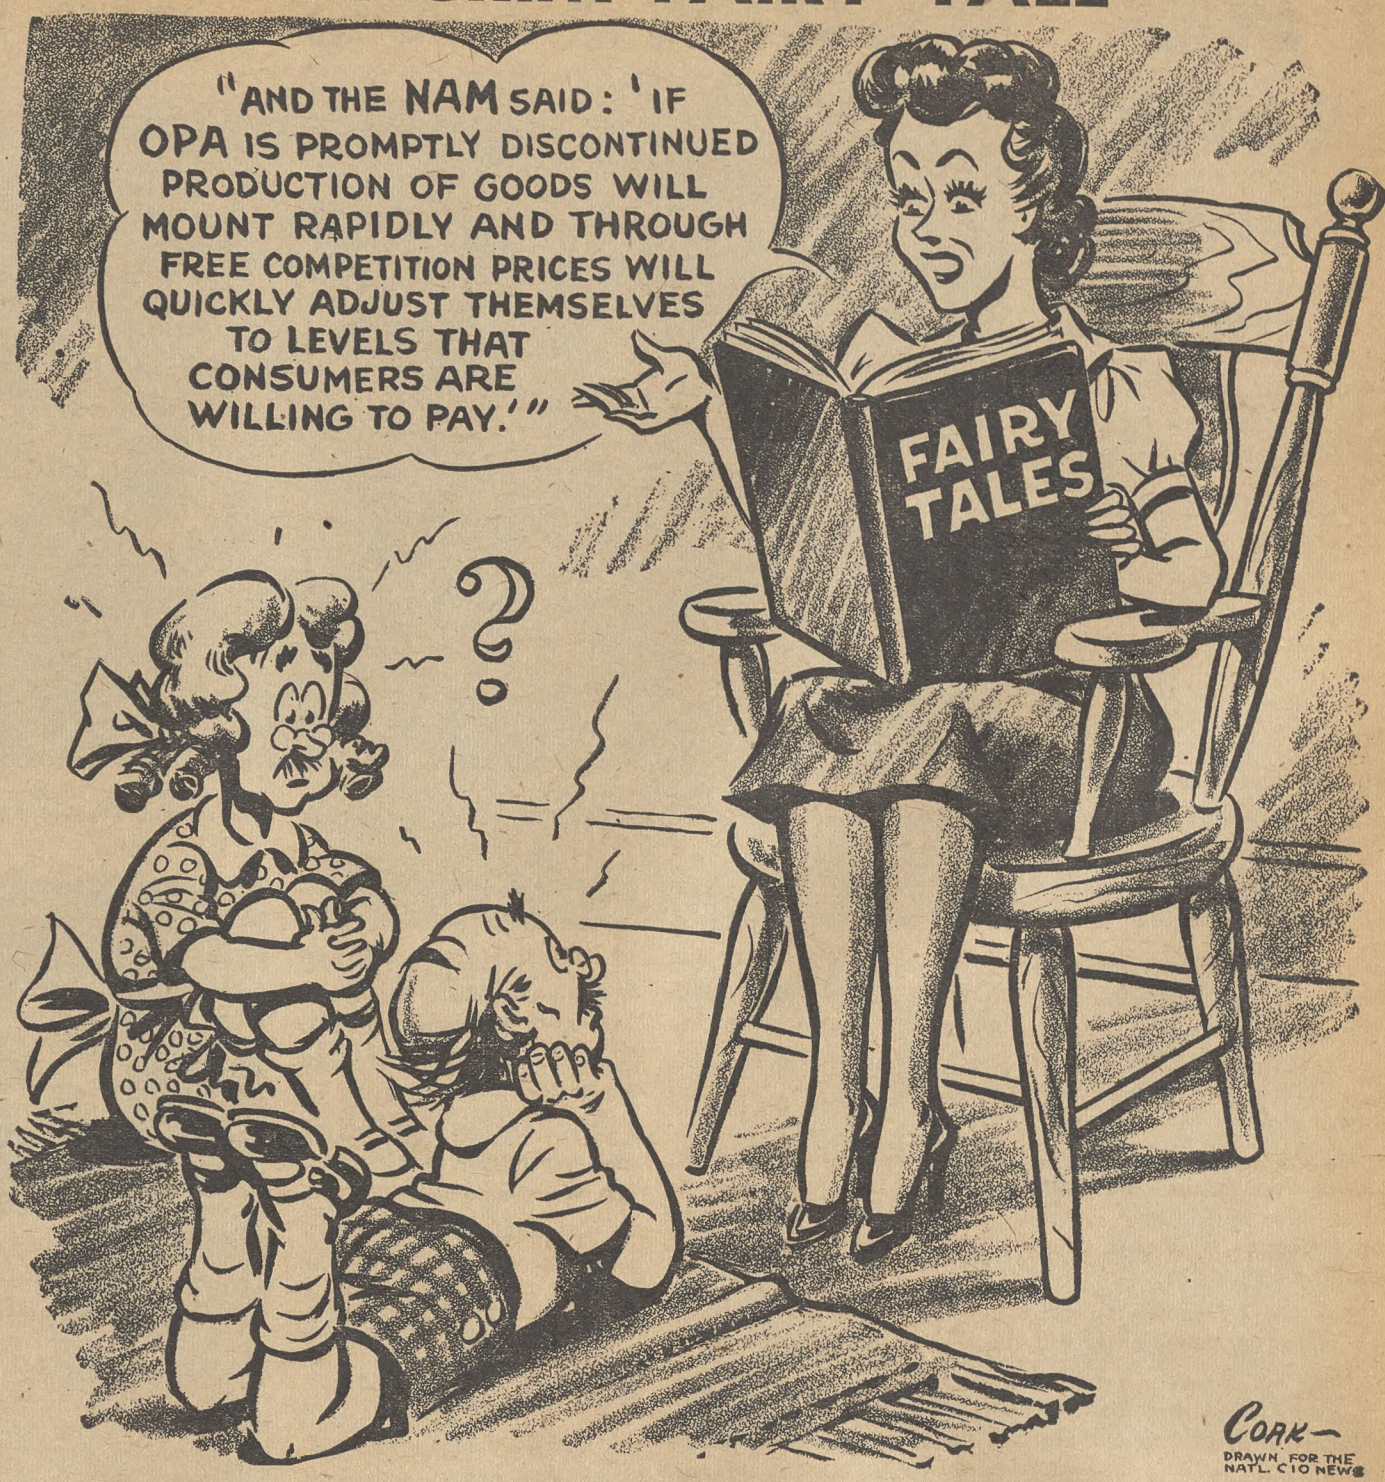
"We've now got a population of 60,000—and 10,000 of us carry CIO cards. That's one out of every six.

"We've sponsored all kinds of civic projects. We got three recreation centers for the kids. We got a sewage disposal system for a subdivision that needed it. We were responsible for the city setting aside 300 acres of land for a public resort."

MANY persons deserve credit for the transformation that has taken place in Gadsden, Ala. Our story is about just one of them.

He is Sherman H. Dalrymple, former president of the United Rubber Workers of America, who is now serving as secretary-treasurer of the CIO Organizing Committee.

A GRIM FAIRY TALE



Broun Had Right Words For PAC In The CIO NEWS 9 Years Ago

"MEMBERS of trade unions are sometimes laggard in learning how to use their potential political strength effectively.

"Of course, it is difficult some times to determine which of two candidates is likely to be the more helpful to labor.

"If it is hard to find agreement among workers on American political problems, naturally nobody can expect anything approaching unity on foreign issues. At times they have served to cause serious splits. And some issues raised in foreign lands do not necessarily concern trade unionists.

"Nevertheless, I am fully in agreement with those who think that when some nation begins to persecute or annihilate the union movement within its borders that it is foolish for American unionists to maintain that such proceedings are no concern of ours.

"And after all there is one simple way in which a union may judge the capacity of any leader even if his position on certain issues happens to confuse them.

"The test is easy. The man who shows up as an effective leader for labor in its immediate concerns belongs. The one who protests his devotion to the cause but falls down on the job assigned to him doesn't belong, no matter how pure his patriotism and professed motives may be. By their fruits shall ye know them."

Heywood Broun, president of the American Newspaper Guild from its formation in December 1933 until his death, Dec. 18, 1939, wrote the above column for The CIO News. It appeared in the issue of Aug. 27, 1938. Although written nine years ago, Broun's words are as fresh today as when they first appeared.

T-H Boomerang

THE Taft-Hartley Law is paradoxically having an effect precisely opposite to that intended by its sponsors, writes Herbert Harris in an article, "What Taft Taught Labor," in the Aug. 18 issue of New Republic.

Harris says the average labor leader regards the law as "an attempt to segregate him and 15 million other unionists from the rest of American society, and compel them to operate within an economic setup that is a diluted but perilous imitation of the totalitarian."

The new trends in labor's thinking spurred by this law, says Harris, "will be crystallized and made explicit at both the AFL and CIO conventions this coming fall."

The law, according to Harris, "is forcing the labor movement forward because it has nowhere else to go. It knows there is no road back. It knows it has lost a battle. And it knows it has to win a war."

Human Beings

"LABOR relations are just human relations, and humans are human because they have a strange habit. If you treat them as equals, respect their integrity, give them the facts, they'll be entirely reasonable."

This, says an article—"The Way the Workers Like It"—in the July issue of Nation's Business, is the labor policy followed by the Bridgeport (Conn.) Brass Co. The company boasts that it has not had a single strike in its 81 years.

The workers are represented by Brass Workers Local 320, CIO Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers. During the war, the company expanded employment from 3,000 to 10,000. After the war, the personnel roster dropped to 6,000, but productivity stayed high, says the article, and "so did concord between company and union."

"The Union", official organ of the CIO Mine, Mill union reports in its Aug. 18 issue that a new agreement was signed recently with Bridgeport Brass. It called for: an 11½c hourly increase retroactive to May 26; six paid holidays; an additional 3½c hourly for powderhouse employes on continuous shift operations in lieu of paid holidays.

A completely new seniority section.

A revision of the limited no-strike pledge to protect the international and local unions against suits under the Taft-Hartley law.

The elimination of some discriminatory clauses against women.

PAC BEGINS TO SPELL B-E-T-T

Battle Byrd In Virginia

THE Virginia CIO-PAC is preparing to give the Byrd machine both barrels.

A CIO-PAC conference at Lynchburg drew up a long-range program aimed at enrolling labor under its banner and seeing that poll taxes were paid for union members so that they could defeat the Byrd machine. The conference accused the machine of controlling the State "on behalf of the duPont-railroad-tobacco company and other monopolies."

The meeting was presided over by Rev. Charles Webber, president of the State CIO.

Moss A. Plunkett, former candidate for governor, declared: "Labor's political strength and development will, in the next few years, spell doom of the Byrd Machine's domination."

Praises Negroes

HE praised the political activity of Negroes and said: "The machine is trying to get the Negro vote by giving appointive state jobs to certain Negro leaders, but Byrd will find that he cannot buy Negro or labor votes."

Henry Lee Moon, CIO-PAC national official, declared that "only through a political coalition of labor and Negroes can liberal candidates be elected."

Palmer Weber and Daniel Powell also spoke for the national office of CIO-PAC.

Outlines Program

THE program adopted by the meeting included:

"1. To bring the reactionary record of Congressmen and Senators to the people.

"2. To defeat those candidates whose records demonstrate a consistent disregard of labor's right.

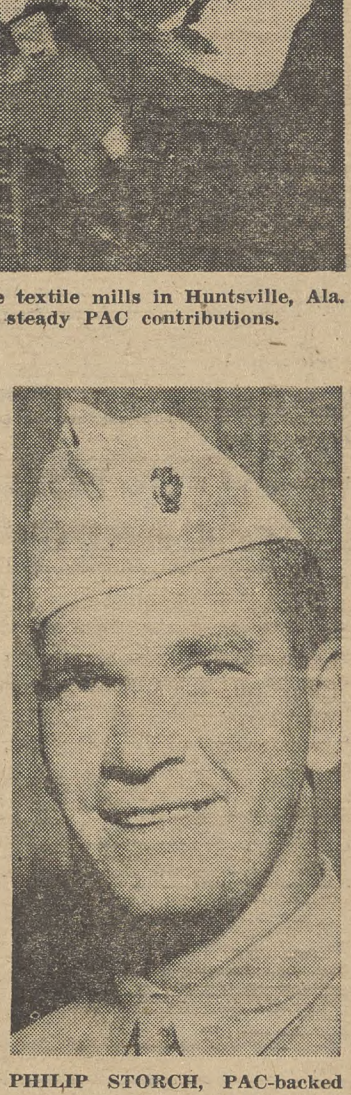
"3. We urge that all CIO unions conduct a campaign in behalf of lower prices, federal housing, health and educational legislation. We further urge the enactment of federal anti-poll tax and federal anti-lynching laws as well as a permanent FEPC. We also call upon labor to work for the elimination of income taxes or earnings of $3,000 per year and less. Of primary importance is the enactment of a new minimum wage law establishing a floor of 75 cents per hour. There is also a vital need to increase unemployment compensation benefits.

"4. We particularly welcome the united action of labor and Negro voters in behalf of our common objectives.

"5. We urge the swift completion of the one dollar PAC voluntary contribution drive."

THE DEEP SOUTH HAS ITS EYES ON 1948: Looking to the future with hope are these members of three PAC committees representing the workers in three textile mills in Huntsville, Ala. The meeting received reports of steady PAC contributions.

KITTY CARLISLE, of stage and radio fame, is a member of the Storch for Congress committee. A resident of Bucks county, she is one of a number of prominent citizens on the committee which includes Ella Logan, star of the Broadway smash, "Finian's Rainbow," and Mrs. Budd Schulberg, wife of the author of "What Makes Sammy Run" and "The Harder They Fall."



PHILIP STORCH, PAC-backed candidate for Congress from Pennsylvania's 8th District, was a sergeant in the Marine Corps during World War II.

Steel Opens PAC Drive

MARKING the opening of the CIO United Steelworkers' drive to hasten the repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act, John J. Mullens has been appointed as the Union's National Political Action Director.

John Thornton, director of the National Negro Division of the union, will assist Mullens. Thornton will have his office in Washington.

A recent meeting of 532 USA staff representatives heard Philip Murray call for an all out political drive for 1948.

"This PAC dollar is an investment every one of our members and friends can make in the welfare of this nation."

They've Had Enough of the 80th Congress: These members of the CIO Transport Workers employed in the maintenance shops of the New York City subways are determined to do their bit to change the anti-labor complexion of Congress. They are showing membership cards in the American Labor Party.

5. Literature to be distributed throughout the community weekly, material also to be prepared by the joint publicity committee. The material was to strive to clarify the CIO program for the city of Dayton and the qualifications of the CIO candidates.

6. Shop gate rallies to be held daily at each plant within the local's responsibility, pointing out the issues around the Taft-Hartley Bill and the coming election.

The Beginning

The CIO selected as its commission candidate, Sims, who is business representative of Local 754 of the CIO Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers.

Then reaction in Dayton swung into action. The All Dayton Citizens' Committee, labelled a front for the Chamber of Commerce and big business interests, led by General Motors, immediately indorsed Smith and Speice. The three Dayton newspapers, the Journal, the Herald and the Daily News, joined in this indorsement.

The CIO, realizing that a lone race against these odds was extremely difficult, immediately chose from among the four independents a running mate for Sims. McLin was picked.

Alter Plans

Immediately, the entire campaign was attuned to the coalition of Sims and McLin for City Commission. The coalition adopted a five-point program around which the entire campaign would be built, plus a pledge of the Sims-McLin coalition against those forces who sponsored the Taft-Hartley law.

The Sims-McLin program pledged a city ordinance to control rents, a better transportation system, additional recreation facilities, adequate housing, increased public services to the citizens and better city finances.

Tell Public

Through the "Dayton CIO News," and numerous leaflets and pamphlets, and by shopgate rallies, CIO beat back the opposition's drive.

CIO-PAC ran a special edition of 75,000 copies of the News and distributed the newspaper to the entire community free. Workers covered every plant and every house, block by block.

Rally Labor

PAC has begun recruiting hundreds of additional ward and precinct workers to aid in the November elections. CIO-PAC plans to have a captain in each of the 12 city wards and a precinct captain for each of the 260 city precincts, plus hundreds of workers to supplement them. It is rallying forces around the slogan, "Dayton is the First Step Towards Labor's Date in 1948."

Unionists are forming a small businessmen's committee composed of gas station owners, grocers, butchers, etc., for "Sims and McLin," and have begun rounding up indorsements from various civic, fraternal and religious organizations.

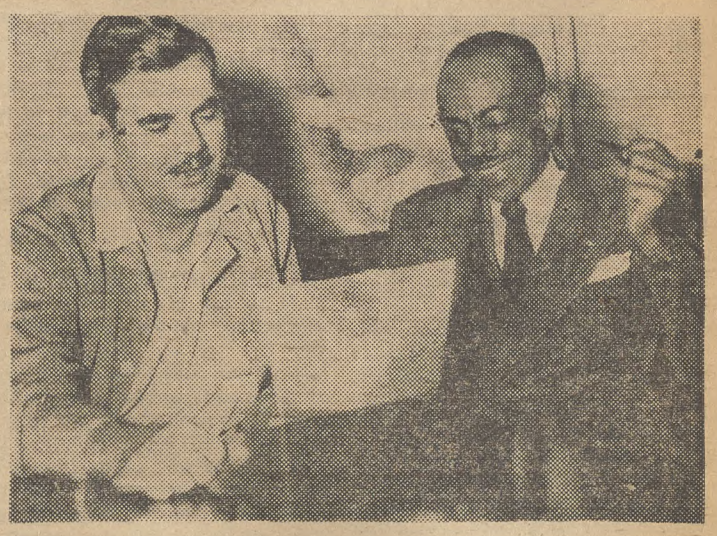
Thus far, the Sims-McLin team has been indorsed by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the Equality of Job Opportunity Council, the American Jewish Congress, Chapter 1037—the Benevolent and Protective Order of the Elks, two Dayton American Legion Posts, the American Veterans' Committee, the Progressive Citizens of America. Locals of the Teamsters and the Typographers, both AFL, have also indorsed the coalition, although the main Central Labor Council, AFL, has not acted as yet. The opposition is raising a $15,000 fund.

Dollar Drive

CIO is depending on rank and file contributions through the PAC Dollar Drive. If PAC succeeds in registering an additional 20,000 people in Dayton, victory will be sure.

The 10 international unions participating in the campaign are UE, UAW, Rubber, Steel, Office and Professional, Utility, Bakery, Glass and Ceramic, Paper and Public Workers.

CIO-PAC intends to hold two mass public rallies, one in September and one in October.



(Above) Election workers like these made possible the victory of two CIO-PAC candidates in the primary contest for the Dayton (O.) Commission. Political Action Or Accion Politica -- El Paso Votes 'Yes' and 'Si' For Both CIO-PAC is saying "get out the vote" in two languages in El Paso.

Because as many residents of the Texas border city speak Spanish as do English, the newly formed El Paso CIO-PAC holds its meetings in both tongues ("Get out the vote" is "Sacar el voto" in Spanish).

Members familiar with both languages translate speeches from English into Spanish, and vice versa, for the benefit of other members who are at home in only one language.

THE bilingual idea carries on even into officers. The new PAC decided it should have co-chairmen, so Alexander Hieken, long active in the CIO as a member of and president of the El Paso CIO Newspaper Guild, and Enrique Berroteran took office.

Every other office is divided up along the same lines, with equal representation to Latins and "Anglos." Jose Davila is secretary-treasurer and Damon L. Crossland is recording secretary.

The new PAC had a chance last week to test its effectiveness at getting out the vote when a special Congressional election, one of two held in Texas, was conducted in the district—the 16th of Texas. There were seven candidates in the race.

THE special election was made necessary when Rep. Robert Ewing Thomason, a resident of El Paso, resigned to assume a post as judge of the U. S. District Court for the Western District of Texas.

(It is interesting to note that Rep. Thomason, according to the CIO News' Voting Guide for 1946, had one of the best voting records of Texas members of the House of Representatives.)

THE initial meeting of the CIO-PAC was an organization meeting and was attended by 50 delegates from CIO locals, Latin-American civic and fraternal groups and veterans' organizations. The delegates were enthusiastic in their praise of PAC and pledged to bend every effort to see that PAC was here to stay in El Paso and that a well-knit, effective organization would be ready for the crucial elections in 1948, when Sen. W. Lee (Pass the Biscuits) O'Daniel (D., Tex.), who has had one of the worst voting records in the U. S. Senate, comes up for re-election.

Oh, yes (or "Oh, si"), just one more thing: Political Action Committee — PAC — translated into Spanish becomes CAP—Comite Accion Politica. But, in El Paso, call it PAC or call it CAP, political action is there.

OIL UNION WILL SEEK BETTER PENSION PLAN

By HARVEY O'CONNOR

THE National Policy Committee of the CIO Oil Workers Int'l. union, meeting in Kansas City, Mo., following the union's 18th convention, adopted a 3-point program to guide the union during the coming year:

- Consolidation of wage gains at the 25% figure won in the new Sinclair contract with cost-of-living adjustments and bonuses converted into basic wage raises.

- Locals were urged to press vigorously for improved retirement plans with lower age limit and increased benefits to be negotiated in contracts, along with better sick leave, vacation and other security provisions. On this latter point the Policy Committee urged an intensified organizing campaign, particularly against company union strongholds on the East Coast together with a "close ranks" drive to bring all workers benefited by OWIU contracts within the union.

- Repeal of the Taft-Hartley law through 100% support of PAC. President O. A. Knight notified all staff members that those not desiring to support the PAC program should resign immediately.

An intensive campaign to raise $1 voluntary contributions, to register all union members and to get out the vote were listed among PAC objectives of OWIU.

Delegates to the convention opened the PAC drive by personally giving $5 bills as a prelude to the $1 drive. To combat the expected Taft-Hartley drive on the union, the convention raised the dues minimum from $2 to $2.50 and increased the international per capita from 90c to $1.15. From increased revenues will come financial support for the organizing drive, for defending the union from legal attacks and for expansion of the education program.

President Knight was nominated for re-election. C. D. Fleming, member of the Hammond Indiana Local 210, an Indiana state senator and prospective candidate for lieutenant governor of Indiana, also is a candidate for president.

Vice president A. R. Kinstley and Secretary T. M. McCormick were nominated for re-election without opposition.

STATE COPS PLAGUE CIO

MICHIGAN'S Gov. Kim Sigler last week called out state troopers to police CIO pickets for the third time in recent weeks.

A force of 40 troopers patrolled the Heddon Bait Co. plant at Dowagiac, Mich., where 180 members of the CIO Auto Workers struck 6 weeks ago for higher wages.

R. J. Thomas, vice president of the international union, charged that Sigler was "determined to turn the state police over to Michigan's anti-labor employers to be operated as a strike-breaking agency."

Sigler had previously called on state troopers in an Auto Workers strike at Clinton and in the Remington-Rand strike at Benton Harbor.

CIO AND AFL AID NEWS VENDORS

Joint action by CIO and AFL unions won for Los Angeles News Vendors "one of the best contracts ever signed in this field."

The contract, which followed five months of negotiations, repeated strike threats and an overwhelming strike vote by the union membership, was negotiated by the News Vendors Local 75, CIO Office & Professional Workers, with the Los Angeles Daily News and the two Hearst papers, Herald-Express and Examiner.

At the suggestion of Treas. G. K. Williams of the Los Angeles Newspaper Guild, CIO, top AFL and CIO leaders entered the negotiations. Backed by leaders of the AFL Retail Clerks Intl. Association as well as by CIO Utility, Rubber and Longshore workers, William Brodie, Los Angeles Newspaper Guild administrative officer served as chief negotiator.

The contract provides that the newspaper will not close corner stands without first providing other jobs for the vendors affected; sets up a promotion system by seniority; guarantees minimum weekly earnings of $41.50 and creates a vacation plan.

ILWU Says Bosses Plan Lockout

One of the first major results of the Taft-Hartley Act will be a tieup of West Coast shipping, the CIO Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's Union warned.

Encouraged by the T-H act, the Waterfront Employers Association of the Pacific Coast "has determined to order all ship, dock and walking bosses out of the union under pain of discharge or to require the union to expel them," the union charged.

The bosses have been in the union for twelve years. The Waterfront Employers Association and its member companies have refused to recognize the collective bargaining rights of walking bosses, the union charged, even though an election, conducted by the Natl. Labor Relations Board, resulted in the union's certification.

The ILWU said that it would refuse to expel any workers eligible to membership or to deny them union protection. It warned that any of its members locked out because of union membership would establish picket lines, which would be respected by longshoremen under the Coast Longshore agreements.

4,000 PAPERWORKERS GET PAY INCREASES

A general wage increase of 7c an hour has been granted more than 4,000 hourly paid employes of West Virginia Pulp and Paper plants at Covington, Va., Luke, Md., and Williamsburg, Pa., under a new agreement with the CIO United Paperworkers.

The wage clause of the agreement goes into effect August 25, after ratification of the agreement by local unions.

The wage hike is the fifth granted hourly employes of the three plants since V-J Day. Labor rates in the new agreement represent an increase of about 50% since the end of the war with Japan.

In addition to the wage increase, the agreement calls for equalization of the Covington plant's labor rate with that at Luke.

The new wage schedule make the lowest labor rates $1.04 an hour at Covington and Luke and $1.05½ an hour at Williamsburg. It was explained that these rates are the highest paid in the paper industry in the areas in which the three plants operate.

DURING the negotiations the union committee received the assurances of a company representative that the management had approved the principle of a company-wide contributory pension plan for hourly employes. The plan must be approved by both the directors and stockholders before it can be offered to the employes.

Company officials estimate that the pension plan will cost $3 million for past services alone and will require $300,000 annual payments by the company.

Among the additions in the new agreement are clauses providing for one hour's pay at time and one half in lieu of a lunch hour if a worker is required to work through a second shift.

The contract prohibits strikes, but bans suits against the union for "wildcat" strikes.

UAW MEMBER RECALLS DAYS WHEN SHE WAS BLACKSMITH'S DAUGHTER

RED-HAIRED Louise Stabler is an active member of the CIO Auto Workers in Ypsilanti, Mich. And when we say active, we mean just that. She can and has turned her hand at about every kind of union work.

Maybe it was her childhood background that started her on her union path with such energy and versatility. Daughter of an Illinois blacksmith, Louise grew up in her father's shop listening to the ring of hammer on anvil.

Factory smells and noises, she says, are nostalgic music to her. She claims that even now she could shoe a horse or sharpen a plowshare.

LOUISE STABLER

A member of UAW's Amalgamated Local 50, Louis Stabler has served her union at various times as trustee, organizer, member of the shop committee and financial and recording secretary. She has also represented Local 50 on ration boards, community chest boards and veterans' counsel groups.

TURNING her talents in another direction, Louise wrote a series of informational leaflets called "The Women in the Bomber Plant" which were published by Local 50's educational department.

Now she writes and mimeographs leaflets and handbills for the Political Action Committee, and is helping promote a CIO newspaper to be published in the early fall by the Washtenaw County CIO Council.

Another highlight of Louise's union record is the fact that she was the first woman officer to serve on a convention committee for her International union.

SHE also served for three years on the UAW Health Institute's advisory committee, and together with another UAW woman member, represented the union at a Washington conference which drew up contract clauses for ultimate recommendation by the U. S. Dept. of Labor's Women's Bureau.

Before she started her union career, Louise sang with bands, worked in laundries and at soda fountains, did practical nursing and a variety of other jobs to pay her way through high school and two terms at James Millikin University, Decatur, Ill.

Now 36 years old, Louise in private life is Mrs. Guy Whitaker of Ann Arbor, Mich., and has a 16-year-old daughter, Janet.

Women's Congress To Meet in Paris

The Women's World Fellowship will hold an International Congress in Paris, Sept. 28-Oct. 1, to discuss such problems as peace, feeding the world's children, public information, and the role of women in public affairs.

Honorary chairman of the Congress is Madame Vincent Auriel. Madame George Bidault is chairman.

You Can Still Go To School

There's still time to register for the following CIO Leadership Training Schools:

For CIO members in Colorado, Wyoming, Montana, and Utah, at Association Camp, Estes Park, Colo., Aug. 29 to Sept. 1. Room, board and tuition—$20.

Note that we cannot be responsible for housing delegates who do not send in registrations ahead of time. The camp, which is high in the Rockies not far from Denver, will probably be crowded over Labor Day, so do not count on finding room after you get there.

For CIO members in Missouri, Kansas, and southern Illinois, at Montebello Vacation House, Kimmswick, Mo. (near St. Louis), Sept. 7-13. Room, board and tuition—$35.

All Registrations should be sent at once to George T. Guernsey, CIO Dept. of Research & Education, 718 Jackson Place, N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

SHOULD HE GIVE UP HIS TRUCK?

Only gradually do children learn to share their playthings. At two and three their toys seem real to them—almost like part of themselves. Words like "Don't be selfish" and "Let Tommy have your truck" don't make sense to a young child. How can he be sure he'll ever get it back again? Allowed to experiment with others of their age, children in time will be at home in the world of swap, borrow, lend and take turns.

Sprucing Up

DRESSING GRADE SCHOOL DAUGHTER

By HANNA SHERMAN

DON'T you envy the woman who always looks immaculately groomed and beautifully dressed. We don't mean the woman with a movie star's income but your next door neighbor who maybe does it on a shoestring.

Ask a few questions and you'll find that she's doing what comes naturally. She's got a knack. And chances are that she learned it at her mother's knee. Why not do the same for your daughter? A clothes sense is not something she's born with. It's a combination of many skills and attitudes that you can develop and teach her while she's still very young.

From the age of two on she'll be gaining confidence and pride in her appearance.

Even before she's in kindergarten, encourage her to look her prettiest. Let her wear the colors she likes and take into account her style preferences. Take time out to say, "Brown socks and a brown hair ribbon look very pretty with your yellow dress. They match".

FROM eight on, let her share the fun of planning her wardrobe. Go through her wardrobe and decide just which items stored for the summer will be good next season. Which you'll need to remodel. And which you'll give to little sister. Also decide with her what summer clothes can be worn during the first weeks of school. Allow her to help you sew on buttons and rip out hems that need to be let down. She'll love it.

Then plan for the new clothes you're going to buy. Consider all her suggestions seriously and take her shopping with you. Make a plan that includes her most important needs. Just as you do for yourself, decide in advance just about l much you'll spen . Do this by studying mail order catalogues and advertisements.

If, while actually shopping you spend a little more than you planned to, explain the reason to your daughter. Point out the fact that the item you've chosen is worth the extra cost. Tell her, "It is more becoming" or "It's made of better materials"—but give the reason.

On the other hand if you find that by shopping around you've spent less than you planned, point that out, too. This of course for the girl who is old enough to understand. But she needn't be too old. Parents who feel that children should have nothing to do with money are doing them an injustice, besides cheating them out of some very valuable experience.

BE tactful. If your daughter is on the chubby side or inclined to be tall and gangly, gently steer her to clothes that flatter. Let her see that certain styles are more becoming to her than others. Do try not to seem impatient or point out how difficult she is to fit. Feelings of inferiority can develop from well meaning remarks made by a tired harassed mother.

When you've purchased the clothes, help her to put them away. She should have her own closet or at least a very definite part of one, and her own chest of drawers. Encourage clothes care by both of you giving her wardrobe the necessary "going over" once a week. Bestow lavish praise for neat dresser drawers, and dresses kept neatly buttoned up on their hangers, not on hooks.

FARM EQUIPMENT UNION SHUNS T-H BOARD

A national conference of 400 CIO Farm Equipment Union delegates, meeting in Chicago, voted to abstain from using the NLRB under new Taft-Hartley restrictions.

The delegates also authorized their executive board to continue "exploring avenues toward unity of farm equipment workers" and called for a national CIO farm equipment council to effect cooperation among such workers in FE, and in the electrical, auto steel unions.

The membership of the CIO Auto Workers recently rejected, in a referendum, a proposal to merge FE and UAW.

The conference further called for labor unity, laid plans for political action, and criticized the 80th Congress.

Ban on Penalty For News Guild

THE York, Pa., Gazette and Daily and the American Newspaper Guild unit representing its editorial employes have renegotiated their present contract in the face of the Taft-Hartley law with the aim of continuing uninterrupted labor relations that have been in effect.

Both the publisher and the Guild feel that the new law is aimed at crippling and weakening labor unions and that any such weakening and probable destruction may well be the first step to an American-style Fascism.

The publisher and the Guild have therefore agreed that the present contract shall be discontinued and a new agreement to run for one year shall replace it. The provisions of the new agreement are similar in all respects to the old one, including continuation of the full union shop and continued contract coverage of all sub-editor positions.

Additions are a clause providing for reopening on or before Dec. 31, as to wages, hours, working conditions and job security, and a section that any alleged contract violations shall be settled between the two parties without any recourse to the courts in terms of financial suits against the Guild.

The York Unit is a member of the Harrisburg Local of the Guild. Homer Luttringer is president of the local and Saul Miller is unit chairman. Sidney Barson has been chief negotiator for the local. J. W. Gitt is the publisher.

Unite To Fight AFL Raid Threat

Five CIO maritime unions lined up last week with the CIO American Communications Association against "threats of raiding" the ACA's Maritime Radio Operator membership which they charged had been made by an official of the opposing AFL radio officers union.

Signing the statement in support of ACA were the CIO Fishermen & Allied Workers, the Longshoremen & Warehousemen, Marine Cooks & Stewards, the Marine Engineers Beneficial Association (West Coast Div.) and the Maritime Union.

The statement charged that a former port agent for ACA, E. L. Gilman, who had become an official of the AFL Radio Operators, had "accompanied his move with an attack upon the CIO union."

"Any diversion of the energies of any Maritime Union into raiding tactics against any other Maritime Union will only weaken all Maritime Unions in the needed united fight against shipowners and their Taft-Hartley Act," the unions declared.

Down on the Farm It's Lonelier

The Nation's farm population declined by 2,996,911 persons between 1940 and 1947, and totaled 27,550,000 January 1, the Census Bureau reports.

The Bureau attributed the decline largely to a wartime emigration of civilians from the farm and the fact that many discharged servicemen failed to return to farm homes. The January 1 figure, however, represented a net gain of 700,000 over 1946.

You Can't Keep Up With Jones

"The cost of trying to live in the style in which they have been accustomed is bringing a lot of people to the breaking point, financially", remarks U. S. News, David Lawrence's business publication.

U. S. News takes as an example a man with a wife and two dependents who made $5,000 a year in 1941 and still is making $5,000. Here's how U. S. News says he spends his money, if he keeps to the same living standards:

	1941	1947
Taxes	$ 43	$ 480
Food	1152	2050
Shelter	753	825
Clothing	572	992
Medical care	208	353

That meant, U. S. News goes on, that in 1941 he had $2272 left to put into savings or spend on transportation, personal care, contributions, recreation, furnishings, tobacco, auto upkeep, etc.

In 1947, he would have only $300 left.

Europeans Still Need CARE Aid

Food and clothing are still badly need to relieve suffering in Europe, says CARE (Cooperative for American Remittances to Europe, Inc.) in an appeal to Americans to purchase the special CARE packages prepared for shipment abroad.

The packages, which may be bought for $10 each, will be shipped to any persons or organizations designated in the following countries:

Austria, Belgium, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Ireland, Finland, France, Germany (American, British and French Zones and all of Berlin), Great Britain, Greece, Hungary, Italy, the Netherlands, Poland and Rumania.

CIO members may order any of the packages desired through their local CIO Community Services Committee, or direct from CARE, 50 Broad St., New York 4, N. Y.

New Labor Paper

A new labor paper, "Midstate Weekly," supported by CIO, AFL and independent unions, has started publication in Syracuse.

Dedicated to "fostering industrial peace and prosperity in Central New York," the first issue, dated August 15, says its idea of industrial peace is not the quiet of closed plants, nor the lack of strife made possible by cowed workers or guards," but peace "based on satisfied workers."

Striking Newsboys Aided By CIO

Fourteen lads in Benton Harbor, Mich., have learned the value of CIO early.

The boys, aged between 8 and 15, are members of no union, but struck against the Benton Harbor Herald-Press. They demanded an increase of 3c per customer for home deliveries. They get 7c for each customer; they want 10c.

The determined boys started their strike after management refused them time off to participate in a V-Day parade. They set up picket lines and carried placards. Their demonstration got expert advice from CIO officers, who have a union hall across the street from the Herald-Press.

"We need somebody to be used as a sort of goat around here. Think you can qualify?"

Farm Committee

Sen. Capper (R., Kan.) of the Senate Agriculture Committee, has appointed a sub-committee to study the broad question of farm needs. The group includes Sens. Bushfield (R., S. D.), Wilson (R., Ia.), Thye (R., Minn.), Elmer Thomas (D., Okla.), Ellender (D., La.) and Lucas (D., Ill.).

Mullady Named

Bernard (Barney) Mullady, former Wage and Hours Division and Labor Dept. public relations man,, has been sworn in as information chief of the Federal Works Agency. He's a former officer of the CIO Newspaper Guild.

No Price Drop, Business Told

From Business Week:

"Every business man has an important stake in retail food prices. For one thing, they are a clew to what wage demands his employes might make . . . The Democratic Administration and the Republican Congress started out on vigorous campaigns. The aim of both: to find out if consumer prices are too high. But none of this activity is going to have much effect on food. Businessmen can be certain that food prices are going to stay high."

UAW SAVES UNION SHOP ON DEADLINE

AN agreement which gives employes a choice of a 15c hourly wage boost or a 7c increase with a pension plan was reached last week by Ford and CIO Auto Workers negotiators just 40 seconds before restrictions of the Taft-Hartley law became effective at midnight, Aug. 22.

The pension issue, which almost precipitated a strike a few weeks ago, will be settled by a referendum of the 105,000 employes as soon as machinery can be set up for it, Richard T. Leonard, UAW vice-president in charge of the union's Ford department, said.

The new contract will run for two years and continues the union shop for another year. Under terms of the T-H law, the union shop must be reaffirmed after one year by approval of the majority of the employes.

UAW Scores Again

A 28-day CIO Auto Worker's strike against the Murray Corporation, Detroit, has ended in a CIO victory.

The 7,000 workers struck against Murray, which makes parts for many auto manufacturers, mainly to gain immunity against Taft-Hartley penalty suits.

The agreement ending the strike followed the pattern set in the UAW International Harvester contract, under which management agreed not to sue the union for damages because of wildcat strikes, in return for a union guaranty that it would take "reasonably effective" action to halt such strikes.

C. W. Avery, Murray president, said the agreement "is fair to both parties and is in accordance with the Taft-Hartley Law."

The agreement also called for a 15-cent an hour increase which company officials said would add $2,500,000 annually to the payroll. The agreement is retroactive to May 1.

Food For Thought

The Agriculture Department says the average family spent 32 percent more for food in mid-June this year than it spent in mid-June, 1946, when price controls still were in effect.

It said the annual "market basket" cost for the average family, based on mid-June prices, was $636, as compared with $481 a year earlier.

The jump was paced by a 76 percent hike in retail meat prices. Costs of certain foods such as salad and cooking oils declined somewhat.

Textile Union

WINS 100 T-H BANS

MORE than 100 contracts with clauses which exempt the union from suits for "wildcat" strikes have been signed by the CIO Textile Workers.

The much-debated aspect of the Taft-Hartley Act was resolved, the Textile Workers said, by including a clause declaring that any strike not expressly authorized in writing by the union president will be considered an unauthorized strike, which can be settled through grievance and arbitration procedures, but not by a damage suit.

Most sections of the Northern cotton - rayon industry have agreed to the new wording. Rug and carpet mills employing 20,000 workers, members of the Dyer's Federation, covering 30,000 employes, and several Southern mills have signed the agreements.

The new textile agreements also provide a total of $9 in raises, 3 paid holidays, more generous vacations and larger company-paid insurance against illness, accident and death.

Strikes are in progress at the three mills which have so far rejected the agreement. These are at Ludlow and Holyoke, Mass., and Manchester, N. H.

The campaign and negotiations were conducted by UAW Rep. John Rinkenbaugh, and in negotiations the UAW was able to secure six paid holidays, vacation pay, an hourly raise, etc.

URRWA reports the tug dispatchers employed in the Marine Department on the Central Railroad Co., of New Jersey, chose the CIO as their bargaining agent. The campaign was handled by URRWA Dis. Dir. Francis M. McMahon and Rep. Eugene W. Attreed.

CIO State Dir. R. W. Starnes, Jackson, Miss., reports the Meridian Grain and Elevator Co., Meridian, Miss., chose the CIO as their bargaining agent. Approximately 80 people were involved.

W. A. Copeland, CIO Reg. Dir., Memphis, Tenn., reports UAW-CIO was successful in a strike at the Willard Battery Co., after a five-weeks' duration which brought about recognition of their union and retroactivity, also grievance procedure, pending negotiation of a contract. The plant was organized by the CIO staff under the direction of CIO Rep. J. D. Harris who cooperated with the UAW-CIO in winning the strike.

Wm. B. Taylor, CIO Reg. Dir., Louisville, Ky., advises of intensified activity amongst CIO members and organizations on political action. Hundreds of them were transported by bus to register, led in the main by the CIO Textile Workers.

There is a growing determination on the part of working people everywhere to prepare themselves and to support financially on a voluntary basis political activity, having in mind the defeat of those representatives who voted to stab labor in the back by the passage of the Taft-Hartley Act.

The Intl. Typographical Union, in convention in Cleveland recently, decided on fullest cooperation with all labor forces for the defeat of those who deliberately, maliciously and unwarrantedly fouled labor by the passage of this vicious act.

Delegates from Canada, elected to attend the convention of the CIO International Woodworkers which opens in St. Louis on August 26, are at the present time being detained at the border by U. S. authorities. This office has interceded requesting bona-fide delegates be permitted to attend the convention as has always been the case in the past. At this writing, we are awaiting action by the Department of Justice.

The press statements now being released by the new board set up to administer the Taft-Hartley Act make it quite obvious with what labor is confronted. It has been charged openly that Senator Ball and his hatchet-cohorts have made it clear they expect the board to be guided by their views of what the act is and how it should be administered. This column in the future will deal with these matters and general CIO activities, on account of the changed conditions with which we are confronted.

Organized labor did not lose its battle in dealing with employers; it is through the Congress that these obstacles have been created. The answer to that is more participation on the part of our people to register and vote, raise funds to finance labor's campaign, and the fullest participation of everybody in such campaigns. UNITE AS NEVER BEFORE! Let us hold those to account who are responsible for these conditions—congressmen and senators who voted for the Taft-Hartley Bill.

In the words of Elijah P. Lovejoy, a martyr to the cause of freedom of speech and press, "As long as I am an American Citizen; as long as American blood runs in my veins, so long shall I hold myself at liberty to speak, write and publish what I please, being amenable to the laws of my country for doing the same." In that spirit, the CIO and organized labor everywhere is determined to hold to account those responsible for this attack, exercising our rights guaranteed by the constitution and the Bill of Rights of our country.

UE, RCA SIGN CONTRACT TO BOYCOTT BOARD

AN agreement by which neither the union nor the company will resort to either the Nat'l. Labor Relations Board or to the courts was signed last week by the CIO Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers and the RCA-Victor Division of the Radio Corp. of America.

Union officials said they expected the contract's "no-strike, no-liability" clause to serve as a model for other CIO pacts. This is believed to be the first instance of an employer boycott of the Board.

All disputes will be settled through the grievance and arbitration machinery established in the two-year contract. The union agreed not to sanction any strikes, slowdowns, or picketing except for non-compliance by the employer with an arbitration award.

Affecting 11,000 employes in Camden, N. J., Lancaster, Pa., Hollywood, Calif., and Pulaski, Va., the contract provides a general wage increase of 5 cents an hour. The wage clause may be reopened 60 days before May of next year.

The union shop was extended for one year in accordance with the Taft-Hartley law, which established a one-year limit on union shops agreed on between June 23 and Aug. 22.

A joint statement by the company and the union characterized the new contract as "a significant step toward furthering continued harmonious relations between management and labor."

Burke Quits Marine Cooks

The resignation of Sec.-Treas. Eugene F. Burke was "reluctantly accepted" last week by the CIO Marine Cooks & Stewards.

One of the six founders of the organization in 1901, Burke long fought for maritime unity and helped establish the Maritime Federation of the Pacific and the Committee for Maritime Unity, of which he is honorary chairman.

The 75-year-old union leader will remain on the payroll "if he will accept it," the union said.

SHARE PROFITS WITH WORKERS

A profit-sharing contract, described by the local union president as "history-making," has been signed by Local 299 of the CIO Paper Workers and the Continental Paper Co., Ridgefield Park, N. J.

The unique plan provides that 30.51% of the company's "production values" are to be distributed to the workers in the plant. "Production values" was described as the company's sales receipts after subtracting the cost of raw materials and supplies.

Every four weeks the company's wage bill will be compared with the 30.51% production fund. If the fund is larger than the wage expenditure, the difference will be divided among employes, 37½% to be paid out in cash, 37½% to be paid into a pension fund and the remaining 25% going into a reserve account to offset any dip in income during future weeks.

RETAIL CLERKS OBTAIN $4 RAISE AT BLOOMINGDALE'S

ABOUT 3,500 employes of Bloomingdale's department store in New York last week were awarded wage increases of $4 a week in an arbitration decision.

A demand for a wage increase, shorter work week, and higher commission rate for employes working solely on commission, made by the CIO Retail, Wholesale & Dept. Store Employes, Local 3, was submitted to arbitration in conformity with terms of the contract.

Minimum wage schedules under the Bloomingdale job evaluation plan were revised by the arbiter. Adjustments were expected to bring the "weighted storewide average" hiring rate to $30.81, which is increased to $32.81 after 60 days and to $34.84 after 6 months.

Union officials said they expected the decision to have an affect on arbitration proceedings scheduled for R. H. Macy & Co., the city's largest department store.

LABOR DAY—1947

Murray on Labor Day:

'OUR COURSE MUST BE CHANGED . . . TO AVOID EVENTUAL DISASTER'

Labor Day Statement Of CIO Pres. Philip Murray

AMERICAN workers face an unprecedented challenge on this Labor Day of 1947.

The Taft-Hartley Act was designed to wipe out many of the gains that organized labor made during the past several decades.

The Wage-Hour Law was weakened so that it lost much of its usefulness to the lowest-paid worker of the nation.

Funds of governmental agencies which might have been of real assistance in providing facts and personnel to aid in the collective bargaining process were slashed unmercifully under the deceitful slogan of "economy."

NOR is the end in sight. Representative Fred Hartley, co-author of the Taft-Hartley Act, promises even more severe anti-labor legislation next year. Others who speak for big business are anxious to support his efforts.

All American workers — not just those who belong to labor unions— should rally on this Labor Day to support the groups which are seeking to prevent further turning back of the clock on management-labor relations.

The blows which have been dealt organized labor will be felt sharply by the farmer, the merchant and the professional man. When labor's interests are affected adversely, the entire public suffers.

We cannot ignore the repercussions throughout the world that result from each new attack on the rights of the working men of this nation. This is extremely important to remember, because most of the world is looking to the United States for economic aid and for preservation of the spirit of democracy.

PHILIP MURRAY

THROUGHOUT the world there is fear that our nation is turning its back on civil liberties, tolerance and progress.

To maintain respect and admiration, we must move forward. We must demonstrate—by deeds and not by words—that we can make democracy function successfully and produce for its people more and more of the good things of life.

Our course must be changed if we are to avoid eventual disaster.

LABOR DAY is a good occasion on which to point these things out. It is a good day, too, for those of us in organized labor to pledge we will do everything within our means to wipe the infamous Taft-Hartley Act from the statute books.

We must lay the foundation for new legislation that will help — not harm — the people. We should work for higher minimum wages, a sound national health program, expanded social security, better educational facilities, more and better homes and a halt to persecution of minorities.

The nation's unionists can help achieve these goals—through organization of workers who do not yet enjoy the benefits of unionism — through strong political action in all parts of the nation—through intense activity in every phase of our work.

We must set the stage to meet the demands of the American people. Labor again dedicates itself to this task.

Peter McGuire's 1882 Dream Of Union Holiday Led To Labor Day

THIS year, on the 65th anniversary of Labor Day, the strongest and most democratic trade union movement in the world finds itself faced for the first time with the type of repressive legislation that it did so much to destroy in Germany, Italy and Japan.

Peter J. McGuire, who believed so fervently in the destiny of free workingmen and women that he proposed that one day each year be set aside in their honor, would be in the forefront today in the fight against the Taft-Hartley Law.

McGuire, a union leader when labor was at its lowest ebb, would be gratified today in seeing many of his dreams come true. But he would be appalled, also, at seeing how labor's war production was rewarded with legislation harsher and more repressive than anything he knew.

IT was in 1882, while labor was in the middle of a fight for the eight-hour day and union recognition, that McGuire, president of the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners, advanced his plan for a national holiday. The newly-organized New York Central Labor Union accepted his suggestion that the date be set midway between Independence and Thanksgiving Days.

On Sept. 6, 1882, the first Labor Day was celebrated with New York unions parading up Broadway to Union Square and finally to Elm Park for picnics, concerts and speeches.

The Labor Day idea spread swiftly as unionists from New York and Philadelphia moved westward. Two years later, the Federation of Trades and Labor Unions met in Chicago and asked Congress to declare the first Monday in September a national holiday. It was not until 1894 that Congress took action.

Labor Days became days of spreading the union idea, of recruiting, and organizing for political action. In Illinois, Colorado and other states they resulted in strikes because employers would not grant the day off.

JUST five years after Peter McGuire made his address to the first Labor Day throng in New York, Oregon became the first state to make Labor Day an official holiday. Colorado, New York, New Jersey and Massachusetts soon passed similar resolutions. The first Monday in September became a legal holiday and two days later President Cleveland signed the legislation.

McGuire died on Feb. 18, 1906, at the age of 54, in poverty and nearly forgotten. He had given a lifetime of fighting for his fellow-workers. Today, one of the great heroes of the American labor movement, he will be memorialized at countless union celebrations in the words of one Labor Day speaker at St. Louis several years ago:

"If there's a closed shop in heaven, Peter McGuire organized it."

CONVENTION CALL ISSUED BY CIO

THE 9th annual CIO Convention will be held at the Hotel Bradford, Boston, commencing at 10 A. M., Monday, Oct. 13, according to the convention call mailed out last week.

The call pointed out that "enemies of organized labor, with the assistance of reactionary forces in the Federal and State legislatures, are embarked on a campaign to undermine trade unions."

"We seek freedom from fear, freedom from want, freedom of religion and freedom of speech, assemblage and free association." the call went on. "We demand the realization of Pres. Roosevelt's Economic Bill of Rights.

"We insist upon mutual agreement and understanding in the councils of the United Nations.

"The CIO must continue in the path of fighting militantly for peace, the improvement of living conditions for all and the full enjoyment of democracy by all, regardless of race, creed, color or national origin."

The call, addressed to affiliated national and international unions, organizing committees, local industrial unions and industrial union councils, stated rules of representation and other pertinent information.

DEDICATE LABOR DAY TO VICTORY IN '48

THE nation's organized workers were in a grim but fighting mood on Labor Day.

Faced with the Taft-Hartley law and soaring living costs, workers responded by the tens of thousands at demonstrations throughout the nation where the theme was "make Labor Day PAC Day."

The need for an outpouring at the polls in 1948 such as helped elect Franklin Roosevelt in 1944 was stressed in Labor Day statements.

In his statement CIO Pres. Philip Murray lashed the Taft-Hartley law and the Wage-Hour law amendments and the slashing of funds for governmental agencies.

He warned that Rep. Fred Hartley "promises even more severe anti-labor legislation next year," and that the "blows which have been dealt organized labor will be felt sharply by the farmer, the merchant and the professional man."

"When labor's interests are affected adversely, the entire public suffers," Murray warned.

He called on labor to pledge to wipe the Taft-Hartley law off the statute books and to work for higher minimum wages, a sound national health program, expanded social security, better educational facilities, more and better homes and ending the prosecution of minorities.

PAC Director Jack Kroll like Murray called on the workers to pledge themselves to work for the repeal of the T-H law.

The CIO-PAC chief declared "we cannot avoid the conclusion that the blame for this situation lies at the door of the Republican party in general and at the door of Sen. Robert A. Taft of Ohio in particular." Nor can the blame for this shameful congressional performance be avoided by the titular head of the Republican party, Gov. Thomas E. Dewey, who sat smugly silent while the hand that held the knife plunged it into the people's back. This could not have been accomplished without the assistance of the reactionary members of the Democratic party. . . .

"To the dual task of registering voters and securing donations for carrying on our work, the PAC today dedicates itself. I am confident that we will be as successful in overcoming the obstacles that confront us as we were in overcoming the obstacles that sought to keep America's unorganized workers from joining our labor unions."

Murray also spoke at Kansas City. CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey and Vice-Pres. and Director of Organization Allan S. Haywood were the principal speakers at Dallas, Tex., and Hammond, Ind., respectively.

CAREY'S statement declared: "Labor organizations of America must evolve an area of agreement for prompt unified political action. The CIO has consistently urged this course. All workers have been dragged into politics by the 80th Congress, and as a result of it they find themselves confronted with a new occupational hazard.

"If they choose to exercise their political prerogatives as isolated groups, they may even find themselves being denied the right to bargain collectively. Free men and women can give only one answer to this sort of tyranny and that is to unite together to reverse the legalized injustice.

"Hand in hand with the political crusade must go the economic determination to rely more than ever before on the process of collective bargaining."

Although he did not mention the Taft-Hartley law by name, President Truman said that "good labor relations, however, cannot be brought about by legislation. They are created by the men and the women concerned, cooperating sincerely and earnestly within the framework of a minimum of regulatory law."

The President took occasion to call for social legislation which had been pushed aside by the first session of the 80th Congress including adequate staffing and increased jurisdiction of the Dept. of Labor, increased minimum wages, a broadened social security system and health insurance.

Sec. of Labor Schwellenbach hailed "the surprising amount of peace in industry, even during such a period of stresses and strains as we have been passing in the last two years," and the nation's "great record of production, in peace as well as wartime."

THE social action department of the National Catholic Welfare Conference "expressed dissatisfaction with the Taft-Hartley Act," which it characterized as "awkward and unworkable in many respects" and as "an inadequate and short-sighted approach to the very complicated problem of industrial relations.

"Some of its provisions will no doubt be amended, and others if unamended, will be challenged as unconstitutional. Nevertheless, the act will presently be the law of the land, and as such it requires labor and management alike to work as they have never worked before for the voluntary settlement of industrial problems across the bargaining table.

"To the extent that they fail to compose their differences peacefully and equitably the law will be enforced to the limit of its authority and to the disruption of the peaceful processes of collective bargaining."

The Federal Council of Churches through its executive committee issued a call for cooperation, pointing out that the "missing element in industry is the goal for team work. . . With a sound knowledge of actual relations between employers and employes, the church can present the community with the demand that men shall go beyond expediency, or even bare justice, and shall work for a partnership based on Christian good."

Condemnation of the T-H Law was not confined to the United States.

Vincent Tewson, general secretary of the British Trades Union Congress, said that British trade unionists were hopeful that the T-H Law "will be placed in the limbo of reactionary and restrictive legislation which has been overcome in the past."

Horning In

"Things are a lot better than a casual survey of current events would indicate."

Thus spoke Earl Bunting, president of the National Association of Manufacturers, in a Labor Day statement.

As he issued his statement, the U. S. Labor Dept. was announcing that wholesale commodity prices had risen 0.3% to a price index of 153.3% of the 1926 average. It was the sixth week in a row for a rise and set a new postwar high.

GOP DODGES ISSUES RAISED BY STORCH

THE Republicans were pulling out all the old stops in the 8th Pennsylvania District Special Congressional Election.

They charged the campaign of Philip Storch, labor-indorsed Democratic candidate, was being run by "carpet-baggers".

Storch laughed that one off, pointing out that while he was born in Allentown, largest city in the Congressional District, his opponent, Republican Franklin H. Lichtenwalder, had been born several districts away.

But, said Storch, American laws don't say that residents of another district, interested in who sits in Congress, cannot campaign anywhere. (The Republicans apparently didn't think much of home talent when it came to selecting publicity men for Lichtenwalder. One was brought in from Philadelphia, another from Tennessee.)

Then, Fulton Lewis, Jr., who frequently has been accused of broadcasting political propaganda in the guise of news, was enlisted in the anti-Storch drive. Lewis smeared Storch's progressiveness in his broadcasts. Storch challenged him to debate the issues in the 8th District, saying he would not accuse Lewis of being a "Carpetbagger".

The 8th Congressional District is normally a breeze for the Republicans. In 1946, Charles Gerlach, who has since died, won over a Democrat, by 49,196 to 34,260. In 1944, Gerlach won by 59,497 to 43,073; in 1942, he won by 48,210 to 34,164.

Despite those margins, the Republicans are using every device to keep control of the district. Political Boss Joseph Grundy, former head of the state Manufacturers' Association, has his Bucks County leaders spreading rumors of a Communist plot. (In one recent election there was only one Communist vote cast.)

The Republicans ignored the fact that Storch, president of the Lehigh Valley Local of the CIO Newspaper Guild, is backed by all organized labor—CIO, AFL, Rail Brotherhoods and independents—by veterans' groups (He enlisted in the Marines in World War II, was in action and served as a combat correspondent in the Marshalls, Carolines, Okinawa and Ie Shima campaigns.)

He is also supported by farm unions, small business groups, women's clubs and by actors and writers, including Ella ("Finian's Rainbow") Logan, Kitty Carlisle and Mrs. Budd Schulberg, wife of the author of "What Makes Sammy Run" and "The Harder They Fall."

Storch pledges to seek immediate legislation for lower prices, federal low-cost housing program for veterans and their families (his own home burned down while he was in the Marines, making it difficult for his wife and two children to find a place to live), repeal of the Taft-Hartley Law, security and decent living for farm families, civil liberties for all and lasting peace.

He is a charter member of his union, the Guild, and has twice served his local as president. He has been active in the Guild's national affairs as a member of the Pro-Guild Committee.

He has been indorsed by CIO pres. Philip Murray, by many other CIO leaders, by the State AFL and CIO and many other groups.

The Storch committee is making a final stretch drive to get out the vote to overcome the huge GOP lead in Lehigh-Bucks Counties.

Spurns PAC Aid, Limps in 3rd

Curtis Trahan, former member of the CIO Oil Workers, who repudiated PAC support in his bid for election to Congress ran a poor third in the 9th Texas District election.

Trahan received fewer than 4,000 votes. Delegates to the OWIU convention turned over to the PAC a fund which had been collected for Trahan.

Indianapolis

A United Labor Committee—AFL, CIO and Brotherhoods—has been formed, with labor entering three candidates in the councilmanic primary.

An elaborate program is planned.

Northampton County

CIO officers and shop stewards had an organization meeting which drew up complete plans for PAC endeavors and which won enthusiastic pledges.

Palmer Weber, research director, CIO-PAC, and Eugene Cotton, CIO associate general counsel, joined CIO Council Pres. Ernest Moyer and C. B. Newell, Northampton CIO-PAC director, in outlining what should be done.

The Council's Publicity and Educational Committee issued a booklet, "Defend Your Union!" which gave full outlines of all aims. The CIO is backing two candidates for offices in Easton, chief city of Northampton. They are Peter DiDiacomo, a veteran CIO unionist, for City Council, and Earl Keyser, Jr., candidate for the School Board.

Keyser, a graduate of State College, was a member of the CIO steelworkers while working in the mills during the war and is now active in the organizing campaign of the CIO Retail Clerks.

Georgia Governor Orders CIO Beating Inquiry

GOV. M. E. THOMPSON, of Georgia, has ordered the State Bureau of Investigation to make a full investigation into the beating of a CIO organizer at LaGrange, Ga., and has pledged that if the town's police are definitely linked to the violence, he will order their suspension and replacement.

Thompson's action came after the CIO's Wilbur E. (Bill) Gupton had been unmercifully beaten, along with his wife, while in LaGrange for dinner at a cafe and a movie. The beating occurred on a street. Gupton is working at Hogansville, about 20 miles from LaGrange.

The Governor issued his statement after Charles H. Gillman, Georgia Regional CIO Director, appealed to him to punish those responsible for the LaGrange violence. Gupton, suffering from a fractured skull, is at his home in Cedartown, Ga. Mrs. Gupton is suffering from high nervous tension.

Thompson also denounced the bombing of the home of C. E. Gregory, political reporter for the Atlanta Journal, who with a colleague, George Goodwin, was prominent in the Journal's expose last winter of voting procedure in Telfair County. The procedure had given the late Eugene Talmadge's son, Herman, a brief occupancy in the Governor's chair.

LaGrange, seat of the huge Callaway Mills, has been the scene in the past of anti-labor activities.

MONOPOLY 'PROBE'

THE CIO's position on monopolies is simply that we're against them.

That's why we pricked up our ears when we heard a grapevine report that a Congressional committee was going to take a look into monopolistic practices.

We had visions of big, sensational hearings in New York, Pittsburgh, Chicago and other centers of commerce and industry.

We hoped that these hearings would let the public in on how the big boys get together and put the squeeze on the little ones.

Then we got the straight dope. There was to be a probe. It was going to be conducted by Rep. Ploeser (R., Mo.) and his House Small Business Committee.

But the committee wasn't going to any of the big industrial centers. It was going only to Greenbelt, Md., just outside Washington.

The probe didn't last long. The committee soon ruled that the Greenbelt co-operative set-up constituted a monopoly.

Our examination of what went on convinces us that any resemblance between a monopoly probe and what occurred at Greenbelt was purely coincidental.

Where Are They Now?

Life would indeed be dull if man was not able to remember and to wonder.

We remember, for instance, that a lot of business writers and speakers gave organized labor the verbal "works" shortly after the end of the war—when the unions were fighting an attempted reduction in their members' earnings.

Labor, they said, was trying to plunge the nation into inflation—and that was bad.

The situation is greatly different today. We already have inflation and it's getting worse, largely as a result of high prices and the huge profits of business and industry.

So—

We wonder what's happened to the writers and speakers who formerly warned the nation about inflation.

We wonder, but not too much.

How About It?

We hope that the Congressional committee which is going to investigate the price situation will reveal publicly whether there's any real connection between huge profits and high prices, as we charge, or whether that's just a foolish myth.

In fighting prices, we'll save ourselves from NAM-nation.

Hot under the collar? Give PAC a dollar!

Curb on Free Press Not Confined to Union Papers?

By ALLEN L. SWIM

THE nation's newspapers, which usually shout loudly—and rightfully so—about freedom of the press, were strangely silent on the subject during consideration of the Taft-Hartley Act.

The trade union editors at the same time were pulling their hair and shouting, "You can't do this to the press!"

They shouted, but they got no support from the big newspapers.

They got considerable criticism, but not support. Generally they were brushed off with careless statements such as, "Aw, that's just another union gripe about the Taft-Hartley Act."

That's how it was when Congress was getting ready to enact Section 304 of the Taft-Hartley Act.

SECTION 304, now a part of the law of the land.

Organizations other than labor unions, however, are mentioned in Section 304, and obviously this had to be done to guard against charges of it being "class" legislation.

Here is how the Section reads:

"It is unlawful for any national bank, or any corporation organized by authority of any law of Congress to make a contribution or expenditure in connection with any election to any political office . . . or for any corporation whatever or any labor organization to make a contribution or expenditure in connection with any election at which Presidential or Vice Presidential electors or a Senator or Representative . . . are to be voted for . . ."

SINCE this article is a product of the editorial department and not the legal department, we're loath to "rule" on the fine points of Section 304.

But with no hesitancy whatever we point out that the average daily newspaper is a corporation and that it is unable to take a stand for or against any candidate without making an expenditure.

Newsprint costs real dough these days!

We learn that every time we put out an edition of the CIO News and we're reminded of it by every publisher who's looking for an excuse not to grant Newspaper Guild requests for higher wages.

MENTION of the Guild brings up an interesting aspect of the situation.

That's the CIO outfit, you know, which has been trying for years to get Guild shop provisions in its contracts throughout the country. Publishers have argued long and loudly that granting of such a provision would endanger freedom of the press.

Yes, the same publishers who didn't even mention Section 304!

We don't know what other editors are going to do about Section 304, but we're going to ignore it until such time as the man comes around with the little black wagon and hauls us off.

To bow to Section 304 would be giving up the constitutional guarantee of freedom of the press.

WE don't want to make a lot of pious statements about freedom of the press or make a lot of predictions about how we're going to behave if the FBI comes around hammering on the door.

No. We just want to put it bluntly:

We don't intend to go along with Section 304 until after the highest court of the land has ruled we must—and in so ruling has held that the American press can be effectively gagged.

We hope the editors and publishers we've been chiding in this column will stand up and be counted, too.

Suppose it is only the labor press that is to be gagged.

It makes little difference—because if one group of politicians can silence the labor press another group can silence the commercial press.

"Buy up all copies of the CIO Voting Guide you can. I don't want my political reputation known."

So They Say

THE following letters to the editor of the New York Times, published on Aug. 22 and Aug. 27, took the words right out of our mouth:

"In the Times it is reported that the CIO News has issued a document listing the voting records of members of Congress. Carroll Reece of the Republican National Committee calls it 'a typical piece of impudence,' says it is 'merely another phase of the campaign of studied misrepresentation of the records of the Republican Congress.' I fail to see how the publication of the voting records of Congressmen, whether by the CIO or the NAM or any other organization, can possibly be impudence or misrepresentation.

"Mr. Reece also says that 'the only authentic 1947 Voting Guide is the one issued by the American people on Nov. 5, 1946.' A lot of water has passed over the dam since then. If things keep up the way they are going now, all the Democrats have to do is to ask the country in November, 1948, 'Had enough?' to be swept back into power."

(Signed) Henry C. Diller, Philadelpiha, Pa.

—and from Reader Marvin H. Morse, Hamilton, N. Y.:

"I was pleased to see a letter appearing on Aug. 2, which commended the recently published CIO News 1947 Voting Guide. But I am afraid the author of the letter missed a very important and—I hope—consequential implication.

"Perhaps the most valuable contribution to the American political scene and to the American electorate and people in general would be the periodic publication of a similar voting guide which would calculate the voting records of Senators and Representatives and present these to the people at intervals not only coinciding with approaching elections but at specific time lapses throughout the sessions of the Congress.

"A year ago, in August, 1946, Senator Glen H. Taylor of Idaho suggested that Congress, at the conclusion of each session, 'should publish the voting records of its members.' The idea is not incredible—what is hard to believe is that in a democracy such as this so few people go to the polls with a full realization of the records of the men they are placing in office."

Another crazy quirk of the Taft-Hartley law is brought out in a letter from a reader printed Aug. 28 in the Washington Post. Taking a possible case of a union which is not recognized by the NLRB because it has failed to meet requirements of the Taft-Hartley Act, the letter makes this point:

"If in an election conducted by the NLRB at the request of another recognized union 99 workers voted for the union which NLRB did not recognize and one worker voted for the other union, the 99 ballots could be voided, and the union with the support of one worker could represent all 100."

The number of women on the government payroll in continental U. S. has dropped from a wartime peak of 1,106,100 to 440,700, the Civil Service Commission reports.

Argument in Sky Comes to End Abruptly

THE powerful, four-motored plane knifed its way smoothly through the air, its nose pointed in the direction of the nation's capital.

Most of the passengers sat quietly reading or staring out at the beautiful cloud pattern in the sky.

About midway back in the ship two men and women started a casual conversation about nothing in particular—as strangers often do.

Then, suddenly, an argument began. One of the men mentioned an airline mechanics' strike. Then the woman declared:

"I hope they lose the strike, because they belong to the CIO—and I don't like the CIO!"

THE woman, a real estate agent, obviously meant what she said.

The man seated next to her asked, "Do you know anything about the merits of the strike?"

"No, I don't, and I don't care," she said. "I know that it's a CIO strike and that's enough for me."

"What do you have against the CIO?" she was asked.

"Well, it's made up of a lot of crooks and racketeers—and the CIO won't get rid of them."

She was asked to give the names of a few of the "criminals."

She was able to name two, neither of whom was connected with the CIO!

THIS brought a chuckle from the second man—the one who hadn't yet entered the discussion. Then he started speaking his little piece.

"I don't know too much about unions, but I've got a real complaint to make against the CIO," he said.

"I think the CIO unions pay their officers outrageously high salaries. And the thing that burns me up is that the money comes out of dues paid by hard-working men and women."

The man at whom this statement was tossed said, "H-m-m, that's very interesting. Now let's see where the money comes from that is used to pay the huge salaries of corporation officials. I have a sneaking suspicion that hard-working men and women provide this money, too."

THE man who objected to the salaries of union officials laughed good naturedly, then said, "Say, I never thought about it that way.

"I think, however, that you're trying to steer me off the path. Let's get back to the main point. Really, don't you think that CIO officials are paid too much?"

"No, I don't—not when you consider the amount and kind of work they do. By the way, before we go any further I'd like to ask you what you do for a living."

He said he was a regional official of a big publishing firm. He said he had a "fairly good" job and that he made "fairly good" money.

Finally, under questioning, he revealed his salary. Then the question-asker declared:

"That's $2,000 a year more than any CIO union pays its top official!"

THAT ended what started out to be a good argument. The real estate agent and the publisher's representative then started asking sensible questions about the CIO. They received factual answers.

Near the end of the journey the publisher's representative turned to the fellow who had been supplying the answers and asked, "Say, why in the heck do you know so much about the CIO?"

"Oh, that's simple. I'm a CIO public relations representative!"

"Well, I'll be d . . . . ."

MURRAY ENDORSES PRINCIPLES OF SACCO-VANZETTI MANIFESTO

PRES. PHILIP MURRAY has endorsed the principles of a manifesto issued on the 20th anniversary of the execution of Nicola Sacco and Bartolomeo Vanzetti.

In a wire to Gardner Jackson, newspaperman, Murray said: "I shall be happy to endorse the Boston presentation to Gov. Bradford of the Sacco-Vanzetti memorial and the principles contained in the manifesto."

The manifesto committee presented Bradford, Governor of Massachusetts, a large bronze bas relief of Sacco and Vanzetti by Gutzon Borglum for permanent installation in Boston Common.

Other signers of the manifesto included Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, Sen. Wayne Morse (R., Ore.), Chancellor Robert M. Hutchins, Univ. of Chicago; CIO Auto Workers' Pres. Walter Reuther, Robert E. Sherwood, playwright; Arthur M. Schlesinger, Sr., professor of history, Harvard, and Arthur M. Schlesinger, Jr., historian.

SACCO, a shoemaker, and Vanzetti, a fish peddler, both philosophical anarchists, were arrested in 1920, charged with the murder at Braintree, Mass., of a shoe factory paymaster. They were convicted in July, 1921, of the murder.

Numerous appeals for pardons were made to Judge Thayer, the trial jurist, and to Gov. Alvan T. Fuller. All were rejected, despite the fact doubt was cast on the testimony of many witnesses and despite the fact Celestino Madeiros, a professional bandit, confessed the Braintree murder and said Sacco and Vanzetti were not at the scene. The case caused widespread demonstrations in America and all over the world. The two men were electrocuted August 25, 1927.

On August 24, 1947, the Washington Post said in an editorial:

"Nearly all those who have carefully and dispassionately reexamined the evidence have had their belief in the innocence of Sacco and Vanzetti strengthened."

THE Schlesingers also have testified to their belief in the innocence of the two men, of whom Vanzetti wrote after their conviction: "If it had not been for these thing, I might have live out my life talking at street corners to scorning men. I might have die, unmarked, unknown, a failure. Now we are not a failure. This is our career and our triumph. Never in our full life could we hope to do such work for tolerance, for Joostice, for man's onderstanding of man as we do now by accident. Our words—our lives—our pains—nothing. The taking of our lives—lives of a good shoe maker and a poor fish-peddler—all! That last moment belongs to us—that agony is our triumph."

Her Day

Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt has answered James A. Farley's charges that she said the former Postmaster General and his wife were not the "social equals" of the Roosevelts.

Wrote the former First Lady in "The Ladies' Home Journal":

". . . I am grieved to find that Mr. Farley allowed himself to be made the kind of personality that Mr. Trohan of the Chicago Tribune would inevitably make him (Walter Trohan "ghost wrote" Farley's series of articles, "Why I Broke with Roosevelt," which appeared in Collier's).

"I am quite sure the remark could never have been made by me, since I never had had such thoughts. It never occurred to me that Mr. and Mrs. Farley felt themselves in any group different from that in which we were in.

". . . I have always liked and admired Mr. Farley and his special gifts and capacities. I still hope that when Mr. Trohan is through creating the Jim Farley of these articles I can find again the real Jim Farley one could not help liking and admiring."

T-H LAW SETS OFF EDITORIAL CONFUSION

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

THE Taft-Hartley Law came into full effect amid fanfare, NAM-elation, confusion among the editorial writers of America—and very little definitive action by the new NLRB.

Union after union announced it had beaten the Taft-Hartley deadline by last-minute agreements with employers continuing existing closed or union shops and, in many cases, carrying employer pledges against damage suits.

Neither the AFL nor CIO has stated its official position on filing affidavits and forms required under the T-H Law, but most of the editorial attention was directed confusedly at CIO, several of whose internationals have signified they will have no part of the new NLRB. The CIO's officers meet Sept. 4; the AFL's Executive Council, Sept. 8.

Editorial writers became more confused when one AFL union, the Pattern Makers' League, announced it was refusing to sign the NLRB's non-Communist affidavits. The PML's reasons were expressed by Pres. George A. Lynch in a letter to NLRB General Counsel Robert M. Denham:

1. "It is rumored that John L. Lewis, 13th vice president of the AFL, refuses to sign the Communist disclaimer. Your ruling, sir, places the PML under a czar for the first time within its 60 years of constitutional self-government. You have created the opportunity for any Gromyko on the AFL council to say 'no.'"

(The "ruling" referred to by Lynch was Denham's edict that no local or national union could avail itself of the services of the board unless all their officers and the officers of the parent organization, AFL or CIO, also signed.)

2. Commenting on the terms of the NLRB affidavit in which the signer must state he is not a member of or in sympathy with any Communist, Fascist or Nazi organization, Lynch said: "When you have identified the organizations and activities to which you refer in general terms, I shall further advise our members and officers." (Denham said he would not name any organizations; that was the Justice Dept.'s job.)

Vets Would Have To be Generals!

The Federal Housing Commission has announced "the largest single project yet started under the new FHA program providing rental housing for vets and their families."

The project is to be called Meadowbrook Apts. and will be in Indianapolis, Ind.

But, there's a catch. The project's one and two-bedroom apartments will rent from $81 to $95 a month. (The Census Bureau figures the average veteran can pay from $40 to $50 rent.)

THE unaffiliated International Association of Machinists, in announcing it would file, took a pot shot at Denham's 20-day filing deadline. Harvey W. Brown, IAM president, said that while "employers have to do nothing to qualify under the act to use the NLRB machinery, a major large organization union has little chance to qualify in less than a month." In his union, for instance, officers are scattered from coast to coast. One is a Canadian. (Whether the law can be enforced against Canadian citizens who are officers of American unions is not known.)

The AFL Typographical Union, one of the oldest unions in the U. S., defied the T-H Law and the NLRB by voting unanimously at its convention to sign no more contracts because of the ban on the closed shop.

The Columbia Typo Local, District of Columbia, oldest in the ITU, has had a closed shop arrangement since 1886. The ITU convention ruled that no existing contracts will be renewed, or new ones signed, "until free collective bargaining is again recognized." A standard "conditions of employment" form is to be supplied by the international for locals. It will be uniform except for local wage scales and practices.

NLRB spokesmen, put on the spot by the veteran craft union, immediately began to study precedents for possible action against ITU. Some inferred that since the old NLRB had held that refusal of employers to sign contracts was an unfair labor practice, maybe this was, too.

BY the end of last week, very few unions or locals had filed affidavits or the financial reports also called for under the T-H Law. The deadline for such filing comes in the middle of September.

A test case of the affidavit issue may arise out of an action taken by the old NLRB the day before T-H ascended the throne. In the ruling, the board ordered the reinstatement of 8 employes of the Geraldine Novelty Co., Gloversville, N. Y. The company reportedly has refused to obey the order on the grounds that the employes are members of the CIO Fur and Leather Workers and that union's president, Ben Gold, is an acknowledged member of the Communist Party.

Another test, on different grounds, may arise from the NLRB election, conducted under an order of the old board, at the Glenn Martin aircraft plant near Baltimore. The election, also a day before T-H, was inconclusive and under old rules might have led to a runoff. The vote: CIO Auto Workers, 2,729; IAM, 1,916; "no union," 965; challenged, 617. If the UAW won 385 of the challenged ballots, it would have a clear majority.

But, the UAW was one of the first CIO unions to declare it would by-pass the new board.

THERE seemed to be a double standard as regards filing of material required under the law. Section 9 (f), financial statements, and Section 9 (h), affidavits, have identical language as to the one who files, ". . . such labor organization and any national or international labor organization of which such labor organization is an affiliate or constituent unit . . ."

The financial statements must be filed with the Dept. of Labor, where they are kept for study by the NLRB; the affidavits must be filed directly with NLRB. But, Labor Dept. is not requiring that the AFL and CIO parent bodies file financial reports; Denham's NLRB is insisting upon CIO and AFL filing affidavits.

According to the AFL's weekly news service, "while there is not the slightest suspicion of a red tinge among the members of the Executive Council, a fundamental principle is involved in the filing of such affidavits which makes the decision on whether to comply a weighty one. The only alternative would be to boycott the services of the NLRB altogether."

Denham went ahead with steps which he said were "geared to a speedy and efficient administration of the Labor-Management Relations Act." Under LMRA, the general counsel is the big shot; the five board members keep out of the limelight.

Denham divided his Washington office into four major activities, each headed by an associate general counsel. The divisions: operations, standards and policies, legal, and administrative.

The move eliminated the office of regional attorney, thus dropping from the NLRB many attorneys who had been with it since passage of the Wagner Act. Denham asserted the change, under which regional directors would exercise full authority over personnel and activities within their area, was designed to eliminate "operational duplications."

New heads of divisions will be: operations—Charles M. Brooks, war veteran and former attorney at the Los Angeles office; standards and policies—Joseph C. Wells, war veteran and ex-legal adviser to two board members; legal—David Findling, member of the old NLRB's legal division; administrative—not yet picked.

Denham also gave the new board's first priority to cases involving jurisdictional disputes.

In the midst of all this, Rep. Fred A. Hartley (R. N. J.), often overshadowed by co-author Sen. Robert A. Taft (R. O.), didn't seem very happy. Back at Washington from a tour of the businessmen's luncheon circuit, Hartley was pretty mad at some employers he apparently considered ingrates. "Now that you've got a law that protects you, why do you sign contracts waiving that protection?" he wanted to know.

He also spoke of adding more teeth to the law when Congress returns in January.

BEAT DEADLINE: To save their union shop, which would have been outlawed when the full provisions of the Taft-Hartley law went into operation Aug. 22, the CIO Auto Workers got the Ford Motor Co., to sign a new contract just seconds before the deadline. Seated (l. to r.) are Ford Industrial Relations Dir. John Bugas and UAW Vice Pres. Richard T. Leonard. Standing are Ford executive Manton Cummings, UAW Atty. Maurice Sugar and UAW Local 600 Pres. Thomas Thompson. (Federated Pictures)

SUPREME COURT GIVES LABOR SMALL 'BREAKS'

LABOR isn't getting a break from the Supreme Court under Chief Justice Fred M. Vinson.

Since Vinson's appointment to succeed the late Harlan Stone, every big decision—8 in all—has gone against labor. Labor won in 7 cases, but all were minor.

Justices Frank Murphy and Wiley Rutledge have backed labor most, according to an article in the Washington Post by Dillard Stokes. Murphy has voted 100% for labor in the cases since Vinson's appointment and Rutledge has voted 93% pro-labor.

Of the other justices, Hugo Black has been 79% right; William O. Douglas, 54; Stanley Reed, 53; Harold H. Burton, 27; Felix Frankfurter, 27; Robert H. Jackson, 21 and Vinson, 20.

Stokes lists the Halliburton Oil Well Cementing Co. case as an example. This case may possibly set a pattern that will deprive thousands of workers of the Wage-Hour Law's overtime provisions.

Halliburton, after a study of working hours in its operations, made a contract with its employes providing a fixed rate of pay up to 84 hours a week and time and one-half after that.

The survey had showed that 3% of work weeks were less than 20 hours; 10% between 20 and 40; 67% between 40 and 84 and 20% above 84.

L. Metcalf Walling, Wage-Hour administrator, asked the court to outlaw the overtime contract. The court refused. A decision written by Vinson said the contracts had been found to be in good faith and clearly were covered by the Belo case of 1942.

The Belo case had allowed a Texas newspaper to contract for work up to 54½ hours without overtime. The Belo case led to a rash of "Belo-type" contracts in industries that did not have a fixed work week. The Halliburton case, which raises the work week allowed without overtime from 54½ hours to 84, is likely to lead to a rash of "Halliburton-type" contracts.

Murphy and Black were the only Halliburton dissenters, declaring that the decision scuttled the plain words of the Wage-Hour Law. Rutledge announced he was voting with the majority only because of the Belo ruling.

Other important decisions against labor since Vinson included the coal strike ruling, in which labor lost the protection of the Norris-LaGuardia Act in all cases where plants had been taken over by the Government.

JAMES M. SHIELDS

Who, in resigning as National Labor Relations Board Director for the 18th (Minneapolis) Region, declared: "The Taft-Hartley Law seeks the complete destruction of organized labor." Shields, who had been with NLRB for 10 years, said he could not conscientiously administer the law

PRICES: EVERY WEEK NEW POSTWAR HIGH

EXCHANGE (official organ of the New York Stock Exchange): "After allowing for a multitude of handicaps on plant operations, the fact that aggregate products of 402 listed corporations revealed nearly double the net income of last year's comparable period shows that costs were pretty well offset by sales prices of goods and services."

U. S. NEWS (published by David Lawrence): "The boom is a price inflation and one of the four greatest price inflations in this country's history. Only three times before have prices been higher than today. That was after the War of 1812, the Civil War and the first World War."

BUSINESS WEEK (published by McGraw-Hill): "The two questions most commonly raised about any level of profits are: (1) Does it divide up the total income of profit-making enterprise fairly, as between wage earners, owners, consumers, etc.? and (2) does it promise to promote or upset the stability of the economy? Without belittling in the slightest the perennial importance of the first of these closely related questions, we shall concentrate here on the second".

THOSE three observations by spokesmen for big business summed up the price-profit picture last week. The cost of living continued to rise in such a fashion that dictionaries might have to change their definition of price from the first or accepted meaning ("an equivalent given or asked in exchange") to the second and previously less used definition ("high value").

Many industry spokesmen blamed it all on wages, but a key business organ, the U. S. News, took a more realistic view.

The magazine called it "a price inflation. It isn't a wage inflation." And, further, U. S. News pointed out that "on a dollar basis, consumers are buying more than twice as much from merchants as in 1920. But they are getting only 29% more goods."

Economists held out little immediate hope. Some spoke vaguely of maybe something at the end of the year. But, it may have been wishful thinking, since even economists have been hit by high costs.

PRICES: The weekly Labor Dept. index of wholesale commodity price continued like the old nursery rhyme: "Here we go up and uppy". A new postwar high was set for the sixth week in a row, with the index at 153.5 of the 1926 average, up 0.3 from the week before. It was 1.9% above a month ago; 19.5% over a year ago.

One of the nation's largest electrical appliance distributing outfits announced that prices are going up, but the rises "will be kept to a bare minimum reflecting only the increased costs of steel and other raw materials".

A cynical public recalled that shortly after the American Iron & Steel Institute "explained" a $5.90 average ton increase in steel prices, a top refrigerator maker upped his prices $5 to $15 on each model. The Iron & Steel outfit had said refrigerator prices would have to go up only 65c a model.

INCOME: Per capita income is a mighty big catchall phrase, according to the way the U. S. Office of Business Economics figures it.

Included in the estimate are all wages and salaries, dividends, interest, rent collections, "proprietary income" (such as pensions, social security benefits, terminal leave pay, etc.) and miscellaneous sources.

They add all those together. Then they divide by the total population (every man, woman and child, every wage earner, every hobo, every John D. Rockefeller, every office boy) and the result is the per capita income.

For 1946, the Office announced last week, the per capita income was $1,200 a year, as compared with $539 in 1939. The increase in total dollars in the per capita was 120.2%.

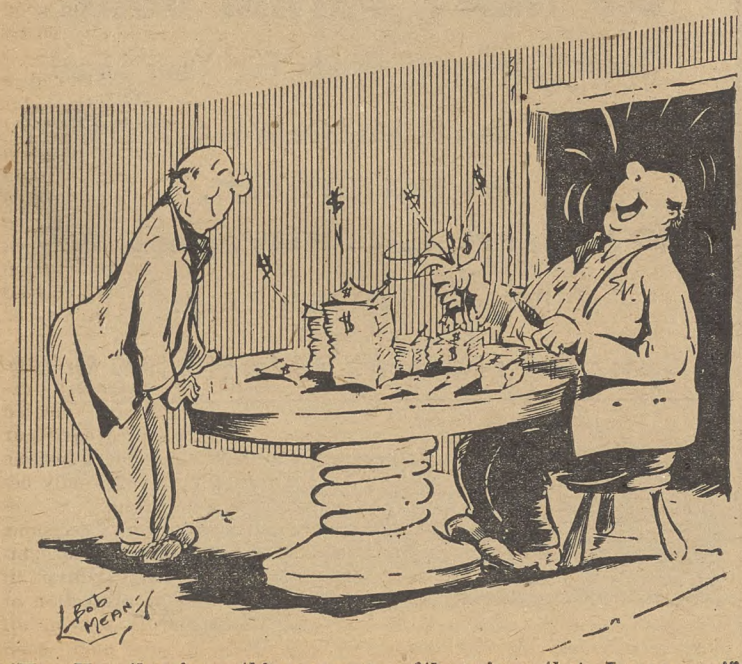
But, using the pretty accurate (even though there were slight differences in factors) Labor Department estimate that the average industrial workers' net pay of $47 weekly in 1947 is worth only $29.99 in 1939 dollars, you get a new picture.

Carrying that through the $1,200 average now is worth only $758.04 in 1939 values.

TRAVEL: Railroads, which recently received a 14% passenger rate rise, were back for more.

The huge Pennsylvania led the fight. In full page ads, the Pennsylvania shows a man carrying a sign "Unfair to ("Labor" is crossed out) Stockholders."

The ad goes on to state that while the total wage load has risen from $218,708,840 in 1936 to $510,016,452 in 1946, the stockholders' portion has fallen from $26,335,392 to $19,751,631. No figures are given on the increase in the number of workers or on the comparative number of stockholders.



"Ho, Ho, there's nothing wrong with prices that I can see!"

Labor Hits Quoddy Plan

LABOR was on the job at the War Assets Administration before the recent disclosure of a proposal to use Passamaquoddy, Me., as a project where displaced persons would produce goods without pay.

The Labor Policy Committee of WWA, consisting of Ted F. Silvey, CIO; Boris Shishkin, AFL, and A. E. Lyon, Railway Labor Executives' Association, sent in a unanimous recommendation against the D. P. plan as originaly outlined.

According to the proposal, The City of Eastport and Washington County, Me., at the instigation of Sen. Owen Brewster (R., Me.), made a bid for 'Quoddy, famed early New Deal project. The plan was to develop a training school at 'Quoddy, developed by the Frank Cohen interests for the assembly and manufacture of tractors for shipment to South America. The work and training would be for a large number of D. P.'s brought in on temporary permits. After six months' training and work at no pay, they would be shipped to South America, presumably for work in the Cohen industries there.

The Labor Committee, in its recommendation, urged (a) that only those who have privilege of permanent residence in the U. S. be brought in, regardless of race, creed or color; (b) that the project be a genuine "training within industry" plan; (c) that the D. P.'s come of their own choice; (d) that prevailing rates of pay be set up.

At the end of last week, the project seemed pretty well pickled.

Directs Publicity In North Carolina

Appointment of Peter D. Regis, former press officer for the late Gen. George S. Patton, as director of public relations for the CIO in North Carolina, has been announced by State CIO Director William Smith of Charlotte, N. C.

Until recently Regis was public relations director for the American Overseas Airline, LaGuardia Field, New York City. He is a former member of the Boston Herald staff and during the war served under General Patton.

U. S. Figures Show

WAGES ARE HIGH, BUT PRICES HIGHER

BROTHER Union Member, the labor movement has done a lot for you in increasing your wages since the last pre-war year, 1939.

But, industry and government haven't kept pace in making that extra money buy you as much proportionately.

Perhaps every housewife has caught on to this long before the economists did, but, let's look at the facts:

The latest Bureau of Labor Statistics estimate showed that in May, 1947, an industrial worker made an average of $48.46 a week. In 1939, that same average worker (wife and two children) made $23.86 per week.

So, average industrial wages have increased $24.60 a week, or 103.1%.

Now, let's use BLS again.

In its analysis of May's average wage earner, BLS estimated that the $48.46 gross average wage became $47 in take-home pay after withholding and Social Security. And, estimated in 1939 dollars, that $47 was worth only $29.99.

Since, in 1939, the average man made $23.86 a week, which became a take-home pay of $23.62 after Social Security (he didn't have to pay income tax), he has made a gain of $6.37 a week in purchasing value in eight years.

So, his purchasing value has risen only 26.5%.

There is a slight degree of error in BLS's estimates, since there is a vastly larger working force. But, that error doesn't hide the fact that the seesaw is weighted far on the side of prices.

REALTORS HIKED SALES 'TAKE' AS HIGH AS 50%

THE Government went into the courts last week in its drive to crack down on alleged conspiracies in real estate.

A District of Columbia Grand Jury, at the behest of the Department of Justice, indicted the Washington Real Estate Board and the National Association of Real Estate Boards on a charge of fixing commission rates in violation of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act.

Simultaneously, the Government filed a civil action against the board, the association and 16 individuals, asking that they be perpetually enjoined from "engaging in said conspiracy."

Atty. Gen. Clark, who recently pledged the Justice Dept. to war on conspiracies to maintain high prices in clothing, food and housing, said after the indictment:

"Our inquiry into the housing field indicates that artificial restraints on competition, such as those involved in this matter, bear a definite relation to present high housing costs."

The indictment and civil suit were reported to be a surprise to Washington observers, since the spotlight on Clark's investigations had swung to reputed price fixing by the gasoline industry.

The board and the association were obviously shocked and Herbert U. Nelson, executive vice-president of the national group, flew back to Washington to plan future steps.

A realtors' spokesman denounced the indictment as Government "persecution" because the group had opposed rent controls.

THE national association, which has 28,000 members, was accused of making studies of brokerage commission rates throughout the country after it had initiated a plan to "raise" and "achieve uniformity" in nationwide rates.

The Washington board raised its rates, it was said, on recommendation of the association. The indictment, which said the association controlled at least 50% of Washington's real estate commerce, charged that commissions paid to brokers had been increased by as much as 25 to 50%.

The indictment says that prior to Feb. 16, 1943, the board's members charged a commission of 5% on the first $5,000 of sales prices and an additional 3% on the excess above $5,000. The new rate is 5% on the first $50,000 and 3% on the excess.

Make Less Than $3,000? Just Try and Save

This story probably comes as no surprise to the average wage-earner, but David Lawrence's U. S. News carried some interesting statistics last week on personal savings.

The findings of the survey:

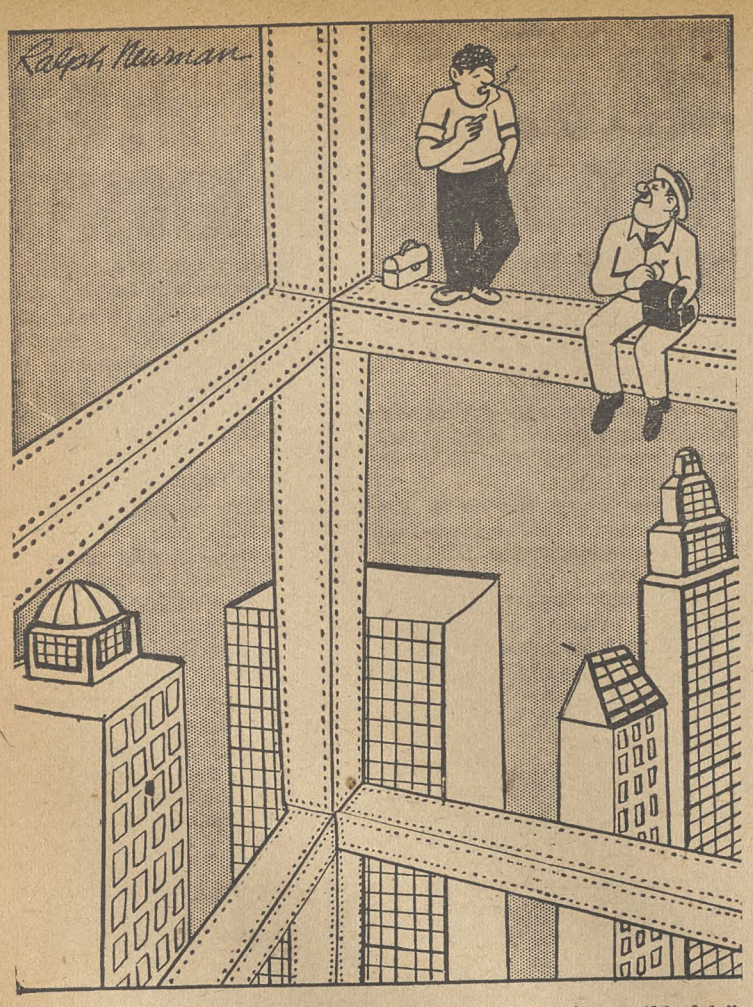
1. There is a sharp downward trend in savings. The year 1946 was lower than 1945, and 1947 still lower.

2. According to U. S. News, 65% of all families make less than $3,000 a year. In 1946, this group accounted for only 4% of total savings, as compared with 24% in 1945.

3. The middle-income group—U. S. News calls that those making between $3,000 and $5,000—hasn't changed much. In 1945, this class had 36% of savings. In 1946, it had 35%.

4. The higher-income group—U. S. News calls this class all making above $5,000—has increased its savings from 40% to 61% of the total.

U. S. News remarks: "The effect of high prices and of rising outlays for consumer goods, thus, is hitting hardest in the lower income groups. At these levels, most people have cut their saving to the bone, and many are having to dip into wartime savings to make ends meet."



"You know, Joe, sometimes I have a sense of insecurity on this job."

TEXTILE UNION WILL ASK HIKE IN SOUTHERN MILLS

Southern staff members of the CIO Textile Workers will meet in Charlotte, N. C., Sept. 2, to formulate the union's program for a wage increase in the Southern mills, George Baldanzi, executive vice-president of the union, announced last week.

Baldanzi said that the conference would determine how the union could move most effectively to secure a wage increase for the 125,000 members in southern mills. Among those present will be state directors and other key staff members from Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Tennessee, Louisiana and Texas.

"Recent wage increases won by the union in the northern cotton and rayon weaving industries have increased the wage differential between the two sections of the country," Baldanzi said. "The elimination of this difference has always been one of the objectives of TWUA. The Charlotte conference will consider the present extent of the differential and what union action will be most effective in bringing southern wages once more in line with those in the north.

"We shall also consider the present level of profits in the cotton textile industry, particularly in the southern mills."

The Textile Workers Union has contracts with 160 southern mills employing more than 125,000 workers. As in the past any wage increase in the unionized mills is expected to be reflected throughout the entire southern textile industry.

"You must be new at this plant."

Maternity Benefits In Contracts

A study of eight union-contract health insurance plans containing provisions for maternity benefits has just been issued in a 20-page bulletin, No. 214, released by the U. S. Women's Bureau.

The eight plans, covering 20,000 women, were selected for detailed study as typical of 137 health insurance plans known to include maternity benefits.

It was found that weekly cash maternity benefits are paid under all eight plans for a period of six weeks. In addition, all eight plans provide hospitalization for from 10 to 14 days in maternity cases.

Five of the eight plans provide surgical benefits in maternity cases, and six call for premiums paid in full by the employers. The workers are required to pay 25 and 50% of the costs of their own health insurance under the other two plans.

The experiences of 185 individual women out of the 251 who claimed maternity benefits were studied by the Women's Bureau, which found that practically all of the 185 received six weekly cash benefits usually ranging from $10 to $20 a week.

These payments were less than the weekly wages the women normally received, while the six-week period during which benefits were paid was only one-third of the average length of time the women actually lost from work before childbirth.

Although 75% of the hospitalization benefits amounted to $50 or less, it was found that most of the hospital bills were between $50 and $75.

OPPOSES JAPAN HEALTH PROGRAM

If Rep. Harness (R., Ind.) has his way, the Japanese will be denied a national health program.

Chairman of a House sub-committee on propoganda, Harness is protesting an "investigating" a Government mission which left last week to advise Japanese authorities on a national health program for Japan.

Harness charged the mission with being favorable to the Wagner-Murray-Dingell Health Insurance bill, which has been stymied in two successive sessions of Congress.

7,000 Solomon Islanders Strike

In the Solomon Islands trade unionists carry spears, blowpipes and war canoes on the picket line.

About 7,000 natives in the South Sea island of Malaita are on a sitdown strike for a 1200% wage rise and a European diet. The coconut pickers call their union the "Marching Rule" and are reported to be preparing to present their demands to the British administration at Guadalcanal fully armed.

A correspondent for the Sidney (Australia) Sun reported that the strike had been in effect for the past year, and that copra production is almost at a standstill.

The natives learned about unions and sitdown strikes from American servicemen stationed on Guadalcanal. They also developed a fondness for the strangers' canned meat, biscuit, sugar, tea and other GI rations.

The 1200% raise would bring their earnings up to 12 pounds a month.

THAT BOOK ON FASCISM OFF PRESS AT LAST

AFTER many delays, the Government Printing Office last week finally offered to the public, at 40c a copy, the book "Fascism in Action," which was prepared by the Library of Congress at the request of Rep. Wright Patman (D., Tex.).

Despite the reluctance of Congress to authorize the printing, and the obvious lack of interest on the part of many Senators and Representatives, Patman and other liberal members of Congress hope that thousands of copies will be used "as an aid to the American citizen in protecting himself and his children against this most dangerous movement of modern times."

There are still manifestations of the fascist way of life, even though the fascist nations went down to military defeat, Patman warns in his preface to the book. He lists recognition and exposure of fascist-minded groups as one of the most important actions that Americans can take to ward off fascism here.

"Organized labor must be alert to the dangers of fascism," Patman asserts. One whole chapter of the book tells what happened to labor under the fascist regimes in Germany and Italy, and what is still going on in Spain. "The working class has more to fear from fascism than any other group," the Congressman warns. "It is significant that one of the early acts of every fascist regime is the abolition of all labor arganization outside government control."

So impressed are they with the importance of getting large numbers of people to read the book, that Reps. Patman and Adolph J. Sabath (D., Ill.) have both ordered several thousand at their own expense for distribution.

Labor Scholarships

Two part-time workers for the CIO Auto Workers have been awarded the first full scholarships of the Michigan Memorial Labor Scholarship Fund. The fund was set up in memory of unionists Bill Lamson and Jack McElhone, both of whom died overseas in World War, 11. The winners, Winifred Schwartz and Alex Bilanow, are juniors at Wayne University.

Ten Years Ago In the CIO

A growth in membership from 30,000 to nearly 400,000 during the year was reported at the convention of the CIO United Auto Workers held ten years ago this week in Milwaukee, Wis.

The convention, attended by some 1,500 delegates, voted to raise $400,000 to organize the Ford Motor Co.

* * *

The CIO United Rubber Workers won an election at the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. in Akron, Ohio, by a vote of 8,464 to 3,193.

* * *

The American Woolen Co. agreed to the holding of an NLRB election among the 10,000 workers employed at its Wood & Ayer mills in Lawrence, Mass. The election was won two-to-one several weeks later, by the CIO Textile Workers Organizing Committee, now the Textile Workers.

Seven locals of the AFL barbers in New York with a total membership of 3,500, voted to affiliate with the CIO.

Are Child Care Centers Needed?

MOTHERS GIVE SOME PLAIN ANSWERS

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

CHILD care centers, where working mothers may leave their children during the day, are being threatened with closing in many places throughout the country for lack of sufficient money.

No Federal funds have been appropriated for maintaining such centers since the money made available under the Lanham Act through the Federal Works Administration was withdrawn in Feb. 1946.

Such day care centers as now exist are supported mostly by totally inadequate local funds of private or public welfare agencies. New York, one of the four states which has given some small support to such projects, has now withdrawn its appropriations, effective Sept. 30.

Faced with the serious situation resulting for the threatened closing of child care centers in New York City where 4,600 children of working mothers are being cared for, Mayor William O'Dwyer pledged last week that the city would somehow find money to continue operation on the centers, after State funds were withdrawn.

Other cities and areas where the centers are needed badly are not so fortunate.

You'd think that everybody would know in this period of high prices what a struggle many working class families are having to make both ends meet. Yet the argument is frequently heard and widely believed that "now that the war is over mothers can stay home and take care of their children."

A questionnaire sent by the U. S. Children's Bureau to parents of children in child care centers in the San Francisco area brought forth some straightforward answers to this false argument and revealed a critical situation typical of that existing in countless places throughout the country.

The question the Bureau survey asked San Francisco mothers was simple: "What will you do about your children if the centers close?" The answer, reports the Bureau, came back over and over again. "I don't know how we'll get along if the centers close," they wrote and then made a stab at an answer. All the answers were alike in one refrain—"it costs so much to live with prices the way they are. We just couldn't manage if I didn't work."

One fourth of the mothers who had children in these centers—and they are typical of those who make use of day care centers everywhere—said they would have to quit work.

"But I don't know," they added, "how we'll be able to live, for with prices what they are my husband does not bring home enough for us to make ends meet. With both of us working we barely manage."

FIFTEEN per cent, or one out of six, said they would have to go "on relief." Another 20% answered that they would try to get a neighbor or friend to look after the child, but "you can't count on them, and anyway it is an imposition."

In some cases the older children would have to take over the responsibility; in others, an aged relative—and "a 70-year-old woman can't very well look after a 3-year-old child."

One out of three of these mothers was the sole support of the family. Some were widows, some were divorced, some had been deserted. In still other cases the husband was unable to work.

Of the other two-thirds, half were veterans' wives and they had to work until the family could get on its feet. In many cases the husband and father was attending school under the GI Bill, or was in training for a job.

THEIR wives were having to help out and often they were doing so under extremely difficult living conditions. Many of these young couples were living in makeshift quarters that were "no fit place to bring up children." Some were in drab furnished rooms. Some were in slums—"the only chance our child has for fresh air and sunshine is at the day care center."

Some had a crippled child whose care was expensive. Some were trying to keep up payments on a house—"we've put so much into it we hate to give up now." Some were working so that their older children could finish high school—"it takes money to send a boy or girl to high school these days."

The answers brought forth by the San Francisco questionnaire, says Katharine Lenroot, chief of the U. S. Children's Bureau, "give us a much-needed insight into what countless families are up against as they try to hold their own in the face of rising prices, the housing shortage, and the general disruption of normal living brought about by the war.

"What comes through, in answer, is a picture of a brave and admirable lot of men and women, trying as best they can to hold a home against work-a-day odds that constantly threaten to defeat them."

THOSE who are using the day centers, she added, "are not passing off their responsibility to the community, as is thoughtlessly argued. Instead they are doing more than their share.

They do a good part of a day's work before they go to work, and then do another day's work after they have punched the timeclock or closed the office desk.

"They do this, day in and day out, because that is the only way they can keep their family together. Without the day care centers they could not manage."

The Children's Bureau chief, and others in the child welfare field, have long advocated a comprehensive program to meet the varied needs of children whose mothers are employed, and children whose home conditions make it advisable for them to be cared for part time away from home.

The fighting war is over, but a ceaseless battle is still being waged today in many homes by working parents struggling to keep their families together, their children off the street. Federally-financed child care centers like this one run during the war in San Diego, Calif., are gone, unless they've managed to find local support.

Blocks — Why, When Where?

Most children, given the chance, enjoy blocks. Blocks challenge imaginations, promote skill and an endless variety of play. They are as good outdoors as in the house. Though a bit bulky to carry, a bag of blocks along with some miniature autos, trains and dolls or doll figures may make the difference between happy and unhappy visits to friends or grandparents. Blocks? Yes, you CAN take them with you.

Sprucing Up

YOUR DAUGHTER'S WARDROBE

By HANNA SHERMAN

THE time to develop a clothes sense in your daughter is while she's still young.

Use the best judgment you can muster in planning her fall and winter wardrobe. And do let her work on the plan with you. Explain to her that this is the season for good basic clothes. And that a small, well-coordinated wardrobe will keep her looking neat and pretty right through till next Spring.

You start with the coat. It's the most costly item and its color should govern almost everything else she'll wear. If you're planning to buy a new one this season, we'd suggest a simple tailored dark woolen. Good choices in color are dark green, brown, navy (for fall and winter, too) or a dark rich wine color.

We've just seen one we liked very much. It has a swing back, patch pockets, deep roomy armholes and a pert Peter Pan collar. A matching detachable hood makes it suitable for blustery weather.

We'd add a small beret or scotch cap (same color as the coat, of course). There's nothing like a hat and coat to match for that well-put-together look. It also will give your daughter a chance to satisfy her love of bright colors in the clothes she wears with it.

PLAN her color scheme around her coat and hat and try to keep most of her costumes in two colors. One the background color, and one contrasting. All of the items you choose should "go with" the coat and also not clash with each other.

An active child gives her school clothes hard wear, so be sure the garments you buy are of good quality. Select sturdy fabrics that can take it. Washable woolens, corduroys, velveteens, dark cotton plaids, are all good. To cut costs, stick to that color scheme. Buy basic garments but keep them few in number. Just make sure they are the type that can be worn in several different ways.

Jumpers, worn with separate blouses or sweaters can achieve dual clothes personalities. So can separate skirts with matching vests or jerkins. Switch them with other skirts and tops. Blouse and skirt costumes are fine. Little girls seem to love them.

Suspenders will keep her waistline where it should be and her shirttails tucked in. You'll find, too, that if the budget can take it, a jacket suit will be as useful in her wardrobe as it is in your own.

IN any case, do let her have one real party dress. Remember that wonderful feeling a party dress gave you? Inexpensive cotton velveteen in her most becoming color will rate raves from the pigtail set.

Add shoes, socks, matching scarf and string gloves, and you're set. Oh, yes, let's not forget rainy day clothes, and the brighter the color these are, the better.

We know you'll both have fun planning a wardrobe this way. Added dividend: Your daughter won't grow up to be the woman with a closet full of clothes whose constant plaint is, "I just haven't a thing to wear!" She'll know better.

TWO CIO UNIONS HIT T-H LAW

"THESE are fighting days, when men with the real spirit of unionism in their make-up will have to fight harder than they have ever fought in their lives," declared Van A. Bittner, director of the CIO's southern organizing campaign, at the 11th annual convention of the CIO Woodworkers.

He told more than 350 delegates meeting in the ballroom of the Statler Hotel that when the first year of operation under the Taft-Hartley Law has rolled around it will be found that the CIO and all its affiliated unions "will be stronger and more powerful and influential than they were before the T-H Law was enacted."

The Woodworkers' union, which has its headquarters in Portland, Ore., met in the Midwest for the first time in its history.

Delegates from the South, Midwest and Northwest lumber-producing areas of the U. S., Canada and Alaska represented a membership of more than 85,000, according to reports.

(The union's policy under the T-H Law and the nomination of officers remained to be acted on as the CIO News went to press.)

Speakers at the convention included Bittner, Delmond Garst, Missouri CIO director; Adolph Germer, CIO international representative, and representatives of the Social Security Board and CARE.

The Woodworkers' first official action was to condemn American immigration authorities for refusing to permit four Canadian Woodworker delegates to cross the border to attend the St. Louis convention. No concrete reason for the refusal was given.

Other resolutions hit at the T-H Law, called on the union's members to work toward retirement of Congressmen responsible for its passage, and scored the U. S. and Canadian administrations for helping arm foreign governments.

"Had Enough," Farmers Say

Missouri farmers indicated last week they had "had enough."

Angered by "Congressional action to cripple and destroy farmer cooperatives as well as Government lending agencies for agriculture, such as the Farm Credit Administration and the Rural Electrical Administration," the Missouri Farmers Association, with a membership of 117,000, took to political action.

A resolution adopted by the MFA at its annual convention condemned the "seeming persecution" of farmer cooperatives by the House Small Business Committee and called on its members to see to it that "known enemies of the farmer now in office are retired to private life."

Rep. Walter Ploeser, chairman of the committee "investigating" cooperatives, is from Missouri.

Indianans Give Political Action Top Billing

POLITICAL action took top billing last week as delegates to the annual Indiana CIO convention resolved to support PAC to the hilt in a drive to gain a pro-labor Congress in 1948.

The 500 delegates heard speakers Palmer Weber, research director of the CIO-PAC; John Brophy, national director of CIO Industrial union councils; Van A. Bittner, director of the CIO Organizing Committee, and Rep. Ray Madden (D., Ind.) all sound the same theme: organize for the 1948 elections.

The Council's three top officers were defeated in a vigorously contested campaign for reelection. Neal Edwards of the CIO Auto workers edged out incumbent President James McEwan for top spot in the Indiana CIO. Miss Nell Riddle, Amalgamated Clothing workers, was named vice president, and Claude Becktell, CIO Steelworkers, defeated the incumbent Walter Frisbie for the office of secretary-treasurer.

PA. WORKERS WIN NEW WAGE RAISES

Contracts providing wage increases of from 5 to 11½c an hour were signed last week by the CIO Textile workers with 24 mills in the Philadelphia area.

Affecting 5,400 workers, the raises are retroactive to July 15.

More than 200 workers at William Whitaker & Sons, cotton weavers, and Boger & Crawford, cotton yarn manufacturers, remained on strike as management refused to release the union from possible damage suits arising out of "wildcat" strikes.

Government Air Line

The Commonwealth Cooperative Federation government in Saskatchewan has formed its 14th Crown Corporation (public ownership), the Saskatchewan Air Service, which will fly regular mail and passenger runs to northern Saskatchewan.

THE 43rd annual convention of the CIO Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers got under way last week with an indication by President Maurice Travis that the union would boycott the Taft-Hartley Labor Board.

"As always," Travis warned, "there are traitors and weaklings in the ranks and leadership of American unions. A few of them have already accepted the Taft-Hartley law and submitted to its restrictions . . . The difficulty is when you start to surrender, you can't stop until you surrender your union and your liberty. The French and German and Italian workers learned that the hard way.

"No, fellow delegates, I say we fight back. I am certain our entire membership wants it that way."

Addressing the delegates, reported to represent the highest membership in the union's 54 years of existence, Counsel Lee Prssman advised unions to strike any employer who insisted on using the NLRB procedure as laid down by the T-H Act.

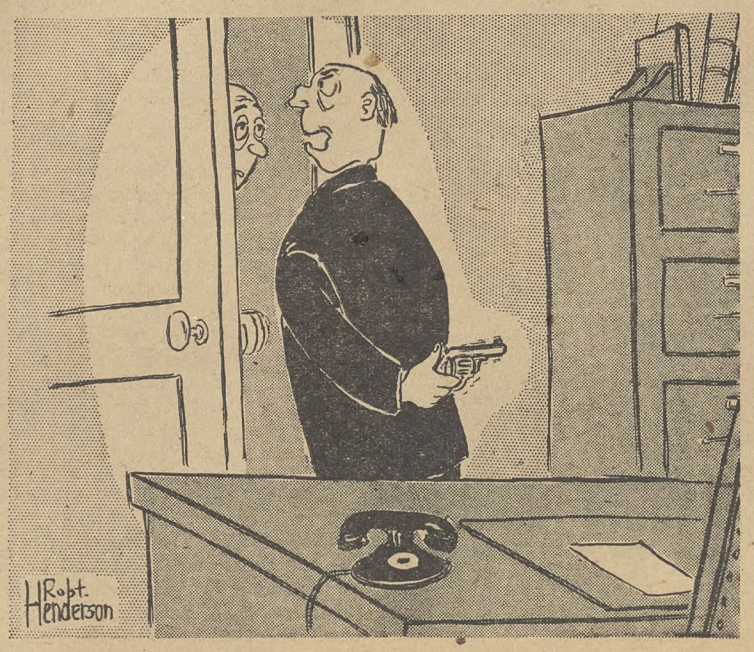
Pressman recommended that unions use any means other than an NLRB election to determine whether they represent a majority of employes.

The International Executive Board submitted a unanimous report embodying a recommended program for the coming year: a wage and contract policy to counteract Taft-Hartley, political action, organization, education and extension of rank-and-file democracy within the union.

Convention speakers included Pres. Augustin Guzman of the Mexican Miners Union, Rep. Vito Marcantonio (ALP, N.Y.), and Elmer Benson, former Minnesota Governor.

Ashamed of Lynching

Rev. John Barry, Baptist minister from Greenville, S. C., speaking on the CBS "Church of the Air," has said that the "judge, the jury, the press and most of the citizens of the South are ashamed" of the actions of the jury which exonerated more than 20 members of a mob charged with lynching a Negro in Greenville several months ago.



"Morgan, step in and get paid off!"

Education

CIO SCHOOLS ARE HELD MIDWEST AND EAST

At Pendle Hill

A GROUP of 25 CIO rank-and-filers and officials from Pennsylvania, New Jersey and New York made themselves at home in the Quaker community of Pendle Hill, near Media, Pa., the week of Aug. 17-23 at the first regional CIO leadership training term held in that area.

A full discussion of what lies ahead for labor under the Taft-Hartley law was conducted by M. H. Goldstein, general counsel, Shipbuilding Workers. Pres. Harry Boyer of the Pennsylvania CIO Council, and Evelyn Dubrow, New Jersey Council, discussed the CIO's legislative program, and the need for more intensive political action.

In Minnesota

A highlight of the CIO regional leadership training course held Aug. 17-23 at Danebod Folk School, Tyler, Minn., was the community night program attended by townspeople and farmers of the surrounding area. Main speaker was Glenn J. Talbott, of the North Dakota Farmers Union.

CIO representatives who participated in the panel discussions were Svend Godfredson and Lee R. Simon of the Packinghouse Workers, and Homer Ayres, Farm Equipment Workers.

CIO International unions represented at the National CIO school included the Steel, Electrical, Auto, Packinghouse, Farm Equipment Workers. Asst. Education Director George Guernsey, Asst. Research Director Stanley Ruttenberg from the Natl. CIO, were among the instructors.

CIO Regional Director Fullerton gave a talk on early union struggles, and Douglas Hall, labor attorney, presented an analysis of the Taft-Hartley law. Clifford McAvoy, CIO-PAC field representative, and John M. Jacobsen, State PAC director, led discussions on PAC work and legislative problems.

Farm-Labor School

The first Farmer-Labor School in the South will be held at Highlander Folk School, Monteagle, Tenn., Sept. 14-27, according to W. H. Crawford, district director of the CIO United Steelworkers, and chairman of the Highlander Executive Council.

Cooperative specialists will explain to the farmers and workers attending the school how consumer and producer co-ops work, and labor and Farmers Union representatives will describe the cooperative programs of their organizations.

A program for joint political and legislative action will be worked out.

RUBBER WORKERS SCHOOL: A two-week training course for local union leaders of the CIO United Rubber Workers was held at Highlander Folk School Aug. 2-17.

Union representatives attending the course came from Memphis and Clarksville, Tenn.; Gadsden, Ala.; Akron, Ohio; Waynesville, N. C.; Natchez, Miss.; and Waco, Tex.

On the teaching staff, in addition to the Highlander faculty, were D. A. L. Lewis, the union's education director, and Field Representative F. M. Dickenson. Guest teachers included Palmer Weber, CIO-PAC research director, and Julian Rothman, CIO Community Services Committee.

N. Y. Bus Corporation Balks At Arbiter's Pension Plan

THE possibility of a CIO Transport Workers walkout Sept. 8 on the New York Omnibus lines grew last week as negotiations between union and company representatives reached an impasse.

The union charges the company with welching on a June 18 arbitration award which provided a lifetime pension for Omnibus employes. The company interpreted the award as providing pensions only until Jan. 31, 1948.

Perusing one of the leaflets distributed on the New York sidewalks by union members, a Madison Avenue attorney was reported to have remarked, "In all my years of legal practice, I have never heard of a pension which lasted for only 7 months."

Asked for clarification of his award by the city's deputy director of the Labor Relations Division, Arbitrator David L. Cole supported the union's contention that the pension plan applied for the lifetime of the employe.

Labor Unity Scores, Boss Apologizes in Calif. Strike

A one-week strike of 450 Cutter Laboratories (Berkeley, Calif.) employes, members of the CIO Office & Professional Workers, ended in more than wage increases and union security. Management in effect apologized for its bad behavior in the past.

Company spokesmen Fred Cutter and Arthur K. Beckley, according to the union, "openly stated that the strike had demonstrated to the company that its past labor policies were at fault and required a complete overhauling. They indicated a desire to work for a fundamental and sound change in policy."

The change in heart came after CIO, AFL and Railroad Brotherhood locals, along with a citizens' committee, demonstrated resentment of the company's anti-union policy in a deluge of letters and phone calls to the personnel director—and then helped the strikers with food and financial contributions and by reinforcing the picket lines.

The new contract provided raises averaging $18.60 to $45 a month, a strict seniority clause, protection of the union against damage suits for "wildcat" strikes and higher plant minimums.

AL

SEEKS U.S. AID IN SHIP TIEUP

A DELEGATION of officials of the CIO Shipbuilding Workers last week made a personal plea to the government to intervene in the 8-week strike of 35,000 workers in 10 East Coast shipyards.

President John Green and other union leaders urged Howard Colvin, acting director of the Government's mediation and conciliation service, to arrange a strike-settlement meeting of union, management and Navy and Maritime Commission officials.

The delegation also asked for help at the Navy and Labor Departments and at the Maritime Commission.

The struck companies, Bethlehem, Federal and New York shipbuilding corporations, have refused to make a satisfactory offer, Green said.

The union is demanding a wage increase of 12c an hour and continuation of union security and other benefits contained in the old contract. The companies, he said, have offered 12c only if the union gives up seniority, vacations, grievance machinery and other contract provisions.

While Bethlehem rejected an offer by Charles Leone, regional director of the union, to sign last year's contract again with the inclusion of the 12c raise offered by the company, progress was reported in negotiations with Federal shipyards representatives.

The "Todd plan" was offered by officials of the Federal yards, but was rejected by the union because of the difference in work between a repair yard such as Todd's and a construction yard like Federal.

The "Todd plan," which prevented a strike at two Todd yards recently, includes a 12c raise, a seniority clause and improved vacation provisions.

Reuther Assails Use of Name

Walter P. Reuther, president of the CIO Auto Workers, said his signature was placed on a recently-issued national planning association report without his knowledge or consent.

Reuther said it was "unthinkable that anyone would use my name in connection with any statement which declares that increases in real wages depend on output per man hour.

"My consistent position has been that wages can be increased substantially without raising prices," Reuther said. "What else can this mean but that real wages can rise now on the basis of present (labor) productivity."

Gets New York Post

Theodore W. Kheel, former executive director of the National War Labor Board, has been named New York City's Labor Relations Division Director, succeeding Edward C. Maguire, who has resigned to enter private law practice. Joseph O'Grady, lawyer, was named Kheel's deputy.

GERMANO ELECTED HEAD OF ILLINOIS CIO COUNCIL

THE Illinois State CIO Council has reduced its executive board from a total of 31 members to a streamlined group of nine and has elected Joseph Germano, District 31 director of the Steelworkers, as president.

The three-day convention, held in Chicago, also adopted a four-point political action program, designed to rally the Illinois CIO's 200,000 members for the defeat of all pro-Taft-Hartley Congressmen.

Germano defeated Charles Winter, Auto Workers, by about 2 to 1 on a standing vote.

After his election, Germano lashed out at "Communist interference" in the Council and pledged he would lead a fight to rid all affiliates of any "Communist domination."

"I am convinced that the vast majority of CIO members in this state are good American trade unionists who want no part of Communism or other foreign ideologies," Germano said.

"I am not going to plead for unity, because any member or any union that puts foreign ideology above the No. 1 jobs of defeating the Tafts and the Hartleys is simply not deserving of our cooperation."

Germano announced his candidacy after Samuel Levin, Amalgamated Clothing Workers, declined to run for re-election. Elected with Germano were Philip Weightman, Packinghouse Workers, vice president; Maurice McElligott, Amalgamated, secretary-treasurer, and these executive board members:

Lloyd McBride, Steelworkers; Sidney Rissman, Amalgamated; Fred Jacobi, UAW; Herbert Veldenz, Packinghouse; Walter Ignatowicz, Plaything, Jewelry and Novelty Workers, and Charles Lawson, Farm Equipment Workers. All officers will serve a two-year term.

The officers and board members were chosen under a new constitutional amendment changing the system of election. Under the old system, each constituent union named its representative on the board. Germano backed the change, adopted by a 93,390 to 62,-921 vote.

Speakers at the convention included Allan S. Haywood, CIO Director of Organization; John Brophy, Director of Industrial Union Councils; Illinois Gov. Dwight Green and Chicago Mayor Martin H. Kennelly.

In his farewell address after seven years in office, Levin called upon the Railroad Brotherhoods and the AFL to join with the CIO in a fight against the Taft-Hartley Law. Reminding his listeners that he was speaking on the day that the T-H Law went into effect, he asserted: "This day will go down in history as the blackest in American democracy."

The Illinois CIO's four-point political action program, adopted unanimously, includes: 1. Increased $1 contributions to PAC; 2. a system of apportioning such funds among national, state and county PAC organizations; 3. an additional levy of one cent per member for political educational work, and 4. full power to the State officers in formulating Illinois PAC policies in line with the national CIO political program.

AAF Blames Boss In Plant Closing

Army Air Force officials said the machine packing plant at Fort Crook, Omaha, was closed because of "inadequate management" by the Victory Machine Movers, Inc., Chicago.

Closing of the plant laid off 2,000 employes. It will be reopened under new civilian management in the "immediate future," AAF officials said.

"Please, honey, don't nag me before the men! I've got them believing I am a tyrant around here."

We approach another Labor Day and we find the men and women of organized labor determined more than ever to fight the restrictive and unnecessary Taft-Hartley Bill. What the employers failed to do, the legislators in Congress through this bill have endeavored to do.

It is obvious to all that labor must interest itself more and more in political action. This Labor Day, 1947, we must rededicate ourselves to the fight for industrial freedom. That, at the moment, is at the place of registration for voting and will reach its climax at the ballot box.

The chief spokesmen for the industrialists of the country, Senator Taft and Congressman Hartley, have had their turn at bat and are acclaimed by those who would destroy labor—it is now the people's turn. Senator Taft, who led the fight to destroy the OPA, told the Senate:

"Manufacturers are not particularly anxious to increase their prices. What they want to do is to increase the volume of their production, if they can, and have their product known as a low-profit product . . ." The NAM in the middle of 1946 said: "If OPA is promptly discontinued, production of goods will mount rapidly and through free competition prices will quickly adjust themselves to levels that consumers are willing to pay . . ."

Our production has gone up. For instance, 150% more beef and veal was being produced in May, 1947, than in June of last year. Forty-four per cent more refrigerators were being produced. Did prices go down?

Here are the latest figures: There was an 85% increase in wholesale meat prices, a 30% increase in the retail prices of refrigerators, and similar rises in all other fields. Who's making the money? Armour Packing Co. earned net profits, after taxes, of 9.2 million dollars in 1945 and shot up to 30.3 million dollars in 1946—an increase of 228.3%.

The Cudahy Packing Co. showed an increase of 168.3%; the Wilson Co. increased its profits by over 100%. Continental Baking Co. went from 2½ to 7½ million dollars. General Baking Co. from 1.9 million to 4 million dollars. Ward Baking Co. from 1.1 million to 3.6 million dollars.

American corporations set a profit record in 1946 when their net profits were over 12 billion dollars, which was about 2 billion dollars higher than the net profits during the highest war year. But at the rate at which profits are being earned in the first part of 1947, corporation profits for this year may be expected to go up to over 17 billion dollars. This will mean that the 1947 profits will be just about double the 1945 profits.

That is the real motive behind the passage of the Taft-Hartley Bill. American labor produces more per man-hour; prices soar and profits increase to the highest undreamed of. This vicious bill was passed to prevent labor from receiving its fair share of its productive returns.

To the GIs and every other citizen, remember Senator Taft led the fight in 1946 to kill price control; that the 80th Congress practically killed rent control, killed the housing program and tried to put over a tax grab to benefit the highest incomes, and passed the Taft-Hartley Law.

So, on this Labor Day, 1947, let us face the future with grim determination that no stone be left unturned to defeat those Congressmen and Senators who stab labor in the back; and bring the Congress and State Legislatures, who have similarly offended, back to the people. What you do now will determine the future happiness and security that you and your family and the American men and women everywhere will face in the future.

Face Silicosis Danger—Workers here are wet drilling to reduce the danger of silicosis, one of the most dangerous of all occupational diseases. The silicosis disease rate is higher where dry drilling is used. Laboratories and industrial hygiene experts of the U. S. Public Health Service are constantly at work in an effort to track down and remove such health hazards to industrial workers.

Murray Says Labor

BENT ON DEFEAT OF FOES AT POLLS

Following are excerpts from a Labor Day address delivered by CIO President Philip Murray over the ABC network from Kansas City.

IT IS interesting today to read the statements that were made just before Congress brought price control prematurely to an end. For example, it was the National Association of Manufacturers, leading spokesman for industry and big business, which said:

"If OPA is promptly discontinued, production of goods will mount rapidly and through free competition prices will quickly adjust themselves to levels that consumers are willing to pay."

The Congress of Industrial Organizations took an entirely different position. We said that the OPA should be continued until production was able to catch up with demand.

The high prices and enormous profits of today provide convincing proof that we were right and that our opponents were wrong.

I want to say right here—and say MOST EMPATHICALLY—that the nation is heading toward another depression—a depression that could easily make the last one appear to be only a minor economic setback.

I am not saying that another depression is just around the corner. I am saying that the present trend of higher and higher profits and smaller and smaller purchasing power must be halted and reversed if we are to avoid economic chaos in the future. Of this you can be certain!

I BELIEVE I will be forgiven if I am somewhat bitter about the hypocrisy that accompanied the drive to get rid of the Wagner Act and saddle organized labor with unreasonable legal restrictions.

Luncheon speakers and editorial writers told the public that there no longer was a need for the Wagner Act. They said that business and industry had learned its lesson—that they were now willing to accept the idea of free collective bargaining. They scoffed at the idea that employers would coerce or intimidate workers who became interested in unionism.

While this was going on, organizers assigned to the CIO's Southern membership drive were being brutally beaten and jailed on unconstitutional charges SIMPLY BECAUSE THEY WERE UNION ORGANIZERS! Hundreds of workers were demoted or fired outright because they joined unions. Dynamite charges were set off in two towns in an effort to break up union meetings.

Twenty-one of our representatives connected with the membership drive have been physically assaulted. Two were shot at and their car set afire.

The 21 who were beaten, the hundreds who were fired or demoted, and the millions who were associated with them through the CIO knew that something even stronger than the Wagner Act was needed—and needed badly.

THE Taft-Hartley Act became law as a direct result of a heavily financed political action program designed and executed by business and industry.

Yet the Act itself is designed to curtail the political action program of the Congress of Industrial Organizations and all of organized labor. It even goes so far as to attempt to silence the labor press on matters relating to politics.

Let me draw the picture a little clearer.

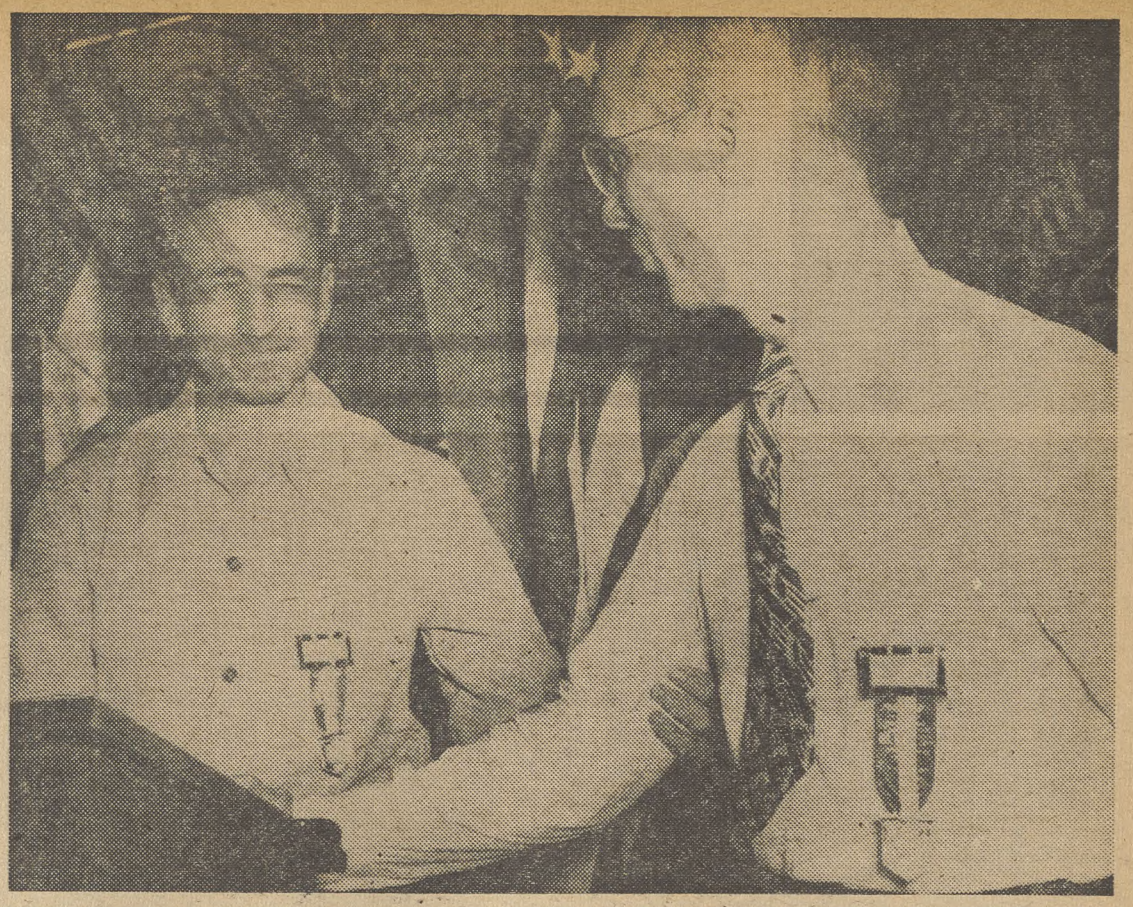
Those responsible for the Taft-Hartley Act said in effect: "Through our own political action we will make the unions weak and ineffective. We will keep them that way by sharply limiting their political activity."

This obviously is so unfair and undemocratic that further comment is not needed.

IT is because of things such as I have mentioned that American working men and women celebrated Labor Day today in a fighting mood. They are determined that their unions will not be weakened or destroyed. They are determined to change the anti-labor complexion of Congress. They are determined to wipe the infamous Taft-Hartley law from the statute books.

Their determination is being translated into action—into democratic action—into political action.

When I say this I am not talking alone about the CIO and its members. I am talking about the great mass of working men and women who have become convinced that they are being squeezed economically and pushed around politically.



Labor Day was fun at Dallas: The camera caught CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey (l.) in a happy mood as he greeted Pres. O. A. Knight, of the CIO Oil Workers at the picnic sponsored by the Dallas Area Industrial Union Council. The rank and file had fun, too, at contests such as kicking a life-size effigy of Sen. W. Lee 'Pass the Biscuits' O'Daniel as far as possible and a Taft-Hartley Relay Race with each contestant tied hand and foot and attempting to pass a contract to the next member of his team. There was a cost-of-living race for women with the contestants trying to balance a budget—an egg on a spoon—while going over an Army-like obstacle course with the barriers representing rent, clothes, food, husband's beer and income tax.

Get Set For '48 Election Is Labor Day Theme

LEADERS of organized labor stressed the need for political action at hundreds of Labor Day rallies throughout the nation, as they drove home the danger of the Taft-Hartley law to the union movement.

CIO Pres. Philip Murray addressed a Kansas City rally and then took to the air in nationwide broadcast to declare that workers are determined "to change the anti-labor complexion of Congress" and to wipe the "infamous Taft-Hartley law from the statute books."

In a blunt and fighting speech Murray also asserted that the workers of the nation "want a high standard of living for the many—not a high margin of profit for the few."

(Highlights from Murray's speech are in an adjoining column.)

The CIO and the AFL were united in calling for political action. In an address at Soldiers' Field, Chicago, AFL Pres. William Green flayed the politicians who voted for the T-H law and urged their defeat in the 1948 elections.

CIO Secy-Treas, James B. Carey at Dallas (see picture above) also took political action as his theme, declaring that the T-H law sets up the NLRB general counsel as "czar over all American labor and over all American business."

He bluntly declared that the section of the law designed to prohibit union participation in politics will be disobeyed.

Carey declared that the "people of the world are mystified" because the Taft-Hartley law singles out labor for attack.

The CIO Secretary-Treasurer said that neither could the CIO understand the attack and has asked Congress and management repeatedly "to point out to us a better performance than that of American industry, especially the mass production industries whose workers have organized themselves into unions affiliated with the CIO."

Carey said that American workers are losing confidence in their government just as the people of many nations have lost confidence in their governments because they have failed to meet basic needs.

CIO Organizing Committee Director Bittner at a rally at Birmingham said that regardless of T-H law, "regardless of the enemies we have in Congress, regardless of all the enemies we have elsewhere in the country, our unions are going to grow and become more powerful and more influential . . .

"Things have come too easy to us in the past 12 years . . . It's time we did some fighting, real, honest-to-God fighting."

Labor organizations will exist strong and powerful in America "long after Taft and Hartley are in hell and forgotten," Bittner said, if the working men and women fight on the political front to save their unions.

"These supporters of the Taft-Hartley law in Congress are leading this country toward fascism," Bittner said. He struck out at both fascism and communism as dictatorships and declared that "the only instrument that you have that will prevent these things from growing is the power, strength and influence of your unions."

Secy-Treas. David J. McDonald of the CIO Steelworkers joined Bittner on Sept. 2 at the dedication of the Steelworkers' $75,000 home at Gadsden, Ala., in flaying the T-H law. McDonald declared the words, deeds and laws "prove" that a "reactionary block of Congressmen who are identified with both of the major parties . . . have stupidly aligned themselves with Communism, reaction and fascism."

At Allentown 20,000 CIO members and friends turned in earnest to political action when they paid $1 each to attend a rally. The money will be used to help Congressional campaign of Philip Storch, Democrat, who is running against Republican Franklin H. Lichtenwalder. The election will be Sept. 9.

Among the largest Labor Day parades in the country was that held at Los Angeles, where more than 90,000 CIO and AFL members participated. Despite an all-time high temperature of 101 degrees, a crowd estimated at 300,000 watched the parade, whose floats called for repeal of the T-H Act.

Priceless!

Reps. Wint Smith (R., Kan.) and Max Schwabe (R., Mo.) arranged a Congressional price hearing last week in Los Angeles; it was to be a preliminary to the full-dress Congressional hearing in L. A. October 13.

Smith and Schwabe invited reporters and photographers, who showed up in droves.

But, not a single witness appeared.

Smith said: "I thought they'd appear voluntarily."

Smith and Schwabe hastily set another date. This time, they invited witnesses, including Walter Measday, U. S. Dept. of Commerce aide for the area, who was one of those not notified of the first session.

The press was asked back, too.

CIO Officers Say

T-H Law Repeal is 'Sole Remedy'

BY ARTHUR RIORDAN

THE CIO's national officers—president, secretary and vice presidents—at a meeting last week in Pittsburgh discussed and studied the operations of the Taft-Hartley Law. It was one of a series of meetings to be devoted to the legislation.

At the end of the meeting, the following statement was issued:

"The brief period that the Taft-Hartley Act has been in operation has revealed the incalculable harm which this vicious law has and will continue to develop. Its legislative authors have disagreed as to interpretation. Conflict has arisen within the agency charged with its administration.

"Some employers, encouraged by the law, have provoked industrial strife.

"Its complete uselessness is demonstrated by the fact that employers and unions who desire to continue their sound industrial relationship have found it necessary to expend time and energy in a common effort to avoid the disastrous provisions of the law.

"In the interests of peaceful industrial relations and continued full production and employment, it must be clear that the sole remedy is the repeal of this thoroughly reactionary legislation.

"The national officers and the vice presidents of the CIO have met today in one of a series of meetings to canvass the operation of the Taft-Hartley Act.

"Many of the CIO international unions have already determined their policy to be one of endeavoring to settle their problems through collective bargaining, without becoming enmeshed in the unworkable machinery of the act.

"This important issue, as well as other problems created by the Taft-Hartley Act, will be the subject of continued discussion and consideration at future meetings of the CIO Executive Board and the forth-coming convention."

Present at the meeting were Pres. Philip Murray; Secy-Treas. James B. Carey, and Vice Presidents L. S. Buckmaster, Joseph Curran, Albert Fitzgerald, John Green, Allan S. Haywood, Walter P. Reuther, Frank Rosenblum and R. J. Thomas. Vice-Pres., Emil Rieve was represented by George Baldanzi.

Also in attendance were General Counsel Lee Pressman, O. A. Knight, president of the CIO Oil Workers; Nathan Cowan, CIO legislative representative; Kermit Eby, research director; Michael Ross, department of foreign affairs; and John Brophy, director of industrial union councils.

Labor Board

The new NLRB continued to grope under the confused language of the law. General Counsel Robert M. Denham, noting the slow influx of affidavits and financial statements from unions, extended the period for filing where there are pending NLRB cases involved.

Contrary to public misunderstanding, a union, to use the services of the board on future cases, may sign up any time in the future, "even as late as two years from now," as one NLRB spokesman put it.

Meanwhile, the Alsops, in their daily column, expressed the opinion that the five members of the Labor Board would overrule Denham's order that the officers of parent labor organizations—CIO or AFL—would have to sign "non-Communist" affidavits before any individual union or local could use the services of the board. The Alsops expected a review soon, Many non-Communist officers have expressed the opinion that a deep underlying principle makes signing of the affidavits difficult.

Meanwhile, Fred Hartley, junior partner in the Taft-Hartley firm, blurted that unless union officers sign non-Communist affidavits, "employers will be free to commit unfair labor practices against members of non-complying unions with impunity."

Denham refused to comment on Hartley's view, but it was reported in the New York Times that legal authorities at NLRB are of the opinion that even if a union cannot file charges because its officers have failed to sign the anti-Communist affidavits, the individual members may file charges.

Supervisory

The NLRB dismissed 50 election cases involving supervisory personnel because T-H removes supervisors from the definition of employe.

CIO unions involved included The Utility Workers, the Longshoremen, Textile and Office Workers. Rest were AFL or independent.

Possible Test

The CIO Farm Equipment Workers, charging that the John Deere Company is utilizing the T-H Law to eliminate collective bargaining, has demanded by wire that Denham "give sharp expression against obvious attempt to destroy collective bargaining through this so-called labor legislation."

The charge stems from refusal of a Deere subsidiary, the Killefer Mfg. Co., Los Angeles, to recognize a NLRB bargaining agency certification of FE. The certification was issued just before T-H became law.

Four days after the NLRB action, FE says the firm posted the following notice on bulletin boards:

" . . . We do not think that our employes should be bound by the board's order that they should be represented by the union. Therefore, at this time, we do not propose to enter into negotiations with F. E."

FE holds contracts with Deere at three Moline, Ill., plants and at Dubuque, Iowa, and Syracuse, N. Y.

All Is Confusion

The board really became confused in Chicago when officials of the Industrial Workers of the World (IWW), remnants of the ultra-radical movement of the early days of this century, entered the regional NLRB office and asked for copies of the non-Communist affidavit.

Globe Suit Dropped

TWO of the biggest damage suits filed against CIO unions since passage of the Taft-Hartley Law have been quietly withdrawn.

The Globe Manufacturing Co., which garnered considerable newspaper space with its $75,000 suit against the CIO Steelworkers and a Chicago local of USA-CIO, dropped the case as part of a strike settlement late in August.

The company had earlier lost an effort in the Illinois courts to enjoin the union from carrying on a strike against the firm. After the state judge ruled against the company, the firm filed in U. S. District Court.

Globe had claimed the CIO strike was "illegal" and asked damages of $30,000 a week as long as the strike continued. Several weeks later, the company signed with the union, agreed to withdraw the suit, and gave the union a complete release from any damages.

In Lodi, N. J., a $300,000 suit against the Federation of Dyers—affiliate of the CIO Textile Workers—was also cancelled.

Sen. Byrd Decides To Call It Quits

Sen. Harry F. Byrd (D., Va.), Senate advocate of "economy", has announced he will not be a candidate for reelection in 1952.

Byrd was listed in the CIO News' 1947 Voting Guide as having voted 100% wrong in the last session.

CIO Plans To Attend Hearings On Prices

JOHN BROPHY, CIO Director of Industrial Union Councils, has written State CIO Councils urging that they participate in the hearings to be held shortly by the Joint Congressional Committee on the Economic Report.

Emil Rieve, administrative chairman of the CIO Full Employment Committee, and Stanley H. Ruttenberg, CIO assistant director of research, have sent out similar requests.

"The CIO has a marvelous opportunity in connection with these hearings," Brophy wrote. "The possibilities are infinite. The hearings will give your State and local councils an opportunity for publicity and for drawing the attention of the community as a whole to the very serious problem of rising prices."

Rieve offered the services of the CIO Department of Research and Education, Washington, to the locals and international union presidents so that time could be arranged for appearances at the hearings.

The CIO officers suggested that, if no hearings are held in the council's particular State, that the nearest one should be attended.

Hearing dates and committee personnel as announced by the Joint Committee, of which Sen. Taft (R., O.) is chairman:

Eastern Subcommittee

Members: Sen. Flanders (R., Vt.), chairman; Sens. Baldwin (R., Conn.) and Myers (D., Pa.) and Reps. Rich (R., Pa.), Hart (D., N. J.) and Kilburn (R., N. Y.).

Dates: Sept. 15, Providence; Sept 16, Boston; day or two later, Manchester, N. H.; Sept. 22, New York City; Sept. 30, Philadelphia; day or two later, Scranton, Pa.; Oct. 7, Richmond; day or two later, Greensboro, N. C.; Oct. 14, Atlanta.

Midwest Subcommittee

Members: Rep. Bender (R., O.), chairman; Reps. Talle (R., Ia.) and Huber (D., O.) and Sens. Ball (R., Minn.), Kem (R., Mo.) and Sparkman (D., Ala.).

Dates: Sept. 23, Cleveland; Oct. 1, Chicago; Oct. 7, Minneapolis; Oct. 14, Kansas City; Nov. 5, Dallas; Nov. 10, Little Rock; Nov. 13, Birmingham.

Western Subcommittee

Members: Sen. Watkins (R., Utah), chairman; Sens. O'Mahoney (D., Wyo.) and Ecton (R., Mont.) and Reps. Poulson (R., Calif.), Patman (D., Tex.) and Horan (R., Wash.).

Dates: Oct. 6, Denver; Oct. 9, Salt Lake City; Oct. 13, Los Angeles; Oct. 16, San Francisco; Oct. 20, Portland, Ore.; Oct. 23, Seattle. (All dates are opening dates; hearings last for several days.)

JAMES P. HARDEN

He was deprived of his constitutional rights.

UNION MAN DEMANDS $50,000 IN BEATING

JAMES P. HARDEN, international representative of the CIO Auto Workers, has filed suit for $50,000 damages as a result of his being beaten up while on a tour of union duty.

Harden is suing Fred Harper, County, Ala.; L. P. Mullins, mayor of the town; Kimmey Dorsey, assistant superintendent of Dorsey Trailers, Inc., of Elba, and Macon Miller, a businessman.

The suit, filed in the U. S. District Court of Middle Alabama, Southern Division, accuses the four men:

(a) Of entering into a conspiracy on Dec. 16, 1946, to deprive Harden of rights, privileges and immunities secured by the U. S. Constitution;

(b) Using their official capacities and purported authority to have Harden beaten and run out of Elba and so end his union work;

(c) Of hiring Willie Lee Dewberry to arrange for physically assaulting Harden; (d) of assuring Dewberry that neither he nor others hired by him to assault Harden would be jailed or prosecuted criminally; (e) delivering to Dewberry $50 for beating up Harden; (f) committing, through Dewberry and others hired by him, assault and battery on Harden in the streets of Elba, then ordering him to get out of town;

(g) Causing Harden great pain of body and mind and medical expenses; (h) (Harper and Mullins only) of wilfully failing to employ legal means to bring the offenders to trial; (i) inducing Dewberry, by offer of $100, to run over Harden with an auto; (j) conspiracy to prevent Harden from performing his union rights and duties.

In an NLRB hearing in June at which the UAW accused the Dorsey company of unfair labor practices, Dewberry testified from the witness stand under oath that Harper and Dorsey came to his home the night before the assault on Harden and asked him if he knew anyone who would "whip that big man."

Dewberry agreed he could get a man or two and it was arranged to have the money left at a filling station the following morning, he said. He declared he engaged David Burk and Joe Collins, who so testified at the hearing.

Harden had been conducting an organization drive among Dorsey workers when he was attacked.

The suit is filed in Federal court because Harden maintains the attack was designed to deprive him of the Federal rights of freedom of speech, press and assembly.

That 'Loyalty Pledge'

MAYBE we can shed a little light on the refusal of many anti-Communists to sign the non-Communist "loyalty pledge" required of union officials who want to use the new NLRB.

For one thing, they object to being asked to swear they're innocent before anybody has accused them of being guilty. This is directly contrary to American tradition.

Then, they're irked by the fact that union officials—not union and company officials alike—have to sign the "pledge." They might feel better about the situation if employers had to swear that they were not connected with the Ku Klux Klan, Christian-American, Inc., or Gerald L. K. Smith's outfit.

Farmers Don't Like Us

The latest Gallup Poll shows that 64% of the people favor trade unions, 25% disapprove of them and 11% are undecided.

These figures, which reveal the unions have gained 4% in popularity since the beginning of the last war, are not as interesting as another set used by Dr. George Gallup.

Only 49% of the farmers polled, Dr. Gallup said, favor unions, "whereas, among professional and business men, white-collar and manual workers, the figure is 70%."

Another way of saying the same thing is:

Unions are approved by 70% of the men and women who are familiar with their operations and have an opportunity of meeting and knowing union leaders and members.

Unions are approved by only 49% of the farmers, whose knowledge of the labor movement unfortunately is gained largely by reading the newspapers and listening to radio commentators.

Perhaps this explains why so much State anti-labor legislation was supported by solons from rural areas.

Let's Be Serious

Despite the zany performance of two Republican Congressmen at a preliminary session in Los Angeles, the CIO feels that the coming Congressional prices hearings, properly handled, can be of inestimable benefit to a suffering public.

That's why national CIO officials are requesting our State councils to participate fully, bringing to the Congressmen all evidence of the causes behind high prices.

Overheard in a restaurant:
Admiring Republican: "That Taft sure is a rare bird."
So is a dodo.

The gushing girl customer who declared, "My dear, that's simply priceless" wasn't talking about any of the merchandise we've seen lately.

We sharply discount the rumor that industrialists soon will have to sign a "royalty pledge" before they can do business with the Internal Revenue Bureau.

It's high time that high prices take a high dive.

There's nothing free about the kind of enterprise industry has been conducting lately.

How About Those Who Are Fired And Then Blacklisted?

By ALLAN L. SWIM

THERE is in this country a group of employers who would rather have the fear than the respect of their employes.

Their chief weapon is intimidation—and they use it freely. They have what they consider a sure method of combatting unions. They demote or fire those who become interested in organized labor.

Those discharged are frequently blacklisted. Those blacklisted can find some new type of work—or, they can starve.

Going hungry and being evicted from their homes will "teach 'em a lesson," say those guilty of these practices.

SOUTHERN textile manufacturers who decided last year to engage in a last-ditch fight with the CIO figured it all out—on a dollars and cents basis.

One of the more callous of the group, hauled before the old NLRB on an unfair labor practices charge, stated his position bluntly:

"All the NLRB can do is make me put 'em back on the job and pay 'em for the time they weren't working. Hell, that's cheaper than having to deal with the union!"

YOU have to be familiar with typical textile villages to understand what a terrible thing fear of economic reprisal can become.

I visited many of them while connected with the CIO Organizing Committee and what I saw and heard made me alternately sick and angry.

The textile mill owner is an economic king—the lord and master of nearly all he surveys. He dominates the entire community. He owns all of the houses, all of the streets.

The guards at his mill are deputy sheriffs—paid by the mill and deputized by the sheriff. Their job is to prevent damage to company property. They are not expected to interfere if somebody decides to beat up a CIO organizer in front of the mill gate.

The mill owner dominates local politics, controls the school board and even has a hand in the selection of ministers who come to preach to those in the village.

YOU sat in your hotel room at night, waiting for "the boys" to show up. Finally there came a light knock on the door and you opened it. A small group of textile workers came quietly into the room.

You discussed organizing strategy with them. You asked them if they had been followed to the hotel and they said they didn't think so.

But they were mistaken. You learned this the next night when they came to the hotel again—came openly and noisily and told you they'd been fired.

LOSS of a job in many textile villages is followed quickly by eviction from a company-owned home.

Firing, eviction and blacklisting make a formidable trio—one designed to throw fear into the bravest.

Despite this, the CIO has made steady though unspectacular progress because textile workers have a great need for unions and because a lot of the workers have real courage.

A NUMBER of textile manufacturers who fired workers for union activity threw their support solidly behind the "freedom to work" measures that were passed by several Southern states.

And they joined the chorus of those who said that the employers—not the workers—were the ones who needed governmental protection.

They must have been talking about somebody else's workers—because they couldn't have been talking about their own.

"WELL, UNCLE, GUESS WE OUGHT TO MOVE FROM THIS NEIGHBORHOOD."

T-H Is Found Wanting

THE following editorial, "Off On The Wrong Foot", appeared in the Sept. 3 edition of the New York Times:

"Deservedly or undeservedly, the Labor-Management Relations Act of 1947 (Taft-Hartley Act) has become the subject of more intense feeling than almost any piece of domestic legislation in recent years. It is peculiarly unfortunate, therefore, that in putting the law into gear the first major test of its administration should turn on one of the weakest and most ambiguous clauses in the entire Act. This is Section 9 (h), which limits the right of petition by the labor unions to the National Labor Relations Board until they have been certified as being untainted with communism. The law says that:

"'No investigation shall be made by the Board of any question * * * raised by a labor organization under subsection (c) of this section, no petition under section 9 (e) (1), and no complaint shall be issued pursuant to a charge made by a labor organization under subsection (b) of section 10 unless there is an affidavit on file executed * * * by each officer of such labor organization, or the officers of any national or international labor organization of which it is an affiliate or constituent unit, that he is not a member of the Communist party, or affiliated with such a party, etc. * * *'

"We share what we believe is a widely held opinion that the anti-Communist clause in the new labor law is not only at least mildly offensive, but of extremely dubious usefulness. When the Taft-Hartley law was in process of formulation we expressed the view that perhaps the best thing to do with this section was quietly to drop it. As we pointed out at the time, the net result of such a provision was likely to be not to rid the union movement of Communists, but to drive the latter underground. But what seemed then to be a more or less academic issue has been given new and, it seems to us, unwarranted importance as a result of the sweeping interpretation placed upon the clause by Robert N. Denham, General Counsel for the Labor Relations Board. Mr. Denham has ruled that inclusion of the terms 'affiliate' and 'constituent' in the Act means that this section applies not only to parent organizations of local unions, but the top hierarchy of the CIO and AFL.

"It is possible that such an interpretation would be sustained by the courts; but we think there is good reason to doubt that it represents the considered intent of the framers of the legislation. The AFL has taken pains to point out more than once that it is not a 'parent' union in the sense that it issues orders to and prescribes rules for the local unions which are federated with it for a common purpose. If this is so, it seems to us illogical to demand that its officers, in effect, underwrite the anti-Communist pledges of the officers of these local bodies. By placing such a sweeping interpretation on a section of the law which had already given umbrage to union leaders, Mr. Denham, it seems to us, has needlessly complicated his own and the Board's task and has played directly into the hands of labor malcontents, including the very group against which this particular section of the Act is supposed to be directed."

Crazy Campaign At Mystery City

NESTLED among the foothills is one of the world's most fantastic cities.

A barbed-wire fence surrounds it. Khaki-clad men guard its entrances. Nobody can enter or leave without being properly identified.

During the war its inhabitants put a curb on their curiosity and learned not to ask questions.

Habits formed during the world conflict were carried into the post-war era.

Perhaps these things help explain why the union organizing campaign staged at Oak Ridge, Tenn., last year was about as fantastic as anything dreamed up by those who draw cartoons of the Flash Gordon type.

ORGANIZERS threw away their "rule books" after they were cleared by security officers and permitted to enter Oak Ridge.

Both the CIO and AFL got into the fray, but neither knew exactly whom they were trying to organize. They knew there were thousands of persons living and working at the atomic energy project. The Army wasn't telling, however, how many persons worked at which plant—and nobody seemed to know whether the project would be in operation for a week or a hundred years.

Then the Army invoked a set of regulations which made organization work along conventional lines impossible.

"WE'LL just try to organize the whole darn place," one of the men directing the CIO campaign said.

A weekly newspaper, with circulation large enough for nearly every adult in Oak Ridge, was started. The Army then invoked censorship rules which seemed to make sense to nobody but the Army.

So, the CIO turned to the radio (from outside Oak Ridge) in an effort to get across messages which the Army had banned.

The Army then relaxed its censorship—but prohibited distribution of union newspapers near plant gates by union representatives. "Bona fide" residents of Oak Ridge had to be hired to do the job.

THE Army ruled that committee meetings were OK but that mass meetings weren't. The unions then formed enormous committees.

The Army said the "no solicitation" rule applied to organizers as well as peddlers. The organizers had to get themselves "invited" to a home before they could enter.

Male organizers were forbidden to enter women's dormitories—so women organizers were brought in.

The CIO hired a hill-billy band and sent it to a recreation area. The music had just started when two policemen took the CIO campaign director and a publicity man into "custody." They were released a short time after because nobody could find any regulation under which they could be held.

RESULTS of the first election were inconclusive, so a run-off was ordered.

In the run-off the CIO Chemical Workers was selected bargaining agency for what later turned out to be the principal producing plant at Oak Ridge.

Organizers who took part in the campaign will never forget it. The thing most of them probably will remember best is the standard reply they received from suspicious workers who were asked what they did for a living:

"Why, bud, I turn Valve No. 235."

THIS WON'T HURT—NOT MUCH!

Contest For Loyalty Of Workers

"THE conflict which underlies industrial relations in America is the contest for the loyalty of the American worker."

That's how Lloyd H. Fisher, research associate of the University of California's Institute of Industrial Relations, defines the "underlying objectives of trade union activity" in an article in the New York Times Sunday Magazine.

Fisher, who used to be research director of the CIO Longshoremen, poses a question: "How responsible can a union be for the acts of its member and under what conditions can this responsiblility be obtained?"

"The Taft-Hartley Act suggests one answer," Fisher wrote, "in the enforcement of contract, the 'liberation' of the individual worker and the weakening of the institutional sovereignty of the trade union. Most students of the problem believe that the solution lies elsewhere."

REMARKING on the considerable confusion among the public as to labor's objectives, Fisher says "wages, hours and working conditions are important means of labor union action, but they are not its ends. The fundamental quest of the labor movement is for sovereignty in all matters affecting the employment relationship."

Fisher quotes Prof. Selig Perlman's simple definition: "control of job territory." Further, he recalls that Perlman said "unionism is, in this respect (concern for the collective job-territory), not unlike patriotism which may and does demand of the citizen the supreme sacrifice when the integrity of the national territory is at stake."

"The demands that a union makes upon employers can readily be separated into two groups," Fisher asserts. "There are the worker-oriented demands—wages, hours and working conditions. But, quite as important, and perhaps in the long run more important, are the union-oriented demands—the closed shop or some variant of it, and the dues check-off.

"A modern union is not identical with the membership any more than a corporation is the simple sum of its stockholders, and so it is not unreasonable that the trade union should have requirements which are distinct and separate from those of its membership.

"It is an axiom of management that responsibility must go hand in hand with authority. This is quite as true in industrial relations as elsewhere."

Fisher likens a union to a political party, in that it also is organized for internal control as well as external aggression. The union, he says, "potentially is a means not only of representing the worker, but of guaranteeing his performance as well. The labor contract becomes the treaty defining the rights and duties of the signatories and becomes the obligation of each to enforce in its own domain."

Fisher gets to the kernel of his thesis when he says: "In the search for industrial peace, there are two broad paths discernible and each has its peculiar liabilities. Along one path lies the curbing of the right of association. Sen. Ball, in his effort to outlaw industry-wide bargaining, endorsed this course and proclaimed it as the only liberal alternative. The other is marked by the deliberate encouragement of association, the conscious use of balance of power as the strategy of industrial peace.

"The power to make peace involves a status, a territory and a sovereignty that American labor has not yet attained and American industry has never been willing to concede."

Fisher says "the leadership of American labor may come to believe that it can't do business with American employers. Then, the American employer may come to believe that union responsibility is worth its price."

$64-plus

PHIL BAKER last week asked a question worth a lot more than $64.

A contestant named Waring came to Phil's "Take It or Leave It" microphone. Baker asked the usual questions, finally coming to the man's profession.

"I'm a real estate broker," answered Waring.

"Have you any apartments?" queried Baker.

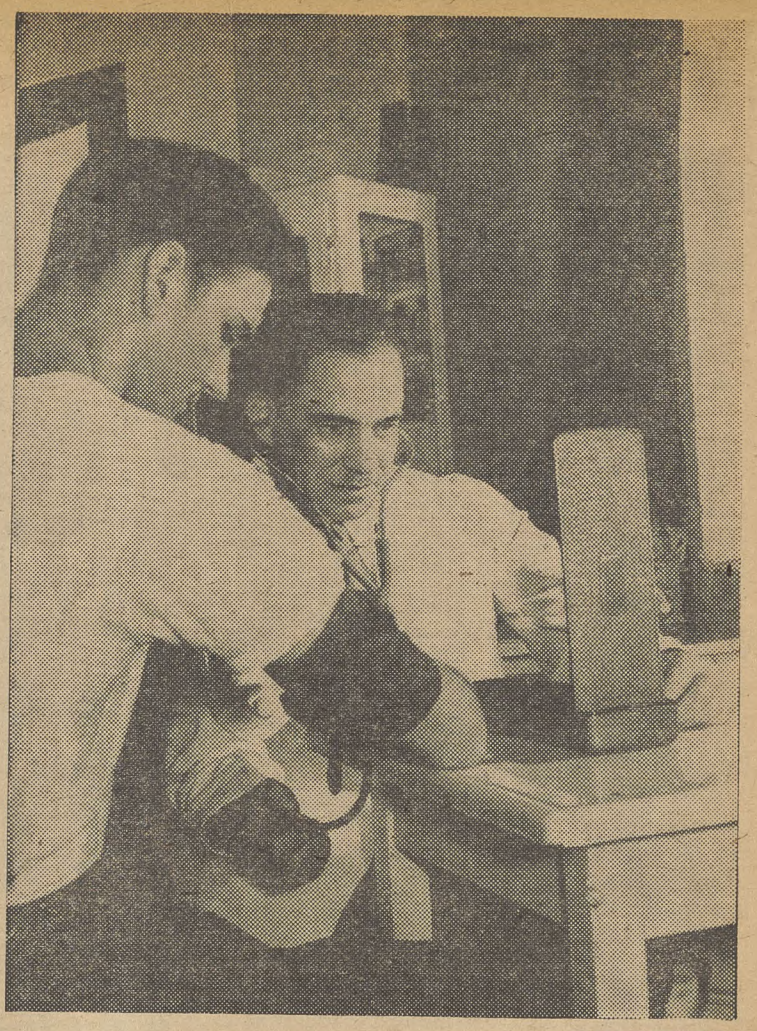
"Oh, yes," replied Waring, "we've got lots, but we're not renting them."

"Why not?"

"Because OPA's still in existence and we're waiting until the next election for it to be voted out," asserted Waring.

There was a loud boo from the audience.

Women workers washing up for lunch in the round sink of a modern, industrial washroom. Cleanliness and carefully selected soaps and salves are the first preventive measure against possible skin disease.



Periodic physical check-ups are necessary to assure the health of workers in certain hazardous occupations. Many unions, as well as companies, are well-equipped to provide health services for workers. In-plant medical attention cuts down illness and loss of work, but the job is to convince small manufacturers of its value.

More Costly Than War!

By GLORIA CAPLAN

"Every 30 minutes in recent years has marked the death of a worker by accident, and an injury occurred every 17½ seconds."—Philip Murray in his report to the 1946 CIO Convention.

ALL the sound and fury stirred up by industry and a Republican Congress over time lost by workers in strikes falls rather flat when you compare it with their deep silence on the real thief of productive time—illness.

Last year American industry lost 600 million man days of work due to sickness; it lost about one-fifth that much—125 million man days—due to strikes.

Yet as a result of the unconcern by management in general and the Congressional leadership in particular, which has repeatedly blocked a national health insurance program, the American worker remains unprotected from one of his greatest catastrophes—illness. He has had to depend on the bounty of his employer—sometimes existent, sometimes not—for protection from health and accident hazards in the plant, and he has had to rely on his union, through insurance plans, for financial security when illness comes.

CIO-BACKED PLANS

In recent years CIO unions have been placing increased emphasis on health programs and health insurance plans. A number of the larger unions, notably the CIO Auto Workers at Detroit and the CIO Retail, Wholesale & Dept. Store Employes in St. Louis, Mo., have been able to set up their own clinics.

In most instances, however, CIO unions are negotiating health insurance plans, jointly administered, by which the employer pays all or part of the premiums. Such benefits are contained in many contracts of the following CIO unions:

Amalgamated Clothing Workers, Textile Workers, Furniture Workers, Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers, Fur & Leather Workers, Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, Shipbuilding Workers, Paper Workers, Retail, Wholesale & Dept. Store Employes, and Office & Professional Workers.

Plans initiated and administered solely by management have long been suspect by labor unions, which recognized the fertile ground for discriminating against individual employes in such programs. CIO Pres. Philip Murray in his annual report to the CIO Convention last year denounced management for considering the administration of safety and welfare measures as its sole prerogative.

ONLY HALF-WAY STEP

But, however great the need of health insurance, it, after all, only helps repair the damage after it's been done. Preventive measures still lag far behind our 20th century technology. It is here that the Federal government, through the Industrial Hygiene Division of the U. S. Public Health Service, cooperating with 45 state industrial hygiene units, are taking the lead.

Although handicapped by small staffs, little money and a lack of state statutes to enforce their recommendations, these units have contributed most of what we know about such dread occupational diseases as silicosis, lead poisoning, and mercury poisoning. The Federal division is now studying the toxicity of such metals as tellurium, cadmium, beryllium, thorium and tungsten. The division recently established a unit for the study of the effects of atomic radiations, and has just completed an investigation of the respiratory health hazards of shipyard arc-welders using electrodes on bare or galvanized steel.

Experts employed by the state inspect the plants in their area for health and accident hazards, analyze the plant air and when necessary the urine of the employes to discover the effects of substances with which they work.

Operating with the assistance of Federal grants-in-aid, these units recommend corrective or preventive measures to the plant owner, but in most cases compliance is left up to the employer's beneficence. Only 29 states have industrial health regulations, and even these are often loosely enforced.

ASK UNION COOPERATION

The findings of both the Federal and State Industrial Hygiene Divisions are available to unions, which are urged to help enforce the recommended precautionary measures. Unions in addition may call on the units for advice in setting up their own clinics or health programs.

Industrial health specialists have long sought standard national regulations to afford all workers utmost protection from unnecessary illness.

The U. S. Industrial Health Division is encouraging small plant owners and labor unions to establish in-plant medical service.

More deaths and injuries befell industrial workers during the war than befell members of the armed forces, Philip Murray pointed out last year at the CIO Convention in Atlantic City. This indicated, he said, that less precaution was taken by industry to insure health and safety than was taken by the military.

The necessity for labor unions to accept this responsibility is therefore the result of failure by management and government to assume it.

A recent publication of the U. S. Labor Dept., "Union Health and Welfare Plans," recognizes this failure by management and government:

"Needless to say," it states, "trade unions have entered the field of social welfare out of sheer necessity. The attitude of some employers with respect to the health and welfare of their workers and the past inadequacy of governmental plans left them no other course.

"However, it is hoped that the social security program of the Federal Government which now offers only a limited form of protection, will eventually embrace all forms of sickness insurance and medical, mental, hospital, surgical, dental and prenatal care."

Albuquerque, New Mexico, workmen wash up at the end of the day's work at a railroad locomotive shop. Hygiene education and insistence on healthy working conditions are rapidly becoming a part of every union's "must" program. The U. S. Public Health Service urges unions to support Federal and state recommendations for more sanitary and healthful conditions in industry.

PAC WARMS UP IN TAFT STATE

THE Ohio CIO-PAC is out to see that Ohio, rival claimant to Virginia as the Mother of Presidents, doesn't produce another president in 1948.

At least, PAC wants to be sure that Sen. Robert Alphonso Taft, native son and Ohio's senior Senator, doesn't get elected as Chief Executive.

While the ultimate drive of Ohio-PAC is for 1948, this fall's municipal and county elections are not being forgotten.

The State CIO, through Publicity Director Fred Thomas, reports that Ohio in the last year has offered a strange political phenomenon.

Storch Campaign In Home Stretch

As the CIO News was going to press, Philip H. Storch, Democrat with united labor support, was winding up his campaign against Republican Franklin H. Lichtenwalder in the special Congressional election in Pennsylvania's 8th District.

Storch, 36, a Marine veteran, is president of the Lehigh Valley CIO Newspaper Guild. Lichtenwalder, 37, is Speaker of the Pennsylvania State House.

Politicians are still unable to reconcile the following fact: Registrations showed an all-time record high for the state before the 1946 elections, and yet, 90 days later, a survey conducted by Ohio CIO Council showed an all-time record drop off in registration.

Registration Falls

From Oct. 7, 1946, to Jan. 1, 1947, approximately one-half million voters were dropped from the eligible lists. The survey was conducted only in key industrial cities.

In Cuyahoga County (Cleveland), prior to the 1946 election, 645,000 were qualified to vote, topping the previous record total of 631,785 for the Presidential year of 1940. Three months later, 138,197 were dropped from the lists.

Another example of this odd voting picture is seen in Dayton, where 115,399 were eligible to vote in the 1946 election, as compared with the previous high of 114,739 in 1944. Yet, three months later, the Montgomery County Board of Elections reported it had dropped 54,699 from the eligible voting lists.

To overcome this alarming decline in the vote potential, Ohio CIO-PAC is spearheading registration drives across the state. In Cleveland, a big campaign was launched in every ward Aug. 27, on which day general registration offices were opened in each ward of the city.

Leading up to this drive, Cuyahoga County CIO-PAC prepared a door-knob hanger explaining registration information. Volunteers distributed 125,000 pieces of this literature. Shop caravans also were organized.

In Dayton, where 54,699 voters were dropped on Jan. 1, the registration drive was geared to a city commission race in which the two CIO-endorsed candidates were nominated.

The political picture is far from rosy, however, taken in the main. In Columbus, for instance, 49,000 voters were dropped from the list on Jan. 1, but only 5,000 have re-registered since that date. From one end of the state to the other it is evident that supreme efforts must be expended between now and Oct. 1948, if this loss of voting potential is to be made up.

The loss of the half million names from the voting lists since the first of the year will come as good news to Taft the GOP hopeful who just managed to squeeze through for reelection as Senator in 1944 by a margin of 17,000 votes.

That was a lead of three-tenths of one per cent of the nearly 3,000,000 votes cast. In fact, if one vote had been switched in each of the State's 8500 precincts, Taft would have lost.

A secondary phase of CIO-PAC's campaign has been carried on during the summer months at county fairs. The CIO is attempting to decondition the attitude of the average farmer against city labor. Thousands of pieces of educational literature were carried back to the farm by rural fair visitors across the state.

Some political observers feel that the loss of a half million voters since January is not entirely an accurate reflection of the true voting potential of Ohio. They argue that thousands of the dropped names actually are not at present residents of Ohio, but were war workers who have returned to their out-of-state homes since the end of the war.

While this may partially explain the excessive drop in registration lists, the loss is still felt to be a sizable, and potentially a decisive, one. Ohio CIO-PAC is operating on the basis that it must close up this gap, must marshall the greatest possible vote, if Labor, as Ohio CIO-PAC puts it, "is to keep its date with '48."

Several other Ohio cities are trying emulate Dayton's example. They include:

Cincinnati

Battle lines between labor and the political machine which produced Sen. Taft are clearly drawn in the City Council election.

Both CIO and AFL have candidates on the coalition City Charter Committee ticket opposing that of the Hamilton County Republican organization.

And the GOP organization is seeking to nip labor's growing politicial strength in the bud here by a proposal to abolish the proportional representation system of electing councilmen, under which Cincinnati has had 22 years of clean government.

The move has been revealed as aimed directly at the presence of Rollin H. Everett, CIO editor and radio commentator, in the Council, to which he was elected two years ago with combined CIO, AFL and progressive support. Everett, through the CIO's "Sun" and on the radio, has led the fight against Taft.

Realtors Alarmed

The local Real Estate Board has also openly announced that it is out to get Everett because of his proposals for local rent control and his support of public housing. The board is a powerful influence in the GOP machine.

The AFL candidate is Harry Proctor, a Building Trades leader. The Building Trades once were counted by the Republicans as a source of labor strength. But the Taft-Hartley Law and local developments of the last year have cost the GOP any labor following it had left.

Rollin H. Everett, CIO editor and radio commentator, is battling the GOP in Taft's home city, Cincinnati, where he is seeking reelection as a city councilman on the coaltion City Charter Committee ticket. The Real Estate Board, which throws its in weight around in the local Republican machine, is doing everything in its power to defeat Everett because he is for municipal rent control and public housing.

While a joint CIO-AFL committee has not yet been formed; Everett has had the support of most of the leading AFL unions and it is anticipated that Proctor as well as Everett will be supported by CIO.

Two years ago an AFL candidate, James McCaffrey of the Street Railway union, was on the Republican ticket and made a creditable though unsuccessful race. He was twice passed over since then by the GOP machine when vacancies in Council were filled by direction of Boss Fred Schneller.

Both McCaffrey and the AFL Chronicle blasted the machine, declaring it had no desire for real labor representation and used labor candidates only as vote-catchers. One of the vacancies had been filled by a politically unknown auto dealer, who subsequently proposed prices be reduced by reducing wages, and the other was filled by a county prosecutor, who then proposed to abolish PR "to keep radicals from muscling into Council."

Registration is the first drive being made by labor, particularly by the Hamilton County PAC. And the drive has been reflected by an unprecedented flow of registrants to the Board of Elections.

PAC is organizing on the basis of block workers this year. The workers are obtained by a card poll within the plants in which the workers are asked if they are registered and whether they are willing to become PAC workers.

Robert J. Davidson, regional CIO director, heads the Everett-For-Council drive in CIO, with aides from all the CIO unions in the city. Jack Kroll, national CIO-PAC director, was Everett's campaign chairman two years ago and is lending advice to the campaign when he visits his home city this year.

Ben Herman of Amalgamated Clothing Workers is finance committee chairman; Talmadge Raley, Electrical Radio & Machine Workers, registration committee chairman; and Walter Grainger, ACW, speakers bureau chairman. William Black, Steelworkers leader and president of the CIO Council, is an ex-officio member of all committees.

Ed Hellkamp, Auto Workers, is committee secretary, and Jack Methard, former Auto Workers organizer, PAC field director. Ray Sowder has been assigned by Al Whitehouse, District 25 Steelworkers director, to head up all registration of Steelworkers.

Won Wage Fight

Everett, in his two years in Council, led a successful fight for decent city wages, and has conducted a running feud with the chief of police over "improper use of police against picket lines and flagrant cases of brutality and violation of civil liberties."

He has fought appointments to boards and commissions controlled by a few wealthy Republicans. He has proposed more stringent regulation of restaurants and dairies, and emphasized the importance of recreation and housing.

Besides conducting a vigorous campaign against the Taft-Hartley Bill in the Sun, Everett was put on the air weekly last spring in a program "The Other Side of The News," which was originated in the Taft-Hartley fight and has been continued since.

Everett has been a newspaperman 20 years, 17 years on daily newspapers, specializing in municipal and political matters. He was one of the early presidents and negotiators for the Cincinnati Newspaper Guild. He is 42, father of four children.

Harry Proctor is a representative of the Painters' District Council and 27 years an active trade unionist. He was chosen as an AFL candidate through a poll conducted by the Chronicle. He is vice-president of the Ohio State Building and Construction Trades Council and a member of the Legislative Committee of the Ohio State Painters Council.

Humphrey Beats Sen. Ball In Poll

Mayor Hubert H. Humphrey, Democrat, of Minneapolis defeated Sen. Ball (Rep., Minn.) in a straw poll of senatorial preferences, final returns show.

The ballots were cast at the Minnesota State Fair. The tabulation gave 8,188 votes for Humphrey and 7,080 for Ball.

Toledo

The Proportional Representation election this fall will see CIO-PAC again backing Tom Burke, incumbent councilman and secretary of the Toledo CIO Industrial Union Council. In 1945, Burke was elected before his first-choice count was exhausted. His name thus became the third to be chosen.

In 1945, Burke was the only PAC-indorsed councilmanic candidate. PAC also gave its blessing to Stanley Grzesinski, who was chosen municipal judge over heavy conservative opposition.

PAC is running auto caravans from the various plants to the Board of Elections to re-register CIO members who have become ineligible.

The caravan creates a lot of public interest, since the board is located in the district's most congested street. Since a traffic jam is caused, news photographers and reporters always cover the event.

Redoubled efforts will be made to get out the vote in November. There are 25 candidates for the nine councilmanic seats, which are chosen on a non-partisan ballot and elected at large.

Lorain County

Most of the Lorain activity up to a few weeks ago had been of a fund-raising nature. So far PAC has built up a "war chest" of around $2,000. Part of this is from per capita payments from the local unions in the area. However, a good percentage has come from other sources.

Locked out by the Copley Manufacturing Co., Burlington, Vt., members of Local 438, CIO Clothing workers, form the first picket line in the local's peaceful four-year existence. Members of the local reported that they were paid at the rate of 36c an hour and that one worker received only 18c for one hour's work. The public and CIO unions throughout Vermont are backing the strike, according to Clothing Workers Rep. Anthony Jenkins.

Two Unions To Sign Affidavits

TWO CIO unions have so far signified their intention to sign the "non-communist" affidavits required by the Taft-Hartley act as a prerequisite for recognition by the National Labor Relations Board.

After several hours of heated debate, the CIO Woodworkers during its 11th annual convention, adopted a resolution calling for compliance with the T-H regulations.

The CIO Brewery Workers' general executive board took the same position when it met last week in Cincinnati, Ohio.

Both unions made it clear that their intention to comply did not signify approval of the T-H Act.

The Woodworkers pledged to exert their energies toward achieving repeal of the T-H measure and stated that they would continue to disregard the section of the law which prohibits the expression of political opinion by a union newspaper.

The Woodworkers nominated their president, J. B. Fadling, for re-election without opposition. Nominated for international first vice-president were Ernest Dalskog, executive board member of the British Columbia District Council in Vancouver, B. C., and Al F. Hartung, regional director for the state of Oregon and former president of the Columbia River District Council.

Unopposed for the second vice presidency is William Botkin of Aberdeen, Wash.

Walter Belka, secretary of the Northern Washington District Council, is opposed by Carl Wynn, former vice-president of the union, for the office of secretary-treasurer.

Officers will be elected by referendum at a future date.

The IWA delegates, describing the frequency of accidents in the woodworking industry as "nothing short of a national disgrace," approved a plan for an employer-paid special fund for a safety program, to be administered jointly by the company and the union.

Resolutions adopted called for a return to the foreign policy of Franklin D. Roosevelt, amendments to broaden the social security act, anti-poll tax and anti-lynching legislation, labor education, full employment, support of a Jewish national home in Palestine, and active participation in political action.

CIVIL LIBERTIES UNDER ATTACK

CIVIL liberties have taken a severe setback in the last year.

Liberal and minority groups were thrown on the defensive, according to:

1. The American Civil Liberties Union, which, in an 80-page report, declared that "the optimism expressed by the ACLU for some years must today give way to a considerable measure of apparently justified skepticism concerning the immediate future of our democratic liberties as instruments of progress."

2. The Washington Post, which, in an article by Dillard Stokes, revealed that the U. S. Supreme Court, "in 12 significant civil rights cases, was conservative nine times, liberal three." The Post was again noting the change in the court's decisions since Fred M. Vinson was made Chief Justice.

Labor took a major setback during the year, the ACLU reported, is now in a "legal straitjacket" and is one of the chief victims of "militant conservativism and general retreat to the defense of the status quo."

ACLU highlighted its report with comment on the Taft-Hartley Law, which it called "a major legislative victory in the drive to tame the power of the trade unions in industry and to weaken them in politics." Many sections of T-H, the report declared, "clearly violate the principles of labor's rights."

ACLU offered to help the CIO and AFL in any legal tests of the law.

Other anti-labor activities, ACLU said, included: the Supreme Court's 5-3 decision upholding the Lea (anti-Petrillo) Act; State legislation against the closed shop; State referenda on union financial statements; the New Jersey "emergency" law against the telephone workers' strike, and the New York Condon-Wadlin Law, barring strikes by all public employes, signed by Gov. Dewey over the protests of labor.

Other major setbacks to civil liberties included: four lynchings; the acquittal in South Carolina of 28 "confessed lynchers"; a Supreme Court decision extending the legality of searches without proper warrants; the President's order for "dangerously vague tests" of the loyalty of Federal employes and the "continued witch-hunting crusade of the irresponsible" House Un-American Committee.

ACLU, however, saw some gains in the year, including: placing of atomic energy control in civilian hands; appointment of a Presidential commission to consider amnesty for draft act violators; a federal court ban against segregation in California schools and the opening of the Boston Common to unrestricted free speech.

Stokes, in the Washington Post, says: "Our new Supreme Court made the law."

Taft and Hartley Disagree On Law

"There's a hell of a lot more Hartley than Taft in that law!"

That's Rep. Fred Hartley (R., N. J.) talking. He so spoke in revealing that there is wide disagreement between him and co-author Sen. Robert A. Taft (R., O.) as to the "freedom of press" portions of the law.

Taft, in a Senate speech during the debate on Section 304, declared it was aimed at barring union publications from carrying on political action, such as the 1947 Voting Guide issued by the CIO News recently.

Hartley last week took sharp issue with Taft—"and Congress would back me up on it, too". He said that unions are not violating the T-H law by printing voting records. And, he gave an oblique compliment to CIO-PAC, declaring that group is "operating 100% within the law; they did a darn effective job against me in the last election, even though they didn't beat me".

ORGANIZING

BY ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

On Labor Day the writer addressed a large gathering in Hammond, Ind., where the Lake County Industrial Union Council also conducted an all-day picnic with entertainment for children and grown-ups as well. Representative Madden, the fighting congressman from that district, also spoke at this gathering, and portrayed vividly the conspiracy that took place to bring about the passage of the Taft-Hartley Law. He asked labor not to fall asleep and repeat what happened at the last congressional elections.

The meeting in Hammond as in Youngstown and elsewhere throughout the Nation showed that the people are determined to unite in order to bring about the repeal of this vicious law. Labor now recognizes that one of its major battles is to restore the Congress of the United States to the people.

CIO ORGANIZING COMMITTEE

Robert Oliver, Texas CIO Director, reported workers at Eagle-Picher Co., Dallas, voted 58 to 25 in favor of United Steelworkers of America-CIO, and employes of Weatherford Spring Co., Weatherford, voted 56 to 32 for USA-CIO. Employes of the Southwestern Industrial Equipment Co., Dallas, voted 16 to 2 for CIO Auto Workers.

Tennessee Director Paul Christopher also reported that workers at the Fied-Sul Paper mill in Memphis voted 14 to 9 for CIO Paperworkers.

William Smith, CIO director for North Carolina, reported that employes of the Myrtle Desk Co., High Point, voted in a run-off election 118 to 113 for CIO Furniture Workers.

Labor Day and the many meetings held by members of organized labor throughout the country has proved conclusively that our people are aroused and are determined to leave no stone unturned to bring to account those congressmen and senators who voted to stab labor in the back by the passage of the Taft-Hartley law.

The writer addressed a splendid meeting in Youngstown, Ohio, on Saturday, August 30. Thousands of members and their families attended an all-day picnic and responded vigorously to the plea for political action and for fighting this vicious law. The officers and members of the Mahoning County Industrial Union Council are to be congratulated for the splendid affair put on in that city.

Organizational Picketing Approved By Judge

T. LINUS HOBAN, war hero judge of Scranton, Pa., has ruled that picketing for organizational purposes is a right of free speech guaranteed by the American Constitution and may not be enjoined.

Hoban, a prisoner of the Germans in World War II, declared that such picketing, "even though the picketing is done by one not an employe of the employer concerned and where there is no dispute between the employer and his employes, is lawful as an exercise of the right of free speech."

His ruling came as a result of an attempt by the Twin Grill Restaurant, Scranton, to secure an injunction against the AFL Hotel and Restaurant Employes' and Bartenders' Union, which organized the picketing.

"If the public, either as a patron or tradesman, who deal with the shop, decide to withhold their patronage or services from the employer because his employes do not belong to the unions which these people favor," ruled Judge Hoban, "it is their legitimate right to do so, provided the method of providing information through picketing or inducement to the employes and tradespeople is not accomplished in an unlawful manner or, again, provided that there is no valid provision of statutory law which prohibits such actions.

"Here, the defendant unions claim nothing except the right to persuade employes to join their organization. Hence, the controversy cannot be called an unfair labor practice."

What effect a new state law barring picketing by non-employes would have on the Hoban decision was not indicated. The law became effective a week after Hoban's ruling. An immediate test is indicated.

Hoban, however, called illegal the refusal of organized building crafts to proceed with a contract for renovation of the Liberty Building, adjoining the Twin Grill. The building unions refused to work because the Liberty Building is owned by the same company as the restaurant. But, he did not rule on the building crafts, since they were not a defendant in the case and since there was no proof that the restaurant union had asked for such support.

Hoban cautioned the restaurant union about what type of picket signs should be carried.

T-H Headache

The Bell Telephone System has hit on another union-busting device under the Taft-Hartley Act.

The System's local affiliates have indicated their intention of cutting off pay to union officials for time spent in collective bargaining or grievance conferences, Henry Mayer, counsel for a number of the telephone unions charged.

The Companies' stand is based on a provision of the T-H Act, supposedly directed against 'featherbedding," which makes it a criminal offense to pay employes for anything except work actually performed.

The Union counsel said that members of the Joint Congressional "Watchdog" committee had informed him that the law had not been intended to apply to payment for time spent in negotiations between union and management.

N.Y. CIO BLASTS DEWEY REGIME

WITH a stormy left-right fight in the executive board meeting as a prologue, the 8th annual New York State CIO convention, meeting at Saratoga Springs, turned its unanimous fire on Gov. Thomas E. Dewey.

The question of a foreign policy resolution and continued official CIO suppor' for the American Labor Party did not meet with the same unanimity, however.

The resolution to continue support of the ALP was approved by the executive board by a margin of 4 to 1. As the CIO News went to press, right wing leaders were giving indication that they intended to bring the issue to the floor.

The ALP supporters seemed slated to win out, however, since it was assumed that the "middle-of-the road" Amalgamated Clothing workers, whose late president, Sidney Hillman, had been a founder and chairman of ALP, would vote for continued support. Amalgamated, largest CIO union in the state, has 255 of the 900 delegates.

A program to establish PAC committees in every community in which the state's one million CIO members live was included in the resolution.

Addressing the opening session, Pres. Emil Rieve, of the Textile Workers, urged that U. S. aid to Greece be made conditional on the establishment of "a liberal government that will serve the people and not a reactionary, corrupt government as it is today."

Although considered a leader of the right wing, Rieve expressed strong disapproval of this country's running to the relief "of every reactionary government" in Europe and Asia.

America should make a positive move toward extending democracy at home, the Textile Workers' leader continued. He rejected the idea that this country has but two alternatives—Communism or Fascism—and called on labor to take the lead in eliminating social and economic inequities.

In his keynote address, State Council pres. Louis Hollander challenged Dewey to make his position known on the Taft-Hartley Law. If the Governor fails to do so, "he is a political coward," Hollander said.

At a press conference, Hollander had previously termed Dewey "more dangerous" than Sen. Taft.

The sudden cancellation by Edward Corsi, State Industrial Commissioner, of plans to address the convention was interpreted by delegates as a "snub" by the Dewey administration. This is the first time the annual convention has not been addressed by a representative of the state government.

Mine, Mill Will Hold Election Referendum

IN an effort to eliminate the friction which followed last year's election of international officers, the CIO Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers has scheduled a special referendum election for Oct. 6.

Recommended by the International Executive Board, the proposal was unanimously approved by delegates to the union's convention at St. Paul, Minn., last week.

Both Maurice Travis, president of the union, and Reid Robinson, former president, declined to run for the top office. Travis, however, is a nominee for secretary-treasurer, and Robinson is seeking election as Eastern vice president.

John Clark, now secretary-treasurer, and George Knott of Kellogg, Idaho, were nominated for the presidency. Clark, who was nominated by incumbent Pres. Travis, is reported to have had the support of 98% of the convention delegates.

In declining to seek re-election, Travis complied with recommendations of a special national CIO committee which had been appointed to investigate a secession movement on outgrowth of last year's election.

The secessionists, who sought membership in the CIO Shipbuilding Workers, charged that the votes of "unpaid-dues" members had been counted to achieve Robinson's re-election as president. The CIO investigating committee made the same charge. During the furore, Robinson resigned, and Travis, then vice president, succeeded to the post.

Reaffirming its loyalty to the CIO, the union in a unanimously-adopted resolution, recalled that it had been one of the 8 original founders of the parent organization and called on other unions to help maintain unity within the CIO.

The delegates, however, unanimously discarded the recommendation of the CIO investigating committee that the union place itself under the rule of a CIO administrator for at least six months.

Also rejected was the minority report of the secessionists which had made the irregular voting charges. Although the report had no legal status, since its authors are no longer in the union, it was presented to the convention, officials said, in order to remove it as "a possible weapon for further disruption."

Ship Conference Held On Strike

As the CIO News went to press, Pres. John Green of the CIO Shipbuilding workers, Joseph M. Larkin, vice president of the Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corp., and Howard T. Colvin, acting director of the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service, at a conference in Washington, D. C., were attempting to reach a settlement which would end a 70-day shipyard strike.

The walkout, which at its height had idled 72,000 shipyard workers, now affects only 35,000, employed by Bethlehem, Federal Shipbuilding Co. and the New York Dry Dock & Shipbuilding Co. Other companies came to terms with the union earlier.

COUNTRY MARKET COMES TO TOWN: Workers bought produce for as low as one-fourth of the prevailing, Newark, N. J., price at this truck of the South Jersey local of the Natl. Farmers Union. Here are some sample prices: Tomatoes, 2c a pound, prevailing price, 6c peppers, 3.1c per pound, prevailing price, 8c; peaches, 3½c per pound, prevailing price 13½ c. Arrangements were made with the farmers by Local 42, CIO Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers and the Greater Newark CIO Council.

Legion Inaction On Housing Sharply Criticized

THE American Legion convention's actions on housing and other vital issues were criticized sharply by Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr., New York Mayor O'Dwyer and the National Conference of Union Labor Legionnaires.

Roosevelt, speaking in his capacity as an officer of the American Veterans' Committee, charged the Legion's failure to endorse the Wagner-Taft-Ellender Housing Bill (the convention rejected the endorsement on a roll call vote) as aligning the organization with the "real estate lobby."

O'Dwyer, a Legion member, said the convention action on housing exhibited "a deep, low sense of ingratitude to veterans."

The Legion unionists, who have 95,000 members, declared they had "definite proof that Herbert U. Nelson, indicted by the Justice Dept. for a criminal conspiracy to restrain trade in housing, has dictated the Legion Committee's housing policy ever since last year's convention." The committee also expressed the fear the Legion would return to a strike-breaking role.

The Scripps-Howard Washington News expressed great concern over a Legion resolution, passed late in the convention when many delegates had gone home, which advocated withdrawal of civil rights from Government employes accused of being subversive. The News felt that such a procedure might lead to star chamber sessions.

The new Legion commander, James J. O'Neil, conceded Roosevelt's statement that votes of absent delegates had been counted with the majority at the convention. But, O'Neil pointed out that he, himself, had voted for the W-T-E motion.

Meanwhile, an early rush to cash terminal leave bonds tapered off. Most of the veterans reported they needed the money for bills, home improvements, etc.

B'nai B'rith Hails Labor Movement

B'nai B'rith, Jewish service organization, has expressed its "deep appreciation for the great contribution American organized labor has made toward keeping America safe for democracy in the social, economic and political fields."

The B'nai B'rith stand, issued as a Labor Day statement, was signed by Pres. Frank Goldman and addressed to CIO Pres. Philip Murray and other labor leaders.

"We know from bitter experience that any movement which aims to destroy labor unionism paves the way for the destruction of democracy itself," Goldman said.

Protest U. S. 'Loyalty' Oath

TWO CIO unions have protested the operations of the Government "loyalty" investigation.

The Public Workers charged that "intimidation and union busting" will be a menace to all organized employes of the Federal Government as a result of requirements of the questionnaires being circulated among all U. S. workers.

The UPWA protest, issued by Pres. Abram Flaxer, was directed against Point No. 11 on the FBI form, which requires that the employe identify "organizations other than religious or political" with which he is affiliated.

Flaxer and CIO Vice Pres. Haywood had visited the Civil Service Commission to protest the form. Commission member Frances Perkins, former Secretary of Labor, informed the CIO officers that she had not seen the form before it was issued.

The CIO Stone and Allied Product Workers, in an executive board resolution, protested the "loyalty" probe as an attack on "freedom of thought and freedom of speech."

THE SKY IS ONLY LIMIT IN PRICES

". . . If OPA is promptly discontinued, production of goods will mount rapidly and through free competition prices will quickly adjust themselves to levels that consumers are willing to pay."—The National Association of Manufacturers, in a statement just before OPA was killed by Congress.

History has shown that NAM was at least half right in that statement—production has risen plenty since OPA.

But Prices! They were so high last week that they had you and the thumbing dictionaries only to find such inadequate synonyms as "elevated, eminent, exalted, lofty, noble, proud, steep, tall, towering, uplifted." Prices were all those things (except noble), and a lot more, too.

Take this quick glance:

UP: The Government's Bureau of Labor Statistics continued its monotonous recital: Prices were a-wing still, up another 0.3% for a ninth new record in as many weeks. Average wholesale prices for 900 basic commodities were 154% above the 1926 average and 30.1% above a year ago.

Dun & Bradstreet's index of 31 "general use" foods stood at $6.71, compared with $6.64 a week ago; $4.48 a year ago. (Raisin prices declined, if that's any solace for you.)

WHEAT: $2.62½ a bushel in Chicago, highest prices ever for delivery in September.

OATS: September oats sold for $1.13⅛, all-time top for any month.

CORN: Yellow variety sold at $2.55 1-2, a new high, 19 cents above the previous record, set in 1917.

BEEF: Choice to prime Iowa-fed steers sold at $35 a hundred pounds. This is a new high, even above last November, then considered the millenium. It was also against the seasonal trend and economists stunned.

BUTTER: It was up to 90 cents a pound retail in New York and was expected to hit $1.

EGGS: Seemed on their way to 90 cents a dozen.

TRAVEL: Without holding any hearings, the Interstate Commerce Commission granted a rate increase of from 1 to 48.9% on Pullman sleeper accommodations. The lowest rate for a lower berth goes up from $2.35 to $3.50. All other sleeper accommodations, with a few minor exceptions, are increased in proportion. Tourist sleeper is included. Effective date: 20 days after Pullman tips off the public.

THE FUTURE: The worst is expected to come next spring, when the full impact of this year's floods and drought are to smack us.

REMEDIES: A Federal judge in Chicago ordered a special grand jury investigation of H. C. L. . . . A Joint Congressional Committee was about to start off with the same view in mind . . . Sen. Flanders (R., Vt.) lugubriously warned that failure to prevent further price rises would be "disastrous politically" for Republicans . . . Nobody had done anything yet about the CIO call for a return to price control.

Viscose Workers Extend Contract

CIO Textile workers in 7 American Viscose plants have ratified an amendment to their present contract, which extends the agreement "at least until Nov. 30, 1948."

The contract applies to plants at Roanoke and Front Royal, Va.; Parkersburg and Nitro, W. Va.; and Lewiston, Meadville and Marcus Hook, Pa.

LIFE IS PRETTY SIMPLE for Mr. and Mrs. Porfirio Rubirosa—she's Doris Duke, to you. A thirty-million-dollar fortune, extracted by Doris's daddy from southern electric power and tobacco holdings, give her a cushion against rising prices. Homes on New York's Park Avenue; at Somerville, N. J.; Palm Beach, Fla., and Paris amply solve Doris's housing problem. For her marriage to Rubirosa—he's honorary representative in Paris for Dominican dictator Trujillo—Doris wore diamonds in her earrings, haircomb and gold necklace. They'll live in Paris, where the bride makes believe she's a working girl in her "job" as correspondent for Harper's Bazaar, Hearst's fancy fashion magazine.

5 Of 64 Who 'Run' U. S. Are In CIO

Five CIO officials are listed among the 64 most influential men in America by Author John Gunther in an article in the current '47 Magazine.

The five are: Pres. Philip Murray, Secy.-Treas. James Carey, Auto Workers Pres. Walter Reuther, Pres. Harry Bridges of the CIO Longshoremen and Warehousemen, and Jack Kroll, director of CIO-PAC. Three AFL leaders were mentioned: William Green, John L. Lewis and David Dubinsky.

Seventeen years ago, James W. Gerard, then ambassador to Germany, released a list of 64 Americans whom he declared ran the United States. Gerard's 1930 list included 62 financial and business tycoons and two labor leaders in contrast to Gunther's selections.

Gunther's list includes 18 men who were or are connected with the federal government, seven in localized political activities, six in publishing, three clergymen, three scientists, two representatives of "pressure groups," a leader of a racial-tolerance organization and eight labor leaders.

Pupils Laud CIO School

Students of the CIO Summer School at Hampton, Va., last week sent the following letter of gratitude to the CIO Research & Education Dept., which had conducted the session:

"We the students of the Hampton CIO School wish to thank you for making it possible for us to attend this school. We do say without doubt that we have gained much information of all phases of the CIO leadership training. We suggest that this school be continued next year, so that others may gain the same benefits that we have.

"We feel that we have learned much at this school that will help us to be more active in our local unions. I'm sure that you will notice an increase in the political activity of our community, and if you visit our locals you will find us taking a leading part in all of the activity of the local.

"The stay at Hampton was very pleasant although we were kept very busy, and was much enjoyed by all."

Drive To Lick 20 Congressmen

Joseph Germano, new president of the Illinois State CIO, has announced a drive to defeat 20 Illinois Congressmen next year. All 20 voted to override President Truman's veto of the Taft-Hartley Law.

Simultaneously, Germano named Sam Levin, Amalgamated Clothing Workers, and Frank Annunzio, Steelworkers, to head the drive. Levin preceded Germano as State CIO chief; Annunzio is State legislative director for his union. Germano is also a Steelworker.

The 20 Congressmen (all Republicans): Sen. Brooks, and Reps. Vail (2d District), Busbey (3d), Owens (7th), Twyman (9th), Church (10th), Reed (11th), Mason (12th), Allen (13th), Johnson (14th), Chiperfield (15th), Dirksen (16th), Arends (17th), Jenison (18th), McMillen (19th), Simpson (20th), Howell (21st), Vursell (23d), Clippinger (24th) and Stratton (At Large).

Why Nursery Schools?

Who thinks that Mother love alone will turn infants into good members of society? Mothers, rich and poor alike, know that they need all the help they can get. How many homes can provide the space and apparatus vital to physical development? How many parents can provide satisfactory playmates and the kind of supervision that will help their children play constructively with other children? Now's the time to look for a good nursery school or try to establish a cooperative play group in your neighborhood.

Summer School In Rockies Attracts 60 CIO Students

HIGH up in the Rockies 60 CIO members from six western states came together as summer school students for three days last week.

By the time the CIO session drew to a close, they had, among other things, picked up ten new CIO songs, a lot of "know-how" on building an effective education program in their unions, and a definite idea of what political action measures should be taken in their districts come registration and election time.

Held at Estes Park camp in Denver, Colo., the school was the sixth of those conducted this summer by the national CIO Research & Education Dept. Others were held at Monteagle, Tenn.; Bloomington, Ind.; Tyler, Minn.; Wallingford, Pa.; and Hampton, Va. A one-week school, being held at the Montebello Vacation Camp near St. Louis, Mo., this week, will wind up the national CIO summer school program.

"Professors" at the Denver school included Mrs. Verda Barnes, Director of the Women's Division of CIO-PAC, who conducted a course on political action, and Harvey O'Connor, CIO Oil Workers' publicity director and editor of the Oil Workers' newspaper, who taught community and public relations techniques. Charles Graham, former NLRB director in Denver, discussed the Talf-Hartley Act; Louise Evans, of the Colorado Unity Council, conducted a class on discrimination. A course on the development of an effective union education program was taught by E. E. Phelps, research and education director of the Oil Workers; George Gurnsey, assistant CIO Education Director and Stuart Brock, Gurnsey's assistant. Lee Fryer, assistant to Jim Patton, president of the Farmer's Union, headed a course in farmer-labor cooperation.

The student body was composed of members of the Oil, Steel, Public, Mine, Mill, Retail, Rubber, Packinghouse, Office & Professional Unions and the Newspaper Guild. They were from Montana, Utah, Wyoming, Colorado, Texas, and Kansas. Some had brought their families with them, and had combined serious study and an outdoor vacation by staying in the camp's cabins and cooking in the open.

An open meeting on Labor Day brought the school to a close. CIO President Philip Murray addressed the gathering via transcription. Harvey O'Connor outlined the early history of American labor, followed by Michael Livoda, Regional CIO director in Denver, who traced 37 years of labor history in Colorado. Other speakers were William Hascome, Washington legislative representative of the Oil Workers, and William Rickey, head of District 2 of the Oil Workers.

U. S. Accuses Rails Of Overcharge

The Dept. of Justice has filed a complaint with the Interstate Commerce Commission, seeking to recover $30,000,000 to $40,000,000 from 717 railroads it accuses of overcharging the Government on shipments of explosives and ammunition during the war.

Atty. Gen. Clark said repeated efforts had been made by the armed forces during the war to obtain lower rates, but the railroads "persistently refused." Clark declared "the ammunition traffic was most profitable to the railroads."

53 U.S. COMPANIES LINKED TO I.G.

DIRTY linen from the hampers of the big Nazi I. G. Farben chemical cartel came to light last week at the U. S. war crimes trial in Nuremberg —along with the names of 53 American corporations which had kept close contact with the German big business.

In 1937, the secret documents seized by the U. S. Army reveal, Georg von Schnitzler, an IG executive, returned from a visit to America with glowing reports that "I. G. relations with duPont have been further strengthened."

Five American companies were revealed as direct sales agencies in the U. S. for the combine: American Cyanamid & Chemical Corp.; Ivan B. Dahl, Inc.; General Drug Co.; Interstate Chemical Co.; and Roehm & Hass Co. of Philadelphia.

Nine companies were cited as "participating in upwards of 5% of their business" with IG: Atlas Powder, Bristol Myers, Eastman Kodak, European Gas & Electric, Hercules Powder Co., Standard Oil of New Jersey, Sterling Products, United Drug Co., and Vegex, Inc.

In addition, a larger group of companies was cited without direct indication of the amount they had participated in dealings with IG..

U. S. attorneys prosecuting the German corporation bigwigs have charged that Farben sought agreements which would hinder development of technological and chemical processes useful to other countries in case of war.

It is recalled that in the days after Pearl Harbor, government investigators charged that agreements between Standard Oil of New Jersey and IG had slowed down this country's production of synthetic rubber.

The Nuremberg prosecutors hope to prove to the war crimes court that IG, operating at the top level of Nazi policy-making, operated through a total of 700 companies in 104 countries.

The company helped the Nazis through espionage as well as through trade agreements; that it contributed huge amounts both to the Nazi party, in Germany and to sister Nazi political groups in Chile, Poland, Turkey, Colombia, Peru, Belgium; and that it financed German schools in Holland, Argentina, Spain, Finland, Uruguay, Bolivia and Brazil.

Documents placed in the trial record by the American attorneys showed 53 U. S. firms had been associated directly with IG. At the same time, the papers showed clearly that IG—22 of whose directors are on trial for war crimes—had served as a principal behind-the-scenes element in the Nazis' drive for world conquest.

Some $12,000,000 was contributed by the big corporation to the Nazis back in 1933-34, when Hitler was mopping up opposition within Germany from workers, liberals and religious leaders. The company gave $300,000 to Rudolf Hess, Hitler's chief sidekick, just three days before the crucial 1933 elections which gave Hitler the basis for his power.

Some $4 million was paid directly into the Adolf Hitler Fund, the Nazi Party's chief reservoir of money, during 1933, the court was shown. The hated SS received $200,000 of IG money, and the SA (storm troopers) picked up $50,000 from the company.

WAA Turns Down 'Quoddy Plan

The Government has turned thumbs down on the Passamaquoddy Displaced Persons Project, the Washington Post reported last week.

The project, opposed by the CIO, AFL and Rail Brotherhoods, would have allowed a private manufacturer to operate 'Quoddy Village as a "training school" for D. P.'s, who would receive no pay and would have to be transshipped to South America after six months.

Sen. Owen Brewster (R., Me.), sponsored the project, since 'Quoddy is near Eastport, Me. Ted Silvey was the CIO member of the War Assets Administration labor committee which strenuously opposed the project.

BRITISH LABOR BACKS MANPOWER CONTROLS

BRITAIN'S powerful Trades Union Congress has approved unprecedented controls by government over the country's job market.

The TUC, meeting at Southport, England, for its annual convention, took the momentous step to give the Labor government power to order particular workers to particular jobs in any industry in the nation.

The union decision, made as the United Kingdom slipped deeper into its pressing economic crisis, was accompanied by pledges from Labor Party spokesmen that all union rights would be protected.

With agreement from the trade union organizations on the issue, the government will move ahead with plans to pull workers out of industries which do not contribute directly to the country's economic well-being.

The motion was heatedly debated at the TUC convention, with many of the speakers demanding equal sacrifice from other groups in British society, and particularly from "parasites, spivs, drones, coupon clippers and industry." "Spiv" is a British slang word for a "sharpie."

The government's plan was outlined to the union delegates by George Isaacs, Minister of Labor and a former TUC chairman. He said the full brunt of the new government powers will be used to put into productive work "those who live on the efforts of others," and to move in on those "who do no work."

Isaacs concluded his appeal for action with a reminder that "this is a call . . . that comes to you from a workers' government."

Although there were some dissenting viewpoints as to how the country might best work its way out of the financial crisis, the TUC program quickly picked up solid support when Sec. Vincent Tewson promised that the unions' general council would consult closely with government leaders on every step of the program.

The TUC action, involving peacetime sacrifices by labor never before made in the British Isles, was predicted several weeks ago when the powerful Transport & General Workers Union went on record for some form of limited manpower controls.

The convention called for an over-all economic plan for the country, with a program of priorities and production targets. It urged a "bold policy" to end imperialist commitments and insure close trade relations "with all other democratic countries building a planned economy."

15½-Cent Increase To Service Union

The CIO Transport Service Employes last week signed an agreement with 16 eastern railroads providing a 15½c hourly wage increase.

Similar pacts were expected to be signed with western and southern companies soon. The pattern was set earlier by an arbitration award which boosts the basic hourly wage to 91c.

Carry Dough Back To Ole Virginny

It's profitable to be a businessman in Virginia—but not so hot for the worker.

The Department of Labor and Industry of the Commonwealth of Virginia, in a report for the biennial ended Dec. 31, 1946, had this to say:

"1945 marked the all-time high in total income payments to individuals in Virginia. The aggregate income of $2,778,000,000 represents a gain of $48,000,000 over 1944 and an increase of 15% since 1939.

"During 1945 wages and salaries fell off $59,300,000 from the previous year, but this loss was more than made up by gains in proprietors' incomes, increased returns from property and 'other income' . . . The per capita income in 1945 was $903 as compared with $888 for 1944 and $422 for 1929."

("Proprietors' income" and "other income" are profits).

World Labor

NEW ZEALAND workers view with "grave concern" the Taft-Hartley Act, and are anxious to see it repealed.

The New Zealand Federation of Labor, which met at Wellington early this summer, called upon the World Federation of Trade Unions "to give all possible assistance to the American trade union movement in their struggles to have the repressive legislation repealed."

The New Zealanders also called upon the British Labor government to intervene with the Greek regime to end repressive policies against Greek trade unions. Noting the mere "armed truce between nations," the federation asked the WFTU to probe military assistance to Greece and Turkey and to take such steps as would prevent a third world war from taking place.

LABOR DAY greetings to the CIO from 2½ million organized workers in Poland were forwarded to Pres. Philip Murray last week by Pres. Witaszewski and Sec. Kurlowicz.

"We understand your fight against the reactionary forces which threaten trade union rights and we believe in the righteousness of your cause," the message said.

"We associate ourselves with you in your fight for a better world without wars, without oppression of man by man; a world of brotherhood, peace and plenty for all."

STATE OWNERSHIP of the private banking industry has become a prime objective of the Australian labor movement, according to an Allied Labor News report.

Uniting forces, the unions have lined up solidly behind proposals by Prime Minister J. F. Chifley to place the banks under government ownership. Big financial interests and the press have opened a tremendous propaganda campaign against the proposals.

Union supporters of the prime minister are reported to regard the nationalization campaign as necessary to keep Australian banking system from falling completely into the hands of New York and London financiers. ALN reports fears that Australia would be badly affected by the British economic crisis and a possible U. S. recession.

CHINESE UNIONS have been forced to go underground in areas controlled by Chiang Kai-shek's nationalist government, Pres. Chu Hsueh-fan of the Chinese Association of Labor, reported in Washington last week.

Visiting the United States after attending the World Federation of Trade Unions meeting in Europe in mid-summer, Chu said that more than 40 CAL leaders have been arrested this year. Headquarters of the organization are in British-controlled Hong-Kong.

SPIRALING PRICES SHOW PROBE LONG OVERDUE

WITH a Nationwide investigation of prices about to begin, trends last week showed that the inquiry was long past due.

Dun & Bradstreet's index of wholesale food prices rose 31 cents to $7.02, which was, as it sounds, an all-time high.

Up went the prices of flour, wheat, corn, rye, oats, barley, beef, hams, bellies, lard, butter, cheese, coffee, cottonseed oil, cocoa, eggs, potatoes, steers, hogs and lambs. (Raisins again declined in price, which again was small solace).

The week before, D & B's index rose seven cents.

Hard on the heels of D & B came the Labor Dept.'s weekly index of wholesale prices of 900 commodities.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics took a deep breath and said it again: prices had set a new post-war high for the eighth week in a row. The rise this time was 0.6%, which was twice as much as the previous week. Now, the index was 27% over a year ago and 54.9% above the key year of 1926. The high level was dangerously close to the all-time peak of 1920.

Sen. Myers (D., Pa.), a minority member of the Joint Committee on the Economic Report, held a news conference which was sort of a pre-view of the price hearings.

Myers told reporters that a special session of Congress should be called in November to consider the dual problems of European aid and prices, which two topics, he said, "are closely related and should be considered at the same time."

Myers said he recommended November for the session because by that time the Joint Committee would have its job finished. Myers called prices our "economic Pearl Harbor."

The price the Nation was paying for the end of OPA was highlighted by these:

SPREAD: A five-State food chain of 320 stores posted signs in its windows urging its Eastern customers to protest high butter prices by buying margarine instead. Butter then had passed 90 cents wholesale, going up fast, and margarine companies immediately announced a five-cent-a-pound reduction.

GLASS: Atty. Gen. Clark started an anti-trust drive against two of the top U. S. glass manufacturers, charging conspiracy to monopolize the fiber glass industry. Targets were Owens-Illinois and Corning.

Glass fiber is a significant new material important for housing insulation, electrical materials, fireproof draperies and curtains and other fabrics and roofing construction.

RAILS: Commutation rates were raised an average of 20%, hitting hard at the pocketbooks of the 5:15 crowd. Railways, demanding an immediate 10% freight rise while their plea for a 27% rise was heard, met at least a temporary rebuff when the Government said hearings must come first. Consumers were dumbstruck at the pending impact of the freight rise.

INCOME: A new high annual rate of $197,000,000,000 was hit in July for personal income (your wages or salary and the boss's net income of proprietorship and partnerships, dividends and interest, net rent receipts and similar types). The new high was $2,000,000,000 above the June rate.

BEEF: The Agriculture Dept., said meat will be of poorer quality as well as less plentiful in the coming winter and spring. Also, as if anybody needed to have it rubbed in, higher in price.

CORN: One reason for the above was an announcement, also by Agriculture, that the corn crop this year will be 2,403,000,000 bushels, which is 884,000,000 below last year's crop and the smallest yield in 11 years.

REMEDIES: Some Americans were buying up platinum, which costs nearly twice as much as gold, to hoard as a safeguard against inflation. But, the CIO, more long-sighted, was preparing its material for PRICE HEARINGS: The Joint Committee started its sessions in Boston Sept. 15, which is the same date you see down at the bottom of this page.

Taft Solves Price Crisis: Eat Less

Sen. Robert A. Taft (R., O.), who gave us the Taft-Hartley law, now has a solution for high prices.

His solution: Eat less!

Taft, interviewed at Santa Cruz, Calif., last week, admitted cautiously that high prices had created a "very serious situation." He didn't think there was much chance of the return of price controls, he said, because in his opinion it would be difficult to enforce them in peace times.

"Eat less meat and eat less extravagantly," Taft counseled Americans, coining a new slogan: "Voluntary reduction of consumption."

Steel Union Says:

Expansion A Must For Our Industry

CAN the nation afford not to expand the basic steel industry, of strategic importance to almost every mass production industry?

"No" was the resounding answer of the CIO United Steelworkers last week.

We can't expand because it might hurt our profit position in the future, was the reply of a large majority of the big steel producers.

The crucial necessity of enlarging steel plant capacity was emphasized in testimony presented to the Senate Small Business Committee by USA-CIO Research Director Otis Brubaker. Sen. Martin (R. Pa.), an enthusiastic advocate of the Taft-Hartley act, was the sole member of the Senate on hand to hear the discussion.

As it ended, Martin conferred briefly with a few staff advisors, then announced that his committee had "no questions at this time."

If private enterprise can't or won't act in the public interest, Brubaker said, then government must step in to build or lease the necessary plant to give the country the steel it needs.

"We face a serious steel shortage, and worse still, a capacity shortage," the steel union representative warned the committee. Steel, "hitherto in the van of our progress," has fallen behind its sister industries. "Unless corrected, this imbalance inevitably means depression," Brubaker predicted.

THE steel union offered four reasons for public action to lift output of the basic metal:

1. The long range requirements of a prosperity program that will provide jobs for all workers.

2. The immediate and future needs of "prostrate" Europe and Asia, as well as the lucrative exports to Latin America.

3. The apparent decision of the industry to buck any effective expansion of steel mills.

4. The need for larger quantities of steel to support the domestic economy and to meet American commitments throughout the world.

NOT only production, but even capacity to produce, are well below present needs, Brubaker told the committee. Demand by 1950 may reach 120 million tons of ingots; while top capacity now is only 91 million tons.

The USA-CIO representative, referring to a steel study made by a government economist, declared, "the industry has relied too much on its experience during the 1930's" in deciding against expansion of plants. "If this decision is allowed to stand, it will eventually bring depression," he charged.

Brubaker told the Senate group, "The steel industry appears smug and intransigeant." Production is high, prices are going higher, profits are the best since 1929, and orders are on hand to keep the mills running for months.

Nevertheless, a failure to expand or a determination to contract production to semi-depression levels will injure the country, Brubaker said.

"The cost of expansion is tremendous, but it can be met by the industry from its present working capital, from its current high profit margins, and from capital borrowing," he pointed out.

HE called upon the committee to get a complete picture of the steel industry viewpoint, and seek a program expansion, perhaps with the assistance of low-interest RFC loans. If the industry refuses, "there is no alternative except for the government itself to build and lease the necessary facilities," the union spokesman declared.

One industrialist who preaches the need of more steel production is Henry J. Kaiser, whom the committee has not yet seen fit to invite as a witness.

An intent listener during the Brubaker testimony, Kaiser later told reporters that the steel shortage is "very serious."

"The high cost of automobiles is due entirely to steel; the West is being isolated because there is a very serious steel famine there. It is appalling."

Sees Disaster If Steel Doesn't Boost Capacity

AFL BOARD REFUSES TO SIGN AFFIDAVITS

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

THE AFL and Atty. Gen. Clark had taken the spotlight from Taft-Hartley Law Boss Robert M. Denham as the CIO News went to press.

1. The AFL Executive Council, meeting in Chicago, voted to refrain from signing the non-Communist affidavits demanded by T-H and Denham because the law is "reprehensible, vicious and destructive of the workers' civil and legal rights."

2. Clark said that a master list of Communist and Fascist organizations the Justice Dept. considers subversive would be revealed soon. This list would be used in checking on signers of T-H affidavits and in the Government's current "loyalty" campaign.

AFL Pres. William Green, in announcing that the AFL "could not conform to Denham's rules," did not reveal what the Council's vote was. In answer to questions as to what next month's AFL convention might do on the affidavits, he said it was up to the delegates whether or not the topic would be discussed.

Under Denham's rulings, no local or union affiliated with either the AFL or CIO could obtain the services of the National Labor Relations Board unless the "officers" of the parent AFL or CIO sign the affidavit.

Clark's action so stunned Washington observers that there was no immediate reaction to the possible far-reaching effects of such a list and the uses for which it is intended.

Clark announced that there was some doubt as to a number of organizations and that therefore officials of such groups would be called in for personal interviews. A decision would be made as a result of these meetings and also from FBI findings.

Another list was issued five years ago by former Atty. Gen. Francis Biddle. Clark said that from time to time names of organizations may be added to the list. The list will be handed to the Loyalty Review Board by Clark. That board is the one to which Federal employes facing disloyalty discharge may appeal.

Injuries Decrease

On-the-job injuries in manufacturing industries have dropped to a 5-year low, the U. S. Dept. of Labor announced.

A survey of 10,000 employers indicated that about 123,000 workers were injured at work during the second quarter of this year.

Democracy sans T-H: The CIO Steelworkers here show how a union can win recognition without recourse to the NLRB. Rev. Martin E. Muzik, pastor of St. Eulalia's Catholic Church, Maywood, Ill., counts ballots in an American Can Co. election agreed on by the union and management. USA won, 55-13. Standing behind Father Muzik are William Moran, USA-District 31, representative, and Charlotte McLeod, a member. Al Zappen, another member, in foreground. Father Muzik agreed to preside at the ballot at the request of both parties, who considered him impartial. The determination, used frequently in the past, has been suggested as a means of protecting labor's rights under the new law. USA-CIO has several American Can contracts.

SEN. WAGNER SAYS:

I have no intention of resigning...God Has Way of helping Those Trying to Carry on His Work

Following is the statement of Sen. Robert F. Wagner (D., N.Y.), father of the Wagner Act, denying he plans to resign:

"I have no intention of resigning from the Senate. I never have had. It never has been suggested to me by anyone that I should resign.

"To the contrary, my friends have been concerned solely with their wishes for my speedy recovery from a rather serious illness and their desire that I fight with all my vigor for adoption of the Taft-Ellender-Wagner Housing Act and repeal of the pernicious Taft-Hartley Labor Law. Needless to say I am extremely hopeful of success in both these major endeavors.

"Frankly, I have been quite puzzled by the persistency with which my rumored retirement from the Senate has been kept alive.

"Oddly enough, no one has ever taken the trouble to ask me, my son, Commissioner Robert F. Wagner, Jr., who is closest to me, or my secretaries in New York and Washington about the matter.

"THE thought occurs to me that the Republicans appear slightly over-eager to provide Governor Dewey with an opportunity to appoint one of their party to a seat in the United States Senate, which the voters have denied them for a quarter of a century. I am quite sure, however, that Gov. Dewey has had no part in their scheming.

"Failure of the American Legion to endorse the Housing measure on which Sen. Taft, Sen. Ellender and I collaborated has, in no way, changed my views.

"I believe that domestic treason is being perpetrated on the American veterans and their fellow citizens by the money-mad real estate lobby and their unholy representatives in Congress.

SEN. ROBERT F. WAGNER

Taft-Hartley Law is "bad in concept and evil in its objective."

"WHEN the Republicans came into power the real estate lobby was able to achieve control where before they were restrained.

"These economic vultures have not only prevented the Government from carrying out a necessary and comprehensive housing program but have succeeded in destroying an effective rent control program, a system of material priority for veterans' housing; put obstacles in the way of revising housing codes and ordinances and have become the silent but chief beneficiaries from high-priced construction materials.

"The housing problem must be solved. I know of no better cause to which I can dedicate myself.

"I feel quite as strongly about the present Taft-Hartley Labor Law. I believe it bad in concept and evil in its objective which, I insist, is the start of a long-range attempt to render impotent the labor union movement in this country.

"There is a great deal of wishful thinking about my health, my tenure in the Senate and my ability to get in there and fight it out. God has a way of helping those who are trying to carry on His work—'to harbor the harborless.'

"The last few months I have been conserving my energy and rebuilding my health and I know of no better way of using them than to assist in undoing the slick organization plans of the Joint Committee on Housing and their real estate bosses as well as those forces now joined in a giant conspiracy to enslave again the laboring men and women of our country."

BETTER THAN A CRASH

MOST Americans are constitutionally opposed to price control. They simply do not like to have the government riding herd on prices.

That's why it's interesting—and important—to note than an increasingly large number of persons are now saying that "we may have to go back to something like the OPA."

They are talking that way because they are angered and frightened by the present price situation.

The anger stems from the fact that prices keep going up—despite the assurance of those who killed OPA that "only a slight adjustment" in the price structure would follow the end of control.

The fright results from an increasing belief that the nation is heading for an economic disaster caused by uncontrolled inflation.

The situation has become so serious that it no longer can be brushed aside with a statement that "everything will work itself out OK."

Specific action is needed—and needed now.

We believe it would be better for the nation if business, industry and agriculture would take voluntary action that not only would stop price increases but would result in price reductions.

We would rather have it that way—but price control would be preferable to an economic crash.

It would be better for prices to be held in line now by governmental regulation than to be forced down—way down—later by mass unemployment.

Worthwhile Lesson

THE recent election in the Eighth Pennsylvania Congressional District, where the labor-endorsed candidate was badly beaten, proves again an old political tenet—that it is almost impossible in a short campaign to beat a highly-geared political organization.

In the Eighth District the Republican machine of Boss Grundy marched its voters to the polls in record numbers. PAC and other labor groups hadn't organized long enough and couldn't do likewise.

Democratic Candidate Phil Storch, backed by labor, made a good fight. He showed himself to be a man of high calibre in the midst of a campaign in which his opposition resorted to a smear campaign that bordered on slander.

The lesson to be learned is a hard one. It is that labor must organize now—not next year—for the 1948 political campaign. CIO members must not wait until a month or so before the November elections to throw their support behind PAC.

To win a campaign you have to have a good candidate—such as Phil Storch was. You've got to have a stirring issue—and the Taft-Hartley Law is such an issue.

But you've also got to organize—and organize from bottom to top. That's what CIO members, through PAC, must do soon if they're going to put into office men sympathetic to organized labor.

If Sen. Robert A. Taft were to ever become president, would he be known by his initials as T.R. and F.D.R. were?

Frank Hague has announced, "I am not retired from politics; maybe I'll be Public Nuisance No. 1." Move over, Messrs. Taft and Hartley.

'Free Enterprise' Shouters Are Really Asking For It!

By ALLAN L. SWIM

THOSE who shout the loudest today for "preservation of the free enterprise system" are doing the most to bring about its destruction.

This, of course, they will deny.

Denial, however, will have little effect on the results of their economic and political misdeeds.

They think they can continue to get by with what they're doing—and that's good enough for them.

THIS is not an attack on the free enterprise system. It is an attack on the men and corporations who abuse the system.

No effort will be made here to determine whether these men and corporations are prompted by stupidity, greed or downright cussedness.

Motives, in this case, are relatively unimportant. Actions are what count.

THE No. 1 crusade of the "free enterprise shouters" has long been for the elimination of "governmental interference." At least that's what they claimed.

But what they really sought—and in some cases obtained—was elimination of governmental regulation of their own pet projects.

But they were solidly behind rigid control of labor unions. They backed the Taft-Hartley Law and various state anti-union measures.

They claimed that subsidies which took the form of tariffs and freight rate differentials were good for "free enterprise" but that subsidies for badly-needed housing were extremely bad.

IT'S not hard to make a case against the "shouters". You don't have to, though. They are making a convincing case against themselves.

The price situation is a prize example.

The nation was told that if the OPA was killed production would increase and that prices through free competition would soon reach a "satisfactory" level.

OPA has been dead a long time—and prices are still going up—and up—and up!

Many persons who went along with the "kill OPA" crowd because they had an honest dislike for governmental regulation are now talking openly about reinstitution of price control.

REMEMBER what was happening 20 years ago?

Prices were climbing higher and higher and purchasing power was beginning to sink.

Then came 1928—then '29—then the crash. A long and terrible depression followed—and hungry, hopeless men began to question the value of our economic system.

The guys in the breadlines didn't make speeches about free enterprise. The soup kitchens weren't good advertisements for the capitalistic system.

A man named Roosevelt was elected to office, and he gave the nation new hope. He gave it more than hope. He gave it action. Some of his schemes may have gone sour. But he led the country from the economic depths.

THE "shouters" now condemn most of the things Roosevelt stood for. They are leading the nation along a path similar to that followed before the last depression.

They are taking all the traffic will bear. They are blowing up a bubble that can break quickly—and disastrously.

They are making it awfully tough for those who believe the free enterprise system could be made to function efficiently for the good of the many instead of the aggrandizement of the few.

CONGRESSMAN DRIPP BY YOMEN

"I WONDER WHY WE'RE SO UNPOPULAR."

British Labor Holds Support

SERIOUS economic difficulties, bumbling conduct of Palestinian problems, and the fanciest campaign oratory of Winston Churchill have been unable to shake the support of British workers for their Labor Government.

A special by-election for Parliament last week indicated that British workers have no intention of throwing over their own party for a new era of Tory rule. At Liverpool, the Labor Party candidate scored a clear 2000 margin over his Conservative opponent.

The contest was a stright-out test of party strength, with both the Labor Party-ites and the Conservatives throwing in their top campaigners to argue national policy. Churchill had warned the voters that continued Labor Party rule would bring the country to ruin and chaos.

But the British voters, in a display of political action which U.S. workers can admire, rallied to the Labor Party standard. The victory added another notch to the unprecedented string of 100% wins for the Labor Party in every special election test since the national vote in the summer of 1945.

THAT British workers are prepared to make unusual sacrifices for their party was amply demonstrated during the recent convention of the British Trades Union Congress. That body—the central organization of labor unions—voted approval of plans to grant the government limited powers in the direction of labor, in order that the national economy can be used most fruitfully.

It is inconceivable that such powers would have been granted to a Tory regime.

The TUC took a second step to help the Labor Government seek a path out of Britain's economic difficulties by laying on the table for the present all demands for nationalization of the country's steel industry. Government ownership of basic industries has long been a prime labor demand, and has already been applied to the coal industry.

With coal a principal fever sore on the face of the British economy, government and union officials have sought record production this coming year. The recent strike of some 40,000 miners was a warning, however, that the men who go down under cannot be expected to make all the sacrifices.

GOVERNMENT and union officials have promised to give quick attention to the miners' problems and to review requests for additional production from each worker. The problem is hampered by the age of the British mines and the backwardness of mechanization.

The coal mine troubles, like so many other British problems, have been accumulating for decades under Tory rule, and the Labor Party inherited them all—with interest—when war's end ushered in a period of economic stress.

Although a number of union conventions in recent months have criticized the Labor Government's handling of both foreign and domestic policies, the TUC voted down every resolution critical of the government program.

He Spoke Up When He Needed To But—

HE is a man of unusual courage, a man worthy of praise—but his name won't be mentioned because he has a shortcoming.

Only a few close friends know about his difficulty—a few close friends and a little group of CIO organizers.

The organizers frequently sing his praise, but they refrain from revealing his identity. They appreciated what he did, so they do everything they can to keep him from becoming embarrassed.

That's how they're paying their debt to him.

THE CIO was conducting an important organizing campaign in North Carolina. The opposition became increasingly strong.

The union involved sent one of its top officers to the scene. The CIO Organizing Committee sent in a couple of "trouble shooters" and a publicity man. The state CIO director came in to direct strategy.

It was a touch-and-go situation, and nobody was certain of its outcome.

Then's when the CIO really turned on the heat—and the publicity.

"WE'VE got to have a radio program featuring workers from the mill we're trying to organize," said the state director.

"OK," said the publicity man. "Round up three guys from the plant and send them up to my room. I'll write a script for them."

The mill workers arrived—late in the evening—and the job of putting together a "quickie" got under way.

Finally the script was completed. The publicity man handed out three copies, saying, "You guys meet me here at 8:30 in the morning and we'll go over the script before going on the air at 9."

THERE was a bit of music. Then the announcer said that the CIO was getting ready to present a program containing views which the station was neither endorsing nor refusing to endorse.

The publicity man took over and started shooting questions at his three companions.

The three mill workers, their hands shaking a bit at first and their voices trembling slightly, soon got into the swing of the thing.

They spoke earnestly—and they told the listeners they were for the CIO 100%.

The entire program went well—and ended with split-second timing.

AFTER the program, the state CIO director and the publicity man were talking in a corridor near the studio.

"It sounded mighty good," the director said.

"I thought so, too," said the publicity man. "Those guys really did a swell job. I believe this program will help us considerably."

"I was impressed with J———. I didn't know he had it in him," the director said.

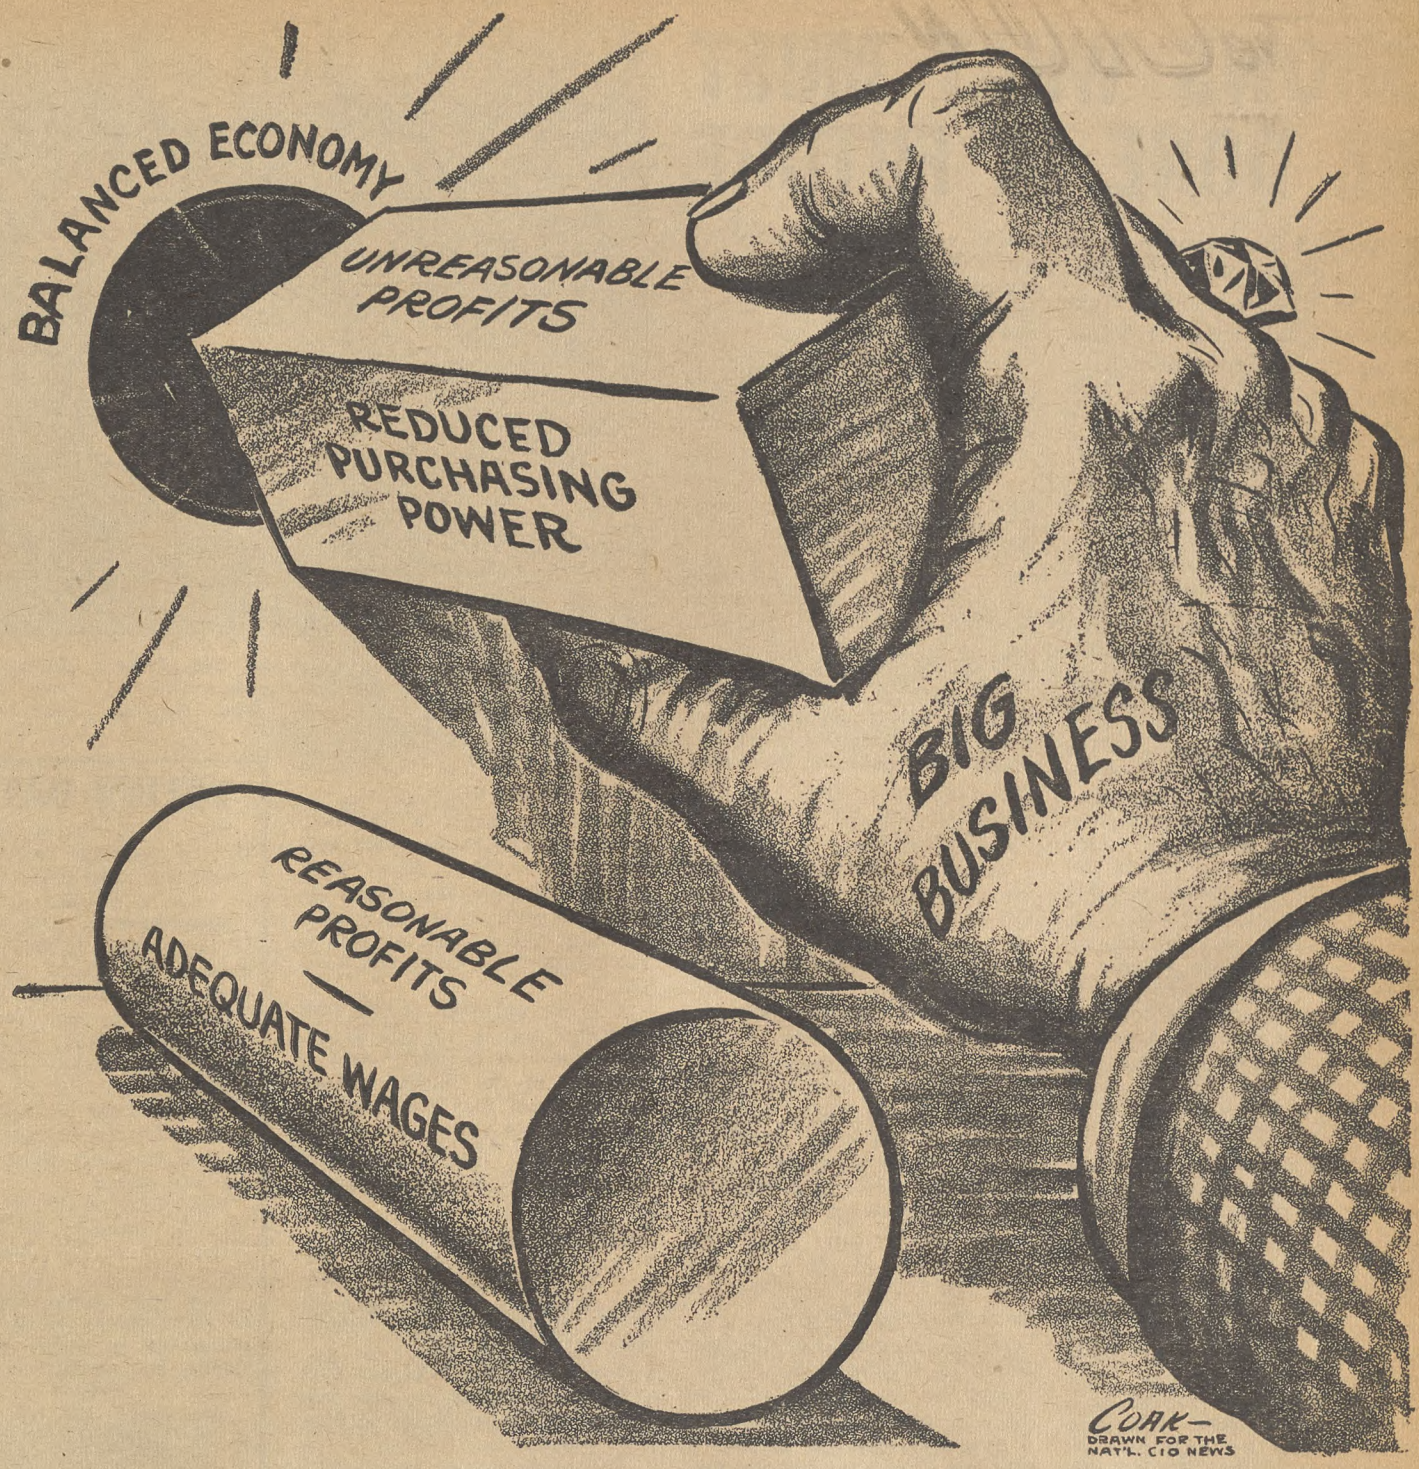
"He was good—but it was odd the way he handled his script. He kept his glance on the paper until he started to speak. Then he spoke right into the mike without looking at the script," said the publicity man.

A DAY or two later a group of men sat around a hotel room, discussing the radio program.

Somebody mentioned the fellow who didn't watch his script when he was speaking. The publicity man said he'd never seen anybody but an expert do it that way.

"Oh, I can explain that," said a mill worker. "J——— stayed up long after midnight memorizing the speech with the help of a neighbor. He had to do it that way because he can't read or write."

TRY THE ROUND PEG



And Why Not A Capitol Day Too? With Signs: 'G.O.P. Needs R.A.T.'?

NEWSWEEK, a magazine which writes admittedly for an upper-income group of readers, bobbed up with a bright idea in its last issue.

Columnist Henry Hazlitt, a frequent apologist for 100% free enterprise, was unhappy about the statements of union leaders on Labor Day. He thinks that to balance things up, the second Monday of September should be set aside as Capital Day.

"Why not devote at least one day to pointing out the importance of profits as a means of guiding output and encouraging capital accumulations and investment, and to emphasizing the importance of investment for providing new jobs, increasing production and raising wages?" Hazlitt asked his readers.

This particular reader wasn't too impressed with the importance of profits as he scanned Hazlitt's words. It so happened that we read it during a pause in testimony by Otis Brubaker, the CIO Steel Union's research director, before the Senate Small Business Committee.

The gist of his remarks boiled down to this: despite the fact that the steel industry has been making record profits, it doesn't appear to be encouraging production or providing new jobs. In fact, said Brubaker, the steel industry is pulling in its productive horns, and unless the industry gets a move on, or the government steps in, we're apt to be facing a right costly depression.

Nevertheless, the idea of an annual Capital Day has a certain appeal.

We'd pay our own expenses to see a Capital Day parade of financiers, corporation presidents and members of Boards of Directors wend their way through the skyscrapers of Wall Street and Lower Manhattan.

It would be unique to see the Cabots, Lodges and Saltonstalls holding their annual mass meeting among the formal flower beds of Boston's Public Gardens; or to see the Armours, Cudahys and Wilsons step smartly up Chicago's Michigan Ave. to the Drake for a round of militant speeches in an atmosphere of rare flowers, good liquor and delicious hors d'oeuvres.

We can see the placards now: "Higher Prices—More Profits"; "We Want More Coupons To Clip"; "The G.O.P. Needs R. A. T. 'Taft.'"

A really enterprising Capital Day Committee perhaps could work up a chorus of junior executives, dressed in attractive black silk gowns to represent the widows and orphans who always conveniently appear to protest against higher wages for corporation employes. And an effective Capital Day affair would certainly include a hammer throw contest between members of the Chamber of Commerce and the National Association of Manufacturers.

More seriously, however, it might do the American public a lot of good to hear directly from the duPonts and the Morgans, the Vanderbilts and the Rockefellers on the relations between profits and full employment, between high prices and the crumbling buying power of the vast wage earning public.

Under those circumstances, the CIO would be glad to present a guest speaker. He might ask why the steel industry so steadfastly opposes expansion of plant to meet the economic demands of the people; or present a few questions on the contrast between free enterprise talk and monopolistic action by big business; or remind the owners of capital that the nation's human resources are far more precious than its gold and greenbacks.

These questions demand constant discussion. For that purpose Capital Day is just as appropriate as any other day of the year.

H.C.F.

Praise Overdue

"I CANNOT restrain my own tensions when I think of the faltering praise which has been given to the American worker for his accomplishments in both war and peace.

"Particularly do I resent the widespread effort that has been made to shoulder the responsibility for increased prices exclusively upon the backs of those who work...

"The reason for it is the hope that the American people will forget statements that the same individuals made in June of last year when they promised that with the lifting of price controls within a few months prices would be lowered."

Pennsylvania:

SHOWS WHAT MUST BE DONE IN FUTURE

LABOR'S drive to win votes for Philip Storch, Democrat, in the 8th Pennsylvania Congressional election resulted in an overwhelming defeat.

Franklin H. Lichtenwalter, GOP Organization candidate for the seat left vacant by the death of oft-elected Republican Charles Gerlach, won over Storch, 47,780 to 30,178. The GOP percentage was the highest in history.

Though all fully realized that Lichtenwalter had a wide margin in registration in his favor and that Gerlach usually won by 15,000 or better, a united labor group of CIO, AFL, Railroad Brotherhoods and independent unions backed Storch.

GOP politicians, happy over the victory for 8th District (Lehigh and Buck counties) Republican Boss Joe Grundy, all issued statements hailing the results. Carroll Reece, chairman of the Republican National Committee, said in a wire to Lichtenwalter:

"The radical and totalitarian groups which dictate policies of the erstwhile Democratic Party chose your district in a futile effort to prove that the American people were retreating from the progressive and liberal stand taken in the 1946 elections." (emphasis ours).

NOWHERE was labor unity better exemplified than in the shop of the Call-Chronicle newspapers, of which Storch had been a reporter until he was chosen as Democratic candidate.

A few days before the election, an advertisement appeared in the Call-Chronicle, signed by three employes who declared that though they had worked with Storch in the office they were going to vote for Lichtenwalter.

Next day, another ad appeared, signed by 180 Call-Chronicle employes, virtually the entire group, which declared that all were backing Storch. The signers included members of the AFL craft unions, among them many supervisors; circulation employes, non-union people and members of the CIO Lehigh Valley Newspaper Guild, of which Storch is president.

The United Labor group, pledging that "we have just begun to fight," pointed out that the areas in which most work was concentrated were carried. They included seven of the eight Allentown city wards, where door to door canvassing was carried on.

New York City

The Greater New York City CIO Council has mapped a master plan to register every one of 600,000 CIO members, their families and their neighbors. Purpose: "To beat the Taft-Hartleyites at the polls."

The unions, under the plan, will use their all-inclusive shop steward apparatus to get every member out to register and enroll during the city's Registration Week, Oct. 6-11. Volunteers will be recruited for canvassing in residential communities.

A variety of posters, leaflets, union newspaper articles, speakers and sound trucks will be utilized in the drive. The material will be supplied by the CIO-PAC. Shop gate meetings will be numerous.

The drive will stress the thought that only by registering now may a citizen participate in the 1948 spring primaries.

PAC's slogan will be: "Register, Enroll in '47—Get Ready for '48."

This fall, New York's PAC will have its first post-T-H test, when a special election will be held in the 14th District to fill the Congressional vacancy caused by the appointment of Rep. Leo Rayfiel to the Federal bench.

PAC also plans a thorough drive to retain Proportional Representation (The New York Herald Tribune has swung to PR's defense); to secure a state veterans' bonus and to gain a $130,000,000 bond issue for housing.

A prime objective of the PAC campaign will be the special referendum on a 5c fare, which is expected in the spring. Voters are reminded they must register in October to ballot on the fare.

A CIO-PAC fund averaging $2 per member is being collected.

Eager to Learn—Here is a partial view of the 150 CIO local leaders who attended the institute at Midvale. State Council Pres. Carl Holderman urged the delegates to discuss "not the faults of Congress but our own faults and failures."

Sounds Warning—Executive Vice-Pres. George Baldanzi warns the New Jersey Institute on Political Action that "if reaction wins in 1948 the tombstones of labor leaders in Europe will be repeated" in the United States. At the right is Carl Holderman, president of the N. J. CIO Council which sponsored the institute.

Michigan

"Blame Yourself for Poor Senate. Look in the mirror if you want to see why your Senator voted the way he did."

That's how the Michigan CIO-PAC is keynoting its fall vote drive. In the words of the State CIO officers:

"We have learned that in one blow legislators can wipe out contract gains it took us years to achieve. Our gains on the economic front must be protected on the political front.

"We can do it through political action today, tomorrow, and the day after—in our town, in our community, in our block and in our own home. Support the CIO political action campaign fully and continuously Clean out the reactionaries and replace them with officials responsive to the needs and desires of the public."

That was signed by Pres. August Scholle; Secy-Treas. Barney Hopkins and Vice Presidents William T. Pascoe, Joseph McCusker, William Humphreys, Edward J. Cote, Paul Weber, George McLean, Bill Streeter, Don Stevens, Blaine Marrin, Leo Polk, Charles Ziy, William McHugh, Paul Hinckley, Robert Fawkes, Joseph Graber, Malcolm House and Charles Gash.

The Michigan-PAC drive featured publication in the Michigan CIO News of the voting records of state legislators (for example, the 28 Republican state Senators voted "wrong" 100 times and "right" 20 times. The four Democrats voted no "wrongs" and "right" 14 times.)

"Did these Republicans have a mandate to hamstring labor?" asks the CIO paper. "Not a one campaigned on a program of punitive legislation, yet most of them voted for punitive bills."

While labor did succeed in killing some of the worst amendments, the State Little Taft-Hartley Act was perhaps even more vicious than its Federal "daddy." Repeal of that law is No. 1 on the Michigan CIO's plans for state action.

The State CIO News carried timely articles by U. S. Democratic Reps. John Lesinski, John D. Dingell and George G. Sadowski.

Lesinski, a minority member of the House Labor and Education Committee who refused to sign the Taft-Hartley Conference Report, seemed to express the feelings of the three when he declared: "This vicious legislation was un-American."

New Jersey

More than 150 CIO leaders in New Jersey participated at Midvale, N. J., in the two-day Institute on Political Action, sponsored by the State Council and launching the PAC drive for 1948 in this state.

With work concentrated on techniques of political action, the conference got its keynote from Carl Holderman, president of the State Council, who urged the delegates to discuss "not the faults of Congress, but our own faults and failures."

George Baldanzi, executive vice president of the Textile Workers Union, warned the opening general assembly that "if reaction wins in 1948 the tombstones of labor leaders in Europe" will be repeated here.

The conference consisted of three general assemblies, followed by discussion in four smaller groups of the major topic. The three major topics were: Organization and functions of local union PAC's; organization and functions of ward and district clubs; and raising funds for PAC.

Stephen Moran, chairman of the State PAC, speaking on local union PAC's, stressed the need for having people on PAC shop committees.

Outlining the procedure for setting up ward and district clubs, Palmer Weber, national PAC research director, called PAC "the No. 1 job of CIO from now until 1948."

Alexander Barkan, executive secretary of the State Council, describing fund-raising techniques, reported that workers are ready to contribute to PAC "if their leaders will have the guts to explain the issues and the stakes."

Highlight of the institute was the awarding of a "citation" to a scarecrow labeled "Hartley."

Chairmen of the general sessions were Ewald Sandner, regional director; Peter J. Flynn, secretary-treasurer of the State Council; and Charles Serraino, manager of the Passaic Joint Board, TWUA.

Panels on local union PAC's were chaired by Milo Himes, TWUA; Santo Bevocqua, IFLWU; Manlio Valenti, Toy & Novelty Workers; and Steve Siteman, URWDSEA. Ward and district panels were chaired by George Binstead, USA; Dominick DiGalbo, UAW; O. H. Bosley, URWA; and Louise Chapin, ACWA. Chairman of fund-raising panels were: James McLeish, UERMWA; Ralph Spinelli, Dyers; Herb Lerner, IUMMSWA; and David Elliott, UGC&CW.

The institute also featured recreation and a movie and song fest. Songs were led by Milo Himes, educational director of TWUA. Harry Kranz, public relations and educational director for the State Council, was m. c.

N. Y. City Achieves Rent Control

Only the signature of New York Mayor William Dwyer was needed to put into operation a city rent control law giving the city rent commission broad powers to control evictions and establish ceilings. The bill was passed by the City Council and the Board of Estimate without a dissenting vote.

Delegates To WFTU:

LABOR COOPERATES IN JITTERY WORLD

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

IT'S a troubled world, in which governments find increasing difficulty in getting together on simplest issues.

But in the ranks of labor, the World Federation of Trade Unions has demonstrated once once again that the union organizations from scores of nations can reach satisfactory, honest agreement.

That fact is being reported to Pres. Philip Murray and the CIO Executive Board by CIO's three representatives at the WFTU's General Council meeting held in Prague, Czechoslovakia, early this summer. Attending the sessions were Secy-Treas. Frank Rosenblum of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, who is also a CIO vice-president and a WFTU vice-president; CIO Secy-Treas. James B. Carey and Director Michael Ross of the CIO Intl. Affairs Dept.

The Prague meeting took place during a period of diplomatic uncertainty in the great capitals of the world. And it produced a record of which world labor can well be proud.

Even the famed "Times" of London, one of the world's most powerful conservative newspapers, doffed its hat to the WFTU.

Commenting on the meeting, the London Times said its "success . . . surpassed expectations. It was outstanding among recent conferences in which the Soviet Union and Anglo-Saxon countries are represented for the readiness to make reasonable compromises shown on both sides."

The London paper continued: "The practical work which the Federation is beginning can be of great importance. The help it has given in the creation of a democratic German union movement is notable.

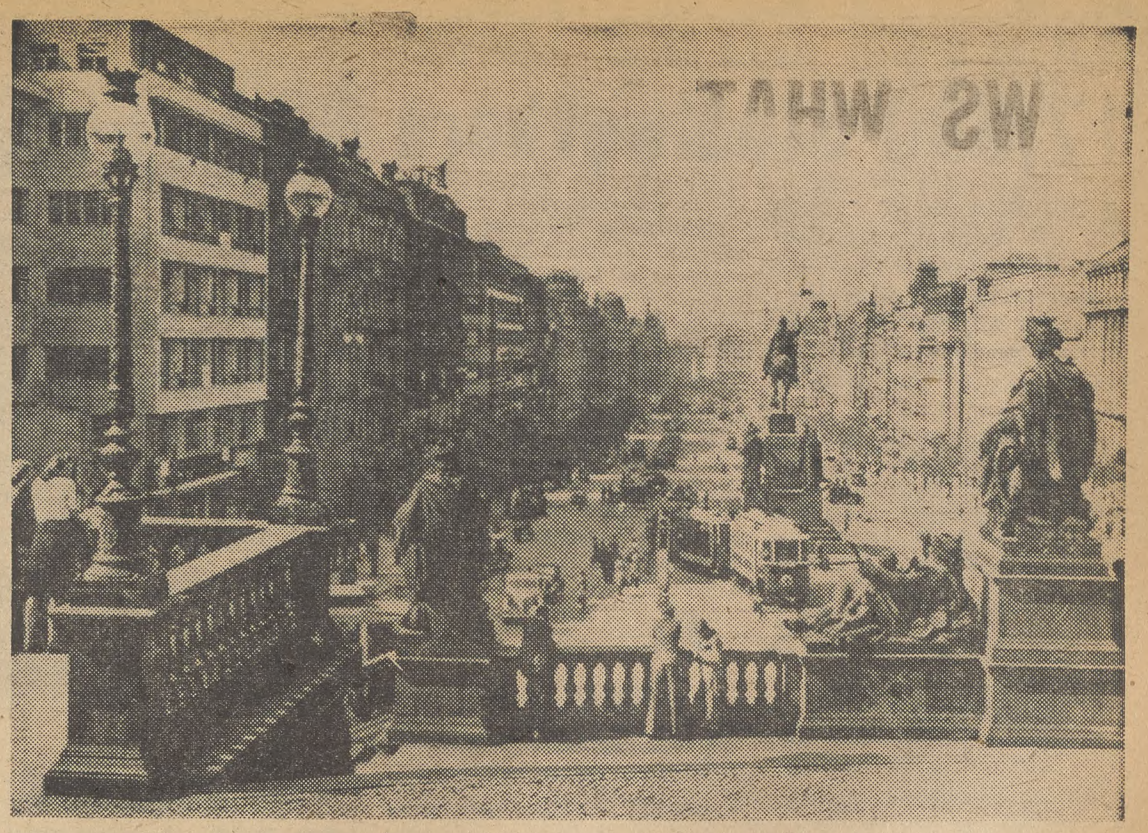
"The Federation has still much to learn by experience; but if it continues as it has begun in its first 20 months, its example in international cooperation might have some influence in wider fields."

What WFTU Did Within 20 Months

Where does the WFTU stand 20 months after its formation at the London World Trade Union Congress during the last phases of the war?

- It has a membership of 71,500,000 workers in 78 national trade union organizations. The AFL is the only significant labor organization in the entire world which has refused to join.
- It has direct representation on the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations; is seeking broader rights in the UN; and has submitted to the UN clearly-drawn ideas for an all-inclusive international charter of labor rights.
- It has given special help to trade union organizations in the colonial countries, and has investigated and assisted the reborn, free labor unions of the former Axis nations. It has taken a leading position in the world-wide campaign for a democratic Spain in which workers' rights will once again be respected.

AT the Prague meeting—the first get-together of the General Council, on which each national labor headquarters has at least one representative — the delegates reviewed past progress and worked out resolutions on important international labor problems now facing the world.



Scene of Parley: Prague, Czechoslovakia one of the few European capitals which escaped the ravages of war, was scene of the World Federation of Trade Unions General Council meeting this summer. CIO and Labor groups from nearly 60 nations took part.

Look To Unions: European workers, like these Czechoslovakian miners, have tremendous post-war problems to overcome. As a result unions on the Continent have zoomed in size and influence. Almost without exception, the European unions are affiliated with the WFTU.

What Was Done To Help World Labor

Here's the line-up on trouble spots and WFTU's action on them:

GERMANY: The WFTU Council urged the German unions—whose membership by the end of 1946 had reached nearly 6.8 millions—to "maintain and reinforce the unity which they have achieved." It recommended that the German unions "intensify their efforts towards denazification and democratic reconstruction."

To the military occupation authorities, the WFTU appealed for greater help for the new German unions, asked for equal representation for the labor organizations on official bodies, and urged a "predominant" place for labor representatives on all committees handling denazification of industry.

The world union organization will establish a Berlin office to help the German unions, and when it is "satisfied with their structure and activity," will recommend their membership in the WFTU.

WFTU Action In Far East

JAPAN and KOREA: A preliminary report on labor in these two countries was accepted by the Council, and plans made for publication of a final report. The WFTU far eastern commission included Willard S. Townsend of the CIO Transport Service Employes.

The WFTU executive bureau will give particular study to the "trade union position" in U. S.-occupied southern Korea, where reports of oppression against workers have been frequent.

SPAIN: The WFTU called on its national affiliates to collect a "solidarity fund" from contributions of workers, the money to be used to help the anti-Franco resistance movement in Spain.

It asked the UN Security Council to seek immediate severance of relations by all countries with Spain, in line with a resolution passed by the Dec. 1946 meeting of the UN General Assembly. The "reasonable delay" mentioned in that decision, the WFTU said, which was established to prove Franco's denial of speech, assembly and press, has been more than sufficient.

"The WFTU is of the firm opinion that should the governments postpone once more by further delays . . . a decision which is eagerly expected by democratic opinion, they would assume . . . the responsibility for the sufferings and ideals which the Madrid Dictator inflicts upon the Spanish people struggling for liberty," the WFTU statement charged.

What Must Be Done To Oust Franco

If the governments represented in the UN really desire action, "the Franco regime would vanish faster" than even the most confirmed optimists expect, the world labor group predicted.

PALESTINE: The General Council recalled that the WFTU had earlier concerned itself with the situation in Palestine, and it noted that hundreds of thousands of Jews still languish in European refugee camps.

It urged prompt action by the UN Assembly on the report of the special investigating committee which recently advocated partition of the Mediterranean country.

The WFTU will send its own investigators to the Holy Land, it was decided. Meantime, it urged both the Jewish and Arabia workers in Palestine (both union groups are affiliated to the WFTU) to seek a basis for good human relations through their unions.

CHINA: The program of the Chinese Association of Labor was fully endorsed by the WFTU as the statement of the only bona fide union group in China—though its president was forced to flee from Shanghai to British-controlled Hong Kong for safety.

To the Chinese government the WFTU sent a message demanding guarantees of human rights, as demanded by the CAL, including the unity of all Chinese workers in one union organization "without regard to political barriers or differences"; and that workers be allowed "to hold public meetings, bargain collectively, strike, and engage in all other normal trade union activities."

Ask Basic Labor Rights In Greece

GREECE: On the touchy situation in Greece, where the Council said conditions "for free and democratic development of unions" are absent, the WFTU set up a program of basic labor rights.

It said that only a Trade Union Congress elected democratically by the various affiliated unions can permit responsible development, and asked the Greek government to "create conditions" which will permit the convening of such a labor congress.

The WFTU's executive bureau will "watch developments carefully," and if no such union elections are permitted without "undue delay," it will conisder how to approach the United Nations on the matter.

A strong protest was sent to the Greek government over continuing arrests of union officials and members, and it demanded that the government honor an earlier agreement with the British regarding the freedom of trade unionists.

Reach No Decision On Trade Depts.

One major question on which there has not yet been final decision within the WFTU is the creation of trade departments, to which each union of the affiliates in each country would belong. Thus, the CIO Steel Workers would join the WFTU metal department, the Auto Workers a similar organization, etc.

At Prague, partial progress was made. A draft set of regulations covering these departments, their relations with WFTU, and their powers, was drawn up and approved.

Later, at a Paris meeting, these were discussed with officials of the trade organizations which flourish in Europe, and the matter is being further discussed.

THE WFTU's first two years have been filled with activity and progress, the Council noted, but "forces of reaction are on the offensive" in many parts of the world. "As always," it said, "the first target of this assault is the trade union movement."

The WFTU must make its work more effective, in view of these world conditions, and lead its affiliated unions "against reactionaries and the incendiaries of a new world war."

That can be done, the statement pointed out, by improving the wages, the working and living conditions of workers everywhere; by helping workers in exploited colonial countries; and by letting the United Nations hear the voice of labor on all questions affecting peace.

Railroad Strike Idles 17,000 Steelworkers

APPROXIMATELY 17,000 CIO Steelworkers at Carnegie-Illinois Steel Corp. plants around Pittsburgh were idled last week as 1800 inter-plant railroad workers struck for higher wages and working rules changes.

Members of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers and the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, the strikers are seeking a 50c hourly increase and 45 changes in the working rules. The walkout is unauthorized.

Maintenance employes of the railroad, totaling about 1100, are members of the CIO Steelworkers and are not striking.

The walkout in its first week had cut national steel production by 10%, and severe cutbacks in the auto and electrical appliance industries were anticipated if the strike continues much longer.

The rail stoppage, which halts the movement of raw and finished materials into and out of the plant, has slowed down operations at several plants.

Hannah Quits Over T-H

Phil Hannah, AFL member who has served as Assistant Secretary of Labor, has resigned in protest against the Taft-Hartley Law.

HANNAH

Hannah told the Building and Construction Trades Council in Cincinnati that "since passage of T-H and emasculation of the Labor Dept. by cutting its funds, I feel my usefulness in Washington is about terminated." He told the delegates he considered the law largely unconstitutional.

He will leave the department when AFL Pres. William Green and Labor Sec. Schwellenbach select a man to take his place.

Hannah's counterpart in the Labor Dept. is CIO member John W. Gibson. Gibson has criticized the T-H Law in the strongest terms possible.

Bus Strike Averted

A State Supreme Court ruling in support of the CIO Transport Workers last week averted a New York City bus strike on 31 Manhattan and Queens lines operated by the New York Omnibus Corp.

The strike threat arose when the company interpreted a pension plan award handed down by Arbitrator David L. Cole last June to mean that it was required to make pension payments only until Jan. 31, 1948. The union contended that the award provided lifetime payments. Cole, in clarifying his award, supported the union's claim.

The controversy was then placed before Supreme Court Justice Ferdinand Pecora, who ruled that the pension plan entitled "those eligible to receive its benefits to payment for life." About 137 employes are immediately eligible for the pension.

Carey Asks Probe of Negro Housing Ban in Capital

CIO Secy-Treas. James B. Carey last week asked Atty. Gen. Tom C. Clark to investigate the practices of the Washington, D. C., Real Estate Board which have restricted housing opportunities for Negroes in the Nation's Capital. Carey, who is chairman of the CIO Committee to Abolish Racial Discrimination, wrote:

"It has been brought to our attention that the Washington Real Estate Board, currently under indictment for violation of the Anti-Trust laws, follows the practice of denying the sale, rental or advertising of property in a so-called white section to colored people.

"The Board's constitution states: 'No property in a white section should ever be sold, rented, advertised or offered to colored people. In a doubtful case, advice from the Public Affairs Committee should be obtained.' . . .

"We are of the opinion that the above-mentioned technique along with restrictive convenants and the refusal of financial institutions to make loans to Negroes on property within the so-called white neighborhoods, are a violation of the Anti-Trust Act in addition to being a gross violation of the civil liberties and rights of Negro citizens.

"We are calling this practice of the Washington Real Estate Board to your attention, respectfully urging that this phase of its activities be included in the current scope of legal action engaged in by the U. S. Government against the Washington Real Estate Board."

Needed: 1,750,000 Homes A Year

"PUBLIC enterprise" must take over the job of providing the 1,750,000 homes necessary each year to provide America with decent housing if private enterprise continues its failure to meet that goal, the CIO Economic Outlook declares in its current issue.

The publication was issued by the CIO Department of Education and Research in cooperation with the CIO Housing Committee. It said that a combination of forces and events during recent years has "brought this nation today as sorry a housing shortage as it has ever known."

SUPPORT TWO BILLS

Passage of the Taft-Wagner-Ellender Bill (S.866), to establish "means for building houses to suit various income groups," and of the Taylor-Douglas Bill for federal aid for self-supporting dwelling units for veterans who can afford a $30 to $50 monthly rent, was advocated by the CIO publication as the best way of meeting the crisis.

"The building industry has demonstrated once again its complete inability to meet the nation's shelter needs. There is no alternative now but to turn to government aid," the Outlook said.

A solution must be found, it added, through "government nourishment, protection and support for mass production of housing." Government aid for factory-built mass production homes, it said, 'is practically the last hope of the private businessman."

BACK PRE-FABRICATION

Noting that a few "pioneers" have developed technical know-how to use the same home-producing methods employed in the construction of autos and radio, the Outlook warned that without such assistance the pre-fabricated homes industry "must experience years of trial and hardship in order to educate communities to systems of planning and developing housing on a large scale.

Community efforts similar to the vast bond issues which financed the nation's highway system and the government land grants to the railroads are necessary to "assure the availability of land and community facilities for the large-scale producer of housing, with no nonsense about antiquated building codes," the Outlook said.

"Many building code provisions today are in a class with the law that, as a safety measure, required a man on horseback, carrying a red flag, to ride in front of every train. Such laws have operated, and still operate, to make housing prohibitively expensive for many families and to keep housing relatively scarce."

ANTIQUATED METHODS

The CIO publication charged that while other trades have forged ahead with new production techniques, "the building industry has clung largely to the handicraft methods which flourished in the days of Thomas Jefferson."

In addition, the CIO bulletin charged that a disproportionate share of new homes are built for upper income families, while families in low income brackets and in minority groups face an acute shortage. The industry has "never learned to build for the mass market," the Outlook charged, and has been "addicted to the 'hand-me-down' theory in housing.

VFW Backs Housing Bill, Asks End of Poll Tax

WORLD War II veterans scored a victory last week at the Veterans of Foreign War national encampment at Cleveland when they obtained top priority for the Taft-Ellender-Wagner housing bill on the VFW's legislative program.

Not only was there intense opposition in the housing committee to reporting out the bill to the convention, but Rep. James Van Zandt (R. Pa.), three-time past national commander, led a fight to have World War I pensions put first on the list.

The stand on the T-W-E bill was opposite to that taken by the American Legion convention of the previous week, where the demands of World War II veterans for support of the measure were pushed aside.

Efforts to nominate World War II veterans for all national officers were stymied. Both Ray H. Brannaman, Denver, and Lyall R. Beggs, Madison, Wis., World War I veterans, were elected commander-in-chief and senior vice commander-in-chief, respectively without opposition. But a World War II vet was named junior vice-commander, putting him in line for the national comradeship.

A resolution offered by the Virginia department "to abolish the poll tax as a prerequisite for voting" was approved with only one dissenting vote.

Obviously aiming a blow at Maj. Gen. Lewis B. Hershey, the VFW urged that a civilian be named to replace Gen. Omar Bradley if he steps down as veterans' administrator.

The encampment also called for increased subsistence ceilings for on-the-job trainees and students as provided in the Kearney bill, dissolution of veterans' "racket" organizations, subsistence for guide dogs owned by veterans blinded in World War II, government awards to paraplegic veterans for specially constructed houses.

The delegates voted for return of atomic energy control to the military, immediate adoption of military training at a special session of Congress, a plan for mobilization of manpower, finance and industry in the case of a national emergency, and immediate authority to the National Science Research Foundation to work on atomic energy and other new war weapons.

Re-elected—Just a few moments before this picture was snapped Louis Hollander (l.) and Harold J. Garno were re-elected president and secretary-treasurer, respectively, at the eighth annual New York State CIO convention at Saratoga Springs.

In New York State

CIO, AFL Will Unite on Political Action

NEW York City's Mayor William O'Dwyer and prospects of joint AFL-CIO political action in the state next year stole the show last week at the New York State CIO convention at Saratoga Springs.

O'Dwyer lashed out at Gov. Thomas E. Dewey's refusal to provide state finances with which cities could sustain social services and accused the Republicans in Congress of heading the nation toward "a repeat performance of the Hoover panic."

O'Dwyer's reception by the 900 CIO delegates indicated that his appearance may have touched off an "O'Dwyer for Governor" movement in the state. At a dinner given by the Amalgamated Clothing Workers' State Political Action Committee, the Mayor received a promise of CIO, and hence American Labor Party, support for any office for which he chose to run.

A unanimously-adopted resolution denounced Gov. Dewey and accused him of permitting his personal ambition to take precedence over the best interests of the people of New York. "Gov. Dewey and his administration," the resolution charged, "have failed completely to measure up to the responsibilities entrusted to them by the people."

An exchange of felicitations between the state AFL and CIO, breaking all precedents, was enthusiastically applauded by the delegates. Joint AFL-CIO political action had previously been endorsed by the State AFL at its July convention.

"A joint political committee would be the best notice to public enemies in Congress and the Legislature that they will have to reckon with 3 million organized workers in New York State," declared Louis Hollander, later elected to his fifth term as President of the State Council. Harold J. Garno was re-elected secretary-treasurer.

The issue of continued CIO support of the American Labor Party was resolved, after 2½ hours of heated debate, by a vote, estimated at four-to-one, favoring the ALP. Leaders of the right-wing accused the Party of "communist domination" and proposed instead a State PAC which would endorse candidates in either of the two major parties.

It condemned the use of economic or military pressure by any nation to force its political system on another country, but called on the U. S. to "provide material and spiritual" aid to the war-torn countries of Europe, Asia and Africa "in the fullest measure that our resources allow".

Sugar Workers Join CIO Union

With 15 sugar locals already in the union as a starter, the CIO Packinghouse workers has established a Sugar Division and has launched a campaign to organize the entire industry in this country and Canada.

Alex Summers, a sugar worker from Long Island, has been named to head the Sugar & Allied Division, assisted by four field representatives.

Offers 5c Wage Cut In 3 Mills

The A. D. Julliard Co., manufacturers of cotton gray goods, has proposed to the CIO Textile Workers that wages of 1000 employes be cut 5c an hour in three mills operated by the firm in Georgia.

The union made public a letter from the company reopening the wage question Oct. 12, six months from the date the present contract was signed.

Kenneth Douty, Georgia director for the union, said the reason the company gave for proposal was operating losses at its mills at Aragon, Rome and Dallas, Ga.

He said that the proposal was "the first of its kind in the entire country. We consider it outrageous."

Textile Workers' leaders will meet in Atlanta Sept. 21 to discuss removal of wage differentials between northern and southern mills.

Here's Latest In Union Coops

Two CIO Auto workers locals have come up with something new in union enterprise.

A wholesale grocery store operated by Ford Local 400 at Highland Park, Mich., made its debut last Saturday. The local buys staples and canned goods from seven wholesale concerns and sells them at cost to members.

Staffed by volunteer union members, the store has no overhead, and will be open only on Saturdays.

Local 740 at the Bowers plant in Kalamazoo, Mich., also is doing some selling.

Government surplus sales and non-union competition had cut into the plant's sale of its cigaret lighters and pipes. During the past 2 months, 250 employes have been laid off or placed on part time.

The local has formed a cooperative sales program with the aid of other UAW locals. It sells the goods it produces to other CIO locals.

N. C. Local Wins Raises, Check Off

A contract providing a 10 to 15c hourly wage increase, a 70c minimum for unskilled workers, paid vacations, dues checkoff and other benefits has been signed by Local 71, CIO Wholesale, Retail workers with the Smith-Douglass Co. at Wilmington, N. C.

Sheriff Strikes Union Counsel

"I slapped the hell out of him and kicked him out of my office," bragged Sheriff John B. Harney, Nueces County, Texas, after having beaten Herman Wright, attorney for Local 227 of the CIO Oil Workers.

Wright had come to the sheriff's office at Corpus Christi to protest against strike-breakers, armed with automatics and shotguns, who were being used in the drillers' strike in South Texas.

Sheriff Harney, it turned out, had known about the guns all along. "I told them to get them . . . They are the most beautiful automatics I ever saw," he declared.

Local 227 filed charges of assault, and the sheriff was released under $500 bond.

ORGANIZING

BY ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

As reported in a previous issue, as a result of the Taft-Hartley Act, this column will be devoted to general matters affecting our movement.

In the field of telephone workers, the TWOC-CIO has its machinery in operation and is making satisfactory progress. Following the vote taken by the American Union of Telephone Workers for affiliation, the company demanded new check-off cards be obtained in the name of the union and TWOC-CIO.

It is gratifying to report that approximately within four days of receipt of this communication from the company, the membership of this organization responded splendidly and over 10,000 check-off cards were mailed in. Since that time quite a number of other cards have been turned in giving them a substantial majority, in spite of those who attempted to jeopardize the contract rights of these workers and to their surprise the contract is secure.

At this writing, in West Virginia, local unions of telephone workers are being called upon to express their choice. So far it has been TWOC-CIO. The local union in Charleston leading off.

In the Association of Communication Equipment Workers, they are now taking their vote. The first vote from the Mountain States has been reported and shows 190 for CIO affiliation and 3 against and votes are expected to be taken amongst other groups within the near future and much contact work is being done in other areas from coast to coast.

We appreciate the cooperation given to this committee by the Regional Directors, Councils and International Representatives. But more of this and more assistance by our members in pointing out to telephone workers the advantage of building a strong telephone union affiliated with the CIO are needed. With this help the telephone workers will be stronger when called upon to meet the companies on matters of wages, hours and working conditions and they will be in possession of all available information so that in future matters of this kind the errors of the past can be avoided and greater success obtained.

The committee welcomed all such cooperation. The telephone workers of the nation as an industrial organization affiliated with the CIO can and will be a power for good not only for themselves but for all working men and women and the nation itself.

One of the last election results we received before the Taft-Hartley Bill went into effect was reported by CIO Reg. Dir. I. L. DeShelter, Los Angeles who advises: Miller Maltin Co., Los Angeles, CIO Brewery Workers 16, no union 4, AFL Teamster O. Rep. Robert Person was in charge.

Reports from the field indicate an ever-growing interest in PAC. Many conferences are being held and delegates are expressing themselves in favor of intensified action. Many other labor and progressive groups such as AFL and Brotherhoods express themselves by showing the same keen interest. They recognize that the same forces responsible for the passage of the Taft-Hartley Bill were responsible for the end of OPA and the constant rising of the cost of living, contrary to the false statements they made that with the end of OPA the cost of living would come down. Organizing must continue on unrelentingly—ORGANIZE, EDUCATE, ACTIVIZE.

Three strikes were necessary in Florida, according to State Director Charles Cowl, in order to bring to newly organized workers the rights to which they are entitled. At Orange State Oil Co., whose employes had joined the CIO Transport Workers Union, the company refused to recognize the union and after three days the company agreed to meet with a committee elected by the union and a contract is now being negotiated, according to Charles Smolikoff, TWU regional Director.

At Borden Dairies Co., all 63 of its employes were met with a refusal to bargain by the company. The workers were only out two hours when management agreed to meet and a contract is now being negotiated.

At City Ice & Fuel Co., CIO was certified as the bargaining agent by the NLRB. However after passage of the Taft-Hartley law, the company announced it would have nothing to do with the union. After 2½ days the company relented and since then a contract has been agreed upon and the workers now receive from 17½ to 20c more per hour.

Employes of Weatherford Spring Co., Weatherford, Texas, in one night attained a majority of signed members for the CIO Organizing Committee. The owner, who realized a 100% profit on his investment in 1946 while maintaining an average of 65c an hour, closed the doors. Finally a state legislator arranged a meeting and an agreement was reached calling for management to put the men back to work, pay for all lost time and to consent to an election. CIO Rep. Edw. T. Hamilton and Joseph Sayen took part in negotiations.

UAW Asks GM Pension Plan

THE CIO Auto Workers have asked the General Motors Corp. to reopen the contract for discussion of social security and an old-age pension plan for 250,000 production workers.

In a letter to GM Vice President Harry W. Anderson, Walter Reuther, president of the UAW stated: "At the time of our March negotiations, corporation spokesmen stated that this was a new and complicated subject, and that the parties were not equipped to deal with it intelligently without careful preparation."

Reuther termed U. S. social security benefits "pitifully inadequate."

School days again: These youngsters, untroubled by teacher shortages or child labor problems, grapple blithely with the three Rs.

Work Keeps Million Teen Agers Away From School

By GLORIA CAPLAN

THE nation's children trooped back to school last week after summer vacation—all, that is, except the youngsters who have to work for a living.

And, according to the U. S. Labor Dept., there are about a million such boys and girls—a million youngsters between the ages of 14 and 17 who, with the state's permission, will be breadwinners instead of students. An additional million have been granted permits to work part time.

The number of children of 14 and 15 years now working is three times the number employed in prewar 1940, which leads observers to place the blame on rising prices.

Jobs are still fairly easy for boys and girls to find, and this, coupled with the difficulty most workers' families have making ends meet, plus inadequate state child labor regulations, has served to encourage the march away from schools and into the fields and factories.

Are we increasingly becoming a nation of uneducated citizens, many observers are wondering. High school enrollments are a million less today than they were before the war.

Despite the fact that many veterans are availing themselves of the GI educational benefits, young people who were 16 to 24 years of age during the war will have generally less education than they would have had under normal conditions. And the states have taken little or no action toward tightening their child labor laws so that children remain in school at least until the age of 16.

Numerous women's, parent-teacher, labor and education groups have been bending their energies toward getting a standard 16-year old minimum child labor law in every state. So far only 17 states have complied: Connecticut, Florida, Georgia, Illinois, Louisiana, Massachusetts, Montana, New Jersey, New York, North Carolina, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Carolina, Utah, West Virginia, and Wisconsin.

The resumption of school brings to mind other deficiencies in our public education systems as well.

- School teachers, despite last winter's rash of strikes and nationwide protests, are still badly underpaid.
- The number of emergency licenses granted teachers who have not completed the minimum requirements (109,500 last year) continues high as qualified teachers leave the profession for greener pastures.
- Federal aid to education, which could erase the vast chasm between the educational advantages available to children in the wealthier states and those available in poorer areas, so far is just a gleam in parents' eyes. A Republican Congress shoved the issue back among those to be taken with a grain of salt, and then went home.

The solution to the Case of the Vanishing Teachers is simple: Mississippi, for instance, pays her teachers an average of $842 a year. Arkansas pays $918. Thirty-three states pay their teachers less than $2,000, and only four have hit the $2,400 goal of the U. S. Office of Education and the National Education Association—California, New York, New Jersey and Massachusetts.

The result, of course, has been fewer and fewer teachers, more pupils crowded in the classroom, lower teaching standards through issuance of more emergency permits, and a severe decline in the potential teacher crop to be found in the teachers colleges.

At a time when we need more and better education, we're getting less of it, education spokesmen say. And then they stress the fact that only Legislatures and Congress can correct the alarming situation — and only aroused voters can help.

Steelworkers Teach Lesson

As the public schools opened in Gary, Indiana, CIO Steelworkers decided to do some educating of their own.

The elementary and high schools were hit by a student "strike" against the admission of 38 Negroes. The Steelworkers entered the dispute with the threat to suspend those members whose children continued to stay away.

Enrollment following the threat rose from 250 to 650.

22,000 More CIO Members in Texas

A gain of 22,000 new members in a year for the CIO Southern drive in Texas is revealed by Van A. Bittner, national director of the CIO Organizing Committee.

Co-op School At Highlander

A COOPERATIVE Institute for farmers and industrial workers will be conducted at the Highlander Folk School Sept. 20-21, Myles Horton, director of the school has announced.

The Institute will be conducted in conjunction with a two-weeks Farm-Labor School which began Sept. 14. Courses on such subjects as farm and industrial problems, joint political and legislative activities and community and union leadership will be included.

"Professors" at the school will include Stetson Kennedy, author "Southern Exposure"; J. C. McAmis, TVA Agricultural Relations Director; W. H. Crawford, district director of the CIO steelworkers; Lee Simon, Farm Relations director of the CIO Farm Equipment workers; Homer Ayers, farm relations director of the CIO Food, Tobacco & Agricultural workers; J. P. Mooney, southern CIO-PAC representative; William Adcock, manager of the CIO Textile Joint Board, Huntsville, Ala., and Jim Payne, district PAC representative of the CIO Steelworkers.

Win 40-Hr. Week On Great Lakes

Seven shipping lines on the Great Lakes have completed agreements with the CIO Maritime workers which provide a 40-hour week with time-and-a-half for overtime. Other companies are falling in line, the union said.

"All these contracts not only maintain the seaman's take home pay but add a minimum of 11% to the wages of all ratings," a union statement said.

"All holidays worked are paid at the overtime rate. A wheelsman can earn $290 a month or more today, which is the highest rate ever paid on the Great Lakes for this rating."

The NMU is negotiating for similar benefits with the Ford Motor Co. for its vessels in Detroit.

Lines already signed for the 40-hour week and 11% raise are the Interstate Steamship Co., Brown & Co., Cleveland Tanker, Lake Tanker, Great Lakes Transport, Inland Steel, and Jupiter.

Engineers Walk Out At Ebasco

Refusal of Ebasco Services, subsidiary of Electric Bond & Share Corp., the world's largest public utility holding company, to "bargain in good faith" provoked a walkout last week of 400 engineering employes.

Local 231 of the CIO Office & Professional Workers charged that the company had "issued a series of flat 'no's' to every union offer" since negotiations began June 30. In addition, the company sought to diminish employe rights in the existing contract, the union claimed.

The strike will halt major power plant installations in this country and abroad.

Get Another 3½

Upstate New York employes of Remington Rand have received a 3½c an hour increase in addition to the 11½c raise won last July after a prolonged strike.

WHAT HAS A NURSERY SCHOOL TO OFFER?

Between the ages of two and five children develop from infants into social beings. Development and social grace come through experiences in eating and playing, through give and take with other children, through learning respect for oneself and others. Nursery schools offer opportunity to learn these things and to develop physical and mental capacity to the maximum. Nursery schools do not take the place of homes. But they do help parents take better care of their children.

All 3 Mayoralty Candidates O. K. Garfield, N. J., CIO Plan

A 16-point CIO program for the betterment of Garfield, N. J., has been approved by all three candidates for mayor.

The unusual action came after the CIO interrogated Mayor Ernest G. Branca, Republican incumbent; Democrat Anthony Vecchio, a former Councilman, and Councilman John M. Forhez, Independent, as to their views on the program.

Because all three candidates approved the program, CIO has given no endorsement to an individual. Instead, it has informed its members of the three candidates' stand.

Garfield, in Bergen County, has 28,000 inhabitants, including numerous members of the CIO Textile Workers. The program, as approved by the three candidates, included:

Veterans' housing; establishment of a Labor Advisory Board; labor representation on various boards, including the Board of Education; relief for workers on strike.

Establishment of nurseries for children of working mothers, with the city providing the buildings; organized recreation facilities to combat juvenile delinquency; a long-range program to boost teachers' salaries with the entire school system eliminated from politics.

Expenditure of $25,000 to put the city stadium into shape; free health clinics for "regular checkups"; proper city financing; elimination of unnecessary jobs; revaluation of industrial properties, which are now assessed in many cases at 50% of valuation.

ACW Aide To Wed

The engagement of Robert A. Levin, educational director of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers, and Kay James Warburg, daughter of James P. Warburg, author and financial expert, has been announced. Miss Warburg, whose mother is Mrs. Hunter Galloway, is also with the ACW.

YOU BET I WILL! I WOULDN'T MISS THE SHOW FOR A MILLION BUCKS! NOW YOU GUYS GO TO SLEEP... I WANT TO READ THROUGH THIS STUFF!

ALABAMA UNIONISTS KILL LITTLE T-H

ALABAMA Labor scored a legislative victory last week when the State House shelved two restrictive labor bills, killing the measures to all intents and purposes.

The House voted, 52 to 30, to postpone consideration of a bill to outlaw mass picketing. The sponsor of the two restrictive bills, Rep. Wallace Malone, Houston County, then moved to postpone indefinitely the second measure, which would have banned the union and closed shops. An overwhelming voice vote was recorded for the delay.

Malone then said he would not call up the picketing bill again. Malone, a banker from the small southeastern town of Dothan, which has very little organized labor, had insisted a closed shop ban was necessary. "But," he said, "I bow to the will of the majority."

Joint legislative work by the CIO, AFL and Brotherhoods, aided by members of various local unions, brought the results. The members of the local unions paid numerous visits to their home district representatives, Malone, after the vote, was quoted as saying: "if all labor leaders were like these fine gentlemen we met in Montgomery, I would say there would be no need for legislation like this."

Secy-treas. E. M. Wells of the Alabama CIO Council headed the CIO's legislative delegation. Pres. Carey E. Haigler and PAC Chairman W. T. Adcock assisted him. AFL representatives were Alabama State Pres. Jack Brock and secy-treas. Hugh Brown. The Brotherhoods were led by J. P. Knight, Lawrence Stevens, Larry Rogers and Charlie Wilson.

Money and Humans Both Rise in U. S.

Money in circulation per capita increased $2.19 between the end of July and the end of August despite an 89,000 increase in population, Treasury figures show.

In circulation at the end of August was $197.69 for every American man, woman and child. The population was estimated at 144,071,000. The per capita rate of money in circulation, however, was somewhat short of the all-time high of slightly over $200 reached last year, when the population was estimated at 141,655,000.

In 1879, when the population was only 48,691,000, money in circulation totaled $16.7 per capita.

Reuther Wins Racial Award

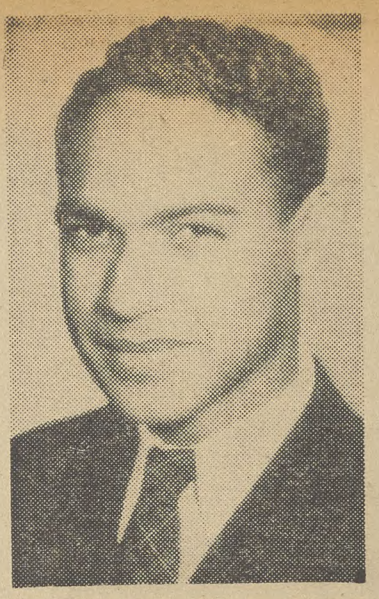
THE award of the CIO Committee to abolish Discrimination will be presented by Pres. Philip Murray to Pres. Walter Reuther, CIO Auto Workers. The ceremony will be held Sept. 18 at Masonic Temple, Detroit.

The award is presented to persons in and outside the labor movement making "the greatest contribution toward the goal of political and economic democracy in the field of race relations."

Six other persons have received the award this year. They are: Pres. Emil Rieve of the CIO Textile Workers, Rabbi Stephen Wise, Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers; CIO Regional Director Michael Mann, Dr. Charles S. Johnson, president of Fisk Univ., and Miss Sara E. Southall, assistant personnel director of International Harvester Co.

One of the several reasons cited by the committee for presenting the award to Reuther is the day-to-day work of the UAW-CIO Fair Practices and Anti-Discrimination Dept., of which he is director.

The Department's program bore fruit at Local 662, Anderson, Ind., where the anti Negro bias of white members was ended and negotiations are under way for better protection under the contract for Negro members, and Local 216, South Gate, Calif., where Reuther intervened to change General Motors discriminatory hiring practices.



Reeves R. Taylor, 18, is the first Negro appointed to Annapolis by a Senator. He was recommended by Sen. Green (D., R. I.)

NAM Aids Strife

"PROSPECTS for labor-management peace depend entirely upon the opportunity accorded the people of this country to change the program imposed upon our nation by the National Association of Manufacturers," Secy. - Treas. James B. Carey of the CIO declared last week on the American Forum of the Aiir program.

The NAM program, announced in a letter to its members on June 25, 1946, included elimination of price controls, limitation of workers' rights and industry control of government, Carey declared. He added:

"That program is in full force and effect today. It has been achieved by the greatest smear campaign in history, based on information, and directed at government employes, union leaders, and any other group that questioned the divine rights of American management.

"The American worker knows his capabilities as the most efficient individual producer of economic goods on the face of the earth. The treatment accorded him specifically through such measures as tht Taft-Hartley Law is causing him to lose confidence in his government and in American management.

"Labor-industry peace can be based only on free democratic processes and sufficient purchasing power in the hands of the people. American workers will not abandon the fight for these things, and they will not abandon the traditional American formula of rebelling against tyrannical dictatorship."

Scholarship Won By CIO Man's Son

Oscar S. Kaye, pharmacist member of the CIO Retail Drug Store Union, Local 1199, New York City, is boasting about his son—and plenty of reason for so doing.

Alvin M. Kaye, 16, was graduated in June from high school, magna cum laude. He won these scholarships: the Pulitzer, four years of biology research at Columbia Univ., plus $1000; the State, worth $1400 and offers from Cornell and Syracuse.

OIL UNION APPEALS T-H COURT TEST

By HARVEY O'CONNOR

THE CIO Oil Workers are appealing to the Federal Circuit Court of Appeals to see whether the affidavit section of the Taft-Hartley law can be made effective before Aug. 22, date on which it went into effect.

The test comes on a Deep Oil election, ordered several months ago by the former National Labor Relations Board. The election was held and the ballots were in the hands of the regional NLRB office before Aug. 22. But, the new board ruled that the ballots could not be counted because CIO had not filed non-communist affidavits.

OWIU filed suit in Federal Court to force the completion of the election, contending that it was held under the Wagner Act and that the ballots would have been counted before Aug. 22 had it not been for the national board's ruling.

Federal Judge T. W. Davidson ruled that Congress had a right to legislate the non-communist affidavits, under the constitutional clause regarding preservation of the form of government. OWIU contended that it was not seeking a ruling on the question of constitutionality, but only on the matter of the Taft-Hartley Act's retroactivity.

"OWIU," said Pres. O. A. Knight, "will resist legally any act of Congress which presumes that all labor unions are subversive. If this ruling is permitted to stand, it will mean the impairment and injury of legitimate labor organizations which have long led the fight for the American standard of living for the famiies of American workingmen.

"Prices will continue to soar while wages are beaten down. In this connection we note that butter is selling at $1 a pound in Fort Worth this morning, while Deep Oil employes, affected by this decision, are unable to obtain union representation which would improve their economic condition. That is the real significance of this case."

Race And Color Question Stricken From Census

THE Inter-American Statistical Committee, which will conduct a Western Hemisphere census in 1950, has stricken inquiries as to an individual's race or color from a proposed basic questionnaire.

The action came as a result of the protest of a delegate from Mexico at the committee's recent meeting in Washington. The sessions of the statisticians were the first held since before the war.

The Mexican delegate's stand was backed by the United States' delegate.

The Costa Rican delegate caused a controversy when he opposed the use of military or police personnel as "a pernicious thing." The Argentine delegate rose in opposition, stating that while he was at the moment in civilian clothes, he was "body and soul" a military man, and that such duties were an accepted procedure in his and many other countries.

The Costa Rican apologized, but said he was proud of the fact that his country had more school teachers than soldiers.

Under the standard proposed census questionnaire, every person in the Western Hemisphere will be classified by age, sex, place of birth, citizenship, marital status, educational level and employment. According to Calvert L. Dedrick, chairman of the Inter-American group, there are some difficulties remaining because certain newspapers in Latin countries oppose the census.

VOL. 10 WASHINGTON, D. C., SEPTEMBER 22, 1947 82 NO. 38

Murray and John Green:

DENOUNCE 'CALLOUS' REFUSAL OF BETHLEHEM TO ARBITRATE

PRES. PHILIP MURRAY and Vice Pres. John Green have condemned the Bethlehem Shipbuilding Company for its refusal to arbitrate a dispute that has kept 30,000 men idle for 89 days.

Murray declared that Bethlehem's attitude in the strike of CIO Shipbuilders has created "a grave situation which is endangering the Nation's economy and seriously threatening our plans for aiding the stricken peoples of the world."

PHILIP MURRAY

Green, president of the union, asserted at a press conference that the big steel shipbuilding company is holding up 75 vital vessels which are in its yard, and that the corporation's attitude has driven thousands of men, who form the nucleus of the industry's working force, to seek other employment.

Murray, stating that he was "profoundly shocked" at Bethlehem's attitude and its "callous disregard of the welfare of its employes and the public," declared "its refusal to accept arbitration provides convincing proof that it is more interested in prolonging the dispute than in reaching a settlement."

STATING that IUMSWA has "done everything it possibly can to bring the dispute to an end," Murray also called on the Navy and Maritime Commission to "support our position that the dispute be ended promptly through arbitration." He pointed out that "scores of large merchantmen and warships are now out of commission and the manpower which builds and maintains the ships is being dissipated. You can't replace the brain muscle and loyalty of such workers for a long time."

Still out on strike as the CIO News went to press were 30,000 Bethlehem workers and 4,000 at the Federal Shipbuilding and Drydock Co., Kearney, N. J. Originally 60,000 had struck.

Shipyard Strike Facts

On Strike: 30,000 CIO Shipbuilders.

Affected: 11 Bethlehem Steel yards in Quincy, Mass.; East Boston, Brooklyn, Hoboken, Staten Island, Baltimore and San Pedro.

Strike began: June 26, 1947.

Issues: Bethlehem's insistence that wage increases go only to hourly-paid workers, thus hitting thousands of piece and incentive workers; Company proposal of wrecking working conditions, such as vacations, seniority, piece and incentive work, grievances and refusal to arbitrate.

Green revealed that IUMSWA, which originally asked for a standard pattern from all East Coast yards reduced its Bethlehem proposals before and after the strike started. Originally, IUMSWA sought a 25c increase, six paid holidays, a welfare fund, severance pay, liberalized vacations and other gains.

IUMSWA's compromise proposed a 13c-an-hour rise, another 1.8 cents an hour to wipe out inequalities, six paid holidays and liberalized vacation credits. All other contract terms would remain.

BETHLEHEM not only rejected that proposal, Green said, but demanded an emasculation of the contract which would have placed the workers in a worse position than before they had a union.

Green said that conferences between the union and the company, and later with Federal conciliators and mediators present, had "resulted in all the giving on our side." He related how M. H. Goldstein, IUMSWA counsel, had told Joseph M. Larkin, Bethlehem industrial-labor relations vice president at $138,000 a year, that if Larkin would accept arbitration, Goldstein would attempt to sell it to IUMSWA. Larkin rejected that. He also finally rejected a suggestion by Goldstein that the issues be presented to an outsider to get his reactions. Final rejection came after Larkin suggested a compromise, under which William E. Simkin, former chairman of the Shipbuilding Commission of the War Labor Board, would study the issues. But, under Larkin's suggestion, only Bethlehem's proposals, and not IUMSWA's, would be submitted.

JOHN GREEN

Green also revealed that Bethlehem, along with other industry representatives, had rendered worthless the Shipbuilding Stabilization Committee, by refusing to appear at meetings. The Committee, set up under the tripartite Zone Standards Agreement, was to have made a wage review on Jan. 1, 1947, but lack of a quorum prevented that. Before that, IUMSWA had been through more than 13 years of litigation with Bethlehem before the U. S. Supreme Court, the NLRB and the War Labor Board. Because of the boycotting of SSC by Bethlehem, its employes had been barred from a much-needed wage increase for months, he said.

He accused Bethlehem of starting picket line trouble and of trying to promote a back-to-work movement by inviting the leaders, who are in charge of groups of 12 workers, to desert the union and deal separately with management. He also pointed to a Massachusetts injunction against picketing, secured while Bethlehem ostensibly was seeking a peaceful strike settlement.

Green also revealed that IUMSWA and its Local 1 had arrived at an agreement with New York Shipbuilding, Camden, N. J. The agreement, which would end a long strike upon acceptance by the workers, provides for a 12-cent-an-hour across-the-board rise for hourly workers and an 8½% increase in piece rates. The boost establishes a rate of $1.50 for master mechanics. Other contract provisions are continued. There are 3,800 workers affected. Todd, Maryland Drydock and Alabama have made similar settlements.

NLRB EXTENDS T-H DEADLINE

THE National Labor Relations Board and General Counsel Robert M. Denham have jointly announced that the deadline for filing of union affidavits and financial statements has been extended from September 23 to October 31.

The ruling applies to 5,000 cases pending before the board.

The AFL convention will open Oct. 6 and run through the week of Oct. 13. The CIO convention will be held the week of Oct. 13.

On Sept. 4, the CIO officers, meeting in Pittsburgh, took no action on Denham's ruling that all officers of the parents labor bodies—CIO and AFL—must sign Taft-Hartley Law non-Communist affidavits before any constituent union and locals could avail themselves of the facilities of NLRB. Unions and local officers also would have to sign.

ON SEPT. 12, the AFL Executive Council, meeting in Chicago, climaxed a week of sessions by announcing that the 15 officers would not sign. It was reported that John L. Lewis, a vice president, had refused to comply and that, therefore, this others perforce would have to refrain.

Text of the NLRB-Denham statement:

"It is our desire that every labor organization be given the fullest opportunity to qualify under the provisions of the Labor Management Act in order to be able to utilize the machinery set up by this statute.

The Regional and sub-Regional offices have accordingly been authorized, where requests for such extensions are based on reasonable grounds, to extend to Oct. 31, 1947, the application of notices heretofore given.

"Requests referring to cases now before the Board will receive similar consideration by the Board in Washington."

The action came after attorneys for the CIO asked the NLRB for an extension. Joseph Padway, general counsel for the AFL, has declared he will, in the name of the AFL Teamsters, test the Denham ruling legally. The Teamsters have signed the affidavits.

EARLIER, last week, the NLRB triumphantly came out with the news it will hold its first referendum on the union shop.

The referendum, to be held under 9 (e) (1) of the T-H Law, will determine whether employes of the J. M. J. Products Co., Belleville, Ill., want a union shop.

The election, to be conducted with the fanfare of a first-night production, will be among five eligible employes!

The union involved is the unaffiliated International Association of Machinists. The machinists are about the only large union utilizing the services of the board.

Denham's ruling on signings is challenged sharply by the co-author of the T-H law, Sen. Taft (R., O.). Taft took a little time from his political tour of the West to say there was no "legislative history" behind Denham's ruling. Sen. Aiken (R., Vt.) termed the non-Communist section of the law "silly" and perhaps unconstitutional.

Taft also brought down the howls of business backers of the GOP when he indicated he might be in favor of relaxing the ban on the closed shop.

'May I Have This Waltz, Bob?'

Sen. Robert A. Taft (R., O.), co-sponsor of the T-H Act, has been invited to a CIO dance!

Three New York locals of the CIO United Retail Employes hasten to say that they want Taft to meet some 1200 employes "and see for yourself how they feel about your new labor law."

Taft: Do It My Way

Senator Taft (R. Ohio) who has been given credit generally as the executioner of OPA, offered a six-point program as his method of cutting prices:

(a) U. S. should work to stabilize wages and prices at about 50 to 60% above 1939 figures, since "it must be recognized prices will not return to prewar levels; (b) further reduction of Federal spending and taxes; (c) reduction in exports of products short in this country; (d) "undoubtedly there have been some excessive profits" so he agrees with Pres. Truman that education of such profit-makers is necessary; (e) discouragement of further wage increases "to the extent they mean increases in prices." He urges a 60-cent minimum wage rate; (f) "campaigns for the voluntary rationing of products like meat."

He presented the points at San Francisco.

IAM Officer Quits Over Affidavit

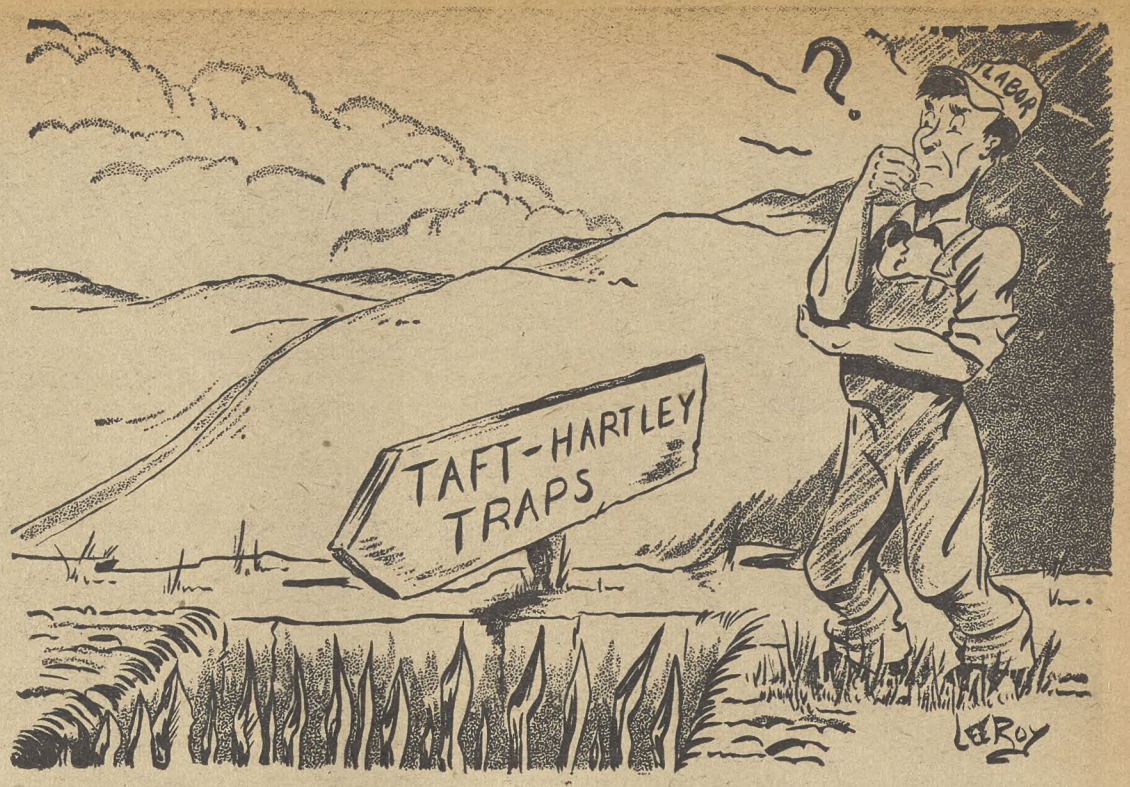
Ernest F. Normandin, declaring he is not a Communist and never has been one, has resigned as president of Local 681, International Association of Machinists, unaffiliated, rather than sign the Taft-Hartley non-Communist affidavit.

"I feel this requirement is unconstitutional and violates my rights as a citizen of the U. S," he declared. The IAM's international officers have signed the affidavits and have urged local officers to follow suit.

Evade T-H Law Langer Urges

Sen. Langer (R., N.D.), one of three Republican Senators who voted against the Taft-Hartley Law, has advised labor that it should evade, but not violate the statute.

Langer, addressing the Indiana AFL, urged all labor to "present a solid front" in opposition to the law and recommended that "now is the time" for unions to begin preparations for the 1948 campaign.



Lawyers Call T-H Act 'Suicide' For Unions

SOME points of guidance for unions groping through the jungles of anti-labor legislation are listed in "Analysis of the Taft-Hartley Act," a new 48-page CIO Legal Department pamphlet which deserves a place in every union library and on every union officer's desk.

Throughout the pamphlet—written by General Counsel Lee Pressman and Assistant Counsel Eugene Cotton and Frank Donner—runs a constant warning that unions involved in NLRB procedures must act carefully and cautiously to avoid the score of pitfalls written into the 64-page law.

Many CIO unions, the analysis points out, have decided that Labor Board procedure has become so "complicated, cumbersome and anti-union, and the entire Board has been so drastically changed into a tool of employers, that it would be suicide for our unions to attempt to use the Act to enforce our collective bargaining rights."

"It should be emphasized that this is not a decision to violate the law."

A decision not to make use of Labor Board facilities "would be based upon the conclusion that it is our legal right to decide that the law has been made absolutely useless for unions . . ." Such a decision does not violate the law, in the same way that one does not violate any law by not suing one's next door neighbor when his kid breaks a window.

Boss Shows Hand

"An employer who insists on getting us involved in the machinery of the new Act for this purpose is only making clear the fact that he wants to resist and delay recognition, and hopes for a possible slow death for the union."

Practical difficulties of protecting union rights are clearly demonstrated in the section on union security clauses. The pamphlet lists 10 steps that must be taken before a union can "legally" ask an employer for a union shop or for a maintenance of membership provision.

In such a case the union must have been designated as representing a majority of its members; must file with the NLRB a petition for a special election on the union security question; must show that at least 30% of the workers in the bargaining unit wish the union to seek a security clause; and must win a majority of votes of all employes—not merely of those who vote in the special election.

To reach even that stage, the union must file data with the Secretary of Labor on its structure, organization and procedures; make certain that its international union has taken similar steps; must file a financial report with the Labor Dept.; have its international union also file financial statistics; prove that both the local and national union have distributed the financial data to every member of the union; and show that officers of the local and national union and the CIO have filed so-called non-Communist affidavits.

Lawyers Confer On T-H Problems

Lawyers from nearly 30 CIO affiliates met in Washington September 6-7 to study new moves in the handling of Taft-Hartley act problems.

The group, called together by General Counsel Lee Pressman, studied cases now in the courts and outlined general plans for future constitutional tests of the anti-labor law.

Attending the meeting were Frank Donner and Eugene Cotton of the CIO Legal Dept., and counsel for unions in the following industries: Electrical, communications, clothing, furniture, textile, auto, maritime, brewery, government, lithographers, shipyards, food, farm equipment, office, oil, rubber, fur and leather, mine mill, utility, telephone, transport service, and the CIO Organizing Committee.

Employers Free

After all these steps, the union can ask for union security—but there's nothing to compel the employer to grant that demand. And if he does, the only reason a person can be discharged by the employer upon request of the union is for non-payment of dues.

The CIO Legal Dept. analysis declares: "In net result, the (union security) clause has no more, and to some extent less, value than a check-off arrangement."

Further—a union which gains a security clause is subject to unfair labor practice charges by the NLRB if that agency feels its dues or initiation fees are excessive.

Since this type of unfair labor practice charge can be issued only against unions having contract security clauses, the pamphlet points out:

". . . It has no effect on any union which simply decides that the union security provisions permitted under the Act are meaningless and useless, and therefore makes no attempt to go through these procedures or to secure such provisions."

The pamphlet contains detailed analyses of every phase of the Act. In each section it indicates what the unions are compelled to do under the law, what they may do if they wish to use NLRB facilities, what employers may do to them, and possible future NLRB judgments on a variety of issues.

A very complete index makes the pamphlet very handy as a union member's guide to his rights—and his lack of rights—under every section of the Taft-Hartley law.

Union Slashes Prices: Local 400, of the CIO Auto Workers, operates this store, which sells groceries on a non-profit basis, with members working without pay. The local says the savings to members amount to approximately 25%. UAW Pres. Walter Reuther says the union plans to open other stores and induce other groups to be customers.

Public Interested: Signs carried by these pickets outside the Federal building in Boston where price hearings were held by the Congressional sub-committee indicate that the public is for more action and less talk.

PRICES HAUNT YOU EVEN IN SLEEP

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

PRICES. Prices. Prices. The word plagues you when you go into a store. It screams at you from newspaper headlines. It snarls from the radio. You hear it in the hum of your train. It haunts your sleep.

And well it might. The price spiral is shooting upward with record rapidity, as is shown by:

1. Labor Department statistics, which revealed that prices for foods and farm products had jumped to all-time highs. Dun & Bradstreet's index agreed, if any further proof was needed.

2. The Bureau of Labor Statistics index of 900 wholesale commodities was up another 1.6% (compared to 0.6 the previous week) to 157.4% of the key year of 1926. It was the 11th consecutive weekly rise, the ninth consecutive postwar high, 29.3% above a year ago. It was only 5.9% below the all-time peak of May, 1920.

Prices had even the Republican politicians worried. Sen. Taft, complaining people had misunderstood his "eat less" statement, mumbled that President Truman was to blame for today's high costs, for Truman had vetoed the Taft-inspired "OPA" bill in the spring of 1946 . . . Sen. Capehart (R., Ind.) admitted that prices were high, and that they were likely to have political repercussions, but he declared he didn't think prices were any higher now than they would have been in the black market if OPA had been continued. (Major OPA protections died June 30, 1946, when Taft refused to let his Republican majority continue them.)

Congressional price probers started their treks in various parts of the country, only to be met with angry words from housewives, unions and consumers' groups.

FOOD: BLS showed that wholesale farm products had risen 2.7%, surpassing the all-time high mark of March 15, 1947. Wholesale food prices rose 3.9%, exceeding the previous all-time peak of Oct. 19, 1946.

Mayors of New York and other cities (including Washington's non-elected elders) suggested to restaurants that they return to two meatless days per week. That would be a further blow to housewives, many of whom have decided to eat out because they can't afford choicer cuts and feel that the lesser cuts are too high.

Taft was not the only one urging "eat less," but others, including Agriculture Secy. Anderson's department, urged it with more finesse. What Anderson's group said was, eat less extravagantly and less wastefully.

Individual prices:

CORN: Up.

WHEAT: Up.

MEAT: Up.

HIDES: Up.

FATS AND OILS: Up.

RAIL FARES: Presumably about to rise.

PROFITS: The Joint Congressional Committee on the economic report showed the following statistics:

While average profits of all industries was 111% higher in 1946 than in 1940, food corporations were up 212%. But, with the cutback in wartime taxes, 10 selected food processors gained 64% profits between 1945 and 1946. The 10:

Armour (meat), Borden (milk); Continental Baking Co., General Foods, Natl. Biscuit, Standard Brands, Swift (meat), Corn Products Refining, Natl. Dairy Products and Ralston Purina.

Food chain store figures also make one sit up. Here are net incomes, after taxes, of these five popular chains:

(In millions of dollars)

	1940	1945	1946
American Stores	1.	2	8.3
Food Fair	0.7	0.9	3.6
Atl. & Pacific	18.3	12.3	30.2
Kroger	4.6	5.6	9.4
Safeway	4.8	5.1	11.4

The price hearings:

PROVIDENCE, R. I.: The CIO and housewives highlighted the first hearing of the Joint Congressional Committee on the Economic Report.

State CIO President Frank J. Benti, after listing a few examples of price rises, declared:

"The situation has become intolerable. We demand an immediate special session of Congress to get action now. We have seen our standards of living impaired by uncontrolled inflation. We have waited long enough for business men to heed the call for voluntary restraint. There is only one effective way to control inflation: the Government must control prices and ration scarce commodities."

(There was considerable difference of opinion among labor leaders on the subject of Congressional action; many, having no hope that the 80th Congress would do anything constructive, are demanding an immediate conference of industry, agriculture and labor to seek voluntary price reductions and relief. Others feel Congress is the only solution.)

Benti asked the Congressional Committee: "What is responsible for this intolerable situation and what can be done about it?" He gave his answer: "We have heard it said that labor is responsible. Let us look at the record: gross hourly earnings of U. S. factory workers have increased from $1.084 in June, 1946, to $1.234 in July, 1947, a rise of 14%. During this same period, the prices charged by our employers have gone up 35%. So, for every 1% wage increase, wholesale prices have been raised by 2½%.

"You do not have far to look. I call your attention to President Truman's Mid-Year Economic Report:

" 'From the first half of 1946, to the first half of 1947, compensation of employes increased from an annual rate of $112,800,000,000 to $125,300,000,000, an 11% rise. In the meantime, corporate profits reached the unprecedented level of $29,000,000,000 before taxes, a 68% jump from the previous year and 11,600,000,000 after taxes, a 63% increase.' "

Benti warned: "We of the CIO will not stand by and see our wages cut by exorbitant profits and prices."

BOSTON: Sen. Francis Myers (D., Pa.) and Rep. Edward Hart (D., N.J.), minority members of the Eastern sub-committee, complained after four days of hearings that no one had yet been willing to accept responsibility for contributing to rising living costs.

Myers was a quipmaster on one occasion.

Chester Smith, economist of the United Farmers of New England, declared it would be "disastrous to lower retail milk prices now because the pressure to buy would be so great that there wouldn't be enough to go around."

"That," Myers retorted, "is just another way of saying we're going to get as much as the market will pay us."

A founder of the famous "Newburyport Plan" blamed an organized campaign of "debunking" by business organizations for failure of that Massachusetts cut-prices program. The witness, Norman J. Randall, specifically mentioned the Chamber of Commerce of the U. S. and the National Dry Goods Association.

CIO on the Ball: Pres. Frank J. Benti of the Rhode Island CIO Council testifies at the first public hearing conducted by the congressional price committee at Providence... He urged that a special session of Congress be called to re-establish price controls and rationing.

THOSE PAY CUTS

AMERICAN workers have been getting a pay cut every week for more than two months.

There is every indication that this will go on for some time. No relief is in sight.

If the trend continues at the present rate much longer, American workers will find themselves in about the same economic position they were back in 1939.

That is, they will unless they receive another round of pay increases.

Wage earners didn't get their pay cuts at the places they work but at the stores at which they have been buying. They got them a little at a time—on one item after another.

We, of course, could use a fancy term and say that American workers have been the victims of shrinking purchasing power. It's easier just to say bluntly that prices have gotten out of hand.

Profits, on the other hand, have been doing OK. They've been going up—and up—and up. They haven't suffered any shrinkage. They're setting all-time records.

A few of the nation's newspapers, who learned a lesson from the "era of beautiful nonsense" that came before the depression of the 30's, are throwing their support behind moves to halt inflation.

Most papers, however, are silent or are saying editorially that "something ought to be done about it." They're not charging bluntly—as we are—that a large portion of industry is making no real effort to prevent price increases.

Neither are they charging—as we are—that much profit-making has turned into outright profiteering.

It's easy to figure out what will happen in the future—unless the increase in prices is halted, and halted quickly. Working men and women, through their unions, will demand wage increases. They will have to do so if they maintain a decent standard of living.

Then the now-silent newspapers will swing into action. Their pages will be filled with dire warnings that the unions are "forcing the nation into uncontrolled inflation."

It would be better for them—and for the nation—if they would turn their editorial fire loose now and aim it at the real culprits.

Hoover's Green Apples?

We nominate for the quip of the week:

On America's Town Meeting of the Air (ABC), Rep. Howard H. Buffett (R., Neb.) blamed the present high prices on the New Deal, beginning with the "pump-priming" of 1933. He said it was all like a child eating a green apple. It tasted good at first, then came the belly-ache.

Agriculture Secretary Clinton Anderson shot back: "Are you, as a Republican, referring to the green apples that veterans and other unemployed persons had to sell at street corners during the Hoover depression?"

New "food" crisis: GOP Congressmen are having great difficulty eating the words they used when arguing that death of OPA wouldn't cause undue price increases.

Republican diehards are appalled because Senator Taft indicated he had an open mind about the closed shop.

NAM Talks Beautifully But Behaves in Same Old Way

By ALLAN L. SWIM

AMERICAN industry is on the spot—and you can take NAM's own word for it.

Of course the National Association of Manufacturers doesn't put it so bluntly. It uses these words:

"Industry today faces a challenge of more serious portent than any it has had to meet in the long history of hard testing.

"This challenge comes not from ideological opponents; not from a handful of power-hungry labor leaders; not even from the Communists and their dupes, the Collectivists—although all of these groups continue their anti-business drive relentlessly."

THEN NAM really lays it on the line, in these words:

"The new challenge comes from the overwhelming majority of the American people; from those who believe sincerely in our traditional way of life. It comes straight from the sole and final judge of the nation's destiny—the American people themselves."

NAM goes on to say that in the elections last November the public gave a "mandate" to the Government and in effect said:

"We are tired of government regimentation and boot-strap economics. Let's see what business can do to lead us to better days. Let's give business a fair chance to prove that our way of life is better than any other system in the world."

NAM goes even further, by warning that—

"Businessmen can either accept or ignore this challenge. They can display real industrial statesmanship or, through apathy, complacency or fear, drift into some form of statism with the tide that has already engulfed most of the world.

"But businessmen cannot evade the issue. Public opinion is going to make a decision. What industry does and says today will do much to determine the future of private enterprise and the destiny of our country."

Yes, NAM has summed up the situation beautifully.

BUT what does NAM propose to do about it? What has NAM already done to encourage the "industrial statesmanship" that is so badly needed?

What is NAM doing now to throw public support behind industry and the private enterprise system?

When you find the answers to these questions you get the idea that NAM is more interested in publicity than in performance and that it is talking out of both sides of its mouth.

Either that is true—or NAM does not understand the problems that are troubling the nation.

THE National Association of Manufacturers, which led the fight against OPA, misled the public regarding what would happen to prices after controls were removed.

Constantly increasing prices cause the people great hardship and concern. Many are beginning to believe that industry would risk a major depression rather than start a campaign for price reductions.

NAM said that "governmental control" must go—then it threw its support solidly behind the union-strangling Taft-Hartley Act.

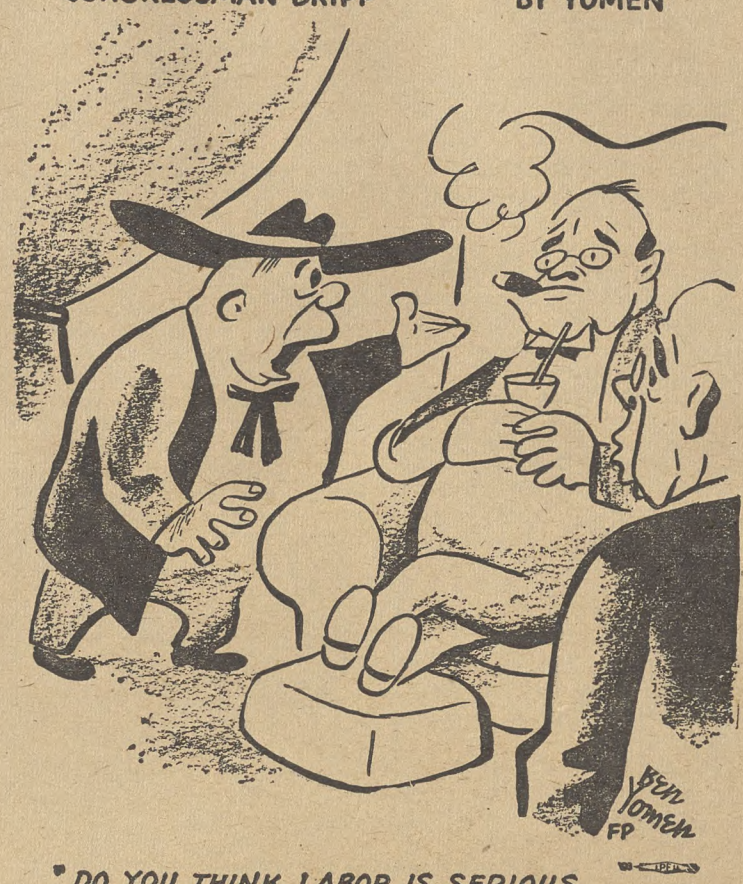
Housing is a major problem. NAM is doing virtually nothing to help solve it.

ONE of the world's most efficient publicity machines is operated by the NAM—and this machine is getting ready to operate at full speed.

It will pour out millions of words about the glories of the "traditional American way"—but more than words will be required to win the public approval that NAM says industry wants.

The public would like to see some action to prove NAM means what it says.

CONGRESSMAN DRIPP — BY YOMEN



"DO YOU THINK LABOR IS SERIOUS ABOUT POLITICAL ACTION?"

Scarcity Plot Charged

PRESIDENT WALTER P. REUTHER of the CIO Auto Workers charged last week that the management of the automobile industry is "an equally guilty partner with the steel industry in a conspiracy of planned scarcity in America."

"If the automobile industry is not guilty of this charge, let them prove it to the American public by assuming active public leadership in the fight to expose the program of planned steel scarcity and aid in breaking this critical bottleneck," Reuther said.

The steel shortage endangers world peace, Sen. O'Mahoney (D., Wyo.) declared later in the week in a radio address. He said:

"When the managers of the steel industry decided not to expand steel production, but rather to increase the price of what they produce, they placed a restriction on the economic expansion of America.

"It will be felt by people everywhere, and it will prevent the U. S. from achieving the new record production so necessary to win the peace."

Reuther claimed that although the auto industry is one of the most vitally affected by the steel shortage, "not one automobile manufacturer, with the exception of Henry Kaiser, has raised his voice in protest."

"Instead of positive action to correct the situation, the auto manufacturers announce another layoff due to steel shortage—with pious regrets, of course—slap another increase on the price of cars and rake in the most enormous profits in the history of the industry," Reuther said.

"It appears that auto management, like the steel industry, prefers restricted production, high prices and high profits to full production and full employment. They have evidenced a complete lack of concern for the effect of their position on their employes, their customers and on the economy of the nation.'

Industry and Union Ask Entry of DPs

The State Dept. was requested last week to bring to America skilled tailors now in European displaced persons' camps. The move was urged as a means of relieving the manpower shortage in the clothing industry.

Signed by Jacob Potofsky, president of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers, and Raymond H. Reiss, president of the Clothing Manufacturers Association, the joint appeal stated that the skilled workers were necessary for expansion of the industry.

They said the DPs would "be in our own enlightened self-interest as well as an act of simple humanity.

"Clothing employers in 26 states of the union are prepared to make commitments for jobs for these workers. This will insure decentralization of this proposed working force, preventing congestion in any one industrial community. This distribution, also, will avoid intensifying the present housing shortage."

And There It Was, In Black And White

THE grievance session was deadlocked and neither side seem willing to budge an inch.

The Newspaper Guild committee insisted that a man joining the Merchant Marine be granted the same job protection as one going into the Army and Navy.

Representatives of the Pennsylvania publisher said the Guild was making an unreasonable request. Men going into the Merchant Marine got "big pay," they said, and weren't entitled to benefits accorded employes called into the "regular" services.

Tempers became a bit heated. Words flew thick and fast.

Nobody could visualize a quick or satisfactory end to the deadlock.

REPORTERS acquire odd habits. Some of them make "doodles" on copy paper while they're talking over the phone. Others roll paper into little wads and toss them at wastebaskets.

A reporter on the Pennsylvania paper at which the dispute arose had a habit of clipping out stories and editorials. He'd just cut them out and tuck them away.

Nobody seemed to know just why he did it or understand his selection of clippings.

Perhaps it was just a hobby—and if it was, it was a hobby that paid off.

THE reporter who saved clippings was getting ready to sail with the Merchant Marine. He thought he was entitled to a guarantee that his job would be waiting for him when he got back—if he got back.

The Guild felt the same way about it—and was willing to put up a real fight for him.

Management said it wanted to be patriotic and was willing to "take care of" returning soldiers and sailors—that is, sailors who served in the U. S. Navy.

Any others would just have to get along as best they could.

Neither side was willing to give in.

THE clipping-saver eventually "saved" the situation.

He seemed to recall something that bore directly on the situation. An editorial, maybe.

He thumbed through his clippings. Finally he found it read it over, and smiled with satisfaction.

He got in touch with Guild committee and placed his evidence before them. They smiled too, because they believed they had the "ammunition" they needed.

THE Guild went into action immediately It issued a mimeographed bulletin stating its position in the matter and quoting from the clippings the clipping-saver had produced.

A copy of the bulletin was sent to the publisher, who had not been sitting in on grievance sessions.

Events that followed indicate he read it and was impressive—so impressed that he got in touch with his representatives and told them a thing or two in no uncertain terms.

ANOTHER meeting—and it was soon apparent that there had been a change in management's thinking.

The new thought on management's part was that it would be a good idea to provide the same job protection for Merchant Marine men as for those going into the Army and Navy.

The deadlock was broken. A contract was signed.

The clipping?

It was an editorial strongly lauding the Merchant Marine—and it had been cut from the newspaper on which the clipping-saver worked as a reporter.

NO WONDER

Murray Warns Labor Will Use Every Moral Means to Kill T-H

AMERICAN workers "will use every legitimate, legal and moral method available to bring about the complete repeal of the Taft-Hartley law and the retirement from the Congress of the unfit and misled legislators who enacted that measure."

That prediction was made last week by CIO Pres. Murray in a speech before a three-state discussion meeting conducted by the National Catholic Welfare Conference in Grand Rapids, Mich.

In a slashing attack on profiteers and anti-labor propagandists, Murray charged that the nation's present inflation has been brought on by "the wanton and vicious behavior of greedy, grasping men who measure success in life by their own success in acquiring and holding intact as much as possible of the good things of life.

"THE working man has been traduced and slandered," the CIO president declared in a discussion of the Taft-Hartley act, "and the whole people has been reduced to a state of economic illiteracy.

"The American people simply have not been given the facts on our economy. Production is invariably discussed in confusing terms, and yet we know that production of goods is at an all-time high.

"High prices are attributed in slanderous terms to the man who works for a living. High profits are cited as a patriotic accomplishment."

Citing the varied devices incorporated into the Taft-Hartley law to tie up labor unions and cut their effectiveness, Murray added:

"Spokesmen for the CIO say without fear or trembling that there are certain phases of the Taft-Hartley law which will be resisted through noncompliance on constitutional grounds.

"EFFORTS will be made, of course, to brand us as rebels against our government. We are not in resistance to our government; we are endeavoring to make that government fill its proper function under the democratic process, and certainly its highest function is protecting the rights of the people."

Murray voiced suspicions that "little or nothing" could be accomplished by a special session of Congress to solve current economic and social problems until there had been a common program of action worked out by representatives of labor, business, agriculture and government.

"Certainly the Congress could and should make a contribution in setting things aright, but Congressional action can come only after certain other things have been done. There is no better machinery for the solution of the whole problem than a return to the accepted, established and legal democratic processes that distinguish our government above all others.

"WE therefore call upon the industrial leaders of this nation to meet with the representatives of organized labor and work out in full and frank discussion, and in good faith, a formula which all of us can make known to the Congress as the desires of the American people."

At stake in the present crisis, Murray pointed out, is not only the welfare of American citizens but the peace and well-being of the world.

"The people have needs; they want to satisfy those needs; to be able to do so they must have in their hands the needed purchasing power," he noted.

Guilty!

MORE than 20,000 business establishments were found last year to be violating the Wage and Hour Law.

These represented 51% of the 40,350 establishments inspected by the Wage & Hour Division of the Dept. of Labor.

More than $18,000,000 in illegally withheld wages were "discovered."

Child labor law violations affecting 942 minors were found in 185 places.

That's what the Division reported recently—and it added that it could not achieve "genuine" enforcement of the Fair Labor Standards Act by making inspections at so few places.

"If we had an adequate enforcement staff, the violating employers would soon see that they could not get away with what they do now and would start complying," a Labor Dept. official said.

A recent severe cut in the Department's budget will curtail the Division's work considerably.

Sweet, Isn't He: Sen. "Eat Less" Taft munches a candy bar to fortify himself against hunger as he prepares to read a script to the Calif. State Bar Association. Earlier Taft, who obviously is a candidate for the Republican nomination for the presidency, suggested that people "eat less meat and eat less extravagantly."

SPEAKER MARTIN JOKES ABOUT SPECIAL SESSION IN PRICES

HIGH prices are a subject for good-natured laughs, but do not justify calling a special session of Congress, it was made clear last week at a press conference called by House Speaker Joseph Martin (R., Mass.).

Asked whether he thought the price situation might mean a special call to the legislators, Martin said, "The administration has said nothing to me about it." Then he just grinned when several newsmen exploded with: "You've heard about them, haven't you?"

When a feminine reporter asked how Martin would answer complaints on high prices during his September and October speaking tour through the midwest and far west, the speaker quipped: "Well, that depends on how they come up."

Martin added that he was open minded on calling Congress back to cope with problems of foreign aid, saying he would "approve a special session if the administration could prove it was necessary."

Martin's speaking tour, starting Sept. 23 in Chicago, will be devoted to "talking about the 80th Congress" at Republican rallies.

Says Argentine Beef Needed Here

A call for the immediate resumption of importations of Argentine beef in cans was issued last week by Rep. Emanuel Celler (D., N. Y.) to remedy the U. S. shortage.

Pointing out that Argentine beef is shipped boned and canned and presents no danger of hoof and mouth disease since the germ resides only in bone, Celler said imports from July 15 to Aug. 1 were only 108 pounds.

At the same time, 200,000 pounds of Argentine beef came to the U. S. for military use, but this was not subject to the excessively high tariff of 6c per pound.

Celler said the tariff rate serves "to bolster the cattle bloc, the most powerful and rapacious bloc in the world" and that "its back can easily be broken by the importation of Argentine beef."

FE Workers Meet Continuously

Local 236, CIO Farm Equipment Workers, was engaged last week in a "continuous meeting" at the Louisville plant of the International Harvester Co.

The meeting is demanding that Louisville FE workers get the same pay as other workers in Harvester's plants outside Chicago.

Press Anti-Union, Survey Shows

The American press is becoming more anti-labor each year, according to a survey of daily newspapers by James S. Twohey Associates. "Labor Day of 1945 was the last year that the press majority indulged in platitudinous praise of labor," the newspaper analysts reported. "This year a critical or condemnatory tone is adopted toward labor by 59%, while only 13% follow a friendly line and 27% are unclear or mixed."

HITS WHEAT PRICE BOOST

SECRETARY of Agriculture Anderson said last week that he thought some price increases in recent weeks were unwarranted and that some dealings in the wheat market had been "unrealistic."

Discussing the wheat supply and the export program, Anderson said that "the facts in the wheat market are that we have a very heavy supply." Grain traders generally have blamed the demands of the export program for much of the price rise of recent weeks on the exchanges.

Anderson said that the wheat crop was estimated at 1,410,000,000 bushels. He said that normally, the United States uses 750,000,000 bushels for food, stock feed and seed, leaving about 650,000,000. From that amount, he said, 400,000,000 bushels could be exported and still leave a 200,000,000 bushel carryover for "good housekeeping."

"I have felt for a long time that the pressure on the wheat market was unnecessary," Anderson said.

He said he believed the drop in prices on the Chicago Board of Trade late last week was a result of traders realizing that there were still 200,000.000 bushels of wheat less to toss on the market.

When he was asked whether he considered the advance in grain prices unwarranted, he explained his views of the trading situation and finally answered yes.

Anderson said there had been many stories of the tremendous grain exports to Europe and of the shortness of the European crops. He said he felt that publicizing the large amounts of wheat on hand in the United States would help bring prices down.

He admitted that it is a "hard thing" to give a housewife assurance on price questions, but he emphasized that the supply of food in the United States is "fully ample for all our needs and the export program."

Quit Buying Meat

The beginning of a consumers strike against choicest cuts of meat because of high prices was reported late last week in New York City.

"Take your time. Prices are still going up."

Pres. Henry Beitscher of the Washington, D. C., Industrial Union Council, said that he would force a test case of the Federal loyalty program by refusing to state his union affiliation. He is an employe of the Commerce Dept.

Freight Rate Boost Proposal Attacked

Chief Attorney James Knudson of the Agriculture Department last week asserted that a boost in railroad freight rates would set off a "chain reaction of inflationary consequences."

He testified before the Interstate Commerce Commission hearing on the request of the railroads for freight rate increases.

The carriers have asked an immediate 10% boost until the ICC can consider their larger request for a 27% increase.

Knudson and Frederick Hamley, representing State railroad commissions, said the railroads face no financial emergency justifying the immediate 10% hike.

Knudson told the commission the United States is confronted now with the same economic situation that developed after world war I. Unless the inflationary trend is halted soon, he warned, a severe economic recession will follow.

Higher freight rates at this time, he said, would "release a chain reaction of inflationary consequences."

"No financial emergency has been shown such as to justify the absolute necessity of interim relief," he said.

Hamley agreed that the carriers had failed to prove their need for emergency relief. He reiterated his belief that the roads overlooked important factors in estimating expenses and revenues for the second half of 1947.

75 On Strike in S. F. Against Sears

About 75 employes of Sears Roebuck, San Francisco, walked out last week after 3½ months of negotiations failed to bring company agreement for continuation of seniority, the union shop, hiring hall and six paid holidays.

The CIO Longshoremen & Warehousemen accused the company of deliberately stalling on negotiations on a contract until union shop and other restrictions of the Taft-Hartley became effective. This contract expires in June.

The company had offered a 4c hourly increase in return for the union's giving up job and union security.

World Labor

LATIN-AMERICAN UNIONS are voicing sharp opposition to plans of the AFL to sponsor a dual trade union organization south of the Rio Grande. A meeting has been scheduled for January in Lima, Peru, where the AFL hopes to create a new Pan-American Federation as a rival to the powerful Latin-American Federation of Labor.

In Bolivia last week the Bolivian Federation and its La Paz council repudiated Serafino Romauldi, traveling agent for the AFL, and invited him to get out of town. The unions described him as "dangerous to Bolivian labor."

At Havana, the Cuban Federation of Labor charged the government of Pres. San Martin with increasing hostility to the island's unions. Iazaro Pena, secretary of the federation, predicted that Martin may soon make a deal with the AFL to recognize a small labor group as the official union movement and to illegalize the federation.

He said that radio facilities are being denied to union spokesmen, labor groups are being persecuted and that workers must rally quickly to protect their interests and bona fide organizations.

JAPANESE UNIONS are planning new wage demands to meet the problems of workers squeezed by rising prices, according to Allied Labor News reports from Tokyo.

Since last spring's projected general strike was called off just before the deadline, unions have been quiet, ALN said, but an end to the breathing spell appears imminent.

With wages pegged at 1800 yen a month, prices on both the official and black markets have risen drastically.

RETURN TO PALESTINE of the 4,400 Jews deported by the British government to an internment camp in Germany was demanded last week by CIO Pres. Murray in a wire to British Foreign Minister Bevin.

Pres. Murray's wire was sent at the request of the National Committee for Labor Palestine, composed of leading union officials. He told Bevin that the British action is "a violation of all dictates of man's concern for suffering humanity" and urged adoption by the British government of a "sane policy of justice and humility toward the Jewish cause."

POLAND'S LABOR UNIONS have doubled pre-war membership and now number more than two million workers, the Polish Information Service has announced. About half a million eligible persons still remain to be organized.

The Textile Workers Union, functioning in one of Poland's most important industries, has completed about 95% organization of its field.

One reason for the tremendous gains is the post-war unification of Polish labor. Before the Hitler invasion, the country had nine separate trade union central organizations, while in the textile industry alone 13 separate unions competed for the workers' favor.

All 36 unions affiliated to the Central Trade Union Committee are now of the industrial type, like CIO unions, with all employes in the industry belonging to a single organization.

Union Told To Unseat Foes

'IF LABOR IS TO SURVIVE'

THE political drive of Minnesota's Twin Cities is being spearheaded by James M. Shields, who resigned as Regional NLRB director in protest against the Taft-Hartley Law.

Two large united labor rallies were held in Minneapolis and the State capitol at St. Paul, on the other side of the Mississippi.

At St. Paul, Shields was flanked by Walter J. Smith, State CIO president; Della Ryan, secretary of the United Labor Rally; Edward C. Esholdt, AFL; Gerald J. O'Donnell, AFL Trades and Labor Assembly president, and Edward Baisden, president of the St. Paul Industrial Union Council. Smith and Esholdt were co-chairmen of the meeting.

In Minneapolis, backing up Shields were: Robert I. Wishart, president of the Hennepin County CIO; Walter Frank, AFL chairman of the Joint Labor Tax Committee; Hubert Schoen, chairman of the State American Veterans Committee, and Mayor Hubert Humphrey.

Shields launched an attack against Minnesota's Sen. Joseph Ball (R.) and denounced the "Ball-Taft-Hartley Law" as the magna carta of union-busting bosses, company finks and labor spies.

Shields declared: "For 10 years (during which time he was Regional NLRB director), I have been, under the Hatch Act, permitted to express myself politically only at the polls.

"Now, I've been de-Hatched and I'm hoping to say what I damn please. I'm going to fight this infamous law until it is repealed.

"Unseat the Congressmen and Senators who gave this law birth. This is a herculean task. It must be done if labor is to survive."

Mayor Humphrey's appearance was important because of a recent State Fair poll which showed a lead for him over Sen. Ball, who comes up for reelection next year.

Humphrey has indicated he will seek the Democratic nomination to oppose Ball. The mayor told the Minneapolis rally that no one was to blame for what the last Congress did but the people, who failed to get out the vote. He warned that that must not happen in 1948.

The meetings decided to utilize every union officer, steward and committeeman to do ward, precinct and house-to-house campaigning. The union officials' homes also will be used for neighborhood meetings.

Wisconsin

The CIO Auto Workers, Electrical Workers and Steelworkers are among the unions spearheading PAC's drive in Wisconsin.

Here is a preliminary glance at what's what:

Auto Workers: 24 Wisconsin members came back from the UAW Political Action Techniques School, at Waukegan, Ill., determined that they will not "Miss the Date in '48." The meeting drew up plans for organizing PACs in each local, county, city, town, ward and precinct. A novel approach was suggested under which visits would be made to farm areas to see what agriculturists think and to attempt to find a common meeting ground for farmers and labor.

Locals 75, 699, 248, 395, 396, 180, 82, 391, 244, 172, 173 and 72 are included in the UAW locals participating in political action. Those locals are in Milwaukee, La Crosse, Racine and Kenosha.

Electrical Workers: Local 1111 has issued leaflets to every worker in the Allen-Bradley shops. All types of PAC literature is being distributed.

Glamor is a part of the campaign, too. On Oct. 3, Local 1111's big free dance will be held.

At the affair will be 35 Allen-Bradley Glamor Girls, who will pass through the crowd selling PAC buttons for a buck each.

Local 1113, UE, has collected six times as much in PAC contributions as it did last year.

Steelworkers: Local 2181 has set up sort of a super-PAC committee. The group, with 32 members, will handle publicity, collection, registration and neighborhoods.

Hiring Declines In Manufacturing

Hiring in manufacturing industries during July bucked the seasonal trend of other years, to drop to a 6-year low mark, a report from the Bureau of Labor Statistics shows. The record of 48 workers hired for every 1,000 employes is a drop from 55 in June. In 1946 June hiring was 67 and July was 74 per 1,000 workers on the payrolls.

In July 1947 fewer workers quit their jobs proportionally than in any month since the end of the war, with the exception of Dec. 1946. The slight drop from June in quits reflects also a change in the seasonal change of former years, when workers were more likely to leave jobs voluntarily.

Hiring went down in almost every major section of the durable goods field, whereas hiring in textiles, leather and tobacco hiring rose during the month. Overall hiring was slower among women workers.

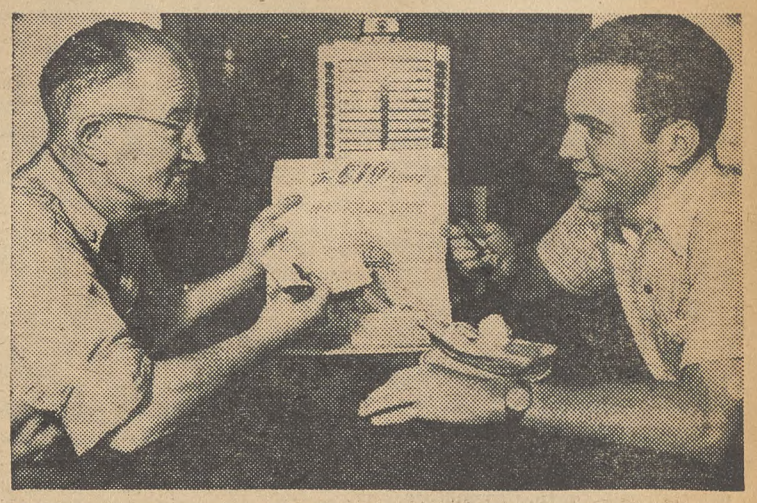
CIO Strikes Swank Phila. Hotel

The dowagers who live permanently at Philadelphia's swank Bellevue-Stratford Hotel were having a hard go of it last week end when 700 employes, members of Local 356, CIO Hotel and Restaurant Workers, struck.

According to Anthony D'Elia, president of the local and chief bellboy at the hotel, the strike was precipitated by a demand of the hotel that persons accused of drinking or other actions could be fired summarily without any chance for the union to protect them. D'Elia says the union members, some of whom have been with the hotel for many years, should have their "day in court" in arbitration. There are 900 guests at the hotel.

All-Time High

CANADIAN trade union membership reached an all-time high of 831,697 at the end of 1946, the Dominion Ministry of Labor reports. The figure is up some 15% from the wartime peak achieved in 1944.



Eschews Banana Splits: Vernon, Local 662, CIO Autoworkers, (left) who gave up banana splits to give $1 a week to PAC for 20 weeks, is trying to convince Bill Dodds, education director of the local, to do likewise.

" And please give the NAM what it needs most—a conscience."

BREWERY WORKERS LOCAL BACKS COMPULSORY VOTING

The CIO Brewery Workers, Local 343, has projected a mandatory voting system for its members which it hopes will become accepted labor policy in Minnesota, where the local is located, and elsewhere.

The proposal calls for each worker to be given a card to be signed by a state election judge attesting that the bearer has cast his ballot. The plan is now being sent to all locals of the Brewery Workers union and will be laid before the state CIO convention in Hibbing late in October.

If the convention acts favorably, use of the cards may spread throughout the state as labor seeks to get out its vote.

Author of the plan is John H. Wyant of St. Paul, research director for Local 343. To members of that international union, voting is serious business. Thousands of them were voted out of jobs when the prohibition amendment was adopted.

As a protection against this happening again and as a step toward good citizenship, the union's constitution provides that all members must be citizens or undergoing naturalization and must vote when physically able. Failure to do so means suspension from the union. Similar provisions are in the by-laws of Local 343.

To make sure its members voted, the local has been checking the records at a cost of from $60 to $100 per election. Because of the cost and the possible congestion if all unions tried this, Wyant developed the card system.

This card is three by five inches, has a picture of the flag in the upper left and carries the legend: "Americans that vote keep faith with those who fought to give them that privilege." Below that is room for the voter's name and the signature of an election judge.

As penalties for non-voters, Wyant suggests a variety of methods, including fines, suspension and public listing in union halls.

Denver Cops Bar Strikebreaking

The Denver police, who have broken strikes in the past, will stay out of labor-management tangles as long as John O'Donnell remains police chief.

The new police head made his announcement after striking members of the CIO Office & Professional Workers protested a policeman's attempt to encourage a back-to-work movement at the Riggs Optical Co.

"We're not going to take any part on either side in a labor dispute," said O'Donnell. "We're going to be equally fair to the union and management." In addition, he promised not to limit picketing.

The offending policemen was reprimanded.

RUBBER: WHY NOT TRY OUT LAW?

By ROBERT L. CRUDEN

TRYING out of the Taft-Hartley law by labor was urged by Pres. L. S. Buckmaster of CIO Rubber Workers at the union's 12th annual convention in Boston last week.

Emphasizing that the law is "the most important problem we have to face," Buckmaster declared:

"It looks to me as if labor will have to get into this thing and get its cases before the Board. Then if the Board bogs down, labor will be better able to challenge the rightness of the law and get the support of the American people. It will take more than labor to change the Hartley-Taft law."

He charged the mind of the public had been "poisoned against labor" by an NAM propaganda campaign, and said that labor itself "has done a bum public relations job."

"In some instances," he said, "unions have adopted, like some businesses, a 'To hell with the public' attitude."

Urging an intensive relations campaign by labor, Buckmaster said, "Labor can and must show that the objectives of organized labor are the objectives of the American people."

MEMBERSHIP in the Rubber workers last year reached an all-time high of 220,000, officers reported on the first day of the convention. The union was organized originally with a membership of 2080.

Rep. John McCormack, (D., Mass.), former majority leader, got a standing ovation from the 555 delegates as he lashed the H-T law as "repressive and punitive." Branding it as "iniquitous," the former House majority leader said, "Representatives of special interests sat in with Republican Congressmen in writing this bill." He named "a man from Chrysler" as one of this group.

McCormack said Republican had scuttled moves for an improved wage-hour law at the last session. "They say they'll introduce one at the next session," he said, "One for 60c an hour. Too little and too late."

The Massachusetts Congressman pointed out that whereas only 800,000 workers are aided by the 60c provision, nearly 3,000,000 would benefit from a 65c minimum.

"Who has the audacity to state that 65c an hour is too high a wage for an American workingman?" he asked.

McCormack blasted moves for a third party as leading "to the destruction of the progressive movement in this country. There are reactionary Democrats, but the Democratic party is organically progressive, while the Republican party is organically reactionary," he told the delegates.

In one of its first actions, the convention voted to place the union's field staff on seniority. The URWA is believed to be the first union in the country to take such action.

THE UNION'S constitution was amended to make an objective "the six hour day and the 30-hour week with wage increases to compensate for the shorter time so that there will be no reduction in weekly earnings from such action."

Reports by the New York Times and the Boston Herald that the resolutions committee had unanimously endorsed a resolution commending the House Committee on un-American Affairs were bitterly denied and branded as "flight of fancy" by Buckmaster on the convention floor.

The stories also told of an "anti-Communist" caucus whose purpose was to "purge from high office in the union" those "suspected of being Communist sympathizers."

"I deeply resent the efforts of anyone to say that this union is divided on the issue of communism," continued Buckmaster. "I say it is a lie! It has never been an issue in the organization."

The union's three international officers—Buckmaster; H. R. Lloyd, vice-president; and Charles Lanning, secy.-treas., were re-elected.

Utilities Attack Public Services

Publicly-owned utilities are in for a frontal attack sponsored by privately-owned power concerns.

Nearly 200 private organizations last week decided to launch an aggressive program designed to reveal the "waste of public funds at Government power sites that duplicate the lines of private power companies."

The decision, following a period of many years in which the private concerns took no public stand, apparently came as a result of the industry's conclusion that it has many friends among Republicans in the 80th Congress.

No indication was given by the 200 companies as to how they arrived at their charge of Governmental waste, but it was said that evidence to back up the stand would be sought between Sept. 25 and Oct. 5.

Hiring Rates Drop

Factory hiring rates throughout the country dropped in July to the lowest point for any July since 1940, the Labor Dept. reported last week.

Vermont CIO Backs PAC

THE Vermont State CIO Council, holding its annual convention at Burlington, last week placed political action and worker education at the top of its program for the coming year.

A unanimously-adopted resolution urged all-out support of PAC as an antidote for the Taft-Hartley Act. Another resolution created a workers' education fund, financed by a per capita levy of one cent.

Among the speakers on the two-day agenda were John Brophy, national director of CIO Council; Tilford E. Dudley, assistant director of CIO-PAC; Frank Fernbach, national CIO Education Dept.; Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam, head of the Federal Council of Churches; Rev. William A. Tennien; Tim Flynn, member of the national CIO organizing staff, and William Gilbert, CIO Furniture Workers.

The 110 delegates returned Council President John C. Lawson and Secy.-Treas. Daniel Dyshlevich to their posts by acclamation.

Health Co-Op Asks T-H Law Repeal

A national health cooperative recently became what is believed to be the first non-political, non-labor national group in the country to call for repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act.

Without a dissenting vote, 300 delegates to the Cooperative Health Federation's second annual convention at Elk City, Okla., adopted resolution calling for repeal of the T-H Act and condemning House Small Business subcommittee, headed by Rep. Ploeser (R., Mo.), for the manner in which it is investigating cooperatives.

Among the delegates, mostly farmers, were two from the CIO Retail, Wholesale & Dept. Store Employes in St. Louis, Mo.—Harold J. Gibbons and Max Voras. Harry Read, assistant to CIO Secy-Treas Jamos B. Caroy, appeared before the group's labor committee.

Unanimity: Without a dissenting vote Pres. Jack Kroll and Secy.-Treas. William Lavelle are returned as heads of the Ohio State CIO Council during its 9th annual convention at Cleveland last week.

ORGANIZING

BY ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

Last week the Ohio State Council held its convention in Cleveland. The representation exceeded any other previous convention held by the Council. Ohio ranks as one of the best operated Councils in the country. The delegates assembled realized the inequities contained in the Taft-Hartley Act and what it means to them and their unions.

The writer addressed the convention immediately following the statement of one of the authors of this vicious bill, Senator Taft, in which he advocated that the solution to high prices is that everybody eat less. So, now we have his program—more production; more profits; less purchasing power and less food for the workers.

Politics came in for serious consideration by the delegates and a determination that in order to protect their wages, working conditions and their union that they must become seriously involved in the political arena.

Jack Kroll, chairman of PAC, is president of the Council and William Lavelle is secretary-treasurer.

There are no elections under the Taft-Hartley Act to report. That condition undoubtedly will continue for sometime. Here are three victories without resorting to this anti-labor law:

CIO Reg. Dir. Irwin L. DeShetler, Los Angeles, reports two elections; (1) Steelworkers won by a vote of 100 to 10 among the employes of the Arizona Iron Works, Phoenix, Arizona. The election was conducted by Rabbi Krohn following a 6-weeks' strike for recognition. USA Dist. Dir. Charles Smith and USA Reps. Robert Keyes and Herb Finley were in charge.

Oil Workers Local 28, Long Beach, Calif., entered into a signed agreement with the representatives of the Continental Oil Co., in which both sides agreed to abide by the results of the vote. The election was conducted by Carl Fletcher, Assemblyman from the 71st Dist. in Long Beach and editor of the AFL Central Labor Councils official newspaper in Long Beach. The results were OWIU-CIO 26, no union 18.

CIO Reg. Dir. Ewald Sandner, Newark, N. J., reports a victory for CIO Chemical Workers in an election conducted by the N. J. Mediation Board at the River Plate Import and Export Co., Newark. CIO Rep. Peter J. Flynn conducted the organizational work and the CIO received 28, no union 1.

Not governed by the T-H Act, our Railroad Workers Union under the direction of Brother A. B. Martin report another fine victory for their organization amongst the blacksmiths of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad. The results were CIO 199, AFL 76. This organization is making splendid progress and is now seeking an election amongst the boilermakers.

In West Virginia, as reported in this column last week, the Telephone Workers Organizing Committee moves along. More locals have voted for CIO affiliation.

Chief Counsel Denham for the NLRB, is living the life of Riley. (probably Gerard Reilly, who with the NAM is included in those who suggested this stab-labor-in-the-back piece of legislation). He has nothing to do but meet company and independent unions and figure out how Senator Ball and Congressman Hartley can collaborate with him to influence additional and impractical rulings that are not contained in the law, as bad as it is. It is reported if he keeps this up, he will have no difficulty in being confirmed by reactionary Senators

Organized labor throughout its history has had to meet and overcome terrific odds. Repression and persecution, deprivation and the loss of human lives—it can, it must and it will find a way to overcome these repressive measures.

Ohio State CIO Convention Centers Fire on Taft

CENTERING its fire on native son, Sen. Robert A. Taft, whom it summoned to "come home," the Ohio State CIO Council in convention last week resolved to circulate petitions demanding the Senator's resignation.

The 1052 delegates charged Taft with "disservice to Ohio and the Nation" and called for an end to his "philosophy of government which is predicated on the bitter assumption that government is of big business, by big business and for big business."

The Council adopted a resolution which warned that "if the existing political parties fail to heed the urgent demand of the people for a liberal national program it can be expected that workers and progressive citizens everywhere will turn to enlightened and progressive leadership which it may find."

Four national CIO leaders addressed the convention: PAC Director Jack Kroll, also president of the state Council; CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey; Director of Councils John Brophy and Director of Organization Allan S. Haywood.

"Labor never gets anything unless it fights for it," Carey said. "That's as true for political action as for contracts." Predicting that Taft would not be the GOP presidential candidate, Carey stated that "his supporters are ashamed of his record."

Brophy, calling for a special session of Congress to reinstate price control attacked the Republican leadership as offering "nothing but restraint and self-denial as a corrective for inflationary prices . . . Price control will not obtain by moral suasion."

Taft's "eat less" cure for high prices was characterized by Haywood as "his new economy." He added: "Taft, who was born with a silver spoon in his mouth, doesn't know or want to understand that it takes food to produce more."

Swell Strikers' Ranks: Faced by the need of wage increase, these employes of the Burns Packing Co., Ltd., and Canada Packers, Ltd., join the workers at Swift Canadian plants who have been on strike four weeks. The Packinghouse Workers say that the strike spread because Burns and Canada Packers "saw no useful purpose in bargaining beyond a five-cent-an-hour wage increase." The union rejected the proposal that provincial authorities be allowed to settle the walkout.

Union Solidarity: CIO Packinghouse workers from Canada Packers, Ltd., led by Walter Daly (right) joins strikers from Swift Canadian Packing Co. to form a picket line "stretching clear across Canada." Some 14,000 UPWA Canadians are out in a strike which has shut off three-fourths of the Canadian meat supply. Also on strike are CIO workers from Burns Packing Co., Ltd. They are out for a 40-hour week and to improve their less than $35 average wage. Lloyd Fell left) leads Swift pickets.

PICKET LINE 'CLEAR ACROSS CANADA'

By NORMAN DOLNICK

WITH a picket line "stretching clear across Canada," 14,000 CIO Packinghouse Workers are engaged in what is probably the largest industry-wide strike in Canadian history.

Estimates are that the UPWA strike shuts off three-fourths of the entire Canadian meat supply.

The strike, now in its fourth week for some 3,000 Swift Canadian workers, was precipitated by a company lockout at New Westminster, B. C., and the suspension of 14 stewards and top union officers at Toronto, UPWA reported. The company's actions occurred while it was negotiating with the union for new contracts.

Two weeks later, the Swift pickets were joined by 11,000 strikers from the Burns Packing Co., Ltd., and Canada Packers, Ltd., who hit the bricks when the company declared that it "saw no useful purpose in further bargaining."

The Canadian packinghouse workers were negotiating for a 17½-cent-an-hour average wage increase, a 40-hour week and other contract improvements. The top company offer was for a five-cent raise. Swift offered three cents.

Under their present wage scales the average Canadian packinghouse worker earns less than $35 a week.

A comic note was hit in the Swift negotiations when it became apparent to union negotiators that the Company representatives were only acting as messengers from officials not at the bargaining table.

The mystery cleared when top negotiators from the Swift Chicago office were seen in the same hotel where the union and company were meeting. The Swift behind-the-scene maneuvers are "only part of its persistent campaign to maintain the slim fiction that the United States and Canada plants are under different management," UPWA officials said.

UPWA Pres. Ralph Helstein, negotiating for the union, issued a press statement declaring that "the union is in the position of attempting to bargain with a little man who isn't there."

Helstein proposed to bargain directly with "the men who call the signals for the company," but his offer was rejected.

In an effort to get a speedy settlement of the packing strike, UPWA Vice-Pres. and Canadian Director Fred W. Dowling proposed that the union and companies apply jointly to the Dominion government for the appointment of a conciliator.

This proposal was turned down by the companies, which said they favored conciliation by the seven provinces affected by the strike.

Intervention by the provincial governments "would give a free hand to vicious labor restricting laws in provinces such as Quebec and British Columbia which would drastically curtail the union's activities for a successful strike," the union said.

Furthermore provincial conciliation would virtually destroy the union's national agreements with each of the three companies.

"No, Francois, that'll never do as a wedding cake. I know it gets monotonous but you must continue the traditional type."

Catholics Study Industrial Peace

Amity between labor and management will be the theme of the convention of the Catholic Committee of the South, which opens Sept. 23 in New Orleans. The organization is made up of clergy and laymen interested in solving problems of labor organization, collective bargaining, wages and prices, rural life, housing and other social and economic phases of the South.

William L. Connolly, of the Bureau of Labor Standards, will represent Labor Secretary Schwellenbach at the convention. Thomas Reid, of McCormick Co., Baltimore, will speak for management. Other speakers include the Revs. Vincent O'Connell, S. M., CCS general chairman, and George Higgins, National Catholic Welfare Conference; Msgr. Luigi Ligutti, of the National Catholic Rural Life Conference; Neill McLean, credit union expert.

Building Workers Far Below War

Construction expenditures and employment both reached a postwar peak in August, the Bureau of Labor Statistics says. But, despite that rise, there are still a half-million fewer workers employed in construction than there was at the wartime peak of August, 1942.

Texas Keeps Labor From Higher Pay

Thousands of Texans and Mexicans are being prevented from leaving their state to get higher wages in the cotton fields of Mississippi, Louisiana and Arkansas.

The office of State Labor Commissioner M. B. Morgan has posted deputies on the State line, halting trucks loaded with migrant workers. The object is to enforce requirement for licensing of labor recruiters.

"I was here first!"

FDR Recreated

OUT of the fabric of history, the makers of "The Roosevelt Story" have cut the cloth for a magnificent picture.

They have taken the events that make men's lives and pieced them together to suit the people.

It is a people's picture in every sense of the word. One has only to contrast the defiant, aggressive, progressive spirit of the late President with the status of things under the present Congress to realize to what state our affairs have fallen.

Again, it is a people's picture. The people do the speaking.

The camera sweeps over the life of Roosevelt through the eyes of every steelworker, every seaman, every farmer, every shopkeeper. It never loses focus as it traces the dramatic rise of the New Deal and the opening of a new era for labor and the American people.

It won't be a popular picture with the conservative elements. They will call it a political documentary, unentertaining and idolizing.

Yet, any democratic person with a conscience, with a thought to his country's welfare, with a thought to his vanishing pocket-book, will sit through it engrossed by the march of events, fascinated by the life of this man who in the words of his opposition "betrayed his class" to fight for the rights of man.

Agree or disagree with Roosevelt, the story of his life is far better "entertainment" than most of the blown-up pap presented on the screen today.

THIS admittedly affectionate review of FDR's life starts with his funeral and the sorrowing faces of America's millions. Narrated by actors representing various people, it reviews his chilhood, his marriage, his rise in politics and the great Roosevelt tradition initiated when he took over the presidency.

His leadership in the fight againt depression, for public works such as the TVA Norris Dam, his fight for social security and the Wagner act, and finally the climactic fight of his career against fascism—all this makes memorable film history. His prophetic words, his urgent pleas for peace, prosperity and security are heard once again on the screen. They sound good.

"The Roosevelt Story" stands out as the people's verdict on a great President. It is a "must" picture for every democratic American.

Let us hope it is the first in a series to send democracy's light through today's darkness.

Hit Police Actions In New Orleans

The mayor of New Orleans last week was urged to halt police brutality and "indiscriminate and unjust arrests" of merchant seamen in the city.

A wire sent to the mayor, following a membership meeting in New York of the CIO Maritime Union, condemned the arrests as "part of a plan of intimidation of union members designed to smash growing unity of white and Negro workers in order to weaken trade unions."

Approximated 100 seamen have been jailed for as long as 60 days on a charge, in most instances, of "vagrancy," a union spokesman said.

Ask FBI To Skip Application Photos

The CIO Public workers last week requested FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover to abolish use of photographs on job applications used by his agency.

The photographs "can only serve to aid the growth of discrimination against minority group job applicants," Thomas Richardson, international vice-president of the union, wrote Hoover.

The Civil Service Commission some years ago abolished use of the photographs when it was discovered that it provided means of discriminating against Negroes by some government officials, the letter pointed out.

Most jobs in the FBI are not under the jurisdiction of the Civil Service Commission.

French Thank CIO for Gifts

IN the last year, CIO has sent nearly 30,000 CARE food and clothing textile packages to war victims in a dozen countries overseas. The other day the tide was reversed—CIO got a package from Europe.

It came from France, and it was filled with several hundred letters from French trade unionists and their families who had received packages. Every letter was brimming over with gratitude for the life-giving supplies sent to union members through CARE by the National CIO Community Services Committee.

This flood of grateful mail came to Irving Abramson, a vice president of CARE and national chairman of CIO-CSC, and it was contained in a carton that had once held CARE food.

It was written on pages torn from notebooks, on business cards, on picture postcards; it was written by men, by women, by children, by former resistance fighters, by widows of men who had died fighting the Nazis, by war orphans.

One note came on a mourning card from the parents of a youth killed at Buchenwald. A 13-year-old girl whose family had received one of the CARE packages expressed her thankful mood in a gay water-color painting of a French landscape.

CARE, a non-profit, government-approved organization, offers for guaranteed delivery a standard food package, special food packages for Eire and Britain, a kosher food package, layette, infant and baby food packages, cotton, woolen, blanket, household linen and knitting wool packages at $10 each; 25-pound flour package, $4; 10-pound lard package, $4. Orders may be mailed to CARE, 50 Broad Street, New York 5, N. Y.

Woman Winner Of Health Award

A WOMAN has for the first time won one of the American Public Health Association's Lasker Awards.

Dr. Alice Hamilton, who has spent most of her 78 years fighting occupational diseases, is one of five who will receive $1,000 and a gold statuette at the association's annual meeting in Atlantic City Oct. 9.

For many years connected with the U. S. Dept. of Labor, Dr. Hamilton's major contributions to workers' health were an analysis of silicosis, dread miner's disease, and studies of dangers in the rayon industry.

In the first world war she risked her life visiting plants manufacturing explosives. Her studies extended to such industries as lead smelting, the making of white lead, glazing and decorating pottery, printers and painters trades, the manufacture of storage batteries, enamelling of bathtubs and sinks, the compounding of rubber goods and aniline dye works.

Dr. Hamilton was also the only woman ever appointed to the League of Nations and the first woman professor at Harvard.

Voting Time Off

A clause has been inserted in the CIO Textile Workers' contract at Johnson & Johnson in Chicago which provides for 2 hours off on election days with pay.

"You Be My Mommy Till My Mommy Comes"

His Mother, like million other women in the United States, is employed. She has to work. He has to be cared for. It is high time that we—all of us together—planned adequate children's centers to care for the millions of other children like these two. If we care deeply enough and work hard enough, we can get health, education and recreation programs for all of our children. For the sake of your children and all children, join in working for more and better child care programs.—Photo by Helen M. Post

SPONGE FISHERS JOIN A UNION—STEEL

THE sponge fishermen of Tarpon Springs, Fla., have organized and petitioned a CIO union for a charter. The union is the Steelworkers.

Facetiously, the fishermen explain that they use steel hooks in gathering the sponges—hence the Steelworkers. Seriously, the explanation is that several hundred of the men engaged in the industry formerly worked in northern steel mills and are familiar with the union.

Commenting on the incongruity of sponge fishermen in a steel union, Van A. Bittner, national director of the CIO Organizing Committee, said, "The deciding factor in selecting the union in which a group shall be placed is the desire of the people themselves. In this case, the membership want Steel—and that is what they shall have."

Affiliation of the sponge fishermen with CIO follows closely on the heels of the organization of a cooperative exchange to sell their product direct to retail outlets.

The new local will take in all persons who make their living through producing sponges—boat owners, captains, divers, deck hands, warehousemen and laborers approximately 1000.

The fishermen explained to Charles L. Cowl, CIO director for Florida, that they need the backing CIO can give them in obtaining protective federal legislation. National CIO and Steel Washington representatives will help the fishermen in their fight for a protective tariff on sponge importations. Cheaper Mediterranean sponges have flooded the market, forcing prices down. A delegation, sent to Washington to plead for a higher sponge tariff, previously met with no success, it is reported.

NORTH CAROLINA

The new National Labor Relations Board will be by-passed in an agreement at High Point, N. C., between CIO and management to hold an election for bargaining rights without the entanglements of the Taft-Hartley Act, North Carolina CIO director William Smith has announced.

The Carolina Spring Co. and the CIO Furniture Workers have agreed to a secret ballot by the company's employes to determine their bargaining agent, Smith said. The election will be conducted by a representative of the North Carolina Dep't. of Labor, the Mayor of High Point and a member of the city council or a local minister.

("This is further proof that good labor-management relations can be maintained without recourse to the red tape of the Taft-Hartley Act," said Bittner in a statement from headquarters in Atlanta.)

"The company agrees to recognize and deal with the union if it wins the election," Smith said.

Demands Stronger Labor Voice in UN

Organized labor should be given a stronger voice in the United Nations to help save world peace, a UN rally at Tarrytown, N. Y., was told last week by R. J. Thomas, vice-president of the CIO and the Automobile Workers.

Full recognition of the World Federation of Trade Unions—with which CIO is affiliated—will encourage confidence in UN among the working people of the world, Thomas said. His speech was part of a week-long celebration of the UN by what has been described as a "model town."

"The labor movement has learned well the lessons of the two decades between World War I and World War II," Thomas said. "It has learned that the causes of war lie rooted in national oppression and economic insecurity.

"It has learned that Fascist conquest of the people of Spain or Italy or Germany or Argentina leads to wars of aggression."

ATTACKS PLAN TO CURB AIR WAVE FREEDOM

CIO will fight efforts to limit its freedom of expression on the nation's radio waves, Publicity Director Allan L. Swim has notified the annual convention of the Natl. Association of Broadcasters.

He wired a vigorous protest to NAB Pres. Justin Miller against proposals in a new industry code which might limit the ability of unions to present dramatic sketches or other forms of entertainment on either free or purchased radio time.

Similar criticism of the proposed code was voiced at the convention in Atlantic City by Allen Sayler, radio expert for the United Automobile Workers, which has already received licenses to operate FM stations in at least two cities.

The proposed industry code, which was placed before the NAB meeting for approval, would give radio station managers an "out" for banning programs on controversial or political issues which may be presented as news or entertainment.

Such a policy, Swim warned the NAB, would "leave labor unions with no method for presenting its views on the air except through constant reliance on speeches, forums or interviews.

"It would deny to labor the highly effective radio techniques used by corporate advertisers throughout the vast majority of broadcasting hours each week.... We do not intend to abandon those legitimate techniques of presentation in presenting our message to the American public."

The proposed code has several sections which could be used to limit labor broadcasts.

It recommends that "no dramatization . . . should be permitted" of either political or controversial questions. "The material," according to the proposals, "should be presented in a straight-forward manner to appeal to the intellect and reasoning of the listener, rather than to his emotions."

In another section the code recommends that all reference to controversial public issues "should be confined to periods or programs specifically designed for that purpose." Such programs, it adds, "should be clearly identified as such and no techniques should be permitted which may mislead listeners to believe the program is of a news, entertainment or other character."

Adoption of such provisions in the code, Swim said in his wire to the broadcasters trade association, would give stations incentive to limit unions to "speeches, forums or interviews."

CIO at The Fair The Iowa State and Des Moines CIO Councils put on this interesting exhibit at the State Fair. Standing are two members of the Women's Auxiliary, Mrs. James McDonnall and Mrs. Lewis Moore, who worked at the exhibit, together with other members. Those seated are visitors. "The Meat of It," on the sign at the lower left, is a CIO Packinghouse Workers' contribution to the exhibit. Other literature, including The CIO NEWS Voting Guide, was distributed.

Reduce Pension Age For ACW Members

Beginning next year, workers in the men's and boy's clothing industry may retire with a union pension at the age of 65, says a joint announcement of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers and the Clothing Manufacturers Association.

The retirement age has been 70. Financed by the employers, who pay 3% on their weekly payrolls, the Amalgamated Insurance Fund provides retirement benefits matching dollar for dollar old-age pensions received under Federal Social Security.

Win Total Hike of 28c

HARMONIOUS labor-management relations last week won for 3,000 employes of the Lever Brothers Co. a 12½c pay increase plus union security.

Manufacturers of such products as Pepsodent and Lux, the company concluded a uniform agreement with three unions, newest of which is the CIO United Chemical Workers.

The CIO union at the Hammond, Ind., plant, recently certified as bargaining agent, will receive in addition to the general increase, raises averaging 15½c an hour which were received by the other unions last March. This made a total increase of 27½c for the Chemical Workers.

"The new agreements," commented Howard Jones, representative of the CIO chemical workers, "represent collective bargaining at its soundest and best. The way in which these agreements were formulated can well serve as a model to management genuinely seeking industrial peace."

The Taft-Hartley Act prevented the CIO union from securing the union security accorded the other groups. Since the Chemical Workers contract was not signed until after the Aug. 22 deadline fixed in the T-H Act, the union must take part in a National Labor Relations Board election to secure a union shop.

The CIO agreement at Hammond provides the checkoff and sole bargaining rights in addition to a waiver by the company of the right, under the T-H Act, to sue for wildcat strikes.

CIO Exhibit Outstanding At Iowa State Fair

THE CIO is there to stay at the Iowa State Fair.

The Iowa State and Des Moines CIO Councils jointly sponsored an exhibit at the fair and plan to make the sponsorship an annual portion of labor's educational drive.

The exhibit was so successful that the CIO's supply of literature was virtually depleted—and there were three tons of it before the fair started.

One outstanding feature of this exhibit was the polling of visitors on their attitude towards recent anti-labor laws and state income tax. The results show that Taft-Hartley and Iowa Gov. Blue may be all blue come November, 1948, according to James McDonnall, organization director of the Des Moines Council.

The people who voted their opinions came from 195 different cities and towns in Iowa. The largest number of votes were cast by farmers and they were followed by other occupations in the following order: Labor, professional, business and students. Women of all groups voted similar to the men of each group except that most of the "no opinion" group were women.

Results of the polls:

POLL NO. 1

Do you approve of action that has been taken by the Republican-controlled State Legislature in allowing your state income tax to be doubled next year?

High Prices Rob Tot of Milk

One woman witness at the Boston price hearings demonstrated dramatically what the high cost of living has done to her and her family.

The mother, Mrs. Mary Carlson, one of a long line of price-protesting women, put her 4-month-old child on the committee desk and testified the infant had never tasted whole milk or butter. He has had only canned milk and oleomargarine.

VOL. 10 WASHINGTON., D. C., SEPTEMBER 29, 1947 82 NO. 39

Murray To President Truman:

ACT NOW ON PRICES!

This is the letter sent by CIO President Murray on Sept. 25 to Pres. Truman, asking for quick action to halt the rising spiral of prices:

"OUR national economy, at the moment, is in dire danger. The nation is caught in the iron grip of skyrocketing inflation. Responsible spokesmen of industry and government within recent weeks have confirmed the fears expressed by our labor organizations that if the present drift is permitted to continue, we can anticipate an inevitable savage depression.

"Millions of Americans, to meet their everyday living expenses, have seen their hard earned savings disappear.

"The prices of food, clothing and other necessities are beyond the financial reach of the average housewife.

"SEVERAL congressional committees are now engaged in the absurd process of holding hearings in various sections of the country to investigate the high cost of living. In our judgment this procedure is but a shallow endeavor to divert the attention of the American people from the unscrupulous action taken by the 79th Congress in abolishing all price control, and from the failure of the 80th Congress to take any action during its first session to protect the people from the ravages of obvious increasing inflation.

"Expressions of pious hopes under the present circumstances are an insult to those who are suffering because of our present economic plight. It should be clear to all that we are now faced with a most shocking demonstration of an orgy of heartless profiteering at the expense of all the people and with an indifference to the outcome for our nation.

"IF any relief is to be afforded the American people, and our obligations to the suffering people abroad are to be met, immediate and effective governmental action must be taken.

"On behalf of the Congress of Industrial Organizations, I recommend to you, Mr. President, that you convene, through your Council of Economic Advisers, the leaders of industry to place before them the dangers which now confront the nation as a result of skyrocketing prices and monopolistic profiteering.

"In addition, and of paramount importance, I very sincerely urge that you issue a call for an immediate special session of Congress for the purpose of enacting legislation to re-establish price control and rationing for food, clothing and other necessities of life, and impose full taxes on extortionate profits."

CLEVELAND HOUSEWIVES PROTEST HIGH PRICES AT CONGRESSIONAL COST OF LIVING HEARING

UNION-RUN STORES HELP CUT PRICES

THE CIO United Automobile Workers in Detroit set off a movement that spread rapidly when its Ford Local 400 at Highland started selling case lots of canned goods and other nonperishable stuff to its members on Saturdays at wholesale prices.

On the first day of operation, Saturday, Sept. 6, Local 400 sold out its entire stock as quickly as it could be handed out. Customers stood in line for hours before the store opened

The new co-op plan for mass sales of cut-rate groceries was worked out by the Co-op Committee of the UAW executive board in consultation with national co-op leaders at a conference Aug. 14, at the FDR-CIO Labor Center. Four cities in Michigan—Detroit, Flint, Pontiac and Lansing—which have city-wide cooperatives, were selected to test out the plan.

After Local 400's store started at the local hall, other UAW locals took up the idea. Presidents of 40 locals met in Detroit, Sept. 17, and approved a plan to finance warehouses to handle case lot purchases of foods and other commodities for sale at cost.

To finance the project, the presidents decided to ask the membership of their locals to authorize loans amounting to $1 per capita, for acquiring warehouse facilities and for working capital.

UAW Pres Walter Reuther said that the union would give organizational assistance to locals in other areas throughout the country to develop wholesale facilities for pooled purchasing.

Reuther said that plans had been worked out at the local president's meeting for distribution direct from warehouses and through buying clubs, as well as through sales at local union halls.

"This is an emergency program," he declared. "It was recognized by all those attending our conference that these are practical steps to provide immediate relief from high prices.

Plans similar to the UAW's are now under way in other parts of the country. In St. Louis, the CIO Retail, Wholesale & Department Employes announced that on Sept. 29 a store stocked with staple groceries and some household applicances will be opened as a temporary expedient to combat the high cost of living.

Any union member, CIO, AFL or independent, may buy at cost at the store, Union Director Harold J. Gibbons said. Housewives may qualify by showing their husbands union cards, he explained

IN North Carolina, William Smith, State CIO director, announced last week that plans were under way to open union co-op stores in Elizabeth City and Laurinburt. The stores will handle food products and later may carry hardware, furniture and other products.

The Los Angeles CIO Council reports that it has taken action to establish union non-profit cooperatives in the area. The Council states that 200,000 leaflets were issued recently to CIO members urging them to support the plan.

Additional plans brewing in the East are reported by the Cooperative News Service, New York. Auto Workers and Textile Workers in Connecticut and New Jersey, states CNS, have asked Eastern Cooperatives, Inc., for help in handling case lots

Farm Co-Op Sales Over $6 Billion

Farmer cooperatives did a total business of more than $6 billion last year, the largest amount in history, and increased their membership by half a million, according to a U. S. Dept. of Labor report issued by the Farm Credit Administration.

Marketing and purchasing cooperatives together now have a membership in excess of five million, the report stated.

CIO Broadcasts Return To NBC, Sunday, Oct. 5

CIO comes back on the radio Sunday, Oct. 5, with a regularly-scheduled series of "America United" broadcasts to be heard over the National Broadcasting Co. network.

The programs are scheduled each Sunday at 1 P. M. Eastern Standard Time. They can be heard at noon in the central time zone; at 11 A. M. in the Mountain area and at 10 A. M. on the Pacific coast.

Many stations transcribe the broadcasts, however, and play them later in the day. Local papers or stations affiliated with the NBC network should be consulted for the exact time of the program in each locality.

In presenting "America United" for a 13-week period, CIO will bring to the NBC microphones leading spokesmen for labor, industry and government to discuss principal issues of the day. The October 12 program, to be broadcast from Boston, will give listeners a "preview" of the problems to come before the CIO convention during the following few days.

The America United broadcasts feature easy, informal talks on the issues facing the general public. Speakers are not permitted to use manuscripts, and the discussion produces a give-and-take atmosphere at bringing out facts and the viewpoints of the various groups represented at the microphone.

Time for the broadcasts is made available by the National Broadcasting Co. as a public service. Direction of the programs is revolved among labor, farm and business organizations. CIO will arrange the broadcasts until the end of the year.

Warn Industry, CIO Urges

PRESIDENT Truman has been urged by CIO to convene, through the Council of Economic Advisers, industrial leaders and place before them the dangers confronting the nation from skyrocketing prices and monopolistic profiteering.

The CIO Full Employment Committee in a statement submitted to the council, warns that the nation's economy is headed for "inevitable collapse" unless drastic steps are taken immediately. Emil Rieve is administrative chairman of the committee.

"The further inflation gets out of hand now the worse will be the collapse that follows," the committee stated. "Failure to take audacious action means that the misery and chaos of a future depression will have a greater impact upon our daily life than ever before in history."

Danger signals which warn that the temporary props are failing are beginning to appear. Employment, production, sales, shipments and rate of new orders are all on the decline, says the CIO Committee.

"The speculative price situation and the prospective development of a foreign aid program to carry out the Marshall plan are temporary props. Should foreign aid not develop, the other economic props, already weakened, will not be sufficient to sustain our economy. It is even highly questionable whether a foreign aid program will, in itself, be sufficient to maintain full employment, full production and maximum purchasing power."

Action recommended by the CIO to the Council calls for immediate steps to prevent the food problem from becoming more critical by the calling of a special session of Congress to develop price and rationing controls.

Other measures recommended are an all-out attack upon monopolies to prevent them from curtailing production and distribution and from refusing to increase capacity; a program to expand capacity in our basic industries, particularly steel; a housing program for the construction of 1,750,000 homes a year for the next ten years, and taxation on speculative, excess and undistributed profits.

Shopping Bag Story: Shopping bags told the consumers' story at Congressional price hearing in New York. Housewives came to the hearings (upper picture) with slogans painted on the family grocery carriers. League of Women Shoppers, through Mrs. N. Feldman (lower photo) brought in groceries at 1939 and 1947 prices. Congressmen were reminded that prices are heading for the stratosphere.

Mystery of Armour's Penny

ARMOUR Meat Packing Co. claims that it makes "only" 1.8c profit on each dollar of sales.

Sen. Ralph E. Flanders, chairman of the Joint Congressional sub-committee investigating prices in the East, is shedding tears over that 1.8c. How can Armour be expected to reduce its prices under these circumstances? he wants to know.

Here's the answer:

The meat industry, according to an Office of Price Administration report, was accustomed to making .8c on the sales dollar in the prosperous prewar years of 1936-39. The 1.8c profit of today represents a 125% increase.

Actually this method of computing profits is misleading, as even the Federal Trade Commission, in its "Report on the Meat Packing Industry," pointed out some years ago.

"The packers make use of the word 'cent,' 'fraction of a cent,' 'only a few cents' . . . in the knowledge that the public regards a 'cent' as a very small element of value," the FTC claimed.

Actually, the Commission continued, "this practice obscures the real facts as to profits" because "a profit of a cent per unit, far from being a small profit, may be an exorbitant profit."

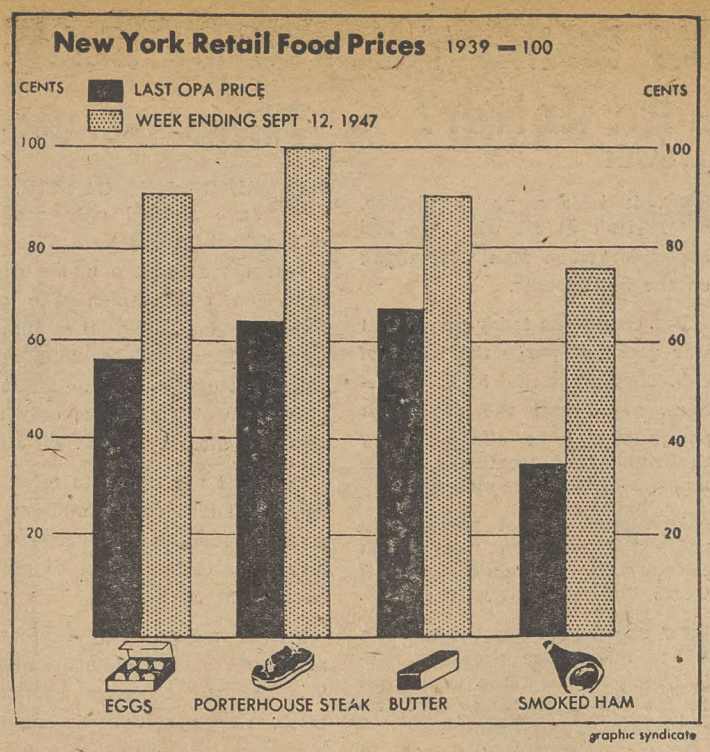
The reasonable method of computing profits is by "aggregating such profit and comparing it with the capital invested in the enterprise."—especially in an industry like meat packing which "does a large volume on a small investment."

Arithmetic lesson:

Armour's rate of return on its net worth, as quoted by Flanders, is 10.9%. A good rate of return is generally considered to be 6 to 8%.

Net Armour profits after taxes were $9 million in 1945, $21 million in 1946.

Of no apparent concern to Sen. Flanders was one Armour cost item: $1,197,696 in salaries paid to 45 directors and top officers. This one bill is almost as much as Morrell Meat Packers nets in a year.



TRUMAN NAMES MURRAY TO FOOD COMMITTEE

PRES. Truman last week appointed CIO Pres. Philip Murray to a Citizens' Food Committee, which will develop a domestic food conservation program.

Truman urged the committee to start working immediately in order to save food at home which can be used to alleviate the food shortage abroad. Charles Luckman, president of Lever Bros., is chairman of the committee.

Truman also said he had an open mind on a special session of Congress, but called on the American people to begin an immediate program of voluntary food conservation by wasting less.

Truman left it up to Congress whether food-rationing and price controls would be restored.

Other price activities last week:

H. C. L. The Labor Dept. announced again that prices had gone up, for the 12th week in a row. The new postwar peak was 158.1% of the 1926 average of wholesale prices, a rise of 0.4% over the previous week.

The index was 27.7% above the corresponding week a year ago and only 5% below the all-time peak of 1920. Dun & Bradstreet's index showed a drop.

CONTROLS: Marriner Eccles, head of the Federal Reserve System, announced he favors a return to wartime economic controls if they are necessary to aid Europe. He said wartime controls and taxes had been removed prematurely.

FREIGHT: The Interstate Commerce Commission approved increases in railway express charges ranging from 53.51% down to 0.52%.

The rate rise is expected to bring in an additional $61,254,000 in annual railroad express revenues.

FISH STORY: Interior Sec. J. A. Krug's recipe for solving the price problem: "Eat Fish". (In fish-conscious Boston breakfast menus showed fish cheaper than eggs.)

NAM: The NAM News, official organ of NAM, last week finally recognized criticism of NAM's prediction that the end of OPA would find prices adjusting themselves with increased production.

NAM said the prediction still holds and that its critics were mouthing "sheer nonsense" and "bare-faced lies". It did admit, however, that production of manufactured goods is up—"way up".

30 States Hit Labor

Thirty states, out of 45 whose legislatures met this year, passed measures restricting union activity, the U. S. Dept. of Labor announced last week.

CIO Spokesmen Testify

CONGRESSMEN HEAR 1947 FACTS OF LIFE

By GLORIA CAPLAN

WHODUNNIT? Who's responsible for the high cost of living?

Out to lay a finger on the culprit or culprits, six Congressional "detectives," members of a Joint House-Senate Sub-Committee investigating prices, questioned CIO witnesses in New York City last week.

"Big business profiteers, speculators, and a Congress which killed OPA last year," New York State CIO Pres. Louis Hollander, told the probers.

Earlier New York housewives and veterans had made the same charge. In Providence, R. I., and Boston, Mass., the committee had heard the same answer from everyone except big business spokesmen.

CIO Remedy

"Put up the red light quickly, or we will have a destructive hurricane that will make 1929 look like a gentle wind," Hollander warned. "That red light must be an emergency session of Congress to restore price control and rationing . . ."

In addition, the CIO leader urged:

- Re-imposition of excess profits taxes.
- End speculation on foods by eliminating margin trading.
- Immediate establishment of a 75c minimum wage to give immediate relief to those hardest hit by rising prices.

The suggestion to restrict speculation, urged by other witnesses as well, bore immediate fruit. A wire, signed by all six Congressmen, sent to President Truman the next day, asked for immediate measures to restrain speculation on the nation's grain and commodity markets, recommending an increase in the cash margins required.

Observers noted, however, that the Government has no legal control over margin requirements for exchanges as it has over those for the stock market. The Congressmen hoped government experts might be able to discover "something."

The threat to free speculation drew a worried protest from J. O. McClintock, president of the Chicago Board of Trade. "The speculator actually renders a service," he insisted.

Defends Corporations

Consumers were skeptical that much would come of the Congressional hearings, since four of the six investigators had opposed price and rent controls in Congress, had supported the Taft-Hartley bill, and in their questioning of witnesses appeared more anxious to pin the "profiteering" tag on organized labor than on corporations.

Ignoring Hollander's charge that corporate profits had increased 70% over the 1945 wartime peak, a figure based on President Truman's Mid-Year Economic Report to Congress, and discounting figures cited by other CIO witnesses to prove that wage increases had lagged far behind both profits and prices, the Senator repeatedly asked one question:

"How can Armour and Co. (meat packers) reduce its prices, for instance, when it claims that only 1.8c out of each sales dollar goes to profits?"

"Subpoena their books!" challenged Hollander, Saul Mills, Greater New York City CIO aide and CIO Transport Workers Counsel Harry Sacher.

"When housewives pay over a dollar a pound for ground steak, I know Armour and Co. is making a helluva lot more than 1c!" snapped Saul Mills at one point, as housewives and workers in the audience cheered.

But the Congressmen didn't have the power of subpoena, the chairman protested.

"Oh, it doesn't have the power to subpoena?" Sacher retorted. "Then, gentlemen, I submit that this investigation is a fraud!"

Twenty minutes later Sen. Flanders returned from a conference with the committee's counsel to eat his statement. The committee did have the power to subpoena, after all, he stated.

(In the background during the frequent crossfire, Rep. Robert F. Rich (R., Pa.), himself a textile manufacturer, was angrily hammering. "Are you impugning the purposes of this committee? Do you mean that these [corporate financial statements] are dishonest?")

At one point Rich asked Hollander for the name of a small retailer about whom the CIO official had related an instance of price gouging—"so that we can discover the profiteers. Give us names . . ."

"I mentioned Swift and Armour," was the heated reply. "I gave you names. But you don't want to investigate the big boys. You just want to jump on the little fellows!"

(Later questioning by reporters brought an indication from the committee that no investigation of the "big boys" would be undertaken.)

Sen. Flanders, however, was willing to admit to profiteering in the steel and auto industries. "I am thoroughly in sympathy with you in believing that the rises in the price of steel and automobiles were unjustified," he told Saul Mills.

'Eat Less' Unpopular

Every CIO witness who took the stand blasted Sen. Robert A. Taft's "eat less" cure for high prices.

"We don't have to be told to eat less," said Mills. "Working people have been doing that for quite a while." Hollander had previously cited results of a CIO survey last year which showed that 78% of all families questioned were buying less milk than before price controls were dropped; 73% were buying less eggs and 89% were buying less butter.

But Rep. Clarence Kilburn (R-N.Y.) was unimpressed by the picture of workers' privations.

"If it were possible to restore price controls, would you be in favor of any kind of control on wages?" he asked.

"I cannot recall any period in this country when wages were ahead of prices. Wages have always lagged behind," Mills replied. "You give us price controls that work, then show us where wages are out of line and we'll agree with you."

Prices Bite Man

Members of the Congressional Joint sub-committee investigating prices in the Midwest felt the pinch of high prices as they opened hearings in Cleveland, Ohio.

Trying to make ends meet on his $6 per diem, Sen. John Sparkman (D., Ala.) said his $9 hotel room for himself and his wife put him in the red $3 at the start of each day.

Rep. Henry Talle (R., Ia.) moved into a "little bitty" hotel room to cut down expenses.

Rep. Walter Huber (D., O.), whose expenses are running to $15 a day, was incensed at being charged 15c for a cup of coffee.

'Look At the Records': Louis Hollander, head of the state CIO in New York, talked blunt facts when he appeared before the Congressional price hearing in Manhattan last week. Stop fussing around, and investigate the meat packers' profit statements, Hollander (left) told Sen. Flanders (right, at mike) in the course of some hot interchanges.

IT IS OUR BUSINESS

Somebody needed to say it, and David E. Lilienthal did—bluntly.

He characterized as "dangerous nonsense, dangerous to genuine national security, the growing tendency in some quarters to act as if atomic energy were none of the American public's business."

Lilienthal, chief of the U. S. Atomic Energy Commission, said that the public must learn the essential facts about the atom. Then he added:

"If schemers, or fools, or rascals or hysterical stuffed shirts get this thing out of your hands, it may then be too late to learn what it is all about."

What Lilienthal said is of great importance to the man on the production line, to the woman in the kitchen, to the store operator, to the youngster in school.

It is important because atomic energy can be used for great good or great evil. It can be used to make life more pleasant, or to kill and maim. It can be used for the good of the many or for the profit of the few.

A huge amount of public money was used to develop the atom bomb, designed to kill quickly and to help end a war. In building the bomb scientists unlocked secrets of a whole new world.

Lilienthal wants the public to share to the fullest the benefits atomic energy will make available. He wants the new "atomic world" to aid all of civilization.

But there are schemers, fools, rascals and hysterical stuffed shirts who would like for atomic energy to be controlled by the military or by private interests.

They would like to seize for themselves or for their particular groups the right to determine how it will be used.

This they must not be permitted to do.

20,000 Guilty

More than 20,000 business establishments violated the Wage-Hour Law last year and illegally withheld more than $18,000,000 in wages.

That's what the Wage-Hour Division of the Department of Labor reported recently—and it admitted frankly that the law had not been enforced rigidly.

To our way of thinking, 20,000 law violations constitute a major scandal, and the withholding of $18,000,000 in wages from American workers is quite a swindle.

We can imagine what would have happened if 20,000 labor unions had been found guilty of sharp financial dealing. Great condemnation would have been heaped on them—and justifiably so.

That's one reason we were so interested in noting the great calmness with which the press and radio accepted the Wage-Hour Law report.

And we'd like to know what the number of violators would have been listed at if the Wage-Hour Division had had an adequate enforcement staff.

Without comment, we pass on the statement of a pun-making colleague who said, "The new NLRB is loaded with Denhamite."

The man with a grievance put it aptly when he said he wanted to engage in some corrective bargaining.

What Are YOU Doing To Make World a Bit Better?

By ALLAN L. SWIM

EMPLOYMENT in the United States is at a record peacetime high, and production is on the increase.

Profits in most industrial and business fields are enormous.

A majority of the farm population is reaping a rich "cash" harvest.

Most workers are receiving a higher rate of pay than they ever did before.

These things, considered individually, undoubtedly sound good—yet things are in a pretty bad mess.

THE comforting peace that was to come with the end of bloody conflict has not arrived.

Many of the people in this country are still ill-housed and ill-fed.

The average working person has trouble making ends meet financially.

Across the oceans are millions who face a winter of cold and hunger.

And in the U. S. there are a million children who didn't go back to school this year because they had to work.

THE Communists are trying to dominate the entire world and destroy the capitalistic system, say those who oppose Russia.

The "capitalistic imperialists," say the Communists, are engaged in a cruel expansionist movement that may lead to another war.

Abroad there is hysteria born of fear—and at home there is fear born of hysteria.

Too many rightists are calling the liberals "Reds" and too many leftists are hurling charges of "fascism" at the conservatives.

American citizens whose patriotism has never been questioned are being asked to sign "loyalty" pledges, and "witch hunting" has become a popular pastime.

NO, it isn't a pretty picture. It isn't at all what we had hoped for when men were dying on the battlefronts.

But conditions today prove that war does not purge the world of evil. They prove that hate, intolerance, greed and the desire for power cannot be eliminated by the signing of treaties and the issuance of idealistic statements.

Additional conflict would only make the situation worse. You cannot cure an ill child—or an ill world—by flailing it with a stick.

NO one person has the solution to all of our problems. Nobody knows when the world will return to something that resembles health and sanity.

Very few persons will agree on what's wrong, and there is even less agreement on what should be done.

About the only thing that seems certain is that the world's big trouble is the sum total of the little troubles of millions of individuals.

This being true, individuals—the "little" people of the world—can do much individually to straighten out our affairs.

THIS means there is an important job for you and me—for all of us.

Wasting less food here will mean more to eat for Europe's hungry millions.

Refusal to up prices just because the traffic will stand it will cut down the danger of disastrous inflation.

The substitution of reason for blind prejudice will curb intolerance.

The farmer, the laborer, the business man, the industrialist and the professional man can make a worthwhile contribution.

After all, it's better to make a contribution to peace and understanding than to war.

CONGRESSMAN DRIPP — BY YOMEN

"SO LONG AS THEY JUST KEEP "INVESTIGATING" HIGH PRICES, EVERYTHING'LL BE FINE."

Roger Babson Thinks It Over

"DURING MY CAREER, I have studied only profits, wages, bushels and tons. Friends, I fear there are too many other American businessmen who are like me, forgetting the human values. This may explain why we do not understand the millions of wage workers whose only assets are their boys and girls.

"Today I am trying to think of them and also of the millions of starving families in Europe who love their children just as much as I loved Michael."

Those sentiments, expressed somewhat surprisingly by Roger W. Babson, business commentator, whose column is carried by many newspapers throughout the country, were brought forth, he says, by the death of his 18-year-old grandson, Michael, who was drowned in Lake Sunapee, N. H., while rescuing a girl.

Babson explains that one reason for mentioning his grandson's death, "is to apologize for my habit of discussing World War III as if the money cost and property damage are of primary consideration.

"Heretofore, I have figured which is cheaper in dollars—to help out Europe now or to fight now. I have not considered the millions of good boys who would be killed in another war.

"Again I fear there are too many other businessmen — and perhaps labor leaders too—who are as ruthless as I have been in thinking too much of the dollars involved and not enough of the human lives. Anyhow, I am a changed man today."

IF World War III comes, Babson continues, "we will be told that it is a fight for 'democracy against dictatorship.' But since losing Michael, I have been wondering if there is not a more underlying reason for today's troubles.

"May not property, stocks, profits and wages be one reason for the struggle between America and Europe?

"If we would be willing to sacrifice some of our wealth—in a big way—perhaps Russia would have to call off her gangster methods. This does not mean that we would pay tribute, as a cowardly nation, to Europe, but it would be licking these dictators by giving up our luxuries for awhile in order to raise the standard of living abroad. . . .

"Before losing my grandson, I was all for fighting now and 'cleaning Russia up'; but today I think there may be a better way. Besides, do wars ever settle great questions when ideologies are involved?"

Has Polio Poster For Use By Labor

The National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis has designed a poster for special use by unions.

The poster outlines in capsule form symptoms of the disease and measures to be taken when they appear. They may be obtained in any quantity without charge by addressing James J. Herkenham, Jr., Director, Labor Service, National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis, 120 Broadway, New York.

Timely Leaflet Turned the Trick

HE'S one of those old-timers who learned long ago that you sometimes have to play according to the rules others make—regardless of how you feel about it.

He prefers to do things the nice, gentlemanly way, but he can get rough if he has to.

He's a thinker-upper of fancy schemes, some of which click and some of which backfire.

This is the story of one that clicked.

THE CIO organizer (whose name is not used because of his present assignment) knew he was going into a tough situation.

A group of workers had asked him to help them set up a union in a typical textile town. He didn't know too much about the textile industry, but he decided to give it a try.

Mill management, however, had decided long ago that it wasn't going to have a union around if it could help it. And it was willing—perhaps anxious—to play rough.

The organizer made some progress at first, then his campaign got on dead center and wouldn't move.

APPARENTLY this was what management had been waiting for. It decided to act and act fast. After all, hadn't mill officials worked out a sure-fire plan? It was a plan that had worked successfully elsewhere.

Soon the nucleus of the union would be destroyed and the organizer would leave town.

But somebody talked when there should have been silence—and news travels fast in a textile town.

THE organizer learned what was about to happen and it worried him.

"If they get by with it I'm through," he told himself. "I'll just have to fold up my campaign. But wait a minute! Maybe I can beat them at their own game. Maybe . . ."

He thought his scheme over for a long time, then decided to gamble on it. After all, he had nothing to lose.

And, then, nobody likes to take a licking.

THE nearest available mimeograph was miles away, so the organizer got into his car and drove off.

He worked for a long time over his little creation. It had to be just right. He could go so far—and not a bit farther.

Finally he had it. He cut the stencil, ran the paper through the machine, bundled up his leaflets and headed back for the town from which he had come.

The next morning he stood at the plant gate and handed a leaflet to each worker who entered.

BY the end of the day the organizer was sure that he had won. It would be only a question of time—and a lot of hard, fast work.

Workers started signing membership cards. Large groups turned up at meetings. An election was held and the union won by a comfortable margin.

Several good contracts have been negotiated since then, and the organizer is still working in the same section of the country.

WHAT turned the trick? The organizer explains it this way:

"I learned that on a certain morning management would pass out a nice pay raise and then put out a lot of stuff about "You don't have to join a union to get decent pay around here'.

"So I put out a leaflet—on that 'certain' morning—saying that although the union wasn't completely organized it already was so strong it was going to get a pay raise that very day for all of the mill workers."

SHARPENING THE AXE

As Predicted, T-H Act Brings Major Dispute To Town

BACKERS of the Taft-Hartley Act said their measure was designed to promote management-labor peace, but—

Within two weeks after the act became law the usually quiet town of Salem, Ind., had a major dispute on its hands—a dispute that involved an anti-picketing injunction, the dynamiting of a workers' home and the calling out of state troopers.

United Furniture Workers (CIO) won a bargaining election, 252 to 155, at Smith Cabinet Co. three days before the Taft-Hartley Law became effective.

The union, however, was denied certification because neither it nor the CIO had filed the statements and affidavits necessary before a union can obtain services of the "new" NLRB.

Company Pres. Chester Smith refused to recognize the union, and two weeks later the workers walked out.

THEN, according to Federated Press, Company attorneys got an injunction restraining mass picketing at the plant and three workers were cited for contempt of court under the restraining order. A series of altercations followed, in one of which a piece of dynamite was thrown near a worker's house.

Most serious clash came when union members from Louisville, Ky., drove in to help swell the strikers' picketline and became involved in a fight with some scabs. Washington County Sheriff Orval Hamilton forced the Louisville workers to leave town.

Then followed an appeal from Mayor O. L. Cook to Gov. Ralph F. Gates (R) to send in state troopers. The troopers arrived the next day, restoring an uneasy truce.

T-H Act 'Immoral'

"The only guarantee of full production that American industry can have will be the assurance that the American worker shares equitably in that production," Rev. Vincent J. O'Connell, general chairman of the Catholic Committee of the South, said last week.

The Taft-Hartley Act, Father O'Connell said, is based on two false assumptions: the moral error that an employer's right to a profit is as great as his workers' right to a living wage and the factual error that labor organization is as powerful as management organization.

The statement was made at a labor-management session during the CCS's three-day convention in Charlotte, N. C.

Recipe For Chaos

REP. Jamie L. Whitten of Mississippi didn't quibble about it. He simply stated:

"You labor people know perfectly well that it would be better for three members of a family to work for low wages than for one to work for a high wage."

He said, further, that Mississippi was attempting to attract new industry and that labor's drive for good wages was "standing in the way."

These views were expressed to 11 Amalgamated Clothing Workers members from New Albany, Miss., who went to Whitten's home in Charleston to get his views on organized labor.

Sue Herrin, head of the ACW delegation, said following the meeting:

You can guess what ACW's reply was.

Rail $ Up 1925%

Class 1 railways reported a gain in profits of 1925% in the first seven months of 1947 as compared with the similar period last year, the Labor Research Association's Railroad Notes have revealed.

The roads cleared $243,000,000 this year as against $12,000,000 in the first half of 1946, the figures show. Western railroads accounted for half of the total profits this time. Last year, they had only 12.5% of the total.

Pressman To Bar Group:

LABOR BOARD SWINGING AXE

EVENTS during the past three months have borne out completely the warnings sounded by organized labor prior to passage of the Taft-Hartley Act last June, the American Bar Association was told last week by CIO General Counsel Lee Pressman.

In a debate with Labor Board General Counsel Robert Denham before the ABA's section on labor law, Pressman charged:

- Powerful propaganda interests have sought to smear unions for violating the section of the T-H Act prohibiting political expenditures—although a violation is the only method of bringing the issue to the U S. Supreme Court.
- Efforts to provide a basis through collective bargaining for good labor-management relations without recourse to court damage suits have been falsely labeled as "violations" and "evasions" of the law.
- The Board, acting at the behest of employers against unions, is invading jurisdictions which it never touched when unions were not liable to government prosecution.
- The Board is rapidly sinking in an administrative morass because it must enforce an "unworkable statute."

Although Sen. Taft has claimed that the T-H law will not be an issue in the '48 elections, the ABA convention showed unprecedented interest in the new law The Section on Labor Law—of which Pressman is a council member—drew record-breaking crowds of attorneys for the discussion, and the Section elected the CIO attorney as its representative to the House of Delegates, the top convention body of the bar association.

PRESSMAN'S statement lashed out at "ill-considered" charges that unions conducted themselves improperly in refusing to comply with the ban on political expenditures.

"Nothing could be further from the truth," he said. "It is in the best traditions of sound Americanism to refuse to submit to the repression of civil rights."

Pressman also pointed to misrepresentation of policy adopted by many CIO unions to gain protection against damage suits under the Taft-Hartley Act.

"How can unions be attacked because they seek to include in collective bargaining contracts specific clauses which would prevent an employer from securing huge money damages against the union?" he asked. "The sole purpose of such clauses is to create a machinery for the adjustment of all differences within the framework of the contract itself. This was the basis of liability before the passage of the Taft-Hartley Act, and there is nothing in the Taft-Hartley Act which requires a union to expose itself to a greater measure of liability

"It is a strange thing for those who profess to believe in collective bargaining to object when unions insist that the collective bargain include an exclusive arrangement for disposing of all differences between the parties.

"It is wildly inaccurate to suggest that these clauses have as their purpose the evasion of the law. They are designed to protect the interests of the union's membership, to promote industrial peace, and to eliminate a device for destroying collective bargaining and unions themselves."

SHARPLY attacking the T-H Act and its administration Pressman charged that NLRB General Council Denham in his talk to the Bar Assn., had so construed the Act as to make it even more repressive than the language of the Act warrants.

"There is a provision in the Taft-Hartley Act which authorizes the Board at the discretion of the General Counsel to obtain injunctions against either employers or labor organizations.

"This is in addition to a provision which requires the General Counsel to obtain injunctions against certain unfair labor practices by unions. Yet, in the remarks of General Counsel Denham before the American Bar Assn. he has clearly indicated that even the former type of injunctions will be brought exclusively against unions.

"I believe that Mr Denham's interpretation of this section of the Act is wholly erroneous. It could only have been arrived at as a result of a deliberate design to further warp and distort an already one-sided statute for the purpose of making it an exclusively pro-employer anti-union weapon.

"In the first injunction proceeding under this Act, Denham's office has filed for an injunction to prevent an AFL union from conducting a claimed secondary boycott against a small specialty shop in Chattanooga, Tenn., which installs floors and wall coverings in houses.

"In all of the 12 years of the existence of the Wagner Act there was never an attempt by the Board to assert jurisdiction over establishments of this kind. When unions filed unfair labor practices against employers of this size and type the Board consistently declined jurisdiction.

"This first legal proceeding by General Counsel Denham indicates a determination to apply injunctions in a field completely local in character.

"Senator Taft only recently has professed a concern for the preservation of states' rights. Is states' rights a legitimate concept only for the purpose of protecting employers?"

Wage-Hour Legal Cases Double

Suits claiming violations of the Fair Labor Standards Act have doubled in the past two years according to a report of the administrative office of the Federal Court system issued at the opening session in Washington of the annual Judicial Conference of Senior Circuit Court Judges.

Mask-erade: Sen. Robert (Eat Less) Taft received a true Hollywood welcome when he arrived in Los Angeles on his western speaking trip. These masked members of the CIO electrical workers, together with workers from other L. A. unions, greeted the Senator with placards and funny faces.

"And just because you've worked here 30 years is no reason why you can come in late!"

T-H Act In Action

THE real nature of the Taft-Hartley Act is becoming increasingly clear.

Two recent actions taken by the NLRB General Counsel reveal what the law may have in store for organized labor.

In one case a group of printing shops filed an unfair labor practice charge against the Intl. Typographical Union, claiming that the organization had refuse to engage in collective bargaining. The ITU has adopted a policy of not entering into contracts, fearful of law suits and other claims by employers and has stated that it will instead publish the conditions of work pursuant to which its members will work.

Fast Against Labor

The important thing to note is that within a week or two of the filing of such charge, the regional director of the Board, under the direction of the NLRB general counsel, issued a complaint against the union.

The experience of all unions under the Wagner Act, and particularly within the last few years, has been that months elapsed before the Board issued complaints based on charges filed by unions against employers. But the new Board, under the Taft-Hartley Act, when requested by employers to take action against a union, finds it particularly simple to act with dispatch, through the immediate issuance of a complaint.

In part, this may have been due to the fact that immediately after the filing of the charge, Gerard Reilly—former member of the Board, advisor to Senator Taft on the T-H Act, and attorney for the employers—called on Mr. Denham, the General Counsel of the Board.

In another case the members of a local carpenter's union refused to work on a building job where materials were being installed by a company with the use of non-union workers. This latter company filed a charge against the carpenters' union claiming that the union was engaged in a secondary boycott in violation of the Taft-Hartley Act.

Upon the mere filing of the charge, under provisions of the T-H Act, the NLRB General Counsel filed a complaint in federal court requesting that a temporary injunction be issued compelling the carpenters to continue on the job with non-union workers.

This action revives the practice of vicious federal anti-labor union injunctions directed against peaceful activities of union where they seek merely to protect the living standards of their members.

Shows True Nature

The company (involved in this case) was engaged in a type of work which under the Wagner Act had been considered of such a local character as to prevent the Board from proceeding against an employer when charged by a union with an unfair labor practice. But under the same set of facts where the Board formerly refused to proceed against employers, the Taft-Hartley Act, as construed by the Board and its General Counsel, directs the issuance of injunction against the labor union and its members.

These recent actions should dispel the illusion carefully developed in recent weeks by the proponents of the Taft-Hartley Act that it in no way interferes with the rights of the members of labor organizations, but merely curbs the so-called power of labor leaders.

UE IN COURT AGAINST RAND

THE CIO Electrical Workers last week filed an injunction suit against the Remington Rand Co. seeking to restrain the company from "breaching" its contract with Local 334 in Illion, N. Y.

The union charged that the company was refusing to recognize the UL as the sole collective bargaining agency, even though a one-year contract covering employes at the ABC Division at Ilion had been signed Feb. 13, 1947.

On Sept. 8 the company posted a bulletin board notice reading: "We have no collective bargaining contract in this plant with any union."

Supreme Court Judge Bernard Botein set Oct. 8 as the date for a hearing in which the company will be asked to show cause why a temporary injunction should not be issued.

UE ADMINISTRATION AND CRITICS CLASH

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

THE CIO Electrical Workers, holding the largest convention in its history, last week adopted a strong political action program, demanded repeal of the Taft-Hartley Law and severely censured the group known as UE Members for Democratic Action.

The political action and T-H resolutions were adopted unanimously. The censure motion passes on a roll-call vote, 3817 to 596.

The convention, held at the Bradford Hotel, Boston, also re-elected the three general officers —Albert J. Fitzgerald, Julius Emspak and James J. Matles; heard political action addresses by former Vice President Henry A. Wallace and PAC Director Jack Kroll, and adopted new minimum contractual standards.

The motion censuring UEMDA, which is headed by CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey—a delegate from UE Local 101, and Pennsylvania CIO Secy. Harry Block, came after a long debate. The resolution was in the form of a majority report of the Resolutions Committee.

Cite Many Charges

The resolution accused the UEMDA of receiving "financial support from outside the Union", of seeking "the help of employers for the furtherance of its factional advantage", of "concealing plots of their secessionist supporters", of having "no program other than red-baiting and disruption", of having "agreed to the speed-up and giving up other contractual gains.

The resolution then called for "dissolution" of the committee and urged UE members "to repudiate them and drive them out of leadership, and, if they persist in their disruption, to drive them out of the Union."

Carey and William Drohan, of Local 1102, St. Louis, offered a substitute minority resolution, which asked: "What higher objective could any group have than that of keeping our union on a sound democratic tarde union basis, free from control by the Communist Party? No resolution was ever adopted by the UE threatening to drive out of the union Commists or even to resrtict their meeting togther".

The Carey-Drohan resolution further said: "It should be sufficient to recall that the Communist party officially in its publication endorsed the Bedeaux System for American industry even though the author was a notorious Fascist."

The resolution ended by urging that the convention "establish a committee to review whether the Communist adherants are accorded privileges that are denied the non-Communist UE members."

Considerable Debate

Under the convention procedure, adopted unanimously on the for or against either resolution, with the majority to be voted on first.

In the debate, a number of delegates spoke on both sides of the question. Carey and Block led for the minority, with Matles and Fitzgerald replying.

PRES. ALBERT J. FITZGERALD
Re-Elected By UE

Block, pointing out that he had been president of District 1 until 1946, declared his group was a strong believer in democracy. "At our caucus last night," he said, "known Communists were present and were not asked to leave. We are not secessionists. We are staying in UE and taking it."

Carey, who was president of UE until 1941, when he was defeated by Fitzgerald, started by denying a charge, made by John Gojack, District 9, that he had supplied information to Drew Pearson, who carried a column charging that Communists were active in UE.

Carey read a letter from Pearson, in which the columnist denied receiving any information from Carey and stating that the two had never met.

Carey accused Fitzgerald, Matles and Emspak of failing to carry out CIO policy on "the resent and reject Communism" resolution adopted at the Atlantic City Convention last November.

"I will place my union record alongside that of anyone in this room and defend it with pride and honor," he declared. "I oppose purges of any kind. I'll remain in this fight regardless of any purge attempts. I am not frightened."

Matles declared "There are two phases of fighting in this union; one is the frontal attack by employers, the other is the stab in the back by UEMDA."

"Carey and Block are poisoning the minds of our members and the public", he said. "It is all right for them to oppose us, but they should give reasons.

"If we were devoting our time to getting more pay for Joe Stalin, or six paid holidays for Molotov, or if we were wasting union money on too many pie-cards, they might have a point. But, we aren't.

"Their only issue is 'respectability'. Well, we don't want their brand of respectability."

He criticized several other CIO officers, without mentioning names. In answer to Carey's charge of failing to carry out CIO policy, he said that the relationship of UE to CIO was not the same as the relationship of any local to UE.

He criticized the National Planning Association, of which Carey, and Cio President Murray are officers, as sponsoring "speedup" proposals. He noted that Carey is a member of Pres. Truman's Civil Rights Committee, "but we don't brag about it."

"We are not going to let Jim Carey be our yardstick for Americanism," he asserted. "Each of us has his right to decide for himself what a good American is."

Officers Re-Elected

Fitzgerald, also replying to Carey's charge that UE was not following CIO policy, read a statment from Pres. Murray to the last UE convention, held in September, 1946, at Milwaukee.

He said the statement proved Carey a "liar".

On the following day, the UE convention overwhelmingly defeated a demand by Carey that it adopt the "reject and resent" policy of CIO. Instead, the delegates condemned "witch hunting."

Fitzgerald defeated Block for the presidency, 3941 to 493. Emspak defeated James Click, Local 1102, St. Louis, by 3872 to 787. Matles won over Bartholomew Enright, Local 456, Jersey City, 3953 to 504.

The convention was attended by 498 delegates and 36 alternates, representing 330 locals.

The convention heard Russ Nixon, UE legislative representative, charge that officers and members of UE had been barred by the Navy Department from working in plants or departments of plants manufacturing secret military equipment. He said it was part of the Government's current "loyalty" drive against persons suspected of being Communists or Communist sympathizers.

ALTHEA B. STEWART
A member of UE Local 128, Allentown, Pa., is shown as she told the convention delegates about the recent Congressional election in the 8th Pennsylvania District.

Nixon mentioned RCA, Camden, where he said the president, vice-president and shop steward of Local 103 had been barred from certain departments, although they had free access to the same secret sections during the war.

He said similar incidents had occurred at the Westinghouse plant in Baltimore, the Sylvania factory, Kew Gardens, N. Y., and the Sperry Gyroscope plant, Long Island City.

The convention then unanimously adopted a resolution denouncing "Gestapo-like inquisitions" and "thought control."

The political action resolution, adopted with a loud shout, called for a reversal of the 80th Congress' record.

It criticized the Republican Party as having "shown itself to be the unashamed agent of big business." It also said the Democratic Party has "failed to form a bulwark against this reactionary attack on the people and has compromised and agreed with Wall Street's main proposals."

"Wherever the major parties fail to bring forth candidates who will act and fight on behalf of the people," the UE said we shall use the independent political force we are building to support independent progressive candidates."

Kroll declared the "only thing which stands in the way of American monopoly is the strength and power and will of the common people.

"The only thing which will stop them from accomplishing their desired objectives is the same kind of fighting campaign that sparked the election of Roosevelt in 1944. If we want a Congress of men and women who will act to repeal the T-H law, then we must begin now today, to achieve this goal."

Nixon, in a report, gave the delegates a preliminary report on PAC contributions. To date, this year, $70,000 has been donated by UE members. That is twice the total for 1946, Nixon said.

Honor LaGuardia

Just before voting, the delegates stood silent for a minute in tribute to Fiorella LaGuardia, whose funeral was being held in New York.

In his address, Wallace took the theme, "you cannot separate foreign and domestic issues."

Here are the highlights:

FOREIGN AFFAIRS: "The war that is being bred for us must be stopped. The U S., with all its wealth, with our arsenal of atomic

UE in Tribute to Mario Russo, Slain While Picketing

THE CIO Electrical Workers' convention paid tribute to the memory of Mario Russo, a member slain while performing Union duties.

Ruth Young, general secretary of UE District 4, unveiled a placque in honor of Russo. She declared he was murdered by an "armed thug" during the Phelps Dodge strike at Bayway, N. J., last year.

Russo, a veteran of three and one-half years in the Army, was 27 and left four children. He died of his wound Sept. 23, 1946.

UE and CIO members all over the country have contributed to a trust fund for Russo's widow and children He was a member of Local 445 and was doing picket duty in the strike of Local 441.

"Mario died a martyr for his union," Miss Young said. Tony Cooke, president of Russo's local, and Wesley Mitchell, who was chairman of the Bayway strike committee also spoke in tribute to Russo.

Vacations on Rise In Electric Union

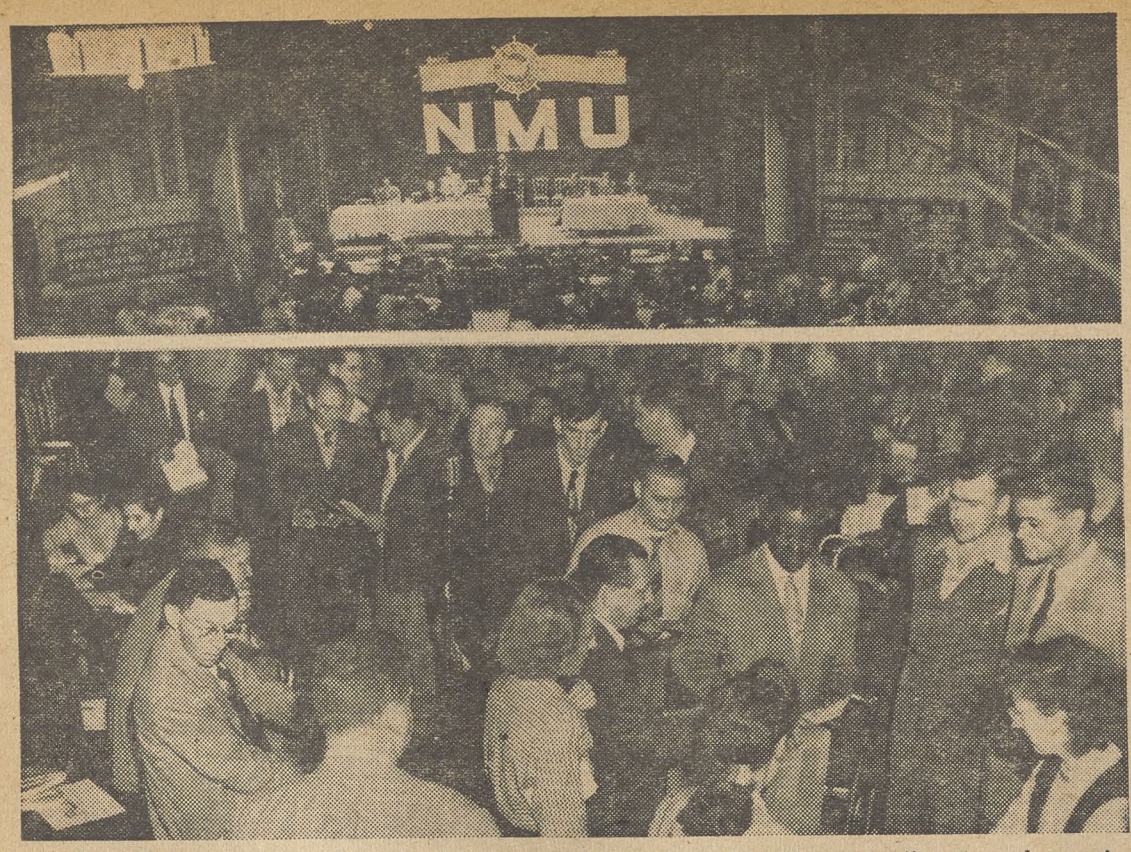
Five-year vacations have shown a sharp increase in one year for the CIO Electrical Workers.

In 1946, 12,000 workers received three weeks' vacation after 20 years. At the convention last week, it was announced that now 246,000 receive the three-weeks' vacation.

UE Gains 29% In Membership

The CIO Electrical Workers announced that their membership has increased by 29% since the 1946 convention and now stands at above 600,000.

The report of the general officers said that "reconversion membership losses have been regained and UE membership is now 1% higher than the previous wartime peak (1944) attained by UE."



Seamen Meet: National Maritime Union ... ed its sixth convention in New York, with Taft-Hartley questions and internal problems up for discussion during two-week sessions. Upper photo shows the convention stage; lower picture, delegates line up to vote for members of the credentials committee, which had to report before the convention could start its business.

NMU Parley Takes Up Policy Work

THE sixth convention of the CIO National Maritime Union, largest in the history of the union, devoted most of last week to procedural matters.

As The CIO News went to press, the convention—held in New York City—was tackling program and policy matters.

Joseph Curran, NMU president, in his opening address, demanded the "wiping out of the Taft-Hartley law and winning of increased living standards and better conditions on American ships."

Curran said it was up to the delegates to see that out of the convention comes a unified program which truly represents full protection for the membership, full participation in CIO and full political activities which will advance the cause of peace throughout the world.

The convention on its first day ran into parliamentary tangles after voting on several motions. Sec. Ferdinand Smith raised a point of order that only action that could be taken before the delegates had been constituted was the selection of a credentials committee.

Legal advice was asked of NMU General Counsel William L. Standard. He ruled that the business of the convention could begin only after a report—partial or full—of the credentials committee. Curran, in the chair, then ruled all previous business out of order.

The convention then voted to set up a credentials committee of 15.

ELECTED to the committee were nine delegates opposed to Curran and six of his adherents. Curran characterized the nine as "promoted by the Communists." (The New York Times later reported that the margin of control had been narrowed to 8 to 7 by the "conversion" of one of the delegates.)

Curran overruled a decision of the credentials committee that one round-trip at sea within the last 60 days was sufficient to qualify a seaman as a delegate. The convention upheld Curran's ruling that the NMU constitution required a member be at sea for 30 days during the two months before the convention if he is to be a delegate. Approximately 50 members were said to have been denied seats by this ruling.

ON the opening day of the convention, delegates cheered a statement by Ted Kheel, director of the New York City Labor Relations Division, that collective bargaining could not work under the T-H law. Kheel is a former official of the National War Labor Board.

"There is just one necessary important ingredient to make collective bargaining work in this country," Kheel said.

"That simply is the disposition on the part of management and labor to get together. Where there's a way, and we found it can be done without rules, without restrictions, without regulations and without the provisions of the T-H law."

On Yom Kippur, the delegates stood in silence for a minute in tribute to the millions of Jews who were victims of the war.

Shoe Union Girds For Walkout

The CIO Shoe workers began preparations last week for a strike against the Intl. Shoe Co. on Oct. 1, barring an agreement on wages in the meantime.

The union is demanding an 18½c hourly increase for 13,000 shoe workers in 39 plants of the company. Union President Raymond Swansen indicated that the Shoe workers would be agreeable to a "reasonable" offer, but stated that the company had refused to make any offer.

"We want to get organized!"

ORGANIZING

BY ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

W. B. Taylor, CIO Reg. Dir., Louisville, Ky., reports that after one-week strike, the Kentucky Paper Box Co., and Finger Paper Box Co., of Louisville, recognized the CIO paperworkers as the collective bargaining agency. Intl. Rep. Forest Calvert was in charge.

Chairman Thomas E. Andert of the Optical & Instrument Workers Organizing Committee advises that pursuant to an agreement with the Co-Optical Company in Chicago, an election was held amongst the employees, with a bank teller used to conduct the election. The results were CIO 15, No Union 11. Organizer Bill Widman was in charge.

President Ernest Hebert of the Barbers & Beauty Culturists, advises that an election for certification was held in St. Paul, Minn., by a labor conciliator with the CIO receiving all the votes cast.

A consent election to determine a collective bargaining agent among 43 employes of a sport goods factory at Shamokin, Pa., was won by the CIO without recourse to the NLRB. CIO Reg. Dir. Joseph M. Walsh of Wilkes-Barre directed attention to the fact that a petition to the NLRB was filed last February for the same plant, Weaver-Wintark, at Shamokin, but no action had been taken. After a majority of the employes had appealed to CIO, Field Rep. Frank D. Vrataric and a committee of the employes walked in to the plant manager and demanded recognition. The manager finally agreed to hold a consent election with the Burgess of Shamokin Thomas Landy, serving as impartial third party. The result of the election was CIO 27, Against 11. This thereby accomplished for CIO what had been impossible for 8 months while CIO officials waited in vain for NLRB to take action on a petition. The contract will be negotiated by representatives of the CIO Playthings, Jewelry & Novelty Workers Intl. Union.

Reg. Dir. Geo. Craig of Philadelphia materially assisted Local 520 of Philadelphia in concluding a very important victory in its negotiations for a new contract, obtaining a 20c per hour wage increase; six paid holidays; 8-hour guaranteed call-in time pay and has maintained its union shop. Since 1941 the CIO has gained for the employes, an approximate hourly wage increase of 70c.

Van A. Bittner, national director of the CIO Organizing Committee advises that the sponge fishermen of Tarpon Springs, Fla., have organized and petitioned a CIO union for a charter—the United Steelworkers of America. The fishermen explained to Charles L. Cowl, Director for Florida, that they need the backing of CIO and are familiar with the Steelworkers, they use steel hooks and want the Steelworkers' affiliation.

N. C. Director William Smith announces that the Carolina Spring Co., and the Un. Furniture Workers, CIO, have agreed to a secret ballot by the company's employes to determine their bargaining agent. The election will be conducted by a representative of the N. C. Dept. of Labor, the Mayor of High Point, and a member of the city council or a local minister. This is further proof that good labor-management relations can be maintained without recourse to the red tape of the Taft-Hartley Act. J. R. Light, CIO organizer assigned to High Point, represented the union in negotiating the election agreement. The company agrees to recognize and deal with the union if it wins the election.

The writer was invited to Portland, Oregon, to meet with the Executive Officers and Council of the United Telephone Employes of Oregon, Inc., on Friday, September 19th, at a meeting of the Executive Board they decided to recommend to a meeting of the Council, that night, to affiliate with the TWOC-CIO.

The writer addressed the Council and a vote on affiliation was taken, resulting in a 2-to-1 majority in favor of affiliation.

The following day an Organizing Committee was set up for the purpose of bringing this action to the membership who will vote on it. The Organizing Committee is headed by CIO Reg. Dir. Al Hartung as chairman and Cecil Bixler as Secretary. The executive officers of the United Telephone Employes of Oregon, Inc., are members of the Committee, as well as Dan Harris of the ACEW, together with James E. Fadling, pres. IWA-CIO, and Stanley Earl, Secy-Treas., Oregon State IUC, who have likewise been appointed members of this Committee.

The campaign in West Virginia amongst the telephone workers is in full swing and the signing of cards is getting well advanced.

Transport Union Backs Santo

"Full fighting support" to aid John Santo, Transport Workers organizational director, whom the Immigration Bureau is seeking to deport to his native Roumania, has been pledged by the union's general executive board.

The union asserted that the Justice Dept. has lined up stool pigeons, labor spies and perjurers to buttress its charge that Santo is an alien Communist who should be removed from the country.

Santo served honorably in the army for 3½ years, the union said, and has a 20-year record as a fighter in behalf of the transport workers. It said the government action is part of a "reactionary drive" to cover up the big business campaign against unions.

Earlier, Harry Sacher, TWU attorney who is defending Santo, pointed out that the union official had volunteered for military duty and served "with distinction."

"The American people, I am certain, will not regard deportation as the fitting reward for a man who was ready to lay down his life for our country," Sacher said.

The union plans to establish Santo Defense Committees in principal cities throughout the nation.

BIAS FOUGHT BY CHURCH

CATHOLIC Archbishop Josept E. Ritter, of St. Louis, has warned members of his archdiocese that they face excommunication if they persist in plans to bar Negroes from parocial schools by civil court action.

Archbishop Ritter recently opened diocesan high schools to Negroes, an action which caused wide comment in St. Louis, where most public and private schools are Jim Crow. There are more than 100 Negro students registered in the Catholic high schools for the fall term.

A group of 400 Catholics, headed by John P. Barrett, had banded together and decided to file suit against the prelate.

Last week, Archbishop Ritter issued a pastoral letter, which reminded the members of the Catholic community that "the equality of every soul before Almighty God" and "obedience to ecclesiastical authority" are fundamental principles of the Church.

THE letter continued to say that "we realize tnat many of these good people are being misled" and that "the policy of admitting Negro children to Catholic schools is one which we consider our right and duty as chief pastor of the archdiocese, regardless of race or nationality."

Monsignor Charles H. Helmsing, archdiocesan secretary, pointed out that the late Pope Pius XI had termed racism as practiced by the Nazis a heresy.

Archbishop Ritter, when he was bishop of Indianapolis, had admitted Negro children to parochial schools. There was no opposition there.

St. Louis University, Jesuit college, admitted Negro students in 1944, despite the fact Missouri universities bars Negroes. About 160 Negroes attend St. Louis now.

Barrett said his group would not press the civil suit, but will appeal to the papal apostolic delegate in Washington.

Show How To Fight Discrimination

How U. S. might combat racial and religious injustice through a marshaling of world opinion is discussed in the latest Public Affairs pamphlet, "World Minority Problems," by Dr. James G. Leyburn.

In a 32-page popular analysis of the world's racial, cultural and national minorities and the problems associated with them, Dr. Leyburn, professor of sociology at Yale University, says that "open discussion" in the United Nations should aid in promoting remedial steps throughout the world.

Admitting that no country has as yet indicated it would admit intervention by an outside tribunal in internal affairs, Leyburn suggested that "the incorporation of a Bill of Rights of the People of the World focus attention upon civilized standards of behavior and make it possible to criticize lapses from that standard in any member nation."

"World Minority Problems" is pamphlet No. 132 in the series of popular, factual 20-cent pamphlets issued by the Public Affairs Committee, Inc., nonprofit educational organization at 22 East 38th St., New York 16, N. Y.

CIO Citation: Pres. Murray presents to UAW Pres. Walter Reuther a citation from CIO's Committee to Abolish Discrimination for his work in fighting discrimination against minorities. Presentation was made at a Detroit banquet on September 18.

Auto Union Head Receives CIO Anti-Bias Award

PRES. Philip Murray presented Walter P. Reuther, UAW-CIO president, with the Annual Award of the CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination at a banquet in Detroit Sept. 18 attended by more than 500 UAW members, leaders and friends.

The award is given annually to the persons inside and outside the labor movement whom the committee considers to have made the greatest contribution toward abolishing racial hatred and discrimination in America.

In presenting the award, President Murray praised Reuther as a man who "is forever prosecuting the fight of the CIO."

"It is a great honor and distinct privilege to be here to pay tribute to the president of the mighty Automobile Workers Union," Murray said.

"I am here to pay tribute to a man for whom I have a high regard—I feel that he has contributed much to the abolition of racial discrimination," the CIO president stated.

He reviewed the background out of which the CIO arose to wage its fight for democracy in industry and decency in human affairs, stressing the adherence of the CIO to its principle of combatting all forms of hatred and prejudice.

"The CIO is not afraid," President Murray said, after summing up the urgent problems facing labor today. "It is prepared to face the future with its head erect and its face to the sun," he concluded.

Reuther spoke briefly after the award was presented to him.

"I accept the award not in the spirit of a job well done but of a job well started," he said.

"America can't give leadership to the world as long as it tolerates second class citizenship at home. It must earn the right to give leadership to the world.

"We fought a war to prove that peace is indivisible. That war is not won until we have proved that equality and freedom are indivisible."

JAMES B. CAREY, CIO secretary-treasurer and chairman of the CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination, was toastmaster at the banquet.

Several of the members of his committee, which sponsored the affair, were present, including Willard Townsend, president of the CIO Transport and Service Employes; William H. Oliver, co-director of the UAW-CIO Fair Practices and Anti-Discrimination Department; and George Weaver and Harry Read, national CIO staff members.

Pres. George Edwards of the Detroit Common Council welcomed President Murray to Detroit. Rabbi Leon Fram of Temple Israel gave the invocation.

Fans Fight Lynching

Approximately 21,000 signatures of baseball fans were obtained last week in New York for petitions calling for a Federal anti-lynch law. The petitions were circulated at Ebbets Field, Brooklyn, during "Jackie Robinson Day."

MISSOURI CIO PLANS MADISON LAW TEST

DELEGATES to the Missouri CIO Convention last week empowered the State Council to institute court action to test constitutionality of two state anti-labor laws.

The laws are: The Madison Law, which requires a majority vote of all employes for strike action or for collective bargaining. (The Natl. Labor Relations Board, as in normal democratic procedure, requires only a majority vote of those casting ballots, the CIO pointed out.)

The King-Thompson Act, which bars strikes in public utilities and imposes compulsory arbitration.

Rapid growth in farm-labor unity was indicated, CouncilSecy.-Treas. James A. Davis pointed out, by the fact that all farm organizations in the state had testified against the Madison bill. The two groups had first come to recognize their common problems through mutal interest in securing a Missouri Valley Authority, he stated.

A resolution condemned Missouri Rep. Walter Ploeser, whose House Small Business Committee is currently conducting an investigation of cooperatives, and the convention set up a committee to work with farm organizations in furthering the cooperative movement.

Other resolutions sought $30 unemployed benefits for 30 weeks, supported PAC and the collection of dollar voluntary contributions, requested a state bonus for veterans, reaffirmed support for the Missouri Valley Authority and condemned the State's 11 Congressmen who supported the Taft-Hartley bill.

Speakers included Denton Stong, National Representative of the Farmer's Union; Anthony Smith, Assistant Director of CIO Council; Tilford E. Dudley, assistant director, CIO-PAC; and Frank Cronin, CIO regional director at Omaha, Neb.

The 3000 delegates reelected Harold E. Edwards as president and James A. Daivs as secretary-treasurer, Ralph Turrentine was named vice-president.

Eby Again Named To UNESCO Board

Kermit Eby, CIO research and education director, was reelected to the 15-man executive board of the U. S. Commission of UNESCO (United Nations Educational, Scientific & Cultural Organization) at that body's second general conference in Chicago.

Appointed last year by CIO President Philip Murray, Eby will serve a three-year term as CIO representative on the Commission, which is composed of representatives of 100 governmental and non-governmental groups in the country.

"Here's the agenda for next week: We hold up Rooney's Drug Store Monday, sell narcotics on Wednesday and beat up union organizers on Friday."

N. H. 'TAFT' ACT UNPOPULAR

REPEAL of the Willey Law, described as "more drastic in many respects than the Taft-Hartley Law" became the "number one legislative job" of the New Hampshire CIO Council last week as it met in convention at Manchester.

The bill was passed at the last session of the New Hampshire General Court without regard to the record of organized labor in the state in past years, charged Council President Harold J. Daoust. A resolution calling for repeal of the law termed it anti-labor and undemocratic . . . part and parcel of the vicious anti-labor drive now being carried on by reactionary legislators."

New Hampshire's Senators Styles Bridges and Charles W. Tobey and Reps. Norris Cotton and Chester Merrow, in another resolution, were urged to work for speedy repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act.

The 300 delegates went on record as favoring a 65-75c minimum wage law, a program to promote farmer-labor cooperation, increases in old age and survivor's benefits, admission of 400,000 displaced persons to this country, improved child labor legislation and a national law governing industrial health and safety standards.

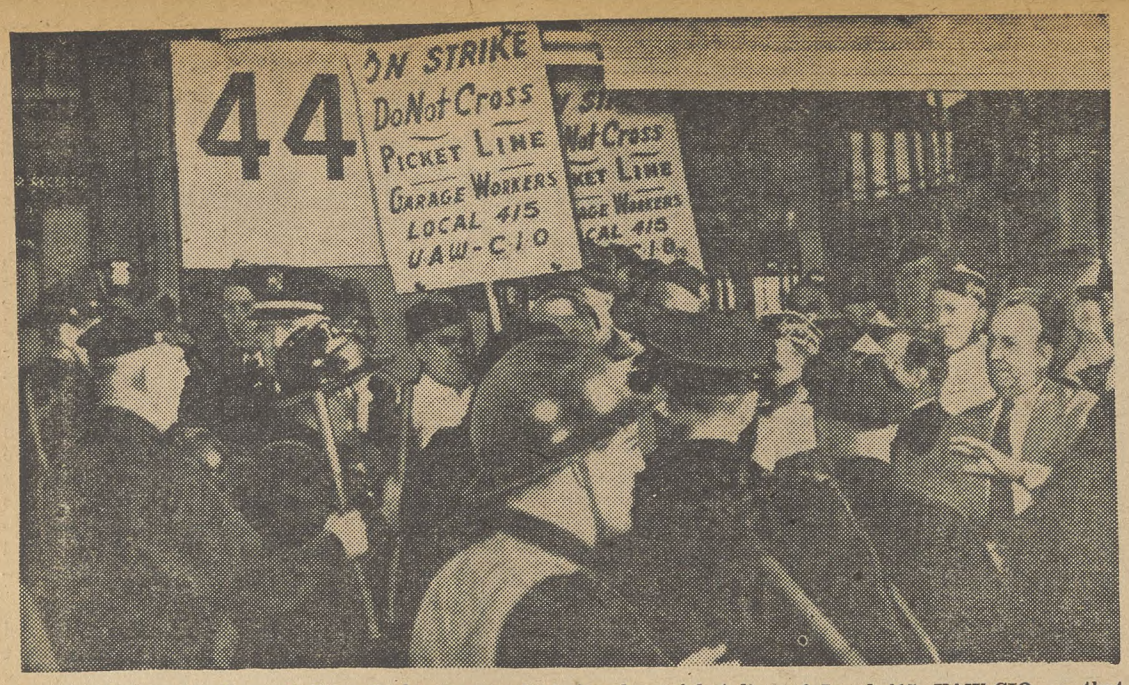
New Hampshire became the fourth state CIO body this year to call for a special session of Congress to restore price controls.

In addition, the delegates sought reimposition of the excess profits tax, removal of restrictive legislation on oleomargarine, elimination of minimum retail price fixing on milk, and a nationwide "stop food waste" campaign.

Principal speaker on the 3-day agenda was John Brophy, director of CIO Councils, who called for a "foreign policy that will aid in the rehabilitation of the economy of Europe . . ."

"If we are to maintain full employment and avoid depression," he said, "we must stabilize prices, curb profits to a reasonable level . . . in this way we shall strengthen domestic well being and contribute to the maintenance of peace."

President Daoust won reelection, other officers named were: Earl M. Bourdon, Executive vice-president; Thomas J. Pitarys, secy-treas.; and Thomas Williams, legislative agent.



Cops Help Scabs: Police violence against workers is on the increase—as part of the Taft-Hartley era of labor relations. Detroit police, with clubs set for action, tried to break a picket line of Local 415, UAW-CIO, so that scabs and strikebreakers could enter a local garage. Strike had been on since mid-August. The union is conducting a drive to organize garage workers.

'CLEAN-UP' IN LAUNDRIES LONG OVERDUE, U. S. SAYS

DECENT wages and employment standards in the laundry industry, long notorious for its sweatshop conditions, are both possible and practical, according to a report just issued by the U. S. Women's Bureau.

A study made by the Bureau of 258 laundry establishments in 38 cities in midwestern and southeastern states reveals that although there is still great need for improvement in pay and working conditions in this industry, where the work at best is hard and exhausting, progressive managements in various cities have made some progress and have found that decent pay and higher employment standards are practical.

About 30 to 40 per cent of the production workers in the laundry industry are working under terms set by collective bargaining agreements either with the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers, or the AFL Laundry Workers International, according to the report.

The laundries covered in the survey altogether employed more than 21,000 workers, nearly three-fourths of them women. The study was directed to conditions affecting women production workers, who formed about two-thirds of total laundry employment in the establishments visited.

AVERAGE hourly earnings of workers in competing laundries within the same city differed vastly, the survey disclosed. In most of the cities surveyed, employees working in the city's highest-paying laundry earned 30 to 50 per cent more than those in the lowest-paying one.

Despite these differences in earnings, retail prices within a city tended to be identical in all or most laundries. A comparison of one city with another, reports the bureau, warrants the conclusion that higher prices did not inevitably go with higher earnings.

Textile Seeks 15c Raise in South

The CIO Textile Workers will launch a drive for a 15c-hourly wage increase in Southern mills to meet the cost of living and to eliminate North-South pay differentials.

The action was decided upon at a conference of delegates in Atlanta, representing 125,000 union members in 19[illegible] mills. Negotiations were to begin immediately.

The pay increases can be made without an increase in prices because "tremendous profits" could easily absorb the expenditure, the union said.

Women on Juries In 35 States

Women may now serve on juries in 35 states Alaska and the District of Columbia, according to a leaflet, "Women's Eligibility for Jury Duty," released by the U. S. Women's Bureau

This makes more than two-thirds of the women of the U. S. eligible to serve on juries of their State courts. Such service is compulsory for women in 19 states and voluntary in 16. Thirteen states, the Canal Zone, Hawaii, and Puerto Rico still bar women from jury service of any kind.

The first law allowing women to serve voluntarily on juries was passed in Utah in 1898. It limited service to trial juries only, and the limitation still stands. In 1918 California and New Jersey became the first states to pass laws under which women were subject to compulsory service

6 Ball Bearing Companies Fined

Six companies which manufacture about 95% of the ball bearings produced in the U. S. were fined $5,000 each by Fed. Dist. Court Judge Emerich B. Freed in Cleveland, Ohio. Atty-Gen. Tom C. Clark announced last week. Two individuals were also fined, bringing the total to $40,000.

The corporations, charged with violating the Sherman anti-trust law by a conspiracy to fix prices on ball bearings, all entered pleas of nolo contendere. Clark said they were given the maximum fine.

The corporations involved were General Motors, SKF, Marlin-Rockwell, Fafnir Bearing Co., Federal Bearings and Norma-Hoffman Bearings.

RUBBER UNION DELAYS TAFT-HARTLEY POLICY

By ROBERT CRUDEN

ACTION on the Taft-Hartley law was referred to its General Executive Board by the 12th annual convention of the United Rubber Workers, CIO, at Boston.

The 600 delegates turned down a Resolutions Committee recommendation for immediate compliance with the law and instructed the union board to handle the issue after the CIO convention, which meets in the Bay State capital on Oct. 13.

Members of the URW board are Magne Repaal, Eau Claire, Wis.; Elton Gladney, Buffalo, N. Y.; W. I. Vaught, Akron, Ohio; Joseph MacKenzie, Toronto, Canada; F. M. Dickenson, Memphis, Tenn.; Joseph Luciano, Erie, Pa.; Don Sargent, Mishawaka, Ind.; R. E. Harris, Los Angeles, Calif.; Carl Samuels, Youngstown, Ohio; Pat Galucci, Naugatuck, Conn.; Charles McCarter, Akron; and John Baldante, Newark, N. J.

Re-elected to office were Pres. L. S. Buckmaster, Vice-Pres. Lloyd, and Genl. Secy.-Treas. Charles E. Lanning.

In other actions, the convention:

- Ordered a drive for the 30-hour week throughout the rubber industry;
- Called for a roll-back in rents to the 1941 level;
- Indorsed labor unity based on safeguarding "industrial unionism as represented by the CIO";
- Urged the setting up of joint labor-management councils as recommended by CIO Pres. Philip Murray;
- Condemned the Thomas-Rankin committee "as a cancer in our democratic form of government";
- Called for an intensive government program to provide low-cost housing for homeless Americans.

Wants Controls Over Use of Grain

As Pres. Truman sought ways and means of feeding the world, National Grange Master Albert S. Goss offered suggestions.

Just returned from an international meeting of the Food and Agriculture Organization at Geneva. Goss asked for controls over the use of grains.

Fitzgerald set the pace for the debate on the T-H Law when in his opening address he referred to the National Labor Relations Board as the "NAM Board" and said "there are no men of integrity on the board."

David Scribner, general counsel for UE, making a legal analysis o fthe law, said it was "a complete program against the people of this country."

Jim Crow Polling Places in Georgia

Georgia Negroes will vote in the State's primary elections next year—but they'll vote in separate polling places.

This decision was reached by the Democratic State Committee faction backing Gov. M. E. Thompson.

THE ADVENTURES OF JIM BARRY

THE EXECUTIVE BOARD OF THE UNION, MEETING TO HEAR STANLEY HAMKER... OWNER OF THE HAMKER PRODUCTS COMPANY... PRESENT HIS REASONS FOR A VOLUNTARY WAGE-CUT, IS SUDDENLY STARTLED WHEN THE CHAIRMAN ANNOUNCES AS THE NEXT SPEAKER... THE MURDERED CHARLIE BENTLEY....

BUB... BUB... BUT CHARLIE'S DEAD!

THIS... THIS IS A STUPID JOKE!

I ASSURE YOU, I'M SERIOUS! THE NEXT SPEAKER IS CHARLIE BENTLEY...

BUT CHARLIE BENTLEY WAS MURDERED... SO HE'LL SPEAK THROUGH JIM BARRY AS HIS PROXY!

WHAT I'M GOING TO SAY IS ALMOST WORD FOR WORD WHAT CHARLIE BENTLEY WANTED TO TELL YOU... I HAVE ALL HIS MATERIAL HERE!

MR. HAMKER CAME HERE TO ASK YOU TO AGREE TO A SMALL WAGE-CUT FOR THE MEN... ONLY 50 CENTS A DAY... BUT YOU HAVE TO FIGURE THAT THERE ARE 1000 MEN EMPLOYED AT THE HAMKER PLANT AND THAT'S $500 A DAY!

A UNION MAN HAS TO DO A LOT OF FIGURING... IF HE'S GOING TO PROTECT HIMSELF. MR. HAMKER FIGURES THINGS OUT, TOO! BY THIS LITTLE WAGE-CUT, HE'S GOING TO GET $500 A DAY MORE ...THAT'S $2.500 A WEEK!

CHARLIE BENTLEY DID SOME LOOKING INTO THIS DEAL... HE FOUND THAT COST OF RAW MATERIALS HAS GONE UP ABOUT 15%... BUT THAT HAMKER RAISED IT'S PRICES ALMOST 40%! HAMKER IS MAKING A BIGGER PROFIT ON EVERY ITEM IT SELLS THAN EVER BEFORE!

AND SALES ARE NOW 100%! THE HAMKER PRODUCTS COMPANY IS NOW MAKING MORE PROFITS THAN EVEN DURING THE WAR! YOU DON'T NEED THIS WAGE-CUT TO PULL YOUR COMPANY OUT OF TROUBLE... WHAT'S THE REAL REASON, MR. HAMKER?

OKAY, ANSWER HIM, MR. HAMKER!

CHARLIE BENTLEY WAS KILLED BECAUSE HE GOT THESE FACTS TOGETHER.... WE WANT AN ANSWER!

I... WELL... THAT IS....

QUIET, EVERYBODY! CONK BARTON HAS THE FLOOR....

THANKS... LOOK MEN... A UNION IS A PLACE WHERE EVERY MAN GETS A FAIR SHAKE! IT'S NOT FAIR TO HAVE THIS JIM BARRY COME DOWN HERE AND TOSS A BASKETFUL OF FIGURES AT MR. HAMKER!

I MAKE A MOTION THAT WE ASK MR. HAMKER TO COME TO OUR GENERAL MEMBERSHIP MEETING PREPARED WITH ALL THE NECESSARY FACTS AND FIGURES TO PROVE HIS POINT!

SINCE EVERYONE SEEMS TO FAVOR BROTHER BARTON'S MOTION... I HEREBY EXTEND AN INVITATION TO MR. HAMKER TO COME TO OUR MEMBERSHIP MEETING....

I'LL BE THERE! AND I'LL PROVE THAT JIM BARRY IS LYING!!

Governor To Realty Lobby:

'...PROFITEERS ARE GLUTTONOUS HOGS'

WHAT the governor of North Carolina said to the governor of South Carolina is an old story by now.

But what the governor of South Carolina said to the real estate lobby deserves repeating:

- ON RENT CONTROL

"As for saying that rent ceilings are un-American, I tell you that is a ridiculous statement. The United States of America compelled men to risk and lose their lives on foreign soil during the war.

"Was that vicious and un-American? I will do everything in my power to help keep rent control until some degree of sanity returns to profiteering real estate owners."

- ON PROFITEERING

"I would call those who seek to profit from misery, especially the misery of those to whom they owe their property if not their lives . . . gluttonous hogs."

- ON VACANT APPARTMENTS

These people have seen what happened when the Republicans killed OPA food ceilings. They now want the same thing to happen to rents. They say that then there will be plenty of apartments and houses offered for rent.

"Well plenty would be offered for rent, all right. But where would the people come from who could afford to live in them? How many people in South Carolina could afford to pay double their present rents? Let me remind you that the average annual income in South Carolina is only $719."

THE remarks, part of an address of "welcome" to a regional meeting of the National Association of Real Estate Boards at Myrtle Beach, S. C., were delivered by Gov. J. Strom Thurmond.

His talk caused near apoplexy on the part of the NAREB audience, which has led the fight against rent control and all other government direction of housing programs.

NAREB Pres. Morgan L. Fitch accused the South Carolina governor of getting his orders from "the international offices of the Communist party". (NAREB has called Sen. Taft a "socialist" for favoring government slum clearance projects.)

The South Carolina Real Estate Boards Association apologized to the assembled throng of realtors. But Gov. Thurmond stood fast.

He said that his address was "delivered after due deliberation."

"I have been outraged by the housing situation in South Carolina," he said. "I felt it my duty as governor of South Carolina to express my feelings openly and clearly. I chose to make my feelings public at this meeting of real estate people.

"I anticipated their action. I said what I meant. I meant what I said."

Evictions Soar In Boston

Landlords in Massachusetts are jamming the law courts seeking to evict tenants under the new federal rent control law.

The Boston city council has requested a special session of the legislature to enact a state rent control law.

More than 4,000 eviction writs have been filed in the state courts since July 1.

PAC is Organized In Connecticut

Organization of a Connecticut State CIO-PAC, headed by Arthur Skerritt, CIO Auto Workers, was announced by Harold Senior, president of the State CIO Council, last week.

Vice chairman of the new group is Renato Ricciuti, CIO Shipbuilders. Senior, Newspaper Guild, was named executive secretary.

The committee will turn its immediate attention to organizing for the 1948 elections, collection of PAC voluntary contributions and registration of voters.

Examines Solid South: Gov. Thomas Dewey takes a measurement of the south side of a cow during a recent campaign trip through New England. Dewey's angling for farm votes for the coming presidential contest—and apparently willing to try anything for the cameraman.

Want a House? Got $25,000?

IF YOU have an extra $25,000 to $60,000 lying around, you won't have any trouble finding a place to live.

This was pointed out in a full page advertisement in the New York Herald Tribune Sept. 18 with the enticing head: There's No House Shortage. In smaller type, it added: If You Can Afford A Bargain.

The "bargains" pictured in the advertisement were 32 houses in swanky Westchester, Long Island and Connecticut ranging in price from $14,500 to $60,000, some of which would cost three times as much as their original price to build today.

Typical offering was a 6-acre estate in Mt. Kisco, N. Y., "with a 15-room white colonnade residence overlooking the Hudson River Valley. Pine-paneled Georgian library. Flagstone terrace. Sunken gardens. Garage. Asking price $49,500."

A 7-room Colonial dwelling in Woodstock, N. Y., featuring a Louis XV living room and a waterfall, was offered for a mere $48,500. Or for $60,000 a home dweller could buy a 200-year-old frame house in Connecticut with 13 rooms, four baths, a playhouse, barn and garage.

The ad, inserted by the Natl. Real Estate Clearing House, explained that these homes were bargains because "no scarcity premium" is asked for them. It said comparable houses are available in every state in the union and many foreign countries.

Asked how many other such homes were available, Furman said: "From $25,000 to $60,000 you can get all the houses you want."

From $14,500 to $25,000 there is not quite such a surplus, he said, and below $14,500 there is nothing at all.

Those Men Are Here Again!

BIG business has been given free rein to write a new tax bill, two Democratic Congressmen charged last week.

Reps. John Dingell (D. Mich.) and Herman Eberharter (D. Pa.) voiced sharp criticism of a committee of "experts" chosen last June by Rep. Harold Knutson (R. Minn.), who heads the potent House Ways & Means Committee. Knutson was sponsor of two "spare the wealthy" tax bills which were passed by Congress but vetoed by Pres. Truman during the last session.

Eberharter said the committee —none of them members of Congress—met in Washington recently without any Congressmen sitting in, and with both public and press barred from the get-together.

"Never before has a committee of Congress officially authorized the lobbies of special interests to do its work," Rep. Dingell said.

Members of the panel of experts are Roswell Magill, Wall Street lawyer; John Hanes, New York Banker; J. Cheever Cowdin, member of the Natl. Association of Manufacturers; John L. Connolly, member of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce; Dr. C. S. Duncan, Washington economist who works closely with the Assn. of American Railroads; and Wright Matthews, Dallas, Tex., lawyer who represents many oil interests.

Calling the Shots

Gov. Robert S. Kerr (D.) of Oklahoma has no love for the Taft-Hartley law, which he describes as "the most severely repressive anti-labor law" adopted in modern times in this country.

"This is not a public law but a private favor," Kerr told a Democratic outing in French Lick, Ind.

T-H IDEAS OK FOR DEWEY

VIRTUAL approval of the Taft-Hartley law by Gov. Thomas E. Dewey of New York let slip by a spokesman for the Governor last week.

The Dewey administration, the spokesman said, does not consider a "little Taft-Hartley law" necessary for New York state because the state already has most of the provisions on its books.

This does not mean, the New York Times reported the spokesman as saying, that no new labor laws would be introduced in the coming year. It hinted that further legislation would be sought which would parallel parts of the national law not already enacted by the state legislature.

Dewey, unannounced candidate for the Republican Presidential nomination, has avoided taking sides publicly on the law, but was reported to have endorsed it before a small group of young Republicans during his recent tour of the Midwest.

Urge Better Training Set-Up

Improvements in the apprentice training programs were discussed at the Sept. 20 meeting of the policy committee of the U. S. Apprentice Training Service attended by labor, management and education leaders.

Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey and Pres. John Green, Marine & Shipbuilding Workers represented the CIO.

Apprentices working to learn skilled trades should be given the full value due them in their course of instruction, the committee said.

Declaring that some of the training programs registered with the government's service were not up to standard, the committee urged state apprenticeship councils, employers and labor-management apprenticeship committees to pay special attention to the requirement of 144 hours of classroom instruction annually.

War veterans make up some 75% of all registered apprentices, the committee stated.

Mourned: Fiorello La Guardia was mourned by people in every part of the country when he died last week at the age of 64. Sponsor of good labor laws, foe of crooks, and one of New York's best mayors, he fought greed, profiteering and corruption.

Seek Food Solution: CIO Pres. Philip Murray (seated) chats with Commerce Secy. Harriman during the White House meeting of Pres. Truman's Citizens' Food Committee. Group in walkout for recognition will score gains for others. CIO has brought hope to Mexican-Americans beset for years by low pay and virtual slavery. Labor on both sides of Texas border cooperates.

--Story on Page 8

WHILE President Truman was putting the finishing touches on his "fireside chat" to the nation on the food crisis, and while he and Congress were trying to make up their minds on whether a special session should be held, this is what was happening here and there in the high prices and food situation:

Truman asked each of us to save a bushel of grain to aid Europe's needy.

But, skeptics immediately pointed out what that meant for Mr. Average Citizen. It would be equivalent to 65 loaves of bread (one pound each). Since the average man eats 90 such loaves a year, it would take him about two-thirds of a year if he cut out bread entirely to save his share.

Or, it could be done by cutting out liquor. From a bushel of grain, five gallons of whiskey could be made (says the Distilled Spirits Institute). But, the average man drinks only 1.15 gallons of whiskey per year, so it would take more than four years to save a bushel.

LABOR unions and other groups kept telling Truman that the way to solve it is an immediate special session, restoration of price controls on necessities and possibly, in some cases, rationing.

Young Charles Luckman, chairman of the Truman Citizens' Food Committee (no Tafter he) repeated Truman's admonition, don't eat less, but do waste less.

In some places, Sen. Taft was winning his crusade by default. For example, a swank Washington restaurant, not even waiting to have a new menu printed, unashamedly inked out "$2.65" as the price of a sirloin steak special and inked in "$3.25."

In Chicago, habitues of Loop bars weren't necessarily drinking less. Their solution: a cheaper shot, no matter how high the content of neutral grain or potato spirits.

The poor man's caviar—a hamburger which once cost 5 cents—was up 200% to 15 cents in most places and a lot more than that in others. And, it tasted suspiciously like utility beef in a lot of places.

There were a few bright lights. The Labor Dept. food index showed the first dip in 13 weeks, down 1.2%.

One San Francisco cafe reduced a small bottle of wine from 70 to 65 cents. And there were dips in the wholesale prices (not necessarily reflected in retail) in beans, bellies, coffee, butter, potatoes, rice, raisins, currents, prunes and lambs.

But, up and up went flour, wheat, corn, rye, oats, barley, lard, cheese, cottonseed oil, cocoa, steers and hogs.

Sen. Taft was talking less about eating less.

Their First CIO Convention:

LITHOGRAPHERS ENDORSE PAC

THE CIO Amalgamated Lithographers, holding its first convention since affiliation with CIO last year, gave top attention to political action and adopted as a slogan: "A dollar a month per member for October, November, December." The dollar contribution is for PAC.

The Lithographers' endorsement of PAC was cited as indicative of the union's wholehearted adoption of CIO principles and practices since affiliating with the new parent body.

Following a struggle of many years during which the union tried to throw off what it considered its "stepchild" status within the AFL, the Lithographers withdrew and officially became affiliated with the CIO in May, 1946.

Meeting in Biloxi, Miss., last week, the delegates blasted the Taft-Hartley Act as "dangerous" and resolved not to use the processes of the NLRB.

Principle speakers were Van A. Bittner, director of the CIO Organizing Committee, who welcomed the delegates to the Deep South, and Woodruff Randolph, president of the AFL Typographical Union.

Pointing out that the working people were being forced out of the necessities of life by spiralling prices, the delegates called for a special session of Congress to restore price controls.

Outlawing of "hate campaigns based on religious or political beliefs and racial or national origins" was urged by the union, as was passage of federal legislation to uproot lynching and abolish the poll tax.

The union's president, William J. Riehl, is to retire from office in January. His post, and that of secretary-treasurer, will be filled by a referendum election.

PRE-CONVENTION BOARD MEETING

THE 52-member CIO Executive Board will convene at the Oval Room of the Hotel Bradford, Boston, Oct. 8. The meeting is a preliminary to the 9th constitutional convention of the CIO which starts October 13.

The CIO board comprises one representative from each of the affiliated 41 national unions and organizing committees, as well as President Philip Murray, Secretary-Treasurer James B. Carey and nine vice-presidents.

Problems concerning the organization and agenda of the convention will be discussed during the Board sessions.

The convention will be concerned with the high cost of living, the Taft-Hartley law, organizing campaigns, political action in the 1948 elections, relations with other branches of the trade union movement in this country and abroad, and a variety of other problems.

One question of immediate importance involves CIO policy on the filing "non-Communist" affidavits by national officers of the organization, in line with a recent interpretation of the Taft-Hartley Act by NLRB General Counsel Robert Denham.

A number of prominent persons have been invited to address the convention. They include: Massachusetts Gov. Robert F. Bradford; Michael T. Kelleher, president of the Boston Chamber of Commerce; Joseph Salerno, president of the Massachusetts CIO Council; Frank Carmichael, CIO Boston regional director; Sen. Claude Pepper (D., Fla.) , Secretary of Labor Lewis F. Schwellenbach; Arthur Deakin, secretary of the British Transport & General Workers Union and President of the World Federation of Trade Unions, of which the CIO is a charter member; Most Rev. Richard Cushing, Catholic Archbishop of Boston; Rabbi Joshua Liebman of Temple Israel, Boston, and Massachusetts Episcopal Bishop Norman B. Nash.

CIO membership is at an all-time peak of well above 6,000,000 members in every state of the Union, Alaska, Hawaii, the Panama Canal Zone and the Dominion of Canada. The CIO Organizing Committee, which has been conducting a membership drive throughout the South for 15 months, recently reported an increase of more than 300,000 members in that area alone, with more than 500 election victories and large numbers of new contracts.

Simultaneous with the CIO convention, the CIO Women's Auxiliaries—headed by Mrs. Faye Stephenson of Cleveland—will meet at the Bradford.

Denham Deserted:

EVEN HOFFMAN DISAGREES

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

EXCEPT for a few diehards like Sen. Joseph Ball (R., Minn.), a renegade from the CIO Newspaper Guild, most Republican leaders have sharply disagreed with T-H Law Czar Robert M. Denham's order that no union can get the services of NLRB until every top officer of AFL or CIO signs a non-Communist affidavit.

Latest to assail Denham is Rep. Clare Hoffman (R., Mich.), who is far to the right of even Rep. Fred Hartley (R., N.J.), co-daddy of T-H.

Hoffman said Denham had "grievously misinterpreted" the law. "I don't believe that is the law and if it is, I am willing to have the law amended." Ball, sticking by the Act in which he was a collaborator, swore he would fight to keep it as is so that it could be a GOP "labor plank" in the 1948 platform.

However, as the CIO News went to press, Washington was full of rumors that the NLRB would overrule Denham's interpretation. According to Louis Stark, of The New York Times, Dorothy Rockwell, of The Philadelphia Inquirer, and other correspondents, the vote against Denham might be 4 to 1 to overrule—and surely 3 to 2.

Stark figured that the only Denhamite would be interim board member J. Copeland Gray. Lined up against him, Stark thought, would be Chairman Paul M. Herzog, John M. Houston and James J. Reynolds, Jr., old board members, and Ex-Sen. Abe Murdock, interim member.

Some Washington observers said the board had made up its mind some time back and had decided to wait until after the CIO and AFL conventions.

But, the observers said, the board members, or the majority of them, had later made up their minds to get the jump on the conventions and take the wind out of the labor leaders' sails by removing what the NLRB considers one of the most effective criticisms of T-H.

The AFL Executive Council —(the officers)—has voted to refuse to sign the affidavits. The decision came after all council members except John L. Lewis voted to sign. But, since Lewis held out, the others had to go along with him.

The CIO officers—president, secretary-treasurer and nine vice presidents—have postponed decision on the issue. Some of the officers, however, come from unions which have declared they will not sign the affidavits, or file financial data (already given regularly to their own members) because such affidavits are an infringement of personal liberty.

Chairman Herzog, addressing the American Management Association last week, neatly sidestepped the question "of which officers must comply until the board has rendered a formal opinion on this subject." He urged unions to try to obey the law. And he called on management to practice restraint in using powers handed it under T-H.

He admitted that only "a handful" of unions had filed affidavits.

'Children's Story' Issued By UE

A new union publication is being issued by the CIO Electrical Workers: "a children's story for the whole family."

The new publication tells the story of unionism in a brand new way: by means of a child's storybook, replete with pictures, talking trains and all. Entitled "Chug-Chug," the 20-page booklet tells the story of how Donnie and Susan see a toy train in a toy store and ask their parents to buy it. But there is not enough money because of high prices.

Deny Segregation On Freedom Train

The American Heritage Foundation, sponsor of Freedom Train, has issued a statement, signed by Winthrop W. Aldrich, board chairman, concerning the possibility of segregation at public exhibits of the train.

"On July 9," the statement said, "the following resolution was passed unanimously by the executive committee of the board: 'resolved that no segregation of any individuals or groups of any kind on the basis of race or religion be allowed at any exhibition of the Freedom Train held anywhere.'

"Later, this resolution was unanimously ratified at a full meeting of the board. Any other course was unthinkable," the statement went on.

Pullman Laundry Crews Get Raise

More than 1,000 Pullman laundry workers, members of the CIO Transport Service Employes, won a 15½c hourly increase last week.

The workers are employes in Pullman laundries at New York, Chicago, Washington, Cincinnati, St. Louis, Kansas City, Miami and Oakland, Calif.

Murray is Main Speaker At Industrial Conference

CIO Pres. Philip Murray will be the main speaker at the Fall Conference of the Industrial Relations Council of Metropolitan Boston at a Dinner to be held at the Bradford Hotel, Boston, Friday, October 10, at 6:30 p.m.

This meeting will highlight a series of events in celebrating Rededication Week in Boston and the arrival of the Freedom Train October 11 and 12.

Murray is a National Vice Chairman and Trustee of the Heritage Foundation.

The Industrial Relations Council of Metropolitan Boston, composed of members of labor and industry, has been solidly supported and endorsed by the national leaders in management and the national leaders in labor, both CIO and AFL.

The Council has the full endorsement of Murray, CIO Secretary-Treasurer James B. Carey, CIO United Steelworkers Secretary-Treasurer David J. McDonald and other CIO leaders.

For the first time since the Council's inception in 1941 its Chairman is a CIO representative. He is Jack Hurvich, president of the Greater Boston CIO Industrial Union Council from 1942 through 1947, and now its Director of Public Relations.

In addition to Murray, others on the Dinner program are Massachusetts Gov. Bradford, temporary Boston Mayor John B. Hynes, Richard P. Doherty, Director of Employee-Employer Relations Division, National Association of Broadcasters, who will serve as toastmaster; Sidney Rabb, Chairman of the Board of the Super Market Institute, Anthony J. DeAndrade, International Vice President, AFL Pressmen's Union, and Harold Ulrich, General Chairman of the Grievance Board, B&M Railroad Brotherhood.

Head table guests include Dr. Daniel L. Marsh, President of Boston University; Prof. Sumner Slichter, Harvard; Martin Walsh, Director of USA, New England; Francis F. Carmichael, CIO Regional Director; Michael Kelleher, president, Boston Chamber of Commerce; Stuart DeBard, President of the Junior Chamber of Commerce; James Malvey, president of the Greater Boston CIO Council; Philip Theopold, General Chairman of the Community Fund Drive; Carey, CIO Organization Director Allan Haywood; McDonald, J. Copeland Gray, of the National Labor Relations Board.

'Duck and Goose King' Held as Hit-Run After Woman Picket is Struck Down

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

THE scene is outside the plant of Musser & Co., poultry processing firm at Wells, Minn., a town of 3,000 inhabitants 48 miles from the strongly CIO-organized packinghouse center of Austin.

A picketline, mostly of young girls, middle-aged women and a few men, is at the plant. A strike of the CIO Packinghouse Workers, Local 351, is in progress.

It's 5:15 p.m. and everything is quiet. Suddenly, John Musser, son of the company founder, comes out of the plant with a group of office workers. Musser, sometimes called the "Duck and Goose King of America," gets into a big car with the office workers. He steps on the starter and the auto whizzes down the block-long lane at high speed.

Two police officers signal him to stop but Musser speeds on, then swerves his car sharply to the left, where Mrs. Frank Kriz, wife of the local union president, is standing. Mrs. Kriz is struck, according to the police, and dragged by the car to the middle of the road.

Musser drives on without stopping, police say. The Bluecoats, union pickets and irate citizens climb into other autos and give chase, but Musser continues on into the center of town, then heads for the country.

Later, his car is found in a ditch. The next afternoon, Musser is arrested and arraigned on the charge of leaving the scene of an accident. He is released in $100 bail.

Mrs. Kriz is taken to the hospital at Albert Lea, suffering from painful injuries and possible bone fractures. The union reports that she will recover but will never forget the awful moment.

* * *

THIS may sound like a labor movie scenario or the plot for a "comic" strip serial conceived by some imaginative unionist, but it isn't. It's an authenticated news story from the present American labor scene in this era of the Taft-Hartley law, reported by "The Unionist," official weekly paper of Local 9, UPWA, Austin, Minn.

Angry Boss: Mrs. Frank Kriz, wife of the president of Local 351, CIO Packinghouse Workers, was allegedly struck down by a car driven by her husband's boss. Kriz was leader of a strike against the wealthy produce man, who pays his skilled workers a mixmum of 74c an hour. The boss is known far and wide as the "Duck and Goose King."

"The Unionist" gives the background in this case and the facts make a story typical of plenty of places in the United States where the much publicized "high" average weekly wage of some $49 never seems to reach.

Ben Musser and "his swaggering, arrogant son John," says the Unionist, moved their poultry business to Wells from New York State in 1928, and immediately embarked upon a campaign to beat down living standards. In 1933, the Musser plant paid men with families to support 20 cents an hour; women earned considerably less.

Today, top pay in their plant is 74 cents an hour for skilled male help, much less for semi-skilled and unskilled workers. Women now receive an hourly rate slightly above that permitted by the Federal minimum wage law, although some on a piece-work basis receive a top of 79 cents an hour.

IN the spring of 1946, the low-paid workers of Wells, inspired by the UPWA, began challenging the Mussers, whose word had "long been the law in civic, municipal, labor and political affairs" and whose "go-ahead" sign was needed for any civic move, says the Unionist.

It took the union eight months to get a written contract. This agreement expired May 29. Since then, the company has flatly refused to sign another, in spite of all efforts of the union.

One day in September when the patience of the workers was already at a breaking point, Frank Kriz was fired on the charge of smoking. Members of the union regarded this as a phoney excuse, for they knew that during the war German prisoners, working at the plant for 10 cents an hour, were not only given free cigarettes by the company but were permitted to smoke anywhere.

Fighting mad, the workers walked out on strike on Sept. 15, and began picketing the plant.

The climax came on the third day of the strike, when John Musser was accused of striking Mrs. Kriz with his car and the town went wild with excitment. Messages and support for the strikers from other unions began coming in, and union officials who came to the scene praised the workers for their good discipline and solidarity. (At the end of the second week the strike was still going strong.)

IN Austin, Local 9 Pres. Frank Schultz devoted his weekly radio program to the strike in Wells. Addressing himself to the mayor, city council, businessmen and farmers of Wells, Schultz told them they should be immensely interested in the success of the walkout.

"If the workers receive starvation wages," he said, "then you will go down with them. If the workers are prosperous, then all of you will be favorably affected. Remember this—pork chops and chicken are eaten by working people with big appetites—and not by the few in your community with ulcers who own and control the town."

At one point in his talk Schultz gave a "special message" to Ben Musser, head of the struck poultry firm. "Our social system has smiled upon you, has treated you fairly," he told Musser.

"Can you honestly, deep down in your heart, say that you have met your moral and social obligations in a like manner? Your employes have been your faithful servants for as many as 20 years. They made your fortune for you.

"What has been their reward? The $20 a week they receive? The 53 cents an hour you pay your women workers? The 60 to 74 cents an hour you pay your men? The attitude you have shown them recently?

"NO, Ben, you'll have to do better than that! You'll have to show these people that you are a big man with a conscience and sit down with their representatives in true American fashion to settle your differences."

In the beginning of his radio talk, Schultz described Wells: "The homes of the rich are as beautiful and as numerous as in any other city of comparable size — and the limousines they drive are long, black and shiny.

"But the working people in Wells seem much poorer than in other communities. Here's why. During the war, Musser's employes were frozen on their jobs at 43 cents an hour, while Musser had lush government contracts for his poultry. He promised them a good deal when the war was over and they really got it!"

Schultz then told of the firing of Kriz and ripped into John Musser as "this irresponsible madman" who ran down Mrs. Kriz.

Commenting on his release on $100 bail, Schultz said, "Of course, that is the influence that money has. Is this justice? Remember now—this is USA—1947."

PROPOSED KENTUCKY RENT RAISE PROTESTED BY PRES. MURRAY

CIO Pres. Philip Murray has sent a strong protest to Frank R. Creedon, U. S. Housing Expediter, over an action of the Louisville, Ky., Rent Advisory Board.

The board, appointed by Kentucky's Republican Gov. Simeon Willis with the approval of Creedon, last week recommended a 5% increase in rents over and above the "voluntary" 15% increase allowed by the recent Congressional law.

Murray's wire to Creedon:

"It is reported to me that a general increase of rents in Louisville, Kentucky has been recommended to you by the local Rent Advisory Board of that area and that this recommendation is now before you under the powers vested in you to approve or disapprove it.

"I am informed that the local Board in question is not representative of the citizens of that area, as the law requires, but is consituted of two real estate men, one banker who is a member of the Real Estate Board, and two lawyers who, according to our information, also are closely associated with real estate interests.

"The recommendation of this Board, if approved, may encourage like action by other Boards similarly constituted and equally unrepresentative of the citizens of their localities. I am also advised that, contrary to your request to such Boards that their proposals be submitted to public hearing, this Louisville Board held no such hearing.

"In view of these facts it cannot be said that the recommendation of the Louisville Board meets the requirement of the Rent Control Law that such recommendation be 'appropriately substantiated.'

"I urge you to disapprove the Louisville Board's recommendation for a general rent increase in that area and any further such recommendation unless and until a Board that is representative of all the citizens, including tenants as well as landlords, has been appointed and has held public hearings on any proposal for increasing rents."

Fred Foss, executive secretary of the Kentucky State CIO and a member of the CIO Steelworkers, said every Louisville CIO president and secretary met last week to map a wide protest against the increase. The City of Louisville has more than 12,000 CIO members and all are to be called upon to join in the protest. Meetings, rallies and other demonstrations will be held.

In Washington, where Congressmen live a good part of the year, no change was made in the old District of Columbia rent control law. But the District Rent Control Administration has awarded 3% and 4% increases to thousands of landlords owning small homes and apartments with eight or less units and 7% to 8% for larger units.

Alabama Labor Throws Shindig For Governor

ALABAMA Gov. James E. Folsom, his staff, Lt.-Gov. J. C. Inzer, House Speaker William D. Beck and members of the Alabama Legislature were guests of organized labor at a dinner in Montgomery, Ala., last week.

The banquet was the first get-together of its kind ever held in Alabama, and three-fourths of the members of the Alabama House and Senate attended the dinner, which was given by legislative representatives of the CIO, AFL and Railroad Brotherhoods.

State AFL President Jack Brock was spokesman for the labor groups. He thanked the guests for "many kind courtesies extended the representatives of organized labor during this present session of the Legislature."

The Legislature is about to close its 1947 session after having refused, three weeks ago, to pass two anti-labor measures, one of which would have outlawed the closed shop; the other outlawed picketing.

Along with Brock, these labor leaders were co-hosts: State CIO President Carey E. Haigler; State CIO Secy.-Treas. Eugene M. Wells; State AFL Secy.-Treas. Hugh Brown; D. L. St. John, vice president, Alabama State Council of Carpenters; J. R. Aldridge, chairman, legislative board, Brotherhood of Railway Maintenance Employes; H. E. Sullivan, legislative consultant for the Brotherhood of Railway Clerks; J. P. Knight of the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen; Lawrence Stevens, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers; Murray Rodgers, Brotherhood of Railway Conductors; Floyd Wilson, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen.

We Keep on Paying

A guy with a silly little mustache started preaching a sermon of hate against the Jews, at the same time telling his fanatical followers that they were of a "super" race.

Later, he started out to conquer the world, with the help of the Italians and the Japanese.

The first chapter of what followed was written in blood and sweat and tears. It was the horrible story of mechanized war—conflict that ended with the dropping of atomic bombs.

We're writing the second chapter now, and the first few pages make unpleasant reading. Except for details of the shooting, they're little different from the earlier pages.

Millions of persons throughout the world are suffering from hunger and thousands are actually starving.

There is armed conflict in China, and the Dutch East Indies resemble a powder keg.

Europe is torn apart by ideological conflict. The Russian bloc and the U. S.-British bloc are tearing verbally at each other's throats—and sitting on the sidelines are those who say we're heading for another major war.

In our own country the desire for profit and power has led us into a dangerous economic situation. Inflation is here and it is becoming worse.

Historians will certainly record the 1940's as an era in which man threatened to destroy himself as a result of his own stupidity.

Isn't it time for our leaders to engage in a bit of that old-fashioned business known as soul-searching? Isn't it time for us to demand that the greedy few cease profiteering on the miseries of a sick world?

For years and perhaps generations to come we'll keep on paying for the last war. We'll pay and pay and pay—and we expect to.

But it's too much to ask that we pay with interest and that some be permitted to reap huge profits from the transaction.

That's rubbing too much salt into our open wounds!

A New 'Slant'?

During the House Labor Committee hearing on the Philadelphia-Camden CIO Newspaper Guild strike, Rep. Hartley expressed concern that the Guild was influencing its reporter-members so that they were slanting their news favorably towards labor.

His remarks were heard with great cynicism by reporters present, most of whom were Guild members, because the vast majority of them had been told to slant their stories favorably to Publisher J. David Stern.

Now, the team of Taft and Hartley has shown another of its strange examples of oppositeness. Taft is somewhat happy over the press of America. For, says he, newspapermen generally are giving the Republican party "an even break."

Who's slanting whom?

Famous remarks:

Calvin Coolidge: "When there is unemployment, there will be men out of work."

Robert A. Taft: "You can buy meat if you can pay for it."

In other words, Keep Cool with Coolidge and Keep Daft with Taft.

What this country has is a good 5-cent dime.

Shut Them Up If You Do Not Like What They Say?

By ALLAN L. SWIM

FREEDOM and civil liberty have taken an awful beating in this country since the end of the war.

The disgusting thing about it is that most of the curbs have been imposed under the guise of "protecting the democratic way of life."

Blame it on the hysteria that follows war. Blame it on the Republicans—or on the Southern Democrats—or on the "reactionaries"— or on the "domestic fascists." Blame it on whomever you like, but recognize it for what it is and refuse to be quiet or complacent about it.

Too few persons have been willing to buck the trend. Too few have said publicly, "This is not Americanism."

ALL labor union officials have been asked to sign affidavits that they are not Communists.

Groups of government workers have been subjected to a "purge" system which prohibits them from confronting their accusers.

Editors of union newspapers have been forbidden by law to write what they think about political candidates.

Union members have been arrested and fined merely because they distributed printed matter.

Race and religious prejudices have been exploited in successful attempts to prevent workers from forming trade unions.

A Congress that came into power on reaction to wartime restrictions enacted legislation designed to weaken or destroy labor unions. Then, in effect, it said:

"Employers, regardless of their records or their affiliations, can utilize this law as they see fit—but union officials cannot use it until AFTER they have signed affidavits and filed financial information."

Is it any wonder that labor leaders gag over the idea of being asked to sign a "pledge" before they can utilize a law that they dislike—a law designed to harm their organizations?

There is nothing fair or democratic about such a set-up. There is nothing American about requiring men to declare they're innocent before they're accused of being guilty.

WHAT'S behind all of this strange business? What does it mean to the man in the factory, the school teacher, the fellow who sells insurance?

Behind it all is a struggle for power—a struggle between liberalism and conservatism, between radicalism and reactionaryism, between those who believe in strong human rights and those who believe in strong property rights.

Hysterical thinking and careless talking play important parts. Greed for wealth, and fear that this country may swing too far to the left are major factors.

Maybe this is making it a bit too simple, but simplification is needed.

THE average American feels the effects of the current trend every time he buys groceries or clothes—every time he makes an expenditure.

That's because those largely responsible for violation of civil rights also are largely responsible for today's outrageously high cost of living.

This group—call it "big business" if you can't think of a better term—obviously has no intention of curbing its excesses, though it may try, through its spokesmen in Congress, to place further curbs on those who oppose its tactics.

The worst thing about the whole set-up is that a real effort has been made to silence those who have been abused. A nation is in real danger when this happens.

"OK, BOYS - TO THE UNION HALLS."

It's a Dark Secret!

WHILE tavern and soda fountain neon signs in Pittsburgh sparkle gaily and far into the night, the workers in nearby Shell Chemical are operating in a virtual blackout.

The Public Utilities Commission, which decided Tuesday against brownouts and other power saving measures, should take a good look at Shell Chemical's ghost-like plant, say the employes.

The plant, just outside of Pittsburgh on Highway 40, used to be a big expanse of light. Even at night it looked like a bustling little town. Now you could pass the place and never know it was there.

In an inspection tour of the plant, V. F. Corgliotti, secretary of CIO Oil Workers' local, internoaional representative of the union, pointed out many men working with flashlights in the darkened yards and inside the partially darkened buildings.

Shell Chemical had its power cut two-thirds by Pittsburgh Gas and Electric a few weeks ago. PG&E said it was necessary because of an "absence of surplus". But the union and the Federal Bureau of Reclamation call it a shortage.

Since the cut, Shell Chemical has diverted power from lights to the motors in the plant, in order to keep motors running. But powerline ditches are being dug in the darkened yard, which makes walking a hazardous project. Operators are reading gauges and turning valves by flashlight.

Yet only a few rods away are the glarish red and green lights of non-essential pursuits.

The Shell plant makes ammonium sulphate, an important ingredient in fertilizers, according to OWIU. The shortage of power has cut down the production of the vital material and added a burden on farmers in their effort to produce foodstuffs so sorely needed throughout the world.

Weller Noble, president of Pacific Guano Company in Berkeley, has stated that the present shortage has raised the price of ammonium sulphate by 30%.

World's Greatest Atom Shelter

Col. Robert "Bertie" McCormick, publisher of the country's most incredible newspaper, is all prepared for atomic war.

An announcement in his Chicago Tribune—self-styled "world's greatest newspaper" — discloses that an atomic bomb-proof shelter has been built under the Tribune Building, presumably to permit Col. Bertie and his staff to get a survivor's look at the Windy City if the atom bombs begin to drop.

"A spacious second basement storage area beneath the Tribune tower—a room massively walled and ceilinged with heavy concrete and steel beams—has been designated the primary atomic shelter and directions are being prepared for every office and department for reaching this place," the Tribune said in semi-military style.

The shelter can accommodate 3,000 persons. The other 2,997,000 citizens of Chicago—a large number of whom vote Democratic despite the Colonel's blustering support of the GOP—will have to shift for themselves.

You Can't Ignore Giant Like Farben

A man stepped up to a CBS microphone in New York the other day and started talking about one of the most fantastic industrial enterprises the world has ever known.

He said that the men who headed the giant corporation financed a fellow who wanted to become a dictator—then tried to help him win a war.

He mentioned that 53 American firms were linked with the foreign corporation, whose 23 top officials are now being tried for war crimes.

Then, near the end of his talk, he charged that coverage of the trial of the 23 has been "erratic, incompetent and sloppy."

DON HOLLENBECK was doing the speaking—on the "CBS Views the Press" program in New York.

He was talking about I. G. Farbenindustries, the German chemical colossus that backed Hitler to the hilt.

"Since August 27," Hollenbeck said, "there has been going on in Nurnburg, Germany, a war crimes trial which the New York press, with apparently mixed motives, has chosen to treat very confusingly. The trial is that of 23 top officials of the I. G. Farbenindustries . . ."

He said the New York papers provided "reasonably adequate stories" when the trial opened, then "seemed to forget about it."

CAME Sept. 2, said Hollenbeck, and "American prosecutors introduced documents linking 53 American firms with Farben, in an effort to illustrate the worldwide influence of the German combine."

He said the wire services supplied a complete list of the 53 firms "with the parenthetical note that all have denied that any Farben agreements they may have had had weakened the United States as an arsenal."

The New York World-Telegram and the Sun carried the complete list, "but the following morning it was surprisingly something else again," he said. "Neither the Times nor the Tribune printed the list . . ."

PROSECUTORS at Nurnburg on Sept. 10 "introduced affidavits by defendants testifying to their travels abroad on behalf of Farben business," Hollenbeck reported.

"Included in these affidavits were several concerning visits to American firms and institutions. The only New York newspapers to print anything at all on this were the Sun and the Post—all the rest of the metropolitan press gave the story a fine large ignoring."

Hollenbeck added that Time magazine "printed a story last May, when the indictments were handed down. Their index departments report they haven't carried a word since—not even at the opening of the trial."

FARBEN the Giant backed a dictator who threw the world into a tragic war. Yet the press of America's largest city has treated the trial of its 23 top officers rather casually and haphazardly.

Hollenbeck put it this way:

"Judging from what has been printed about the Farben trial, no reader could be expected to form any opinion except perhaps to decide that the thing couldn't be very important, or you'd have seen more about it in the papers."

And there you have one man's opinion about metropolitan newspaper coverage of an important war crimes trial.

Our opinion is that you can't hide a giant like Farben—but you can try if you think it advisable to do so.

A SHELL GAME

Going Over to Down Under? Here's What's Offered

FOR the first time in American history, our people are emigrating.

Already, a number of ex-GI's have sailed for Australia, which is appealing for immigrants. Some of the GI's are sailing with love light in their eyes (they married Aussie girls or are engaged to them), some seek adventure, others are just foot loose.

Are they making the right move? Are there opportunities for them Down Under? Here is what Australia's official publicity department says:

"THERE are 100,000 jobs open in Australia.

"The labor shortage is most acute in metal trades and allied industries, building, clothing and textile manufacture, wood finishing, paper and printing, stone, chemicals, leather and rubber, food, drink and tobacco manufacture. There is also a great need for farm and other rural workers.

"Commonwealth Employment Service records in July showed 73,000 more jobs than could be filled. Authoritative assessment of vacancies now received brings the total labor shortage to at least 100,000.

"The number of civilians in work in June, 1947, was 3,212,400, of a total population of 7,500,000. This is a record high employment total in Australia. In June of the pre-war year 1939 the figure was 2,737,000.

"Federal Minister for Labor and National Service Holloway has appealed to employers to create more opportunities for women to engage in part-time work. He has also appealed to women not at present employed to fill part-time positions.

"Stressing that an increase in the number of persons in employment was an essential to increased production, the Minister said the total number of women in employment in Australia, exclusive of rural and domestic workers, was 620,000. This figure is only 20,000 below the peak war-time level, when, however, there were 40,000 women serving with the forces.

"REFLECTION of the labor shortage is seen in newspaper advertisements by firms and corporations offering high rates of pay, a five-day, 40-hour week, bonuses and other attractions.

"To attract workers to a hydro-electric construction project in the mountains of Victoria the State Electricity Commission, a Government instrumentality, has advertised widely, offering unusually good conditions. In advertisements, appealing for carpenters, the Commission offers 8£ 6 shillings (about $25 in U. S. money) a week, plus free meals and accommodations.

"The Commission offers: First-class meals of several courses supplied free, cooked in all-electric kitchens and served in modern cafeterias; separate room, furnished and electrically heated, for each man, rent free, in solid hostel buildings with hot and cold showers, sewered lavatories, change rooms, laundries, etc.

"A salary rise after three years' service, free bus transport to nearby towns in Victoria and New South Wales, leaving the job Friday night and returning Sunday night; two weeks' annual leave on full pay after 12 months' service, three weeks after five years.

"Cumulative sick leave at award rates; social rooms and facilities for outdoors sports; latest movies, weekly and frequent dances; services of resident doctor and nurse, prescribed medicines and hospital treatment covered by a small weekly contribution. Cash gratuity (according to length of service—minimum 10 years) paid after age 60 and on retirement; six months leave on full-pay after 20 years' service.

"The Commission offers similar conditions and benefits, at award rates of pay to plumbers, boilermakers, Diesel motor mechanics and mechanical fitters.

"TO accommodate workers and their families the Commission is establishing a model township in the foothills of the mountains. It will have 200 houses, in addition to the hotels, and is expected to be a thriving settlement for at least 10 years. Houses with three bedrooms, large living room, kitchen and bathroom, built-in furnishings, electric ranges and hot water services will be let at cheap rents to married employes. The township will have shopping center, school, medical center, church, fire and police stations, parks and reserves, and its own water supply and sewage systems."

JERSEY CIO AND PAC O.K. CONSTITUTION

MORE than 250,000 CIO members in New Jersey have been urged to vote in favor of the proposed new state constitution at the November referendum.

A resolution was unanimously adopted Saturday by the 69-member State CIO Political Action Committee and the 38-man executive board of the State CIO Council.

It said the two groups, "feeling that the proposed new constitution does not fully meet our desires and hopes, but aware that it is a tremendous advance over the present document, hereby urge all members of the CIO in New Jersey to vote in favor of the new charter at the November referendum."

Action this year of the two groups came after Carl Holderman, president of the State CIO Council, outlined the major provisions in the new constitution and urged CIO support of the document.

In other resolutions adopted by the two CIO governing bodies, "continued action" with the N. J. Committee for Constitutional Revision was urged to work for "further liberal amendments" in the new constitution and the state officers of the CIO were commended for their participation at the New Brunswick convention.

The resolution urging support of the new document pointed out that the CIO "has consistently since 1938 advocated the calling of a constitutional convention to revise and modernize the State Constitution adopted in 1844."

CIO opposed and the people defeated in 1944 a proposed charter "drafted by a partisan legislature which failed to meet the needs of an industrial society," the resolution pointed out.

As a member of the N. J. Committee for Constitutional Revision, CIO this year "was active in securing passage of legislation to provide for a constitutional convention to revise the old document" and submitted more than 100 specific suggestions for the new charter.

"The Constitutional Convention, which had no bonafide representative of labor as a delegate, included in its final draft more than 80%" of these recommendations, the resolution noted, including "articles guaranteeing the rights of labor and banning discrimination because of race, color, religion, national origin or ancestry."

Noting that the "only alternative to approval of this document is a return to the antiquated and unwieldy constitution of 1844," the resolution urged its approval in November.

Replace LaGuardia By Grid Scores

Death of Fiorello La Guardia, the peppery ex-mayor of New York City, has cut the already slim list of liberal radio commentators.

Mutual — which airs the views of Fulton Lewis and other spokesmen for the big business point of view—will not replace La Guardia with another commentator.

La Guardia—who frequently flayed the real estate lobby and other pressure groups — was heard each Saturday night at 6:30. For the next few weeks, the time will be used for football scores.

New York City

Teaching teacher how to train union members in PAC work was the theme of a class conducted by the Greater New York CIO Council.

Confronted by many union queries on the whys and hows of the 1947 PAC registration and election campaign in New York City, the Education and PAC Committees of the Council pooled forces to give the answers.

Student-teachers from 30 locals who attended went back to their own PAC jobs all set to initiate other willing workers in the intricacies of collecting PAC funds, organizing committees, recruiting canvassers, as well as how to convince doubting Thomases that PAC work is important.

Major issues in the New York City elections were also covered.

A study outline based on the material presented at the two sessions of the class was given every student, and to other unions planning similar instruction.

Every local which sent a student has either held its own classes, or passed on the information at steward and PAC meetings.

Mine, Mill PAC

Delegates from the CIO Mine Mill and Smelter Workers from New York, New Jersey, Maryland and Pennsylvania met in Newark recently, and initiated a political activity program looking towards 1948.

M. E. Travis, union president, told the conference that the full resources of the International Union would be thrown into a campaign to develop a greater political consciousness among the rank and file.

The ethical basis of the labor movement was described by Rev. Rufus Cornelson, pastor of the Emanuel Lutheran Church, New Brunswick, who said his advocacy of the labor movement was based on the conception of the "innate dignity of man" which he felt must not be destroyed by exploitation in the interests of others.

Labor Helped: Carl Holdorman (center, pipe in hand), President of the N. J. CIO, is shown consulting with other CIO officials during the recent State Constitutional Convention. CIO backs the charter adopted by the convention. The proposed constitution provides various protections for unions and bans discrimination because of race, creed, or color.

T-H Rulings Confusing

IF Sen. Taft and Rep. Hartley continue to give conflicting, off-the-cuff "interpretations" of what's legal and what's illegal under the new anti-labor law, collective bargaining in this country will soon reach a state of shambles.

That was the warning given the American Management Assn. conference in New York last week by CIO General Counsel Lee Pressman.

Addressing a group of personnel experts, Pressman noted that:

- Taft and Hartley had disagreed on the Mine Workers' contract last summer, with Taft calling it acceptable and Hartley describing some provisions were illegal.
- Hartley had predicted that the CIO auto workers' pact with Ford would involve a conspiracy to evade the law if it contained a clause freeing the union from company damage suits—but when such a section was written into the pact, Hartley stated "pontifically" that no violation had been committed.
- Taft was reported in the press to have promised—after conferences with a west coast AFL maritime union leader—that he would suggest amending the law to legalize marine union hiring halls. But when the bill was under debate last spring, he favored the close shop ban on the basis of "abuses in the maritime industry which he claimed to know at first hand."

Hirohito Visit Is Barred By Union

Japan's Emperor Hirohito, sacred figure before the war, cancelled a visit to the Aomori Locomotive factory when the local union announced it opposed "unnecessary functions which involve working overtime and that it could not bear the responsibility for a possible accident."

T-H Act in Action

By FRANK DONNER
of CIO Legal Staff

DURING the short time the Taft-Hartley Act has been on the books there have been plain indications that it will be administered so as to squeeze every conceivable anti-labor interpretation out of it.

One of the many indications of the scope of what this law really means and what it really does is continued in a recent directive by the Board's General Counsel, Robert M. Denham, to the field staff. In this directive, the regional office is instructed to adopt the following procedure when a charge is received:

1. The person filing it is "required to produce sufficient affirmative and probative evidence to indicate a case."

2. The person filing the charge is to be required to designate the witnesses through whom it is expected the charges will be proved.

3. The person filing the charge is required to produce such witnesses at the Board Office at a designated time not more than 72 hours after filng the charge.

4. In the event of a failure to produce such witnesses or if the particular witnesses designated by the charging party are unable to substantiate the charges "by competent evidence," the charge is to be dismissed.

Former Practices

To appreciate the effect this new directive, it is necessary to recall the former practice under the Wagner Act. Then the field director of the Board, through its field examiners, assumed the responsibility of running down charges that had been filed. The Board recognized that the Government, in enforcing the Wagner Act, had the responsibility of investigating and substantiating charges which had been filed with it. The Board realized that a union might have a perfectly valid charge and still be unable to substantiate it because of its limited facilities for investigation and detection. The Board recognized that this was particularly true in connection with labor matters since employers concealed their violations of the Act so cleverly that intensive and professional investigation was reqired to uncover evidence of their law-breaking.

This new ruling, which reverses the former Board practices, will inevitably produce three results:

1. It will make the already meaningless labor protection of the T-H Act still more meaningless. When employers commit unfair labor practices few unions will have the facilities to establish a prima facie case within 72 hours or the resources to produce witnesses at the Board's office and to finance their expenses and lost time.

2. In contrast, employers will be under no such handicap when they bring charges against unions. Employers are far better equipped than unions to meet technical requirements in the law regarding the type of proof which must be offered. Virtually every union has had experience with anti-labor employers who, upon the slightest provocation, produce phony "proofs" of alleged union misconduct.

3. The inevitable effect of Denham's new ruling will be to give employers a jurisdiction for labor espionage. An employer who wants to destroy a union can justify his use of labor spies on the ground that he is merely seeking "evidence" of union unfair labor practice which has to be produced within 72 hours of the filing of his charge.

In recent years, there has been a revival of labor espionage. Employers have resorted to stooges within the unions, to phony affidavits and even to doctored moving picture films, in their attack upon unions. Now, under Denham's ruling, they will be encouraged in this practice.

What is more, this new ruling will promote labor espionage egencies and service to supply the employers with "evidence" of union unfair labor practices for a fee. The fink, the spy, the stool pigeon have achieved a new respectability.

Penna. CIO on Prices:

NAM PRICE STAND A 'HUGE FRAUD'

THE President of the Pennsylvania State CIO Council last week gave members of the Eastern Congressional sub-committee investigating prices a 5-point formula for tackling the high cost of living.

Harry Boyer, in testimony presented at hearings in Philadelphia, fourth city visited by the Congressmen, proposed:

- That Congress meet at once, stay in session and "earnestly tackle" the problem.
- That monopoly by giant corporations through financial combines "be broken open," competition restored and stock gambling stopped.
- That taxes on excess profits be restored, and those on low incomes be reduced.
- That controls be placed on essential goods.
- That the Taft-Hartley Act be repealed "so labor and management may resume free negotiation."

BOYER termed the National Association of Manufacturer's prediction that prices would "adjust themselves" if OPA were discontinued "the greatest fraud perpetrated in American history. This grave misrepresentation found willing support then by important members of Congress, notably Sens. Taft and Wherry," he said.

Corporate profits, now at an all-time high, can absorb substantial price decreases, and "yet leave handsome and legitimate profits," he continued.

The Pennsylvania CIO head cited conditions in 7 areas in the state in which rising prices had reduced workers' savings and purchases of essentials. Hamburger in Charleroi, for instance, was shown to have gone up 70%; sugar in the Creighton area rose 100%, while lemons went up 200%. Bread in Erie increased from 9 to 15c, and a pork chop rose from 10 to 20c, he said.

Further evidence of hardships imposed on workers by spiralling prices was submitted by Herbert Kling, regional director of the CIO Food and Tobacco Workers.

Food prices in the Philadelphia area, according to the U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics, increased more than the national average, he stated.

"NOBODY in our union eats steaks," he continued. "Urging them to eat less—as both Sen. Taft and some Democratic leaders are doing—is superfluous. They already are eating less simply because they can't afford to eat otherwise."

Many of 30,000 shipyard workers laid off in the Camden area found seasonal work at the Campbell Soup plant in Camden. The work is now ending, he said, and "no one knows what will happen to them then. Apparently, no one in authority cares."

Bethlehem Co. Holds Out

THE Bethlehem Steel Co. late last week was still pursuing what CIO Pres. Philip Murray called "callous disregard of the welfare of its employes and the public."

Bethlehem, as the CIO News went to press, still refused to carry the strike of its 40,000 shipyard employes to arbitration, as suggested by CIO Shipbuilding Union Pres. John Green and the union's counsel, M. H. Goldstein.

Nine Atlantic Coast yards were shut down in the strike which began June 26. On that date, IUMSWA members were forced on strike by management demand that they give up most of the working conditions they had gained and go back to working practices of pre-union days.

David Lawrence's U. S. News reported that the continuance of the strike was making worse the already perilous condition of the U. S. merchant marine. IUMSWA officials also say that and offer arbitration as a fair solution, both to the management and union and to the public.

Ironwood Employes Win Insurance

City employes in Ironwood, Mich., boast that with the signing of an agreement incorporating the Michigan CIO plan, they now have the best social security insurance program in the country.

The Ironwood Public Workers Union negotiated acceptance of the Michigan CIO employer-financed basic plan by the city commission. The CIO plan provides weekly sickness and accident benefit payments equal to 60% of average weekly pay.

CHARLES LUCKMAN
President of Lever Bros., soap and allied products manufacturers (Lux, Lifebuoy, Spry, Pepsodent, etc.), who has been appointed by Pres. Truman as chairman of the 26-man Food Committee. CIO Pres. Philip Murray is a member of the committee. Luckman recently signed a contract with the CIO United Chemical Workers, which provided a number of gains, including protection for the union against legal suits under the Taft-Hartley Law.

Farm Labor Glamour: These members of the CIO Packinghouse Workers met farmers and workers at the Minnesota State Fair. They were the hostesses at "The Meat of It," UPWA booth. Thousands of farmers visited the booth, talked things over with union members and took scads of literature home. CIO Speakers Set For Radio Oct. 12

Problems facing American workers during the coming year will be discussed by three CIO spokesmen Oct. 12 over the Natl. Broadcasting Co. network.

The program is heard at 1:00 p.m., EST, each Sunday.

Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, General Counsel Lee Pressman and Research and Education Director Kermit Eby will discuss the question with NBC Moderator Kennedy Ludlum from the studios of WBZ in Boston. The program will be aired the day before the CIO convention opens.

CIO is on the air each Sunday at 1:00 p.m., EST, until the end of the year on the America United series.

BACKS HOLY LAND PLAN

SUPPORT of the U. S. delegation at the United Nations for the UN's majority report permitting greater Jewish immigration into Palestine was asked of Pres. Truman last week by CIO Pres. Philip Murray.

"The CIO has consistently supported through the years immigration of Jews into Palestine," Murray wired to the White House.

"In a controversy embittered by many conflicting points of view, the recommendation of the UN Special Committee on Palestine offers the best solution of the present day tragic situation of world Jewry."

Use of Handicapped Urged To Gain Full Employment

FULL employment cannot be achieved until the Nation's employers and all citizens develop full use of handicapped workers, Labor Secy. Schwellenbach said last week in announcing appointment of a national committee to promote observance of "National Employ the Physically Handicapped Week," Oct. 5-11.

CIO Pres. Philip Murray accepted appointment as one of the committee's labor representatives. Industry, veterans, women's organizations and other public groups are also represented. Chairman is Dr. Ross T. McIntire, former Surgeon General to Pres. Roosevelt.

Pres. Truman proclaimed Oct. 5-11 for observance of NEPH week in compliance with an act passed in 1945, calling for the setting aside of the week each year "to enlist public support for, and interest in, the employment of otherwise qualified but physically handicapped workers."

The American Federation of the Physically Handicapped, Inc., which authored and sponsored the law setting up NEPH week has devoted itself since its formation in 1942 to the problems of the handicapped. It is the only national organization which includes all types of handicapped persons in its membership. National headquarters of the AFPH are at 1376 National Press Bldg., Washington 4, D. C. Paul A. Strachan is president. Applications for membership are invited.

Two and a half million of the 28,000,000 physical handicapped persons in the U. S. are employable, when given work under selective placement, according to the AFPH.

Five years ago, the Federal Government had only 365 jobs listed which could be filled by the handicapped. Today, there are more than 8,000 different kinds of jobs classified, states AFPH.

The war helped to dissipate this employer resistance, he said.

Edward L. Keenan, deputy director of the U. S. Employment Service, is chairman of the Federal Interagency Committee for the Employment of the Handicapped.

Addes Blasts Michigan Law

MICHIGAN'S Gov. Kim Sigler got some hot words and a cold turn-down from UAW-CIO Sec.-Treas. George Addes, who refused an invitation to sit in at a state-wide conference to discuss enforcement of Michigan's new Bonine-Tripp "Little Taft-Hartley Act."

Addes wired the governor that the Michigan statute—which goes into effect Oct. 12—"is so brazenly anti-labor as to be even harsher than the T-H law."

The auto union official said the law "would take away labor's most precious right—the right to strike" and he predicted the union will test its constitutionality. Addes suggested that it might well for Sigler to get into the show.

Only 250 Are on Strike:

But, It May Aid Million Along Rio Grande

By HENRY RABUN

THE actual number of strikers doesn't sound like a lot of people. And, it is not, compared to mass industries. In fact, there are 250 CIO members out seeking union recognition against four Laredo, Tex., area firms.

But —

That's merely the surface aspect.

Actually, more than a million persons of two nations are involved and the implications are far-reaching.

The CIO Organizing Committee's Texas crew moved into the key border town of 40,000 seven weeks ago and set up shop. CIO majorities piled up in firm after firm. Four recognition strikes followed.

Suddenly, the awakening came. Siestas were disturbed, postponed.

Director Robert Oliver and his organizers had lighted a slow fuse to a big powder keg stretching 850 miles along the Rio Grande from Brownsville to El Paso, as far north as Austin, San Antonio and Corpus Christi and as far south of the border as Monterrey and Mexico City.

And now, along the border river, where many a liberal's lance has been splintered, those who have built an empire on the cheapest wages in the U. S. realize that the long-feared change is in the making.

TO appreciate the implications evolving from the CIO's campaign, one should know the full story of this poverty-gripped section of Texas. The ugly picture forms when one mixes starvation wages, disease, ignorance, corruption and brazen denial of human rights. Bluntly, the plight of the Latin - American population in Texas is generally more miserable than that of the most exploited Southern Negro.

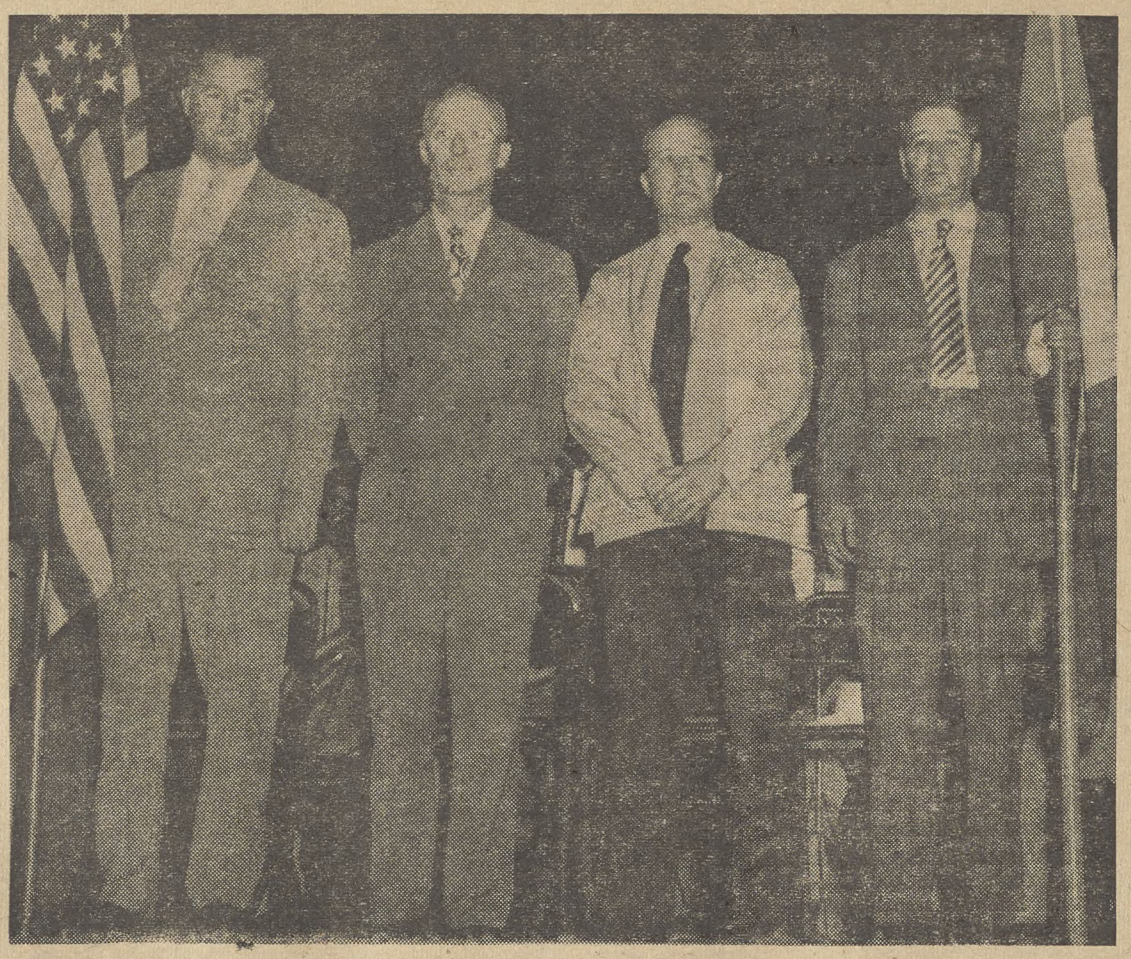
For years, Latin-Americans have sought an organization through which to voice their protests against vicious discrimination, and a force to fight semi-slavery conditions.

The average Latin - American believes he has found that force in CIO.

CIO is rallying support from other sources. Many local merchants are backing the campaign. Mexican unions have pledged full cooperation and are pressing for the early establishment of an international labor Good Neighbor group along the border aimed at halting slave pacts which have exploited Mexican Nationals.

THE Rio Grande county is populated predominately by Latin-Americans. The percentage is as high as 95% in many towns. The majority are U. S. citizens of Mexican descent.

Then, there are the "wetbacks," thousands of Mexican Nationals who illegally crossed the Rio Grande by wading, swimming or in launches. Also prominent in the labor picture are the thousands of Mexican residents, some of whom hold U. S. citizenship and pay a "resident fee" to the Mexican government, who cross daily to work on work permits, and the thousands of "legal slaves" in this country as the result of the U. S. and Mexican governments' 20-25c immigrant farm labor agreement signed Jan. 31, 1947.



Good Neighbors: Labor leaders of two nations headed the international labor rally in Laredo, Tex., which attracted 2500 workers. Left to right between the U. S. and Mexican flags are Texas CIO Organizing Director Robert Oliver, Pres. O. A. Knight of the CIO Oil Workers, Ruben Moheno and Francisco Delgado, both of the Mexican Railway Union.

RECENTLY, the executive secretary of the Texas Good Neighbor Commission, who took seriously the name and avowed purpose of that group, submitted to the commission a report dealing with the miserable labor picture. It was an explosive collection of facts. For her trouble, Mrs. Pauline Kibbe was forced to resign last month a jump or two ahead of discharge.

The Texas commissioner of the Department of Labor expressed his attitude toward Latin-Americans two weeks ago by ordering the Arkansas and Oklahoma borders closed to them as they attempted to move out of the state in quest of $3-a-hundred cotton-picking wages. Texas planters were offering only $1.50 a hundred. This forced "slavery order" was rescinded after Harry Koger of CIO Food-Tobacco Workers let up the initial scream that was taken up in other circles.

EXCERPTS from the Kibbe report reveal who was behind the forced resignation of the courageous lady:

"At the time of the signing, the Mexican government estimated that 119,000 workers were in the U. S. illegally, of whom between 40,000 and 50,000 were conceded to be in the Lower Rio Grande Valley area. During the war, approximately that number of wetbacks were employed in the Valley, many admitted at 10 to 15 cents an hour.

". . . This illegal crossing of workers has not only been approved by Valley employers, but has been demanded by them. The situation has never been a secret to either government, but both have been either powerless or reluctant to control it.

"The reasons are obvious. The entire Rio Grande Valley region has been developed with the cheapest of cheap labor, and the employers are obsessed with the idea that cheap labor is necessary.

"The wetbacks, although remaining in this country for a period of even years, have been forced to accept whatever wage the employer was willing to pay, since their illegal status precluded their appealing to either Mexican or U. S. authorities for protection.

"A SIGNIFICANT aspect of the agreement is its effect upon Texas citizens of Mexican descent. Agriculture agents and others certified to the Immigration Service that there was a scarcity of labor and that the prevailing wage was 20 to 25 cents an hour. What they actually meant was that the prevailing wage for illegal or wetback labor was 20 to 25 cents an hour, and that there was a shortage of illegal labor or others willing to work for 20 to 25 cents an hour."

(Note: 1500 U. S. war vets are unemployed in Laredo).

Mrs. Kibbe closed her report with this observation:

"I have a feeling that some drastic change is bound to come in Texas."

DIRECTOR Oliver of the CIO says the change won't be long in coming. CIO has caught on in the Valley. When the Organization Committee came to Laredo, the employers greeted it with a light chuckle and the workers met it with a certain degree of suspicion. Tales of "Anglo" sell-outs in labor organizing campaigns along the border are legend.

But, slowly, the workers' suspicions ebbed. Meetings swelled from 200 to 300 to 500, then to 2500. The employers stifled yawns and acted. Wholesale firings resulted. But this time something was different. The workers didn't panic.

The key to the Valley labor situation is the four strikes now in progress against three export firms and one transfer company. CIO is counting heavily on Mexican labor organizations in Nuevo Laredo, town of 25,000 across the river from Laredo. And that support is so effective that shipments into Mexico by the struck firm is down to a trickle.

DELEGATIONS of Mexican union officials have been present at every CIO organizational meting in Laredo and have participated in numerous conferences with CIO officials for the purpose of mapping a program of assistance.

A $1000 contribution to the strike committee has been made by the Mexican railroad union (Sindicato de Trabajadores Ferrocarrileros).

In addition to the membership in the four plants on strike, CIO has a clear majority in 17 other firms in Laredo.

The projects are being turned over to the CIO Retail Union as rapidly as organization is completed.

Port of Entry

Laredo, Tex., has an unusual international flavor, since it is just about the main port of entry between the U. S. and Mexico. A part of the 15th Texas Congressional District, Laredo's industrial facilities consist of canning, meat packing (it's near the cattle country), antimony smelting, oil refining, etc. The Laredo Army air field gives the town a military flavor, also.

Georgia:

Political 'Arch Enemies' Assailed

By TOM NOWELL

GEORGIA'S two leading contenders for the governorship and the Nation's "textile barons" were branded last week by the Georgia State CIO Council as "arch-enemies" of the workers.

Meeting in Macon in their 8th annual convention, 300 delegates charged that Herman Talmadge and Gov. M. E. Thompson both sought to injure and cripple organized labor by approving the anti-closed shop and anti-check-off bills passed by the legislature.

The State CIO-PAC was instructed "to join with other labor groups, plain citizens, and small farmers in opposing the candidacy of Talmadge and Thompson in the 1948 race for governor."

The convention elected Charles H. Gillman to his eighth term as president by acclamation. R. E. Starnes, sub-regional director of CIO Organizing Committee in Macon, and Grover Hathaway, director of District 9, CIO Packinghouse Workers, were elected vice presidents. Lloyd Gossett, CIO Textile Workers, was re-elected secretary-treasurer.

The delegates heard George Baldanzi, executive vice president of the CIO Textile Workers, and Van A. Bittner, director of the CIO'S Southern Organizing Drive.

Baldanzi struck at "scandalous profits" in the textile industry, and said:

"I know the industry has, in this time of unbearable prices, given the American public the worst gouging in all of its history."

Continued success for the Southern organizing campaign was assured by Bittner, who said:

"Over the Southern states there are, today, more than 700 local unions that did not exist less than 18 months ago.

"The Taft-Hartley law is but a challenge; we accept it without fear. The CIO will be here long after Taft and Hartley and Joe Ball are dead, forgotten, and in hell!"

To combat rising prices, the delegates instructed the incoming executive committee to set up a permanent state committee on cooperatives.

Placing blame for the cost of living upon industry, the delegates called for an immediate session of Congress on prices and reinstatement of price control.

Los Angeles Port Shut By Lockout

A SHUTDOWN of the Los Angeles harbor last week by the Waterfront Employers Association after months of wrangling with the CIO Longshoremen and Warehousemen, resulted in a lockout of 2,000 longshoremen and their 200 "walking bosses."

The WEA announced on Sept. 26 that it would shut down the harbor for an indefinite period rather than recognize the ILWU as bargaining agent for the 200 foremen.

"This is a fair sample of the industrial peace which its sponsors said the Taft-Hartley Act would bring," Intl. Union President Harry Bridges said.

Bridges accused the employers of having made repeated attempts to "provoke or trap" the union into spreading a strike of walking bosses which began in San Francisco July 11.

The strike originally was directed against the Outer Harbor Dock & Wharf Co. and the Luckenbach Steamship Co. in San Francisco when the companies refused to bar gain with the ILWU, which represented the walking bosses. The strike then spread to two stevedoring companies in Los Angeles with which Luckenbach had contacts.

Following failure of the union's attempts to keep the Los Angeles port open, Bridges charged that the lockout had been ordered by the employers "because they know that the Taft-Hartley Act protects them in their violation."

The T-H Act releases employers from obligation to bargain collectively with supervisory employes. The union, however, bases its case on an NLRB decision handed down before enactment of the law, which certified the ILWU as agent for the foremen. Attempts to negotiate a contract, begun months before the T-H Act became effective, were deliberately stalled by the employers until the law went into effect, the union charged.

UMW Leader In Labor Dept.

John T. Kmetz, 53, executive board member of the United Mine Workers and president of District 50 until last year, has been nominated as Assistant Secretary of Labor by Pres. Truman.

Kmetz, a native of Czecho-Slovakia and a member of the UMW since 1901, was named to succeed Assistant Labor Secretary Philip Hannah, who resigned last month in opposition to the Taft-Hartley law.

The son of a miner, Kmetz was president of Local 900 for 10 years and was elected first vice-president of the Pennsylvania Federation of Labor in 1926. His home is in Nanticoke, Pa.

In resigning, Hannah had told Truman, "The passage of the T-H bill has raised grave issues of civil liberties for the American people. It strikes at the heart of free men and institutions. I am of the view that my only alternative is to return to my community and the working people from which I came to carry on, as a private citizen, the fight to repeal this anti-labor and undemocratic law. Your veto message is the keynote which I sincerely support."

Two Wood Union Officials Out In Affidavits Dispute

TWO top officers of the CIO Woodworkers, who had declined to sign "non-Communist" affidavits required for unions using NLRB procedures, resigned last week at the request of Pres. J. E. Fadling.

The two officials are Ed Laux, secretary-treasurer, and Karly Larsen, vice-president.

Fadling requested the two men either to sign the affidavits or to resign their posts in order that the union could carry out a convention policy decision.

The convention, while noting that the character of the NLRB would change because of the Taft-Hartley law, voted to "comply with the NLRB certification provisions . . . by using the Board only when it is to our advantage and we feel it is necessary."

IN his letters to Laux and Larsen, Fadling said that the refusal of the two officers to sign the affidavits made him feel "obligated" to comply with the wishes of the membership.

In their letter of resignation, Larson and Laux said that the T-H law "actually calls for the destruction of industrial unionism in the basic industries," and that the T-H people in Congress set out to first weaken and destroy, if possible, the most progressive trade unions in the country and then the entire movement . . . "

Local unions, the two resigning officers said, "must resist against voluntarily becoming a party to this act," and they said the union would have done well to have waited for the formulation of CIO policy at the Boston convention.

In a statement to the IWA membership, Fadling indicated that the question was not one of general T-H act principles but whether the officers are "duty bound to carry out the mandates of the convention.

"The rank and file are sovereign," Fadling added, and had full knowledge of the problems involved in voting to use the Labor Board.

Guild Picks Martin

HARRY MARTIN, Memphis local, has been elected president of the CIO Newspaper Guild in that union's biennial referendum election. Martin defeated Willard Shelton, Washington local, 6,450 to 4,900, in unofficial returns from 95% of the eligible voters.

The ANG presidency is unpaid, a referendum and a convention vote defeating a move to make the position a paid one. Martin is an amusements editor and columnist; Shelton is a correspondent and columnist.

The two paid offices in the referendum were won by: executive vice president, incumbent Sam B. Eubanks, San Francisco-Oakland local, and secretary-treasurer, Ralph Novak, Detroit local, who has been acting director of organization.

EUBANKS, who has held office since 1941, defeated James Bucknam, Manchester, N. H., local, 6,410 to 4,830. Bucknam is a reporter; Eubanks was an editorial makeup editor before assuming union office. Novak, at present vice president from Region 3 and an accountant, defeated G. K. Williams, an editorial writer, Los Angeles local 6,300 to 4,892.

Regional vice presidents elected were: (1) George A. Harris, Boston circulation road man, unopposed; (2) Philip Price, Washington, D. C., makeup editor unopposed; (3) Richard K. O'Malley, wire service writer, Denver, who won over Victor Bovee, Sioux City, Ia., reporter, 1,705 to 805; (4) incumbent George Hutchinson, Los Angeles circulation man, over Howard Welty, San Diego, Calif., reporter, 1,019 to 576; (5) John T. McManus, critic and columnist, over Victor Leo, New York advertising production man, 3,042 to 2,567.

Five defeated candidates for vice president at large were Leonard Milliman, San Francisco wire service writer, 4,620; incumbent Al Dipman, San Francisco makeup editor, 4650; Jerre Smoot, New York advertising department, 4,620; Ray Kuhn, Bay City, Mich., reported, 2,860.

A companion referendum on a uniform dues scale was defeated, 5,620 to 4,280.

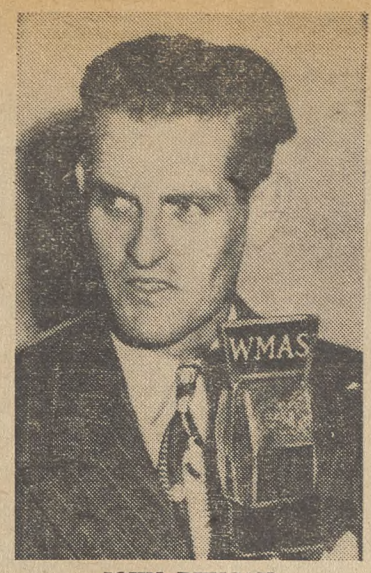
Martin who takes office with the others elected on Nov. 1, succeeds Milton M. Murray, Washington, president since 1941. Murray declined renomination. Novak succeeds William W. Rodgers, also in office since 1941, who failed of renomination at the ANG convention.

Martin, who served the Guild as Region 2 vice president from 1938 to 1942, when he enlisted in the Navy, was founder of his local. In 1940, he was boomed as a candidate to succeed the late Heywood Broun as ANG president, but withdrew in favor of Kenneth Crawford.

In this year's referendum, Memphis paid Martin the rare honor of voting 178 to 0 for him, with all but one eligible member voting.

Emspak-Click Vote

Julius Emspak, incumbent, defeated James Click by a vote of 3872 to 587 in the race for the general secretary-treasurership at the CIO Electrical Workers' convention. A typographical error in the last issue of CIO News listed Click's total as 787.



JOHN DUNCAN
A pipe fitter for Mansanto Chemical Co., Springfield, Mass., and shop steward for Local 288, CIO Electrical Workers, is shown as he spoke on a national hookup in the program opening the 1947 Community Chest drive. Duncan, who talked along with Pres. Truman and Hollywood stars, was introduced by Bob Hope. Duncan spoke for labor volunteers and contributors. He said: "The Chest is part of the American way. That's why organized labor supports it." CIO Pres. Philip Murray has indorsed Community Chest.

Ford Pension Voted Down

EMPLOYES of the Ford Motor Co. voted 3 to 1 in favor of the company's offer of a straight 11½c hourly raise plus 3½c pooled for six paid holidays as against a pension plan which would be accompanied by a 7c hourly increase.

Final results of the corporation-wide balloting were announced last week by Director of the Ford Division of the CIO Auto Workers Richard T. Leonard, who stated that Ford workers will soon receive retroactive pay checks averaging more than $100 each.

The new average Ford wage of $1.52 per hour, he said, is about 7c above the average for the industry.

Other gains provided in the new contract are: Immunity from damage suits under the Taft Hartley Act; full union security; improved guarantees against speed-up; a health and safety clause designed to reduce materially the death and accident rate at Ford.

About 107,000 employes are covered by the new agreement.

CIO Reg. Dir. Ewald Sandner, Newark, N. J., advises of the following elections conducted by the New Jersey State Board of Mediation: A. Gross Co., Linden, N. J., CIO Chemical Workers 38, No Union 12; Ultra Chemical Co., Paterson, N. J., by a check of cards resulted in 60 for CIO; Independent Food Products, Newark, N. J., by a check of cards resulted in 18 for CIO. Representatives Jack Rosen and Peter Flynn of the CIO office assisted.

W. B. Taylor, CIO Reg. Dir., Louisville, Ky., advises another new bargaining unit established without benefit of NLRB at Boeckman & Sons, Louisville, Ky., CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers 32. Intl. Rep. Nick Marsella handled this consent election.

URRW-CIO Dist. Dir. Francis M. McMahon reports: Election conducted by National Mediation Board for licensed and unlicensed engine room personnel, Lehigh Valley Railroad Marine Department, Port of New York, CIO 51, District 50, AFL 38. URRWA Staff Reps. Eugene Attreed and Edward Fountain were in charge of the campaign. District 50 had held the contract for over two years prior to the election.

Van A. Bittner, National Director of the CIO Organizing Committee, advises that enactment of the Taft-Hartley Law has actually proved a spur to organization in the South. Citing a few typical cases, he points out that a local minister conducted elections at the Fountain Converting Works, Pulaski, Va., where the Textile Workers Union, CIO won 154 to 54 and at the Dunlap Veneer Corp., Martinsville, Va., where the UERMWA-CIO won 19 to 11. At Daly Bros., Shoe Mfg. Plant in Harrison, Va., management and the union agreed to an election to be conducted by six members of the union and six representatives of the company. The CIO won 149 to 17.

Memphis, Tenn., the CIO Packinghouse Workers was recognized as the bargaining agent for the Nat Buring Packing Co., following a cross-check of union membership cards against the company payroll. It was found that 34 of the 35 eligible employees were members of the union; later the other worker joined.

A short strike was necessary to convince management at Virginia Greenstone Co., Lynchburg, that its employees had organized into a union. Despite the fact all 35 employees were members of the USA-CIO company officials refused to recognize the new local until a strike was called. Since then an agreement has been reached calling for a minimum wage increase of 10c per hour among other provisions.

The Association of Communication Equipment Workers have completed their vote on affiliation with TWOC-CIO and from unofficial returns it is expected that by a substantial majority the recommendation of their officers and executive board to affiliate with CIO, will be confirmed.

This will make the second large unit of telephone workers to affiliate with TWOC-CIO since June 1, 1947, in addition to smaller unions. This, in spite of the open opposition of the independent movement and its representatives who are barking loud and long while the CIO caravan moves on.

Results of the ACEW vote will be officially announced very shortly.

The writer will address a group of telephone workers in West Virginia this week while in attendance at the State CIO Convention.

Consumer Protest: A cooperative grocery store, operated for one day by the Chicago CIO Council and the Chicago Consumers Cooperative, served as a preview of things to come if prices don't come down soon. Volunteer clerks were members of CIO Packinghouse Local 28 and Auto Local 719. Housewives left babies with volunteer "nursemaids."

URGE CAUTION IN FORMING CO-OP

WORKERS are having a hard time these days trying to stretch the old pay check far enough to keep the wife and kids in the food to which they are accustomed. That's why more unions each week are joining the movement aimed at finding ways to aid their members in the fight against soaring prices.

But, unions are moving cautiously, for the growing protest against high prices has created a wave of interest in co-ops which may lead to failure and disillusionment for unions launching cooperative ventures without experience, skilled cooperators warn. They point out that it is important to obtain trained assistance and advice, if a long-range cooperative project is to succeed.

"I Can Get It for You Wholesale," as the old song hit of 1929 put it, expresses a current popular idea.

Farmers' curb markets, temporary stores, buying clubs, retail sale at wholesale prices of staple groceries in case lots at union halls, warehouses or direct from trucks, in addition to cooperative stores, are some of the means various CIO unions are taking to combat high prices.

The CIO Council in Chicago last week staged a one-day protest against high prices by running two retail grocery outlets with the help of the Chicago Consumers Cooperative. The stores were manned by volunteer workers from Local 28, United Packinghouse Workers, and Local 719, United Auto Workers.

SERVICES included care of babies while the mothers shopped. Housewives lined up at both places long before they were open for business. Butter at 74c a pound, eggs at 65c a dozen and other low-priced food and canned goods were sold.

Michael Mann, CIO regional director and secretary of the Chicago CIO Council, said the sale was not an attempt to compete with groceries but was merely a "protest demonstration."

State of Washington:

Coast CIO Asks Price Controls

IMMEDIATE reinstatement of price controls was urged last week by delegates to the 9th Washington State CIO convention in Spokane.

The plea will be made by CIO members before members of the Congressional sub-committee on prices, scheduled to hold hearings in Seattle Oct. 23-24.

Delegates emphasized the need for accelerated PAC activity, through which they will seek the retirement of all Washington Congressmen who voted for the Taft-Hartley bill.

Also endorsed by the delegates were resolutions calling for abolition of the Thomas Un-American Affairs Committee; enactment of a Fair Employment Practices Commission; protection of civil rights and labor unity. Universal military training was opposed in a resolution, as were federal loyalty dismissals.

A move to amend the constitution to bar Commmunists from holding office was defeated, and in its stead a resolution, paralleling that of the national CIO, which states that "CIO will not tolerate interference from any political party," was adopted.

Officers will be elected by referendum of the membership. The presidency is being sought by Clyde Miller, CIO Longshoremen & Warehousemen, and W. O. Allen, of the Spokane County CIO Council. Vying for the vice presidency are Courtland Bell and Nick Savage, both of the Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers. Incumbent A. A. Fisher is opposed for the post of executive secretary by Harry Tucker, CIO regional representative.

Kansas:

Hellbent for a Depression, Brophy Warns Council

"WE are hellbent for a depression unless prices are stabilized and profits are reduced. Runaway prices is the number one issue. Without prompt congressional action the U. S. is on the road to inflation and economic breakdown."

That was the warning sounded last week by John Brophy, director of CIO councils, before delegates to the Kansas State CIO convention in Topeka.

A similar note was struck by O. A. Knight, president of the CIO Oil Workers.

"Mr. Taft says eat less," he stated. "Mr. Stassen says develop buyer resistance. We working people would like to follow the suggestions of both. However, after we have followed Mr. Taft's eat less line for a few days, our buyers' resistance is gone and Mr. Stassen's line is disintegrated."

Other speakers were Ralph Helstein, president of the CIO Packinghouse Workers; Palmer Weber, CIO-PAC research director; Charles Lanning, secy-treas. of the CIO Rubber Workers; and James Leary, CIO regional director in Kansas City.

All of the Council's top officers were reelected—Willard Murphy, president; James A. Yount, secy.-treas.; and Steve Hanes, Frank Brown and Charles Cunningham, vice presidents.

Resolutions called for establishing a Missouri Valley Authority; laws to provide veterans housing, occupational disease regulations; investigation of mines and mines subsidies.

The Council endorsed cooperatives and employment of the physically handicapped.

One hundred percent affiliation of all CIO unions in the state and registration of every CIO member are top goals of the Council for 1948. Delegates pledged to work for political unity with other labor and farm groups during the coming year.

Colorado:

Rep. Carroll Calls Colleagues 'The Worst in History'

THE 80th Congress was termed the "worst in history" last week by Rep. John Carroll (D., Colo.), who was elected last year by a coalition of labor and liberal forces.

The Congressman was principal speaker at the 9th annual convention of the Colorado State CIO, which met for two days in Pueblo. The record of the Congress was also described as black by Verda Barnes, director of the woman's division, CIO-PAC; George Roberts, of the CIO Rubber Workers, and Fullerton Fulton, regional CIO representative.

Resolutions called for repeal of the Taft-Hartley law, improvement in state workmen's compensation laws, a Missouri Valley Authority, a thorough investigation of high prices, farm-labor unity and united political action.

Council President Frank Pechnik and Secy.-Treas. Eugene Rosati were returned to office for two-year terms.

Nine vice presidents were named: O. G. McTavish, Vance Barrett, B. F. Headrick, Glen Mathews, R. C. Anderson, Thomas Lamirato, Virgil Stover, E. R. Nevills and Lloyd Morris.

Co-op To Run Dept. Store

A cooperative department store, said to be the first in this country, is scheduled to open in Arlington, Va., Washington suburb, in the spring of 1948.

The Consumer Distribution Corp., founded by the late Edward A. Filene, Boston department store magnate, said that the new customer-owned establishment is the first of a series of three such stores being planned by CDC. It will be known as the E. A. Filene Co-op Store.

Filene endowed CDC with more than $1,000,000 to be used in developing a chain of cooperative department stores owned by local customers. The Arlington store will cost $500,000 in initial capital, and $300,000 of ownership stock will be sold to consumers in the greater Washington area.

Lester G. Ott, CDC president, said that six buyers were touring the northern Virginia area, visiting homes to find out what type of merchandise consumers in the area wanted in a department store.

Co-op Winner At Greenbelt

RESIDENTS of Greenbelt, housing project near Washington, gave a decisive answer to a campaign against their consumers' cooperative shopping center by electing an entire pro co-op Council in the largest vote ever cast by the group.

At the first election for the five-man council held Sept. 16, only one of the 20 candidates on the ballot received a clear majority. Thomas Canning, head of the pro co-op slate got 798 of the 1,526 votes cast, and was elected immediately.

At a run-off election Sept. 23, five pro and four anti co-op candidates receiving the highest number of votes in the first election ran for the four remaining seats on the Council. A complete victory was won by the co-op supporters.

Mayor George Bauer, who testified against the co-ops before the House Small Business subcommittee, was eighth on the list at the first election, but withdrew at the eleventh hour from the run-off.

"All I have to say is they will have a hard time unseating me from Congress!"

THE ADVENTURES OF JIM BARRY

NMU WILL BAN NLRB ACTION

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

THE National Maritime Union's 6th convention, moving slowly through a maze of procedural problems, wound up its second week of sessions ready to act on a blistering attack on the Taft-Hartley Act and the Natl. Labor Relations Board.

Approved unanimously by the convention's resolutions committee, the policy statement called for a boycott and refusal to "recognize the new employer-dominated Natl. Labor Relations Board and Conciliation Service."

The union said that any attempt to "live with the slave law is suicide," and predicted that compliance with the Board's "non-Communist" affidavits and other regulations would lead to "oppression and degradation." It called for removal from all NMU contracts of no-strike clauses, urged strengthening of union committees aboard ship, and pledged the union's resources to help attain repeal of the T-H law.

The resolution — with adoption regarded as a certainty—was the first one reported out to the more than 700 delegates who jammed New York's Manhattan Center, just three blocks off the city's busy waterfront.

SERIOUS conflicts over policy and personnel kept the convention from moving rapidly during the first week and a half, as delegates balloted for the credentials and other important committees and sent an investigating group to Cleveland to determine how many spokesmen that city's delegation would be permitted at the convention.

As a result of the report, Josh Lawrence, described as a leading figure in the group opposed to Pres. Joseph Curran, was denied a seat, since it was decided that the Cleveland local was entitled to only one delegate.

Sharp differences between the two groups came up repeatedly in the discussions on the floor and in the reports of the national officers. One group—headed by Pres. Curran, Vice-Pres. Jack Lawrenson and Treasurer Hedley Stone—have attacked the opposition as instruments of the Communist party and charged widespread efforts by the Communists to "obtain control and domination" over the union's affairs to the detriment of the NMU.

The opposition to Curran is led by Sec. Ferdinand Smith, Vice-Pres. Howard McKenzie and Vice-Pres. Chester Young. They have argued that "red-baiting" policies of the other three union officers have split the union and reduced its effectiveness at the bargaining table.

Pres. Curran's report—read to the convention during the middle of its second week—charged that "the Communist Party, and its members, have completely forsaken their original role as fighters for progress and rank and file democracy in our union."

Listing a number of charges against Communists in the union, Curran's report said the convention "must resolve that the Communist Party shall not be permitted to interfere in, dominate or control our union." He urged a close review of Communist party activities "in covering up and whitewashing the violations, misdoings, misuse of funds, and incompetence of their members in office," and said its program "aims to weaken our union and thereby assist the shopowners."

Vice-Pres. McKenzie, replying to charges of erroneous policies and the loading of the NMU payroll with political appointments, said in his organizing report that such claims are a "mixture of half-truths, outright lies and brazen hypocrisy."

Admitting that he had made "mistakes" during the latter years of the war in relying too heavily upon employer-union cooperation, McKenzie asserted that his critics shared similar views at that time. Those doing the most "red-baiting" in the union, he said, are following a definite plan to "soften up the union, make it very respectable, and eventually lead us back to making exactly the same mistake we made in 1944, namely, that the solution to all our problems must begin with proper labor-management cooperation."

BOTH Pres. Curran and Sec. Smith likened the Taft-Hartley law to decrees of the fascist dictators, and both charged reactionaries are trying to curb democracy in the United States and abroad. Both urged increased political action by labor to prevent a repetition of the 1946 election debacle, and they called for accelerated organizing campaigns, and the development of unity in the maritime industry and in the labor movement as an aid in that fight.

Curran called for passage of a seaman's bill of rights, protection for alien seamen who risked their lives under the American flag during the war, removal of Coast Guard jurisdiction over merchant marine personnel, unemployment insurance, and revision of maritime laws. He asked a "V for Vote" campaign to "drive reaction from America."

Smith's report urged renewed campaigns in support of anti-poll-tax and anti-lynch legislation, establishment of a permanent FEPC and measures outlawing anti-Semitism. He recommended action to abolish the House Un-Third Party movement.

The convention received a letter from CIO Pres. Murray warning of dangers to American workers in the present period of rising prices and anti-labor laws, and urging close cooperation with the CIO in fighting for improved conditions.

Murray predicted that the NMU will continue to "shoulder its responsibilities in the CIO" and said the CIO "would be pleased to note" endorsement by the delegates of the 1946 CIO convention's statement concering the interference of outside groups in the administration and affairs of the union.

The convention, faced with a heavy agenda, is expected to run throughout the week starting Oct. 6.

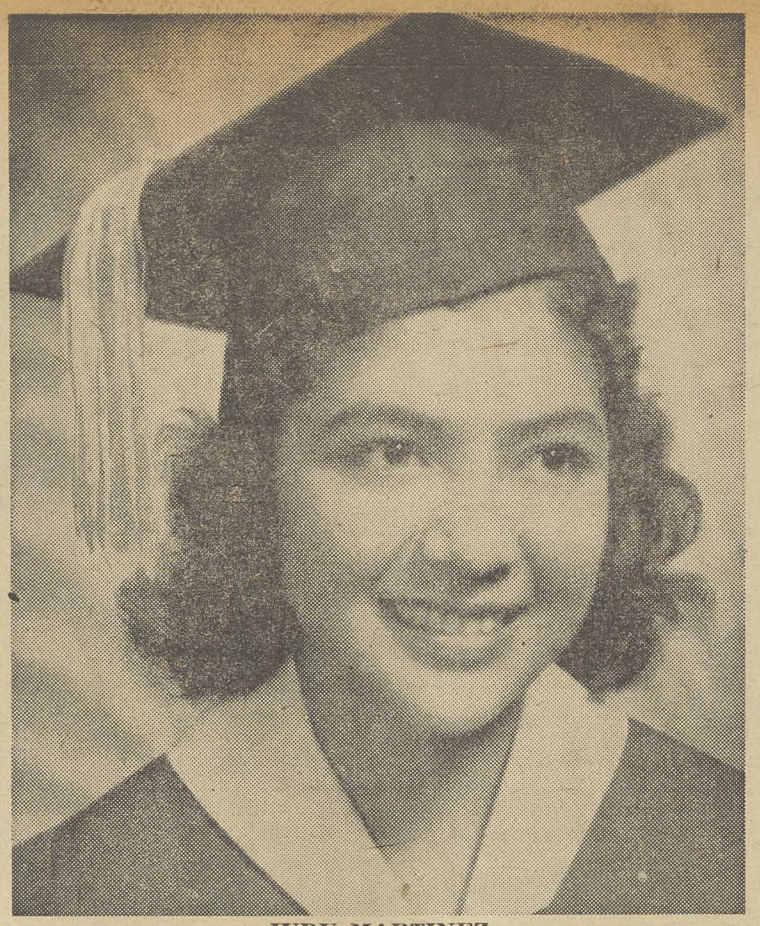
Unionism Pays Off in $ $

Value of CIO unionism to the nation's seamen was clearly spelled out in NMU Pres. Curran's report to the convention.

NMU's 75,000 memebrs have won marked improvements in wages and working conditions since 1938, the figures showed. Ordinary seamen, who is 1938 were paid $55 a month, now get $166.95. Boatswains, who received $85 a month in 1938, now are paid $228.17 a month.

While the seamen are still ahead of rising prices on the basis of their increases since the pre-war year, most of the wage boosts since June 1946 have been eaten up by inflation.

The union has also prospered in recent years. Its assets have jumped from $236,000 in June 1940 to $2,320,000 in March 1947.



JUDY MARTINEZ
"If She's Helped the Union, We're Proud . . ."

Discharge For Union Activity Hasn't Made Judy Falter

JUDY Martinez is the symbol of the new life in the Rio Grande Valley.

Pretty Judy, 17, a graduate of a Catholic high school, has been fired for union activity, despite the fact she is the sole support of six little brothers and sisters, all of school age, and her widowed mother.

But, that hasn't made Judy or Mrs. Martinez falter. "Judy and I talked it over," said the mother, whose husband died last December, "and we decided that CIO was the hope of the people in our valley. If she has helped the movement to get started here, I am proud of her."

Judy had gone to work last year in an export house as a typist at $20 a week, six days a week, eight and ten hours a day.

She was one of the few girls at the CIO's first meeting at Laredo, Texas, in August. It was a bit against tradition, for Mexican customs are still strong on the border, and many mothers hold against such goings-on.

She asked questions about CIO, gathered up a flock of CIO leaflets and left. Ten girls came along with her for the next meeting. She was named on her shop committee.

Her boss offered her a modest raise to drop this union business. She refused. A week later, when she asked for four hours off to take a civil service exam, she was fired.

World Labor

RECENT FIGHTING in Paraguay —issues of which were never made clear in the American press— arose from the efforts of the Moringo regime to destroy the country's labor movement, according to a report made public by the Federation of Labor of neighboring Uruguay.

In appealing for aid for the workers of the Paraguay, the report issued at Montevideo said that the "dictator Moringo" early this year destroyed all democratic guarantees. Union offices were raided, officials arrested and whole blocks of homes roped off and ransacked by the dictator's stooges, the Uruguayan union statement charged.

"The tyranny holding Paraguay keeps more than 2,000 patriots in jails which lack all provision for medical attention, food or hygiene," it said. The unions called upon the Uruguayan government to recognize the popular revolutionary junta and to brand as "responsible for the tragedy" the forces protecting the dictatorship.

STATE OWNERSHIP of the heavy industries of Germany, and four-power control of the heavily industrialized Ruhr valley were urged as security measures for France and the Soviet Union at a meeting of the French-Soviet Trade Union Committee meeting in Moscow, according to Allied Labor News.

The group—composed of representatives of the French Confederation of Labor and the Soviet All-Union Central Council of Trade Unions — voiced warnings against efforts to stir up a new world war.

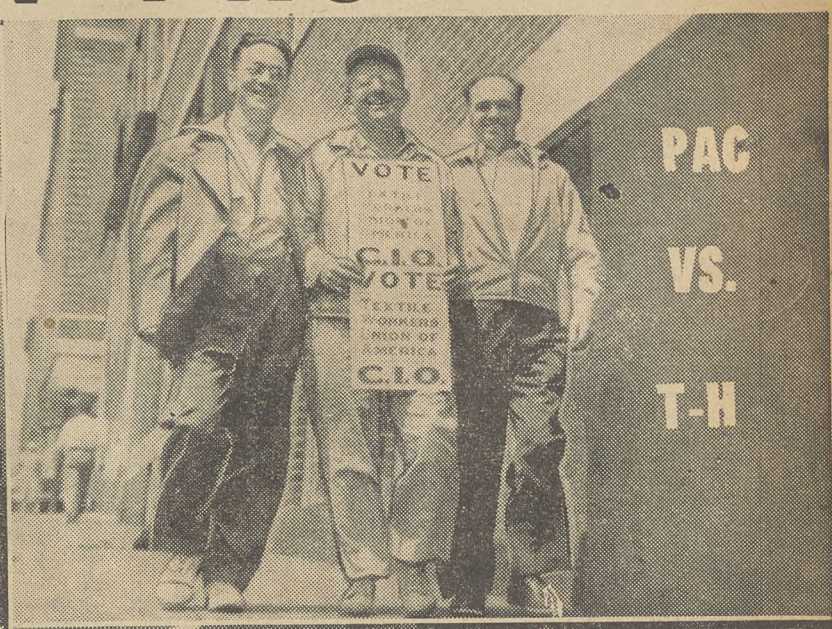
KEY CONVENTION PROBLEMS



NLRB HANGS ONE ON DENHAM'S CHIN

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

FOR 47 days, Robert M. Denham acted like an absolute czar.

He issued ruling after ruling in his capacity as general counsel of the Taft-Hartley-spawned National Labor Relations Board.

Then, last week, he got a major come-uppance.

The NLRB, by a 4 to 1 vote, overruled Denham's ruling that no local or union could use the services of NLRB until all the officers of the CIO (11) or the AFL (15), with whichever the union or local was affiliated, had signed the non-Communist affidavit of T-H. (This was predicted in last week's CIO News.)

Voting to slap down Denham were Chairman Paul M. Herzog, and members James J. Reynolds, Jr. John M. Houston and Abe Murdock. Dissenting was member J. Copeland Gray.

The vote came on a single issue, representation elections. But, Denham immediately bowed to the inevitable and announced that he would extend the ruling to all phases of the NLRB work. That means, in effect, that any local or union may use the services of the NLRB, provided that all officers of the union and local ("officers" as defined in the constitution or by-laws) sign the affidavits.

THE majority NLRB opinion stated that the words "national or international labor organization" appearing in T-H, do not by any familiar definition mean either AFL or CIO. Gray, in his dissent, said the top organization exerted influence on the affiliates.

With the ruling, apparently the only ones left who could not use the services of the board without AFL or CIO signature are the CIO's local industrial unions and the AFL's federally - chartered locals.

Denham reportedly will stick to his position as to these groups —which cover perhaps 350,000 members.

The Tafters and the Hartleyites generally accepted the verdict in their usual confused fashion. Sen. Ball (R., Minn.), a prime T-H buddy, mumbled that he thought Denham had been correct, but that the board also was correct and "probably more in line with what we intended." His T-H "watchdog committee decided to summon the NLRB.

REP. GERALD D. LANDIS, a joiner from Indiana (he belongs to the B. P. O. E., the Masons, the L. O. O. M. and K. of P., but definitely not the AFL or CIO), horrified by the NLRB action, announced he would offer an amendment come January which would make it mandatory for the AFL's Executive Council and the CIO's board to sign.

Meanwhile, there were many indications that employers and unions in some sections were agreeing to use legal means of bypassing the NLRB and have some other agency conduct the representation elections. A. H. Raskin, in the New York Times made a survey of New York State.

He found that the parties were using such city, state and private organizations as the City Labor Relations Division, the State Mediation Boards (both in New York and New Jersey), the American Arbitration Association and the Honest Ballot Association.

ROBERT M. DENHAM
His face was—shall we use the nasty word?—red!

Invoke T-H To Stop Georgia 'Peonage'

ROBERT M. DENHAM, general NLRB counsel, last week was asked to use the T-H Law to protect the civil rights of strikers in Georgia, where the CIO Woodworkers representatives say "peonage" has been revived.

William V. George, former NLRB trial examiner and chairman of the Atlanta Chapter of the American Civil Liberties Union, wired Denham after 15 strikers at the Marion Brokerage Co., Buena Vista box factory, were arrested.

Thirteen of them were released after they promised Policeman Otis Ammons to leave town to work as cotton pickers, a Woodworkers' spokesman said. All those arrested were Negro members of the union.

Local union officials declared that the men were arrested while they were walking along the street—even when some of them were going to neighborhood grocery stores—by members of a force of 20 specially deputized officers.

After filing charges with Paul Styles, regional NLRB director at Atlanta, George wired Denham:

"Charges filed today ask immediate injunction and investigation of gross violations by the Marion Brokerage Co. of the civil rights of employes as set forth in the Taft-Hartley Act.

"We urge your immediate action in this matter as the public may forget that the Taft-Hartley Act is still supposed to protect employes' civil rights from invasion by employers."

Two hundred workers are on strike at the Marion Brokerage Co. and between 500 and 600 members of the same union are also striking at plants at Cuthbert, about 40 miles from Buena Vista. All strikes are to gain recognition of the union.

Officers of the CIO Woodworkers have signed the non-Communist affidavits required under the T-H Act before a union can appeal to the NLRB.

Here's Morgan—

Radio Comedian Henry Morgan recently did a take-off on an advertising agency.

Morgan, playing the sponsor, told the agency boys his product was very poor, but he wanted to sell it. The ad guys suggested spending five grand for a name singer, ten grand for a better spot, etc. Morgan suggested maybe some of the money could be spent on improving the product. The shocked agency head turned on him:

"What! And undermine free enterprise?"

Shipyard Strike:

Auto Crashes Line Injures Picket

A CIO Shipbuilding union representative is suffering severe injuries, after being struck by an automobile, allegedly driven by a scab, and a union member is out of jail on $600 bail as a result of picketline incidents in Baltimore last week, believed by the union to have been provoked by company "stooges."

The 16-week strike at Bethlehem Shipyards in Baltimore has been studded with arrests of union pickets. Police have failed, however, to take similar action against strikebreakers involved in the skirmishes, according to Caulder Haak, regional publicity director for the union.

Monday is "D-Day" for the scabs, Haak said. That's the day of the big offensive through the picketline. Last Monday, picket Dan Appel was struck by a car, said to be loaded with strikebreakers, as it charged through the line. Appel will be confined to bed for at least two weeks. Four pickets were arrested, but police have made no move to arrest the driver, identified by the union as Reds Johnson, an outside machinist.

The following day, Joe DeKleva, a national representative, punched what he thought to be a "scab" in the jaw—but the "scab" turned out to be a policeman. A car coming from inside the yard, stopped in the center of the picketline. A man wearing no hat or coat, according to Haak, jumped pugnaciously out of the car—and into the defensive fist of DeKleva, who thought he was being attacked. DeKleva had been quietly pacing up and down in front of the gate with the other pickets, Haak said.

"If the guy was a Baltimore City policeman, what was this minion of the law doing out of uniform, inside company property and leaving the yard in an ordinary conveyance?" Haak asked.

The Baltimore Morning Sun, Oct. 8, quoted the policemen as saying "he was in uniform, but was not wearing his uniform cap, so that he might have been mistaken for a civilian."

"It looks very much like a provoked incident," Haak continued. "If police officers are to be permitted to mingle with the pickets out of uniform, anything can happen, especially if an incident is desired by some people."

DeKleva was hauled into jail and held for the grand jury on $600 bail.

The IUMSWA pickets, marching since June 26, have received the support of AFL Seafarers Int'l. Union members, who made contributions and reinforced the CIO lines in New York and Baltimore.

The Bethlehem Co. openly announced in New York recently that it would welcome strikebreakers. It has steadfastly rejected the union's repeated offer made by IUMSWA Pres. John Green and Counsel M. H. Goldstein, to arbitrate the issues.

Some 35,000 workers are still involved in the strike.

Louisville Rent Rise May Start Plague of Boosts

DO we face an avalanche of inflationary rent increases?

Indications are that we do. Last week, Frank Creedon, Housing Expediter, approved a 5% rent rise for Louisville, Ky., an increase which had been voted by the local rent board without advance notice to the public or without a single hearing.

Pres. Truman was flooded with protests. But, the President said that, under the law passed by the 80th Congress, Creedon was powerless to do anything but approve the action of a local board, apparently no matter how high that board makes the increase.

As the CIO News went to press, it looked as if Louisville's 350,000 inhabitants had been used as guinea pigs for a well-concerted real estate board drive for higher rents all over the U. S. The increases would be in addition to the 15% "voluntary" rise provided for under the law.

Residents of Dickinson County, Kan., could expect a 15% rise to be imposed; 10% would be it in Klamath Falls, Ore., and all controls would be taken off in four counties of Kansas and New Mexico. (Those are the only cases made public).

Truman said that the only recourse for citizens seemed to be that of seeing to it that their Governor, who has appointive power under the law, names representative rent boards. But, Creedon's office said that more than 400 of the 600 rent boards have already been named. Few liberal or labor representatives are reported to be on them.

Last week, CIO Pres. Philip Murray, hearing of the Louisville action, sent a sharp protest to Creedon, pointing out that the Louisville rent board consisted of "two real estate men, one banker who is a member of the Real Estate Board and two lawyers, who, according to our information, also are closely tied, associated with real estate interests."

Protest Wins Five City Employes Their Jobs

THE protest of 50 CIO members and other residents of Dalton, Ga., last week led the city council to reinstate five discharged city employes, members of the CIO Public Workers.

Some newspaper stories said that the crowd blocked the exits from the council chamber, but William Stafford, Public Workers field representative, said that "anybody could have left the room at any time.

"We were there in a body but there were absolutely no threats."

Mayor Gordon Kettles and Councilmen W. H. Bartenfeld and T. L. Shackleford resigned following the demonstration of union solidarity and public support. Local union officials said that almost three-fifths of the city's population of 15,000 are members of CIO unions. Many of the delegation were members of the Textile Workers.

Stafford said that when the councilmen declared that they would not reinstate the five discharged employes . Someone said: "We'll just stay here until you do."

The CIO members were aroused because the city officials had succeeded several months ago in convincing policemen and firemen that they should withdraw from another local of the Public Workers.

The reinstated employers are members of the Street and Sanitary Workers, Local 731, Public Workers.

Board Pledges T-H Court Test

THE CIO executive board at a pre-convention meeting at Boston, Mass., on Oct. 10 approved a statement by Pres. Philip Murray pledging the CIO to test the constitutionality of the T-H Act.

The seven hundred delegates attending the CIO's ninth constitutional convention at the Bradford Hotel in Boston will consider major economic and political problems facing labor and the nation.

The statement on the T-H Act declared, however, that "each International and National Union affiliated with the CIO would in the exercise of its own autonomous right determine for itself the policy to be pursued in relation to the new labor board."

This will allow locals to use the board if their own officers and their international officers have signed the non-communist affidavits.

The statement points out, "The CIO remains firm in its unanimous rejection of the evil principle of the Taft-Hartley Act and will unite to defeat any attempt by any employer to use that act as a weapon to attack or destroy any of our unions.

"The CIO will also undertake in conjunction with its unions and in appropriate proceedings to test the constitutionality of the many illegal provisions of the act including those which require the infamous affidavits as a condition precedent to the use of the facilities of the labor board."

The board the same day approved the report of the Mine, Mill & Smelter investigating committee. Murray at a press conference said that the board's action ended the dispute — which occurred when some of the MMSW locals seceded and joined the CIO Shipbuilding Union—and that the matter would not come before the convention.

Members of the investigating committee were Pres. L. S. Buckmaster of the CIO Rubber Workers, Director Van A. Bittner of the CIO Organizing Committee, and Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers.

Murray also announced that Pres. John Moran of the American Union of Telephone Workers has been seated on the executive board as a representative of the Telephone Workers Organizing Committee.

The CIO president also said that Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr., will be a speaker at the convention in connection with a memorial to his father.

Murray, in a press conference earlier last week deferred specific remarks about the T-H act until action is taken by the convention. He indicated, however, that the NLRB's over-ruling of its general counsel on the question of "non-Communist" affidavits still left "some complicated questions" not full answered.

While the NLRB action apparently gives the green light for labor board handling of election petitions by unions which comply with T-H provisions, it is not clear whether this applies also to complaints of unfair labor practices against employers.

The CIO board earlier in the week voiced bitter criticism of reported Federal Bureau of Investigation probes of labor political activity in two congressional districts where special elections have been held since mid-June.

These elections in Baltimore and in the Lehigh-Bucks district of Pennsylvania, have led to FBI investigations which according to press and other reports have led to "furtive sleuthing, gumshoe detective operations and dramatic unearthing of hidden clues," the statement said.

"It is regrettable and indefensible in its reflection of a willingness to badger and terrify rank-and-file working men and women by so-called 'investigations' instead of a willingness to come forth openly and bluntly to meet the very basic issues of the attack on constitutional rights involved in these sections of the infamous Taft-Hartley law."

The statement, which was unanimously adopted by the board noted that the "labor movement has acted openly and in the best American traditions in asserting these constitutional rights" of its members against what they regard as an oppressive act.

The statement charged that if the widely-publicized activities of unions to violate the T-H ban on political expenditures by labor unions is illegal, "that issue should be met publicly and openly in the American way. If that is the conception of the Dept. of Justice it should act accordingly."

Text of T-H Statement

THE CIO executive board approved the following statement by President Murray on the Taft-Hartley Law:

"Immediately following the passage of the Taft-Hartley Act by Congress June 23, 1947, the CIO executive board met in the city of Washington.

"At such time a full analysis of the legislation presented to the board justified all statements that had been made by organized labor against this vicious legislation while it was under consideration in Congress.

"Events which have transpired since the enactment of the law in the course of its administration prove the serious threat to the very existence of organized labor that is embodied in the Taft-Hartley slave act.

"At the meeting of the CIO executive board in Washington in June of this year, it was made clear that each International and National union affiliated with the CIO would in the exercise of its own autonomous right determine for itself the policy to be pursued in relation to the new labor board. This policy remains unchanged.

"The CIO remains firm in its unanimous rejection of the evil principle of the Taft-Hartley Act and will unite to defeat any attempt by any employer to use that act as a weapon to attack or destroy our unions.

"The CIO will also undertake in conjunction with the affiliated unions and in appropriate proceedings to test the constitutionality of the many provisions of the act including those which require the infamous affidavits as a condition precedent to the use of the facilities of the board."

WAY TO ELECT CONGRESSMEN: VOTERS LINE UP TO CAST THEIR BALLOTS

PAC Wars On Legislative Foes; 'Congress Turned Back On People'

"THE attention of the CIO Political Action Committee in 1948 will be concentrated on the defeat of those Congressmen and Senators who on the record have demonstrated their opposition to labor's right to organize and bargain collectively."

A blunt section of Pres. Philip Murray's Report to the Convention shows that "the election of 1946 constituted a signal defeat for the liberal and labor voters of America."

The report blames the defeat to a great extent on the "widespread apathy among the voting public." But, there were bright spots in some states, the report recalls, such as those where "progressive candidates were elected for the first time in many years in Denver, Duluth and Worcester, Mass."

And, "subsequent political action in the city elections of 1947 has demonstrated that our membership, rather than being discouraged by the 1946 election and the 80th Congress, has renewed its determination and rededicated itself to all-out political action in the 1948 election.

"THE Executive Board recognized that much more powerful support must be given to political action. Central to the objective of victory in 1948 is the completion of the dollar voluntary contribution drive."

Jack Kroll, a vice-president of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers, is director of CIO-PAC, now located at 728 17th St., N. W., Washington, D. C.

The report remarks that "over 400 city elections, numerous county and several state elections will be held in 1947. In dozens of cities and counties, CIO members have offered themselves for city council positions, for school boards and for county commissioners. In the elections that have already taken place, including those in New Jersey, Virginia, Tennessee, Maryland, Colorado and Washington, the PAC has shown renewed vigor.

"Forty-four state legislatures met this year and 32 enacted some type of anti-labor legislation. In numerous cases, CIO members are offering themselves as candidates for the State legislature.

"IN the 1948 elections, more attention will be given to the election of state legislatures than at any time in the history of PAC . . ."

In the South, "elections this year have seen a remarkable increase in the payment of poll taxes by CIO membership and by organized groups of Negro citizens. In the elections in North Carolina, Virginia and other Southern states, common agreement on candidates has united labor voters."

PAC held a meeting in July at Pittsburgh, which decided to "(a) launch a tremendous registration drive of all CIO members and their families; (b) develop the dollar voluntary contribution drive as never before; (c) concentrate organizational efforts on the election of Congressmen and Senator repeal the Taft-Hartley bill.

"Every education conference and school with CIO has devoted a substantial portion of its time to education on and for political action.

"THE separate international unions are taking much greater part in political action.

The weakest aspect of political action work of CIO was demonstrated by the low turnout of voters in the industrial wards and precincts in 1946.

"The primary concentration today is on development of ward, precinct and block organization. Where in the past our efforts have been channeled by existing political organizations, we are now committed to developing and building our own independent ward, precinct and block organization.

"PAC has called for a million block organizers and regards these workers as the foot soldiers of political action. In 1948, we propose to turn out a vote of not less than 60 million. This can be done only by organization.

"The basic issue in the 1948 election is already clear. The Congress enacted the T-H Act; the Congress will repeal the T-H Bill."

Congress' Failure

THE record of the 80th Congress "will long be remembered with bitterness by the American people," Pres. Murray reported to the 9th CIO convention. He voiced biting condemnation of the Congressional majority's failure to pass legislation needed by the people while turning its venom on organized labor.

"The Congress turned its back on the needs of the people," Murray's report said.

He charged that the Taft-Hartley Act has been passed in "an atmosphere of hysterical frenzy;" that it had crippled enforcement of the wage-hour law, knocked the guts out of rent control, and "failed utterly" to act on pressing social problems.

Murray asserted in his report that the Congress, spearheaded by its GOP majority, had kowtowed completely to big business.

The Congress, he said, showed "an appalling lack of awareness of the needs of the workers, of small businessmen, of farmers and veterans. Its committees harried union witnesses and spokesmen, and fawned on the words of labor-baiters and big business lobbyists.

"INDEED," the CIO president added, "the big business lobby all but moved into the Capitol, and its members assisted eagerly in the drafting of legislation to curb the rights of union labor."

The lesson is clear, he said. The millions of "stay-home voters" who placed enemies of labor into office in the 1946 election must elect in 1948 a "Congress willing and able to act vigorously and forthrightly in the interests of the progressive American public."

Murray lauded the work of the CIO legislative department in "mobilizing and coordinating" the dramatic if not successful campaign against the Taft-Hartley Act. The people back home are

SAME OLD STRUGGLE

The CIO has a new crop of troubles on its hands as it opens its annual convention today in historic old Boston.

Some of them are economic. Others are political. They're irksome and bothersome—and some of them are bad enough to evoke heated oratory.

There is the Taft-Hartley Law, which will come in for its share of justifiable damning. There are the state anti-labor laws, which certainly should be condemned.

Then there is that threat of a depression that always comes along at about this time during a boom. It's serious and it deserves close attention of the convention.

By the end of the week the delegates will have hammered out policy statements on many matters, and these statements will help guide the CIO through another year.

Pessimists at the convention will tell you that things are in a terrible shape, that the world is going to hell in a hurry, that the CIO is over a barrel but just doesn't realize how serious the situation really is.

Some of the newspaper accounts of convention activity will paint honest differences of opinion as indications of weakness or as evidence that the "CIO is split right down the middle."

Those who talk and write that way forget how the trade union movement was built—and some of them forget that the CIO has pushed many big obstacles aside during its short life.

They forget, too, that the delegates to the convention represent more than 6,000,000 working men and women of many races, creeds and beliefs.

What they should recall—but usually don't—is how hard trade unionists fight when the going gets really tough.

Go back a dozen years.

The CIO, a depression baby, stepped heavily where angels theoretically had feared to tread—on the abuses practiced by the nation's mass production industries.

There were numerous bitter and costly strikes which would have smashed the new industrial unions had their members not been made of stern stuff.

Many unions in the CIO went through that unpleasant experience of having their backs against the wall and their treasuries nearly empty. But they won out because they were willing to fight.

The CIO grew steadily throughout the war years. Its post-war organizing work, despite strong opposition, has been bringing real results.

Now we've got new troubles, and they're really serious ones.

We're not going to join those who desire to shed tears over our plight. We're not ready to hang black crepe on trade unionism.

We have a feeling that this week's convention will set the pattern for another round in that age-old struggle of workers for their rightful share of the good things the world produces.

And we'll give long odds that the men and women who built CIO haven't forgotten how to fight.

Organized Labor Has Taken Bad Beating; We Can't Place All the Blame on Others

By ALLAN L. SWIM

THREE-FOURTHS of the states in the nation have passed stringent anti-union legislation during the past five years.

Thirty of the states enacted labor-restrictive measures during 1947.

The Congress put its final OK on the Taft-Hartley Law just a few months ago.

Nearly all of the social and economic measures backed or sponsored by organized labor since the end of the war have been defeated or ignored by our lawmakers.

To put it bluntly, organized labor has taken an awful beating.

Why?

IT would be easy—and untruthful—to lay the entire blame at the doorsteps of the National Association of Manufacturers or just to say that "big business" was responsible.

There's a great temptation to say that the nation's press and radio deserve the credit—or discredit—for what has happened.

Sure, they had their hands in it, clear up to the elbows. They led the anti-labor parade, beat the drums for labor curbs, helped sway public opinion against the unions.

But more than that was involved—much more.

So, wouldn't it be a good idea to try to assess the whole blame and not just part of it? Suppose it is a bit painful?

LET'S start by figuring out where we took our worst beating.

It wasn't at the collective bargaining table, because we did right well by ourselves there.

It wasn't in the field of organizing, because union membership has been increasing steadily since the slump that came during the so-called reconversion period.

We took our beating at the ballot box—in the field of political activity. And as a result we're now taking a beating in the fields of economics, civil liberties and social advancement.

Why?

IT would be easy—and untruthful—just to say that the country was fed up with liberalism and progress and wanted a bit of reaction for a change.

There's a great temptation to say that "big business" bought up our state legislators and congressmen and got them to do their bidding.

That's the easy way out—the alibi method—the line the defeated usually take.

Sure, the country was weary of wartime restrictions. Sure, "big business" threw its influence and its money around where it counted.

But let's not forget that there are some 15,000,000 trade unionists in the country and that they and their immediate families make up a very large part of our population.
